6: The Babylonians installed Gedaliah as governor in Mizpah (cf. 2 Kings 25.22–26), located in Benjamin, about 13 km (8 mi) north of Jerusalem (probably Tel en-Nasbeh). According to b. Gittin 57a, Nebuzaradan’s statements indicate that he converted to Judaism in remorse for the suffering he caused. 7–16: A court forms around Gedaliah. 8: Ishmael son of Nethaniah son of Elishama is identified as a member of the royal family in 41.1. His grandfather may have been Jehoiakim’s scribe (36.12). Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah are otherwise unknown. The name Jezeiah son of the Maacathite may employ an ethnic or place name in reference to his father (Maacah is a small state in the northern Golan; see Josh. 13.11, 13; 2 Sam. 10.6, 8; 1 Chron. 19.7). If so, he could be identified with Jezeiah son of Hoshaiiah in Jer. 42.1. The use of the gentilic name could be an attempt to call the reader’s attention to the succession narrative (2 Sam. chs 9–20) in which Maacah first opposed David, and then submitted to his rule (2 Sam. 10.19). The following narrative appears to contrast Ishmael’s defeat in Benjaminite territory with David’s victories in the same region. 13–16: Johanan (v. 8) informed Gedaliah of Ishmael’s intent to assassinate him, but the warning was rebuffed. The Ammonites apparently saw an opportunity to take control of Judah now that it was virtually powerless. 14: Ishmael would likely cooperate with Baalis out of his own ambitions to claim the Davidic throne based on his own royal descent (cf. Rashi, Radak, Abravanel). The Ammonites did support David much earlier, during Absalom’s revolt (see 2 Sam. 17.27–29). Perhaps this was another attempt to support the House of David, as Gedaliah was not of royal blood. Baalis is probably to be identified with “ba’alyasha,” whose name is found on a 6th-century Ammonite seal impression.

^a Lit. “swore to.”

^b Lit. “summer fruit.”

41 In the seventh month, Ishmael son of Nethaniah son of Elishama, who was of royal descent and one of the king's commanders, came with ten men to Gedaliah son of Ahikam at Mizpah; and they ate together there at Mizpah.² Then Ishmael son of Nethaniah and the ten men who were with him arose and struck down Gedaliah son of Ahikam son of Shaphan with the sword and killed him, because the king of Babylon had put him in charge of the land.³ Ishmael also killed all the Judeans who were with him—with Gedaliah in Mizpah—and the Chaldean soldiers who were stationed there.

⁴The second day after Gedaliah was killed, when no one yet knew about it,⁵ eighty men came from Shechem, Shiloh, and Samaria, their beards shaved, their garments torn, and their bodies gashed, carrying meal offerings and frankincense to present at the House of the LORD.⁶ Ishmael son of Nethaniah went out from Mizpah to meet them, weeping as he walked. As he met them, he said to them, "Come to Gedaliah son of Ahikam."⁷ When they came inside the town, Ishmael son of Nethaniah and the men who were with him slaughtered them [and threw their bodies] into a cistern.

⁸But there were ten men among them who said to Ishmael, "Don't kill us! We have stores hidden in a field—wheat, barley, oil, and honey." So he stopped, and did not kill them along with their fellows.—⁹The cistern into which Ishmael threw all the corpses of the men he had killed *in the affair of Gedaliah was the one that^a King Asa had constructed on account of King Baasha of Israel. That was the one which Ishmael son of Nethaniah filled with corpses.—¹⁰Ishmael carried off all the rest of the people who were in Mizpah, including the daughters of the king—all the people left in Mizpah, over whom Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, had appointed Gedaliah son of Ahikam. Ishmael son of Nethaniah carried them off, and set out to cross over to the Ammonites.

¹¹Johanan son of Kareah, and all the army officers with him, heard of all the crimes committed by Ishmael son of Nethaniah.¹² They took all their men and went to fight against Ishmael son of Nethaniah; and they encountered him by the great pool in Gibeon.¹³ When all the people held by Ishmael saw Johanan son of Kareah and all the army officers with him, they were glad;¹⁴ all the people whom Ishmael had carried off from Mizpah turned back and went over to Johanan son of Kareah.¹⁵ But Ishmael

41.1–18: The assassination of Gedaliah. 1: The seventh month is Tishri. The 3rd of Tishri is now observed as the Fast of Gedaliah, immediately following the two days of Rosh Ha-Shanah, and it is likely that this fast is "the fast of the seventh month" mentioned in Zech. 8.19. The assassination of Gedaliah was commemorated since it represented the end of even limited Judean autonomy in the land, and is the culmination of the events associated with the destruction of the Temple and the exile. 2–3: Because the king of Babylon . . . in charge of the land . . . killed . . . the Chaldean soldiers: It seems unlikely that Ishmael intended to revolt against Babylonia, but the killing of Babylonian soldiers together with Gedaliah indicates that perhaps the situation got out of control. 4–10: Ishmael's subsequent actions appear to be unnecessarily brutal and desperate. 5: Shechem, Shiloh, and Samaria are all cities in the territory of the former Northern Kingdom of Israel. The shaved beards, torn garments, and gashed bodies are clear signs of mourning for the destroyed Temple (see also Zech. 7.1–7). Although the Temple has been destroyed, non-animal sacrifices were still offered at the holy site of the Temple. The loyalty of these northern Israelite men to the Jerusalem Temple may indicate that Josiah's reforms and attempts to reunite Israel and Judah had been somewhat successful. 6–7: Ishmael's killing of these men appears rash. He may have killed them in an attempt to keep the assassination of Gedaliah quiet, although his motives may have been pure robbery. 9: King Asa's cistern is not mentioned elsewhere, although he did build up Geba and Mizpah (1 Kings 15.22; 2 Chron. 16.6). 10: The daughters of the king would have been Ishmael's own relatives as members of the House of David. 11–18: Gedaliah's followers fight back, but Ishmael escapes. 11–12: Johanan son of Kareah defeated Ishmael son of Nethaniah at the pool of Gibeon, a key site in David's and Joab's defeat of a largely Benjaminite army led by a-a Septuagint reads "was a large cistern, which . . ."

son of Nethaniah escaped from Johanan with eight men, and went to the Ammonites.

¹⁶Johanan son of Kareah and all the army officers with him took all the rest of the people whom ^ahe had rescued from Ishmael son of Nethaniah^a from Mizpah after he had murdered Gedaliah son of Ahikam—the men, soldiers, women, children, and eunuchs whom [Johanan] had brought back from Gibeon. ¹⁷They set out, and they stopped at Geruth^b Chimham, near Bethlehem, on their way to go to Egypt ¹⁸because of the Chaldeans. For they were afraid of them, because Ishmael son of Nethaniah had killed Gedaliah son of Ahikam, whom the king of Babylon had put in charge of the land.

42 Then all the army officers, with Johanan son of Kareah, Jezaniah son of Hoshaiah, and all the rest of the people, great and small, approached ²the prophet Jeremiah and said, “Grant our plea, and pray for us to the LORD your God, for all this remnant! For we remain but a few out of many, as you can see. ³Let the LORD your God tell us where we should go and what we should do.”

⁴The prophet Jeremiah answered them, “Agreed: I will pray to the LORD your God as you request, and I will tell you whatever response the LORD gives for you. I will withhold nothing from you.”

⁵Thereupon they said to Jeremiah, “Let the LORD be a true and faithful witness against us! We swear that we will do exactly as the LORD your God instructs us through you—⁶Whether it is pleasant or unpleasant, we will obey the LORD our God to whom we send you, in order that it may go well with us when we obey the LORD our God.”

⁷After ten days, the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah. ⁸He called Johanan son of Kareah and all the army officers, and the rest of the people, great and small, ⁹and said to them, “Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel, to whom you sent me to present your supplication before Him: ¹⁰If you remain in this land, I will build you and not overthrow, I will plant you and not uproot; for I regret the a-a Emendation yields “Ishmael son of Nethaniah had carried off.”

b Aquila reads “the sheepfolds of.”

Abner on behalf of Ish-bosheth, the son of Saul. David’s victory was a key event in his rise to the throne of the Benjaminite Saul. It is ironic that Ishmael’s defeat by forces loyal to Gedaliah takes place at the same location. 17: Ge-ruth Chimham, “the dwelling place of Chimham,” recalls the name of the young man assigned by Barzilai the Gileadite to support David during Abshalom’s revolt (2 Sam. 19.31–40; cf. 17.27–29). Apparently, the narrative attempts to contrast the experience of Ishmael with that of David to emphasize the House of David’s (i.e., Ishmael’s) opposition to God’s will.

42.1–43.7: Jeremiah taken to Egypt. The narrative continues to emphasize the theme of Judean opposition to God’s will by presenting the people’s rejection of Jeremiah’s oracle advising them to remain in the land of Judah as subjects of Babylonia. Whereas the previous episode reversed the theme of divine favor for David that was given in the so-called succession narrative (2 Sam. chs 9–20), these chs present the Judean return to Egypt as a reversal of the exodus narrative. 42.1–6: Jeremiah complies with the request for guidance. 1: Johanan son of Kareah is the leader of the Judean forces that defeated Ishmael. Jezaniah son of Hoshaiah may be the same man mentioned in 40.8, presuming that his father was earlier identified by an ethnic or place name. Azariah son of Hoshaiah (43.2) may be his brother. 5–6: The narrative especially emphasizes the people’s oath to do what God asks in order to highlight their disobedience in the following vv. 7–22: Jeremiah gives the word. 7: It is quite remarkable that God does not immediately answer the prophet. Abnavel therefore understands the ten days to be reckoned from the 1st of Tishri when Gedaliah was assassinated (41.1). Yom Kippur (the Day of Atonement) falls on the 10th of Tishri (Lev. 23.26–32; Num. 29.7–11). Jeremiah’s oracle would therefore have come immediately following Yom Kippur (cf. Ezek. 40.1, which places Ezekiel’s vision of the Temple on Yom Kippur). Such a reckoning of the date would emphasize the theme of the people’s repentance, which of course does not take place in the following vv. However, there is no explicit indication that Yom Kippur was observed in this period. 10: Jeremiah’s oracle again repeats the basic verbs of his prophetic commission, build . . . not overthrow . . . plant . . . not uproot (1.10), to emphasize that the time for punishment I have brought upon you. ¹¹ Do not be afraid of the king of Babylon, whom you fear; do not be afraid of him—declares the LORD—for I am with you to save you and to rescue you from his hands. ¹² I will dispose him to be merciful to you: he shall show you mercy and ^abring you back to ^a your own land.

¹³ “But if you say, ‘We will not stay in this land’—thus disobeying the LORD your God—¹⁴ if you say, ‘No! We will go to the land of Egypt, so that we may not see war or hear the sound of the horn, and so that we may not hunger for bread; there we will stay,’ ¹⁵ then hear the word of the LORD, O remnant of Judah! Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: If you turn your faces toward Egypt, and you go and sojourn there, ¹⁶ the sword that you fear shall overtake you there, in the land of Egypt, and the famine you worry over shall follow at your heels in Egypt too; and there you shall die. ¹⁷ All the men who turn their faces toward Egypt, in order to sojourn there, shall die by the sword, by famine, and by pestilence. They shall have no surviving remnant of the disaster that I will bring upon them. ¹⁸ For thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: As My anger and wrath were poured out upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, so will My wrath be poured out on you if you go to Egypt. You shall become ^aan execration of woe, a curse^b and a mockery; and you shall never again see this place. ¹⁹ The LORD has spoken against you, O remnant of Judah! Do not go to Egypt! Know well, then—for I warn you this day ²⁰ that you were deceitful at heart when you sent me to the LORD your God, saying, ‘Pray for us to the LORD our God; and whatever the LORD our God may say, just tell us and we will do it.’ ²¹ I told you today, and you have not obeyed the LORD your God in respect to all that He sent me to tell you—²² know well, then, that you shall die by the sword, by famine, and by pestilence in the place where you want to go and sojourn.”

43 When Jeremiah had finished speaking all these words to all the people—all the words of the LORD their God, with which the LORD their God had sent him to them—² Azariah son of Hoshaiiah and Johanan son of Kareah and all the arrogant men said to Jeremiah, “You are lying! The LORD our God did not send you to say, ‘Don’t go to Egypt and sojourn there!’ ³ It is Baruch son of Neriah who is inciting you against us, so that we will be delivered punishment is over and that the time for rebuilding is at hand. The oracle emphasizes God’s own regret to emphasize divine empathy for the suffering of the people.

11: An example of the reassurance oracle follows with its characteristic formulas, do not be afraid and I am with you (v. 11; cf. 1.8; Isa. 7.4–9; Gen. 15.1). 13–21: Jeremiah’s oracle clearly and unambiguously calls upon the people not to return to Egypt lest they suffer consequences. The “torah” of the king in Deut. 17.14–20 likewise emphasizes that the king is forbidden to return the people to Egypt. Such a position is consistent with that of Isaiah, whose oracles warned against alliance with Egypt (Isa. chs 18–20; 30–31). In Jeremiah’s view, the time for the fulfillment of Isaiah’s oracles had come. The oracle follows Isaiah in emphasizing that the people must remain in the land if the remnant of the people is to grow (Isa. 4.2–6; 10.20–26; 37.30–32). 43.1–7: The guidance is rejected. 2: Azariah son of Hoshaiiah is probably the brother of Jezeaniah son of Hoshaiiah (42.1). The accusation that Jeremiah is lying is ironic given the emphasis on the problem of lying prophets in the book (23.9–40; chs 27–29).

a-a Change of vocalization yields “let you dwell in.”

b-b I.e., a standard by which men execrate and curse; cf. note at 24.9.

into the hands of the Chaldeans to be killed or to be exiled to Babylon!"

⁴So Johanan son of Kareah and all the army officers and the rest of the people did not obey the LORD's command to remain in the land of Judah. ⁵Instead, Johanan son of Kareah and all the army officers took the entire remnant of Judah—those who had returned from all the countries to which they had been scattered and had sojourned in the land of Judah, ⁶men, women, and children; and the daughters of the king and all the people whom Nebuzardan the chief of the guards had left with Gedaliah son of Ahikam son of Shaphan, as well as the prophet Jeremiah and Baruch son of Neriah—⁷and they went to Egypt. They did not obey the LORD.

They arrived at Tahpanhes, ⁸and the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah in Tahpanhes: ⁹Get yourself large stones, and embed them in mortar in the brick structure at the entrance to Pharaoh's palace in Tahpanhes, with some Judeans looking on. ¹⁰And say to them: "Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: I am sending for My servant King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon, and I^a will set his throne over these stones which I have embedded. He will spread out his pavilion^b over them. ¹¹He will come and attack the land of Egypt, delivering

Those destined for the plague, to the plague,
Those destined for captivity, to captivity,
And those destined for the sword, to the sword.

¹²And I^a will set fire to the temples of the gods of Egypt; he will burn them down and carry them^c off. He shall wrap himself up in the land of Egypt, as a shepherd wraps himself up in his garment. And he shall depart from there in safety. ¹³He shall smash the obelisks of the Temple of the Sun which is in the land of Egypt, and he shall burn down the temples of the gods of Egypt.

44 The word which came to Jeremiah for all the Judeans living in the land of Egypt, living in Migdol, Tahpanhes, and Noph, and in the land of Pathros:

²Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: You a Septuagint reads "he." b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c I.e., the gods.

6: The daughters of the king had perhaps been recovered from Ishmael when he was defeated (cf. 41.10). The people take Jeremiah and Baruch with them to Egypt. Interpreters disagree as to whether they were forced to go or felt that duty required them to accompany their people. 7: The text closes by noting the people's disobedience and their arrival in Tahpanhes, an Egyptian stronghold in the northeast

Nile Delta (Tel Deffeneh) that was intended to defend the Delta against foreign invasion. Thus, the book of Jeremiah as a whole fits the pattern of history developed in 2 Kings 17.14, that even after prophets were sent time and again to Israel, "they did not obey."

43.8–13: Jeremiah's oracle in Tahpanhes. This brief narrative concludes the account of Jeremiah's removal to Egypt. Jeremiah was likely just as welcome in Egypt as he was in Jerusalem. 9–11: The prophet engages in a final symbolic action by setting up stones . . . at the entrance to Pharaoh's palace that would eventually support the throne of the Babylonian king when he came to conquer Egypt. Excavations at Tahpanhes have uncovered a wide pavement before the northern entrance to the fortress. 13: The obelisks of the Temple of the Sun may refer to the city of On or Heliopolis, which was known for its obelisks and was a center for the worship of the sun god, Re. It is identified with Tel Hisn and Matariyeh, about seven miles northeast of Cairo. The city appears in Isa. 19.18 as one of five cities that will swear allegiance to God. Although the Babylonians never conquered Egypt, the Persian king Cambyses, who also ruled Babylonia, conquered Egypt in 525 BCE. This is another case (see 34.5) of a prophecy that is preserved although it was not fulfilled.

44.1–30: Jeremiah's oracle in Egypt. 1: Migdol was a city in northern Egypt, possibly identified with Tel el-Hier. For Tahpanhes, see 43.7, 8–13; 2.16. For Noph, identified with Memphis, see 2.16. Pathros is identified with Upper Egypt to the south of the Delta region (see also Isa. 11.11). Excavations on the island of Elephantine (Yeb), located in the Nile opposite Aswan in upper Egypt, demonstrate the existence of Persian-period (6th century BCE and later) Jewish settlements in Egypt that clearly originated in earlier times. The community was in communication have seen all the disaster that I brought on Jerusalem and on all the towns of Judah. They are a ruin today, and no one inhabits them,³ on account of the wicked things they did to vex Me, going to make offerings in worship of other gods which they had not known—neither they nor you nor your fathers.⁴ Yet I persistently sent to you all My servants the prophets, to say, “I beg you not to do this abominable thing which I hate.”⁵ But they would not listen or give ear, to turn back from their wickedness and not make offerings to other gods;⁶ so My fierce anger was poured out, and it blazed against the towns of Judah and the streets of Jerusalem. And they became a desolate ruin, as they still are today.

⁷And now, thus said the LORD, the God of Hosts, the God of Israel: Why are you doing such great harm to yourselves, so that every man and woman, child and infant of yours shall be cut off from the midst of Judah, and no remnant shall be left of you?⁸ For you vex me by your deeds, making offering to other gods in the land of Egypt where you have come to sojourn, so that you shall be cut off and become a curse^a and a mockery among all the nations of earth.⁹ Have you forgotten the wicked acts of your forefathers, of the kings of Judah and their^b wives, and your own wicked acts and those of your wives, which were committed in the land of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem?¹⁰ No one has shown contrition to this day, and no one has shown reverence. You^c have not followed the Teaching and the laws that I set before you and before your fathers.

¹¹Assuredly, thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: I am going to set My face against you for punishment, to cut off all of Judah.¹² I will take the remnant of Judah who turned their faces toward the land of Egypt, to go and sojourn there, and they shall be utterly consumed in the land of Egypt. They shall fall by the sword, they shall be consumed by famine; great and small alike shall die by the sword and by famine, and they shall become an execration^a and a desolation, a curse^a and a mockery.¹³ I will punish those who live in the land of Egypt as I punished Jerusalem, with the sword, with famine, and with pestilence.¹⁴ Of the remnant of Judah who came to sojourn here in the land of Egypt, no survivor or fugitive shall be left to return to the land of Judah. Though they all long to return and dwell there, none shall return except [a few] survivors.

with authorities in Jerusalem, although their religious practice was somewhat syncretistic. 2–14: Jeremiah continues to accuse the people of disobeying God and worshipping other deities as a means to explain their current plight. Theologically, this passage is very similar to 2 Kings ch 17, which explains the earlier exile of the Northern Kingdom. 12: In contrast to Isaiah, who saw the remnant of Israel as the basis for restoration, Jeremiah argues that the remnant of the people, as a result of their behavior, will die in Egypt. The prophet's condemnation especially emphasizes the theme of famine and rebellious acts of the people. This contrasts with the wilderness traditions of the Torah in order to emphasize the reversal of the exodus from Egypt. Whereas God answered the people's complaints about the lack of food by providing manna, water, and protection from enemies, etc. (Exod. chs 16–17; Num. ch 11), God would no longer provide such support in Egypt.

a See note at 24.9; 42.18. b Heb. "his." c Heb. "They."

¹⁵Thereupon they answered Jeremiah—all the men who knew that their wives made offerings to other gods; all the women present, a large gathering; and all the people who lived in Pathros in the land of Egypt: ¹⁶“We will not listen to you in the matter about which you spoke to us in the name of the LORD. ¹⁷On the contrary, we will do “everything that we have vowed”^a—to make offerings to the Queen of Heaven and to pour libations to her, as we used to do,^b we and our fathers, our kings and our officials, in the towns of Judah and the streets of Jerusalem. For then we had plenty to eat, we were well-off, and suffered no misfortune. ¹⁸But ever since we stopped making offerings to the Queen of Heaven and pouring libations to her, we have lacked everything, and we have been consumed by the sword and by famine. ¹⁹And when we make offerings to the Queen of Heaven and pour libations to her, is it without our husbands’ approval that we have made cakes “in her likeness”^c and poured libations to her?”

²⁰Jeremiah replied to all the people, men and women—all the people who argued with him. He said, ²¹“Indeed, the offerings you presented in the towns of Judah and the streets of Jerusalem—you, your fathers, your kings, your officials, and the people of the land—were remembered by the LORD and brought to mind! ²²When the LORD could no longer bear your evil practices and the abominations you committed, your land became a desolate ruin and a curse,^d without inhabitant, as is still the case. ²³Because you burned incense and sinned against the LORD and did not obey the LORD, and because you did not follow His Teaching, His laws, and His exhortations, therefore this disaster has befallen you, as is still the case.”

²⁴Jeremiah further said to all the people and to all the women: “Hear the word of the LORD, all Judeans in the land of Egypt! ²⁵Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: You and your wives have “confirmed by deed what you spoke in words:”^e ‘We will fulfill the vows which we made, to burn incense to the Queen of Heaven and to pour libations to her.’ So fulfill your vows; perform your vows!

²⁶“Yet hear the word of the LORD, all Judeans who dwell in the land of Egypt! Lo, I swear by My great name—said the LORD—that none of the men of Judah in all the land of Egypt shall ever again invoke My name, saying, ‘As the Lord God lives!’ ²⁷I will be watchful over 15–19: The people respond by insisting that they will continue their practices. The text suggests that women in particular were involved in this worship. Perhaps this is because women were more involved in “popular” religion, or because this text in particular is concerned with goddess worship. 17: The Queen of Heaven, probably Ishtar, the Mesopotamian goddess of passion in war and love. Identified with the North Star or Venus, she represents stability in the world of creation. 18: The people point out that disaster befell them when they discontinued worship of the goddess; the reference is most likely to Josiah’s reforms, shortly after which Josiah was killed, and Judah became a vassal of Babylonia. 20–30: Jeremiah retorts with a final condemnation of the Jewish community in Egypt. 27: I will be watchful returns to the same verb used in the dedication in 1.12, implying that the doom declared by God is not over. 30: Pharaoh Hophra, also known as Apries, ruled 589–570 BCE. He was assassinated by Amasis (570–526), a former court official who served as co-regent during the last three years of Hophra’s reign.

a-a Lit. “everything that has gone forth from our mouth.” b Cf. 7.18.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d See note at 24.9; 42.18.

e-e Lit. “spoken with your mouth and fulfilled by your hands.”

them to their hurt, not to their benefit; all the men of Judah in the land of Egypt shall be consumed by sword and by famine, until they cease to be.²⁸ Only the few who survive the sword shall return from the land of Egypt to the land of Judah. All the remnant of Judah who came to the land of Egypt to sojourn there shall learn whose word will be fulfilled—Mine or theirs!

²⁹“And this shall be the sign to you—declares the LORD—that I am going to deal with you in this place, so that you may know that My threats of punishment against you will be fulfilled: ³⁰Thus said the LORD: I will deliver Pharaoh Hophra, king of Egypt, into the hands of his enemies, those who seek his life, just as I delivered King Zedekiah of Judah into the hands of King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon, his enemy who sought his life.”

45 The word which the prophet Jeremiah spoke to Baruch son of Neriah, when he was writing these words in a scroll at Jeremiah's dictation, in the fourth year of King Jehoiakim son of Josiah of Judah:

²Thus said the LORD, the God of Israel, concerning you, Baruch: ³You say, “Woe is me! The LORD has added grief to my pain. I am worn out with groaning, and I have found no rest.” ⁴Thus shall you speak to him: “Thus said the LORD: I am going to overthrow what I have built, and uproot what I have planted—^athis applies to the whole land.” ⁵And do you expect great things for yourself? Don't expect them. For I am going to bring disaster upon all flesh—declares the LORD—but I will ^bat least grant you your life^b in all the places where you may go.”

46 The word of the LORD to the prophet Jeremiah concerning the nations.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Cf. note at 21.9.

45.1–5: Jeremiah's oracle to Baruch. The prophetic word formula introduces this brief unit. The oracle is likely placed here to explain why Baruch suffers the punishment of having to go to Egypt with Jeremiah (43.6). It is one of the key texts, together with ch 36, that points to Baruch as the author of sections of or some form of the book of Jeremiah, particularly the narratives about the prophet. Radak cites an unknown mid-rashic source to interpret Baruch's expressions of pain as his statements of frustration that he was not granted the right to prophesy even though he wrote Jeremiah's oracles. 1: It is dated to the fourth year of . . . Jehoiakim (605 BCE) when Baruch recorded Jeremiah's words on a scroll (ch 36). 3: The prophet expresses his grief at having to warn Baruch at the outset of the difficult times that he will experience. 4: The prophet's words reiterate the basic verbs of his prophetic commission to indicate that God will overthrow what is built and uproot what is planted (see

1.10). 5: The reference to great things is unclear, though 43.3 indicates that Baruch may have been involved in various political machinations.

46.1–51.64: Jeremiah's oracles concerning the nations. An example of the prophetic word formula introduces the oracles concerning the nations, including Egypt (46.2–28), Philistia (47.1–7), Moab (48.1–47), the Ammonites (49.1–6), Edom (49.7–22), Damascus (49.23–27), Kedar and Hazor (49.28–33), Elam (49.34–39), and Babylonia (50.1–51.64). Similar collections of oracles concerning the nations appear in other prophetic books, including Isa. chs 13–23; Ezek. chs 25–32; Amos 1.2–2.16; Zeph. 2.4–15; Obadiah; and Nahum. The oracles concerning the nations do not address universally all the nations of the earth, but include nations selectively, e.g., Isa. chs 13–23 includes nations that were a part of the Persian empire, Ezek. chs 25–32 includes nations that were attacked by the Babylonians, and Amos 1.2–2.16 includes nations of the Syro-Israelite region that were incorporated into the Assyrian empire. Like Isa. chs 13–23, the oracles in Jer. chs 46–51 include nations that were conquered by the Persian empire beginning in 539 BCE in an effort to claim that God's judgment against Babylonia was carried out by the Persians. These oracles concern the nations (46.1) but are not addressed to the nations. They emphasize a point already made at the beginning of classical prophecy (Amos), that the God of Israel is a universal God who controls the destiny of all the nations of the world. In some cases, there are significant similarities between oracles against the nations recited by different prophets (see esp. Jer. 49.9–16; Obad. vv. 1–6), suggesting that prophets or editors of prophetic books borrowed these prophecies from one another. 46.1: As in 21.11 and 33.9, prophetic oracles on the same topic are joined together and introduced with a thematic title, a method of ²Concerning Egypt, about the army of Pharaoh Neco, king of Egypt, which was at the river Euphrates near Carchemish, and which was defeated by King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon, in the fourth year of King Jehoiakim son of Josiah of Judah.

- 3 Get ready buckler and shield,
And move forward to battle!
- 4 Harness the horses;
Mount, you horsemen!
Fall in line, helmets on!
Burnish the lances,
Don your armor!
- 5 Why do I see them dismayed, organization which is confined to Jeremiah.

46.2-28: The oracle concerning Egypt. Egypt was able to take control of Judah in 609 BCE following Pharaoh Neco's killing of King Josiah at Megiddo (2 Kings 23.28-37; 2 Chron. 35.20-36.4). Apparently, Josiah was attempting to stop the Egyptians from moving north to

Haran so that they might support the beleaguered Assyrian army against the Babylonians. Although Josiah died, Egypt was delayed long enough so that the Babylonians were able to destroy the Assyrians at Haran. The Egyptians were then left to face the Babylonians alone. Neco attempted to strengthen his position by removing Josiah's son Jehoahaz from the Judean throne and replacing him with his pro-Egyptian brother Jehoiakim. Jeremiah was a constant critic of alliance with Egypt in keeping with his Elide priestly roots, which emphasized the Exodus tradition and its portrayal of Egypt as Israel's enemy and his associations with the pro-Babylonian elements of the royal court, such as the family of Shaphan who served as Josiah's secretary. When the Egyptians were defeated at Carchemish in 605, the Babylonians took control of Judah. Subsequent revolts against Babylonia, prompted by pro-Egyptian elements in the monarchy, ultimately resulted in the destruction of Judah and Jerusalem and the Babylonian exile (586-539). 2-12: Jeremiah's oracle concerning Egypt at the time of its defeat at Carchemish in 605. 2: Pharaoh Neco ruled Egypt 610-595. He was the son of Psammetichus (664-610), the founder of the Twenty-sixth Saite Egyptian dynasty (664-525), which supported Assyria in its campaign to control Egypt and defeat the

Places mentioned in the oracles against the nations

Yielding ground?
 Their fighters are crushed,
 They flee in haste
 And do not turn back—Terror all around! —declares the LORD.

6 ^aThe swift cannot get away,
 The warrior cannot escape.^a
 In the north, by the river Euphrates,
 They stagger and fall.

7 Who is this that rises like the Nile,
 Like streams whose waters surge?

8 It is Egypt that rises like the Nile,
 Like streams whose waters surge,
 That said, "I will rise,
 I will cover the earth,
 I will wipe out towns
 And those who dwell in them.

9 Advance, O horses,
 Dash madly, O chariots!
 Let the warriors go forth,
 Cush and Put, that grasp the shield,
 And the Ludim who grasp and draw the bow!"

¹⁰But that day shall be for the Lord GOD of Hosts a day when He exacts retribution from His foes. The sword shall devour; it shall be sated and drunk with their blood. For the Lord GOD of Hosts is preparing a sacrifice in the north-land, by the river Euphrates.

11 Go up to Gilead and get balm, Fair Maiden Egypt.
 In vain do you seek many remedies,
 There is no healing for you.
 12 Nations have heard your shame;
 The earth resounds with your screams.
 For warrior stumbles against warrior;
 The two fall down together.

¹³The word which the LORD spoke to the prophet Jeremiah about the coming of King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon to attack the land of Egypt:

14 Declare in Egypt, proclaim in Migdol, Proclaim in Noph and Tahpanhes!
 Say: Take your posts and stand ready,

Twenty-fifth Ethiopian dynasty. Neco's defeat by the Babylonian monarch Nebuchadrezzar at Carchemish in 605 forced Egypt to withdraw from Judah, and enabled Babylonia to take control. Neco was able to resist Nebuchadrezzar's attempted invasion of Egypt in 601–600. The Saite dynasty came to an end in 525 when the Persians conquered Egypt. 5: The oracle employs Jeremiah's characteristic phrase, terror all around, to describe the plight of the Egyptians (see 6.25; 20.3, 10; 49.29; Lam. 2.22; Ps. 31.14). 7: The metaphor of the rising waters of the Nile portrays the Egyptian advance. 9: Cush is Ethiopia, and Put is probably a region in Libya. The Ludim are a north African people. 10: The Egyptian defeat is portrayed as a sacrifice (cf. Zeph. 1.7). 11: Gilead is located in the Transjordan, just south of the Golan (cf. 8.22). 13–28: Jeremiah's oracle concerning Egypt at the time of Nebuchadrezzar's attempted invasion in 601–600. This passage serves as the haftarah for the parashah of Bo' (Exod. 10.1–13.16), which relates the plagues of locusts, darkness, and the slaying of the first-born at the time of the exodus from Egypt. 14: Migdol, see 44.1. Noph, Memphis; see 2.16, 44.1. Tahpanhes, see 2.16; 44.1. Memphis was the ancient capital of Egypt; Migdol and Tahpanhes were defended cities in the Nile Delta region.

a-a Lit. "Let not the swift get away, / Let not the warrior escape."

15 For the sword has devoured all around you!
 Why are your stalwarts swept away?
 They did not stand firm,
 For the LORD thrust them down;
 16 He made many stumble,
 They fell over one another.

They said:

"Up! let us return to our people,
 To the land of our birth,
 Because of the deadly^a sword."

17 There they called Pharaoh king of Egypt:
^b"Braggart who let the hour go by."^b

18 As I live—declares the King, Whose name is LORD of Hosts—^bAs surely as Tabor is among the mountains
 And Carmel is by the sea,
 So shall this come to pass.^b

19 Equip yourself for exile,
 Fair Egypt, you who dwell secure!
 For Noph shall become a waste,
 Desolate, without inhabitants.
 20 Egypt is a handsome heifer—
 A gadfly^c from the north ^dis coming, coming!^d
 21 The mercenaries, too, in her midst
 Are like stall-fed calves;
 They too shall turn tail,
 Flee as one, and make no stand.
 Their day of disaster is upon them,
 The hour of their doom.

22 ^bShe shall rustle away like a snake^b
 As they come marching in force;
 They shall come against her with axes,
 Like hewers of wood.

23 They shall cut down her forest
 —declares the LORD—

Though it cannot be measured;
 For they are more numerous than locusts,
 And cannot be counted.

24 Fair Egypt shall be shamed,
 Handed over to the people of the north.

²⁵The LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel, has said: I will inflict punishment on Amon^e of No and on Pharaoh—on 18: Mt. Tabor and the Carmel range flank the eastern and western borders of the Jezreel Valley in northern Israel. The oracle employs Jeremiah's earlier warnings of an enemy from the north against Egypt (cf. 1.14–19; chs 4–6). 25: Amon is the Egyptian sun god whose temple was located in No, the Heb name for Thebes (cf. Nah. 3.8). The concluding reassurance oracles for Jacob also appear in 30.10–11.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Or "butcher"; meaning of Heb. uncertain. d-d Many mss. read "will come upon her."

e Tutelary deity of the city No (Thebes); cf. Nah. 3.8.

Egypt, her gods, and her kings—on Pharaoh and all who rely on him. ²⁶I will deliver them into the hands of those who seek to kill them, into the hands of King Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon and into the hands of his subjects. But afterward she shall be inhabited again as in former days, declares the LORD.

27 But you,
Have no fear, My servant Jacob,
Be not dismayed, O Israel!
I will deliver you from far away,
Your folk from their land of captivity;
And Jacob again shall have calm
And quiet, with none to trouble him.

28 But you, have no fear,
My servant Jacob —declares the LORD—
For I am with you.
I will make an end of all the nations
Among which I have banished you,
But I will not make an end of you!
I will not leave you unpunished,
But I will chastise you in measure.

47 The word of the LORD that came to the prophet Jeremiah concerning the Philistines, before Pharaoh conquered Gaza.

2 Thus said the LORD:
See, waters are rising from the north,
They shall become a raging torrent,
They shall flood the land and its creatures,
The towns and their inhabitants.
Men shall cry out,
All the inhabitants of the land shall howl,
3 At the clatter of the stamping hoofs of his stallions,
At the noise of his chariots,
The rumbling of their wheels,
Fathers shall not look to their children
Out of ^asheer helplessness^a 4 Because of the day that is coming
For ravaging all the Philistines,
For cutting off every last ally
Of Tyre and Sidon.
For the LORD will ravage the Philistines,
The remnant from the island of Caphtor.
5 Baldness^b has come upon Gaza,

^{a-a} Lit. "weakness of hands."

^b Shaving the head and gashing the body were expressions of mourning; cf. Deut. 14.1.

47.1–7: Jeremiah's oracle concerning Philistia. The Philistines were descended from the so-called "Sea Peoples" who advanced by land and sea from the Greek islands through Asia Minor and the Eastern Mediterranean beginning in the 14th century BCE. They destroyed the ancient Hittite empire in Asia Minor, which has prompted some to identify them with Odysseus and his warriors in the Odyssey. They continued down the eastern Mediterranean coast, where they destroyed the city of Ugarit in Syria and attacked Egypt during the reign of Rameses III (1182–1152). Following their defeat by Rameses III, some groups of the Sea Peoples settled along the Mediterranean coast of Canaan, where they merged with the local population to become the Philistines. The Philistine coalition included five major cities (a pentapolis): Ashkelon, Ashdod, Ekron, Gaza, and Gath. Herodotus reports that Neco conquered Gaza, at the border of the desert on the way to Egypt, after his battle with Josiah at Megiddo (History 2.159). This view also appears in Seder Olam 26. Nebuchadnezzar's invasion of Philistia in 604 and his subsequent deportation of major elements of the population brought an end to Philistia as a cohesive ethnic and national group. Although the Philistines play a major role in texts describing the early monarchy, especially in the story of Saul, they are hardly mentioned in texts from the divided monarchy. Yet archeological finds and various texts confirm that they remained important and active through the period of Jeremiah. 2: As in 46.7–8, the metaphor of rising waters depicts Egypt's advance against Philistia. The reference to the north has puzzled interpreters for centuries, since Babylonia is located to the north and Egypt to the south. Abравanel says that it must refer to Babylonia. 4: The references to Tyre and Sidon in Phoenicia (modern Lebanon) suggest that they were allies of the Philistines, although such an alliance is not known at this time.

Ashkelon is destroyed.
O remnant of ^atheir valley;^a
How long will you ^bgash yourself?^b

6 “O sword of the LORD,
When will you be quiet at last?
Withdraw into your sheath, Rest and be still!”

7 How can it ^cbe quiet
When the LORD has given it orders Against Ashkelon and the seacoast, Given it assignment there?

48 Concerning Moab.^d

Thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel:
Alas, that Nebo should be ravaged, Kiriathaim captured and shamed, ^eThe stronghold^e shamed and dismayed!

2 Moab's glory is no more;
In Heshbon they have planned' evil against her:
“Come, let us make an end of her as a nation!”
You too, O Madmen, shall be silenced;^g
The sword is following you.
3 Hark! an outcry from Horonaim, Destruction and utter ruin!

4 Moab is broken;
^hHer young ones cry aloud;^h
5 They climb to Luhith
Weeping continually;
On the descent to Horonaim
A distressing cry of anguish is heard:

a-a Septuagint reads “the Anakites”; cf. Josh. 11.22.

b-b Shaving the head and gashing the body were expressions of mourning; cf. Deut. 14.1.

c Heb. “you.”

d A number of parallels to this chapter occur in Isa. 15–16.

e-e Or “Misgab.”

f Heb. hashebu, play on Heshbon.

g Heb. tiddommi, play on Madmen, the name of a town.

h-h Emendation yields “They cry aloud as far as Zoar”; cf. Isa. 15.5.

Caphtor is the island of Crete, which Amos 9.7 identifies as the original home of the Philistines.

48.1–47: Jeremiah's oracle concerning Moab. Ancient Moab was a nation situated east of the Dead Sea to the north of Edom and southwest of Ammon (and modern Amman) in what is now modern Jordan. The story about Moab's and Ammon's origin in

Gen. 19.29–38 on the one hand reflects the political and familial closeness that Israel felt to these peoples, but also Israel's disdain toward them. Israel's relationship with Moab was generally tense. Traditions in Numbers and Deuteronomy report that Moab attempted to stop Israel from passing through its territory on the journey from Egypt to the land of Israel. The mid-9th century Moabite Stone (Mesha stele) reports that the Moabite King Mesha (cf. 2 Kings 3.4) conquered Israel's land in the Transjordan, including the territories of Reuben and Gad. The Moabites were allies of the Assyrians, but the Babylonians apparently destroyed Moab in the mid-6th century. Much of the material in Jeremiah's Moabite oracle is drawn from Isaiah's Moabite oracle in Isaiah chs 15–16, which would suggest that Jeremiah reused Isaiah's material in the belief that Isaiah's prophecies were being fulfilled in his own time.

1–10: The initial oracle apparently describes Nebuchadnezzar's advance against Moab. Various phrases from the oracle appear in Isa. ch 15. 1: Nebo is the name of the mountain from which Moses viewed the land of Israel prior to death and burial (Deut. ch 34). There was also a Moabite city by the same name (see Num. 32.3; Isa. 15.2) located at modern Khirbet Mekhayyet, 8 km (5 mi) southwest of Hesban. Kiriathaim (Num. 32.37; Josh. 13.19) is probably el-Qereiyat, 9 km (5.5 mi) northwest of Dibon. Hesbon was the capital of the Amorite king Sihon (Num. 21.26–30) and was later captured by Mesha. It is identified with modern Hesban. 2: Madmen is a play on words drawn from Isa. 25.10b, which some render as “Moab shall be trodden down in his place, as straw is trodden down in a dung pit (madmenah).” It may also play on the name of the Moabite city Dimon (Isa. 15.9). 3–5: The location of Horonaim is uncertain (see Isa. 15.5), although some identify it with el-Iraq, 9 miles east of the southeastern Dead Sea. Luhith is probably

- 6 Flee, save your lives!
^aAnd be like Aroer in the desert.^a
- 7 Surely, because of your trust
 In your wealth and in your treasures,
 You too shall be captured.
 And Chemosh shall go forth to exile,
 Together with his priests and attendants.
- 8 The ravager shall come to every town;
 No town shall escape.
 The valley shall be devastated
 And the tableland laid waste
 —because the LORD has spoken.
- 9 Give ^awings to Moab,
 For she must go hence.^a
 Her towns shall become desolate,
 With no one living in them.

¹⁰Cursed be he who is slack in doing the LORD's work!
 Cursed be he who withholds his sword from blood!

- 11 Moab has been secure from his youth on—
 He is settled on his lees
 And has not been poured from vessel to vessel—
 He has never gone into exile.
 Therefore his fine flavor has remained
 And his bouquet is unspoiled.

¹²But days are coming—declares the LORD—when I will send men against him to tip him over; they shall empty his vessels and smash his jars. ¹³And Moab shall be shamed because of Chemosh, as the House of Israel were shamed because of Bethel, on whom they relied.

- 14 How can you say: We are warriors, Valiant men for war?
- 15 Moab is ravaged,
 His towns have been entered,
 His choice young men
 Have gone down to the slaughter —declares the King whose name is LORD of Hosts.
- 16 The doom of Moab is coming close,
 His downfall is approaching swiftly.
- 17 Condole with him, all who live near him,
 All you who know him by name!

nearby (Isa. 15.5). 6: Aroer is modern Ara'ir, located along the northern rim of the wadi Arnon where it defended ancient Moab's northern border. 7: Chemosh is the chief god of Moab (1 Kings 11.7). 11–17: The oracle employs the imagery of wine jars that have never been moved, thereby allowing the sediment (lees) to settle. Because of its cooperation with Assyria, Moab had never suffered exile, which apparently made it complacent in the Babylonian period. 12: The coming destruction is portrayed as the smashing of wine jars. 13: The prophet identifies adherence to Chemosh rather than God as the reason for their punishment, much as northern Israel had relied on King Jeroboam's temple at Beth El (see 1 Kings chs 12–13; 2 Kings ch 17), or perhaps the Semitic deity of the same name. The implications of this v.—that foreigners are punished for their pagan ways—is atypical of the oracles against the nations.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Say: "Alas, the strong rod is broken,
The lordly staff!"

- 18 Descend from glory
And sit in thirst,^a O inhabitant of Fair Dibon;
For the ravager of Moab has entered your town,
He has destroyed your fortresses.
- 19 Stand by the road and look out,
O inhabitant of Aroer.
Ask of him who is fleeing
And of her who is escaping:
Say, "What has happened?"
- 20 Moab is shamed and dismayed;
Howl and cry aloud!
Tell at the Arnon
That Moab is ravaged!

²¹Judgment has come upon the tableland—upon Holon, Jahzah, and Mephaath; ²²upon Dibon, Nebo, and Beth-diblathaim; ²³upon Kiriathaim, Beth-gamul, and Beth-meon; ²⁴upon Kerioth and Bozrah—upon all the towns of the land of Moab, far and near.

- 25 The might of Moab has been cut down,
His strength is broken —declares the LORD.
- 26 Get him drunk
For he vaunted himself against the LORD.
Moab shall vomit till he is drained,
And he too shall be a laughingstock.
- 27 Wasn't Israel a laughingstock to you?
Was he ever caught among thieves,
That you should ^bshake your head^b
Whenever you speak of him?
- 28 Desert the cities
And dwell in the crags,
O inhabitants of Moab!
Be like a dove that nests
In the sides of a pit.
- 29 We have heard of Moab's pride—
Most haughty is he—
Of his arrogance and pride,
His haughtiness and self-exaltation.

³⁰I know his insolence—declares the LORD—the wickedness that is in him,^c the wickedness ^dhe has^d committed.

18-28: The prophet employs the imagery of a woman who has been raped to depict the suffering of Moab at the hands of the Babylonians. 18: Dibon is modern Dhiban, located 22 km (13 mi) east of the Dead Sea and 5 km (3 mi) north of the Arnon along the ancient King's Highway, the major trade route through the Transjordan in antiquity (see Num. 21.21-31). 21: The tableland refers to the central plateau north of the Arnon. The various cities located there are listed. 26: The oracle builds on the imagery of the wine jars with the imagery of drunkenness. 29-39: The prophet turns to a lament over the fall of Moab, identified by its characteristic 3/2 beat qinah ("lament") meter.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^{b-b} I.e., in mockery.

^c Cf. note at Isa. 16.6. ^{d-d} Heb. "they have."

31 Therefore I will howl for Moab,
I will cry out for all Moab,
I^a will moan for the men of Kir-heres.

32 With greater weeping than for Jazer
I weep for you, O vine of Sibmah, Whose tendrils crossed the sea,
Reached to the sea,^b to Jazer.
A ravager has come down
Upon your fig and grape harvests.

33 Rejoicing and gladness
Are gone from the farm land,
From the country of Moab;
I have put an end to wine in the presses,
No one treads [the grapes] with shouting—
‘The shout is a shout no more.’^c

34 There is an outcry from Heshbon to Elealeh,
They raise their voices as far as Jahaz,
From Zoar to Horonaim and Eglath-shelishiah.
The waters of Nimrim
Shall also become desolation.

35 And I will make an end in Moab
—declares the LORD—
Of those who offer at a shrine
And burn incense to their god.

36 Therefore,
My heart moans for Moab like a flute;
Like a flute my heart moans
For the men of Kir-heres—
‘Therefore,
The gains they have made shall vanish’^c—

37 For every head is bald
And every beard is shorn;
On all hands there are gashes,
And on the loins sackcloth.

38 On all the roofs of Moab,
And in its squares
There is naught but lamentation;
For I have broken Moab
Like a vessel no one wants
—declares the LORD.

39 How he is dismayed! Wail!
How Moab has turned his back in shame!
Moab shall be a laughingstock
And a shock to all those near him.

31: Kir-heres is modern el-Kerak (Isa. 15.1), which was the ancient capital of Moab. 32: The location of Jazer is uncertain, although it was probably a short distance west of Amman. Sibmah is probably modern Qurn el-Kibsh 8 km (5 mi) southwest of Hesban. 34: Elealeh is modern el-Al 3 km (2 mi) north-east of Hesban. Zoar is one of the five cities of the plain associated with Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 14.1-12). It may be es-Safi, 8 km (5 mi) south of the Dead Sea. Eglath-shelishiah is unknown (see Isa. 15.5). 37: Bald . . . shorn . . . gashes . . . sackcloth: All of these practices—shaving the head and beard, gashing oneself, wearing rough garmets—are expressions of mourning or grief.

^a Heb. "He."

^b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^{c-c} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

40 For thus said the LORD:
See, he soars like an eagle
And spreads out his wings against Moab!
41 Kerioth shall be captured
And the strongholds shall be seized.
In that day, the heart of Moab's warriors
Shall be like the heart of a woman in travail.
42 And Moab shall be destroyed as a people,
For he vaunted himself against the LORD.
43 "Terror, and pit, and trap"^a Upon you who dwell in Moab!
—declares the LORD.
44 He who flees from the terror
Shall fall into the pit;
And he who climbs out of the pit
Shall be caught in the trap.
For I will bring upon Moab
The year of their doom —declares the LORD.
45 In the shelter of Heshbon
Fugitives halt exhausted;
For fire went forth from Heshbon,
Flame from the midst^b of Sihon,
Consuming the brow of Moab,
The pate of the people of Shaon.^c 46 Woe to you, O Moab!
The people of Chemosh are undone,
For your sons are carried off into captivity,
Your daughters into exile.
47 But I will restore the fortunes of Moab in the days to come—declares the LORD.

Thus far is the judgment on Moab.

49 Concerning the Ammonites.

Thus said the LORD:
Has Israel no sons,
Has he no heir?
Then why has Milcom^d dispossessed Gad,
And why have his people settled in Gad's^e towns?
2 Assuredly, days are coming
—declares the LORD—
When I will sound the alarm of war Against Rabbah of the Ammonites;

40-47: The metaphor of a woman in childbirth depicts Moab's pain (see Isa. 13.8). 42: For Moab's vaunting itself against God, see Zeph. 2.8-10. 43-44: Isa. 24.17-18 quotes vv. 43-44, but identifies the victims as the inhabitants of the land. 45-46: A quotation, with variations, of Num. 21.28-29. Perhaps this quotation of a Torah text is used as a device to indicate that the unit is at an end; a final Torah quotation sometimes has this function in later rabbinic texts. 47: The final v. promises restoration for Moab.

49.1-6: Jeremiah's oracle concerning the Ammonites. The Ammonites were closely connected geographically and in biblical narrative (see Gen. 19.29-38) to the Moabites, the subjects of the previous oracle. Ancient Ammon was centered around the city of Rabbath-Ammon, modern Amman. The Ammonites were sometimes foes and sometimes allies of Israel and Judah. The Ammonites supported Ishmael son of Nethaniah, a member of the Davidic family, in his revolt against Gedaliah (chs 41-42). Nebuchadnezzar's invasion put an end to the ancient Ammonite state (contrast v. 6). 1: Milcom is the chief god of the Ammonites (1 Kings 11.5, 33). The Ammonites periodically encroached upon the bordering territory of Gad (Judg. 10.6-12.6; 2 Sam. 12.26-31). As noted, here and in v. 3 the Heb is vocalized as "malkam," "their king"—the consonants of "their king" and the deity "milkom" are identical. The correct reading Milkom is preserved in some of the early Bible translations, which transliterate the name; it is unclear if the Masoretic reading "their king" reflects a loss of knowledge that Milkom was the Ammonite high god, or reflects an intentional change aimed at denying the power or existence of this deity. 6: The oracle concludes with a promise of restoration.

a-a See note at Isa. 24.17. b Emendation yields "house." c Or "tumult."
d The name of the Ammonite deity; vocalized Malcan here and in v. 3. e Heb. "his."

It shall become a desolate mound,
 And its villages shall be set on fire.
 And Israel shall dispossess
 Those who dispossessed him —said the LORD.
 3 Howl, O Heshbon, for Ai is ravaged!
 Cry out, O daughters of Rabbah!
 Gird on sackcloth, lament, ^aAnd run to and fro in the sheepfolds.^a
 For Milcom shall go into exile,
 Together with his priests and attendants.

4 ^bWhy do you glory in strength,
 Your strength is drained,^b
 O rebellious daughter,
 You who relied on your treasures,
 [Who said:] Who dares attack me?
 5 I am bringing terror upon you —declares the Lord God of Hosts—
 From all those around you.
 Every one of you shall be driven ^cin every direction,^c
 And none shall gather in the fugitives.
⁶But afterward I will restore the fortunes of the Am-monites—declares the LORD.

7 Concerning Edom.

Thus said the LORD of Hosts:
 Is there no more wisdom in Teman?
 Has counsel vanished from the prudent?
 Has their wisdom gone stale?
 8 Flee, turn away, sit down low,
 O inhabitants of Dedan,
 For I am bringing Esau's doom upon him,
 The time when I deal with him.
 9 ^dIf vintagers were to come upon you,
 Would they leave no gleanings?
 Even thieves in the night
 Would destroy only for their needs!^d
 10 But it is I who have bared Esau,
 Have exposed his place of concealment;
 He cannot hide.

49.7–22: Jeremiah's oracle concerning Edom. The Edomites were located to the southeast of the Dead Sea and east of the Arabah or Jordan rift that extends to the Gulf of Aqabah. Gen. chs 25–35 identifies the Edomites as the descendants of Jacob's brother Esau. The Bible bitterly recalls how the Edomites apparently joined in the Babylonian assault against Jerusalem (see Ps. 137.7; Lam. 4.21–22; Obad. 10–16). Following the destruction of Jerusalem, Edomites moved into the Negev region and established themselves in Hebron. They were known as the Idumeans in Hellenistic and Roman times. 7: The location of Teman is unknown. Edom was in the east, an area associated with wisdom in the Bible (Job 1.3; Prov. 30.1; 31.1; cf. Isa. 2.6). 8: Dedan is a trading center located in northwestern Arabia (see Gen. 10.6–7; 25.1–3; Ezek. 25.13). 9–10: These vv. are similar to Obad. 5–6, which portrays Edom's punishment.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; for "strength" cf. Akkadian emuqu.

c-c Lit. "each man straight ahead."

d-d Obad. 1.5 reads: "If thieves were to come to you, / Marauders by night, / They would steal no more than they needed. / If vintagers came to you, / They would surely leave some gleanings."

His offspring is ravaged,
His kin and his neighbors—
He is no more.^a

11 "Leave your orphans with me,
I will rear them;
Let your widows rely on me!"

¹²For thus said the LORD: If they who rightly should not drink of the cup must drink it, are you the one to go unpunished? You shall not go unpunished: you will have to drink! ¹³For by Myself I swear—declares the LORD—Bozrah shall become a desolation, a mockery, a ruin, and a curse;^b and all its towns shall be ruins for all time.

14 I have received tidings from the LORD,
And an envoy is sent out among the nations:
Assemble, and move against her,
And rise up for war!

15 For I will make you least among nations,
Most despised among men.

16 *Your horrible nature;^c
Your arrogant heart has seduced you,
You who dwell in clefts of the rock,
Who occupy the height of the hill!
Should you nest as high as the eagle,
From there I will pull you down

—declares the LORD.

¹⁷And Edom shall be a cause of appallment; whoever passes by will be appalled and will hiss^d at all its wounds. ¹⁸It shall be like the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah and their neighbors—said the LORD: no man shall live there, no human shall sojourn there. ¹⁹It shall be as when a lion comes up out of the jungle of the Jordan against a secure pasture: in a moment I can harry him out of it and appoint over it anyone I choose. Then who is like Me? Who can summon Me? Who is the shepherd that can stand up against Me? ²⁰Hear, then, the plan which the LORD has devised against Edom, and what He has purposed against the inhabitants of Teman:

Surely the shepherd boys
Shall drag them away;

13: Bozrah is the chief city and fortress of northern Edom, 13 km (8 mi) south of modern Tefileh.

14–16: These vv. resemble Obad. 1–4, which describe Edom's arrogance. Bozrah was located on high ground where it was difficult to attack. 18: Sodom and Gomorrah were located in what became Edomite territory, and therefore aid in depicting Edom's demise. The predicted complete destruction of Edom, in contrast to the restoration of Moab and Ammon, is likely motivated by the role they played in joining the Babylonians against Jerusalem. 22: The imagery of the eagle apparently recalls Bozrah's location on the heights.

a-a Some Septuagint mss. read "And there is none to say."

b Cf. note at 24.9 and 42.18.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d Cf. note at 18.16.

e-e Emendation yields "he can harry them [i.e., the sheep] out of it; and what champion could one place in charge of them?"

Surely the pasture shall be
 Aghast because of them.
 21 At the sound of their downfall
 The earth shall shake;
 The sound of screaming
 Shall be heard at the Sea of Reeds.
 22 See, like an eagle he flies up,
 He soars and spreads his wings against Bozrah;
 And the heart of Edom's warriors in that day
 Shall be like the heart of a woman in travail.
 23 Concerning Damascus.

 Hamath and Arpad are shamed,
 For they have heard bad news.
 They shake with anxiety,
 Like^a the sea which cannot rest.
 24 Damascus has grown weak,
 She has turned around to flee;
 Trembling has seized her,
 Pain and anguish have taken hold of her,
 Like a woman in childbirth.
 25 ^bHow has the glorious city not been deserted,^b
 The citadel of my joy!
 26 Assuredly, her young men shall lie fallen in her squares.
 And all her warriors shall be stilled in that day
 —declares the LORD of Hosts.
 27 I will set fire to the wall of Damascus,
 And it shall consume the fortresses of Ben-hadad.
 28 Concerning Kedar and the kingdoms of Hazor, which King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon conquered.

 Thus said the LORD:
 Arise, march against Kedar,
 And ravage the Kedemites!
 29 They will take away their tents and their flocks,
 Their tent cloths and all their gear;
 They shall carry off their camels,
 And shall proclaim against them:
 Terror all around!
 30 Flee, wander far,
 Sit down low, O inhabitants of Hazor
 —says the LORD.

49.23-27: Jeremiah's oracle concerning Damascus. Damascus was the ancient capital of Aram (modern Syria). It was destroyed in 734-732 BCE by the Assyrians, who later employed it as an administrative center. 23: Hamath is modern Hama. Arpad was located 40 km (25 mi) north of Aleppo. Both were destroyed by the Assyrians (2 Kings 18.34; 19.13; Isa. 10.9; 36.19; 37.13). 27: The concluding statement of the oracle is drawn from Amos 1.4. Ben-hadad is the name of several Aramean kings (1 Kings 15.18, 20; 2 Kings 13.24).

49.28-33: Jeremiah's oracles concerning Kedar and Hazor. 28: Kedar refers to a coalition of Arab tribes in the north Arabian desert that were descended from Ishmael (Gen. 25.13; 1 Chron. 1.29). Hazor is not the Israelite city (Josh. ch 11), but apparently refers to an unknown site associated with Arab tribes. Arab tribes frequently served with the Babylonians, especially in the 7th century when they were used to harass the Assyrians. Babylonian records note Nebuchadrezzar's campaigns against Arab tribes. 29: The imagery of the v. emphasizes the nomadic nature of these groups. Terror all around appears frequently in Jeremiah (20.10, etc.).

^a So a few mss. Most mss. and editions read "In."

^{b-b} Emendation yields "How has the glorious city been deserted"; so Vulgate.

For King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon
 Has devised a plan against you
 And formed a purpose against you:
 31 Rise up, attack a tranquil nation
 That dwells secure —says the LORD—
 That has no barred gates,
 That dwells alone.
 32 Their camels shall become booty,
 And their abundant flocks a spoil;
 And I will scatter to every quarter
 Those who have their hair clipped;
 And from every direction I will bring Disaster upon them —says the LORD.
 33 Hazor shall become a lair of jackals,
 A desolation for all time.
 No man shall live there,
 No human shall sojourn there.

³⁴The word of the LORD that came to the prophet Jeremiah concerning Elam, at the beginning of the reign of King Zedekiah of Judah:

³⁵Thus said the LORD of Hosts: I am going to break the bow of Elam, the mainstay of their strength. ³⁶And I shall bring four winds against Elam from the four quarters of heaven, and scatter them to all those winds. There shall not be a nation to which the fugitives from Elam do not come. ³⁷And I will break Elam before their enemies, before those who seek their lives; and I will bring disaster upon them, My flaming wrath—declares the LORD. And I will dispatch the sword after them until I have consumed them.

38 And I will set My throne in Elam,
 And wipe out from there king and officials
 —says the LORD.

³⁹But in the days to come I will restore the fortunes of Elam—declares the LORD.

50 The word which the LORD spoke concerning Babylon, the land of the Chaldeans, through the prophet Jeremiah:

2 Declare among the nations, and proclaim;
 Raise a standard, proclaim;
 Hide nothing! Say:
 Babylon is captured,
 Bel^a is shamed,

^a Names of the city god of Babylon.

49.34–39: Jeremiah's oracles concerning Elam. Ancient Elam was located east of the Tigris River in Mesopotamia. Its capital was Shushan or Susa. The Assyrians sacked Susa in 646 BCE, and Elamite archers joined in Assyrian attacks against Judah (Isa. 21.2; 22.6). The Elamites were later controlled by Babylonia and Persia. The Persian monarch Darius established his winter palace in Susa. 36: Dividing the world into four compass points is not an obvious, natural division, but is borrowed by Israel from Mesopotamia, where it seems to have first developed.

50.1–51.58: Jeremiah's oracle concerning Babylonia. Although Jeremiah consistently maintained that Judah must submit to Babylonia, he is hardly sympathetic to the Babylonians. Babylonian brutality in the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple as well as the deportation of a major element of Judah's population would have prompted the prophet's condemnation. His views are much like those of Isaiah, who first argued that Assyria was the divinely appointed agent of Israel's punishment and then condemned the Assyrians for overstepping their bounds with their cruelty to Israel and blasphemy against God (Isa. chs 5–12; 13–14; 36–37). This oracle (or more likely, collection of oracles) is reserved for last, as a climax of the collection of oracles against the nations. Much of these two chs emphasizes that Babylonia will be destroyed through violence. In reality, however, Cyrus bloodlessly took over Babylon in 539 BCE, when the powerful priests of Marduk preferred him to the reigning Babylonian King Nabonidus (Nabu-naid). 50.2–7: The image of the raised standard appears also in Isa. 11.10, 12 to signal the return of the exiles following the defeat of the Assyrian oppressor; here it signals Babylonia's downfall in keeping with Jeremiah's view that Isaiah's oracles are fulfilled in his own time. 2: Bel ("master") is a name often given to Marduk (Me-

Merodach^a is dismayed.
Her idols are shamed,
Her fetishes dismayed.

³ For a nation from the north has attacked her,
It will make her land a desolation.
No one shall dwell in it,
Both man and beast shall wander away.

⁴In those days and at that time—declares the LORD—the people of Israel together with the people of Judah shall come, and they shall weep as they go to seek the LORD their God. ⁵They shall inquire for Zion; in that direction their faces shall turn; ^bthey shall come^b and attach themselves to the LORD by a covenant for all time, which shall never be forgotten. ⁶My people were lost sheep: their shepherds led them astray, they drove them out to the mountains, they roamed from mount to hill, they forgot their own resting place. ⁷All who encountered them devoured them; and their foes said, “We shall not be held guilty, because they have sinned against the LORD, the true Pasture, the Hope of their fathers—the LORD.”

⁸ Flee from Babylon,
Leave the land of the Chaldeans,
And be like he-goats that lead the flock!
⁹ For see, I am rousing and leading An assemblage of great nations against Babylon
From the lands of the north.
They shall draw up their lines against her,
There she shall be captured.
Their arrows are like those of “a skilled warrior”^c
Who does not turn back without hitting the mark.
¹⁰ Chaldea shall be despoiled,
All her spoilers shall be sated

—declares the LORD.

¹¹ For you rejoiced, you exulted,
You who plundered My possession;
You stamped like a heifer treading grain,
You neighed like steeds.
¹² So your mother will be utterly shamed,
She who bore you will be disgraced.
Behold the end of the nations—
Wilderness, desert, and steppe!
¹³ Because of the LORD’s wrath she shall not be inhabited;

rodach), the chief deity of Babylon. 3: The nation from the north is a common motif in Jeremiah’s oracles (see chs 4–6). Many see this as a reference to Persia, which conquered Babylonia in 539. Persia actually lies to the east of Babylonia. 4–5: The portrayal of the people returning to seek God recalls Isa. 8.16–9.6; 11.1–16. It is unclear whether the image of the Northern Kingdom joining together with Judah, found in other contemporaneous prophecies (Ezek. 37.15–28), represents a reality, that the northern Israelites still maintained some ethnic identity after over a century in exile, or is idealistic. 6–7: The metaphor of shepherds depicts Judah’s leadership. 8–13: The prophet’s call to flee from Babylonia anticipates Second Isaiah’s calls in Isa. 48.20–21. 8: The Chaldeans were an influential tribe within Babylonia who gained a great deal of power, esp. beginning in the 8th century. Thus, Chaldeans may be used in the same sense as Babylonians. 9: The portrayal of the enemy preparing to attack Babylonia likewise draws upon Isaiah’s depiction of the Assyrians in Isa. 5.26–30. 10–13: Jeremiah contends that Babylonia must be punished for cruelty just as Isaiah argued that Assyria will be punished for arrogance (Isa. 10.5–34; 14.24–27).

^a Names of the city god of Babylon. ^{b-b} Heb. “come ye.”

^{c-c} So many mss., editions, and versions; other mss. and editions read “a warrior who be-reaves.”

She shall be utterly desolate.
Whoever passes by Babylon will be appalled
And will hiss at all her wounds.

- 14 Range yourselves roundabout Babylon,
All you who draw the bow;
Shoot at her, don't spare arrows,
For she has sinned against the LORD.
- 15 Raise a shout against her all about!
^aShe has surrendered;^a
Her bastions have fallen,
Her walls are thrown down—
This is the LORD's vengeance.
Take vengeance on her,
Do to her as she has done!
- 16 Make an end in Babylon of sowers,
And of wielders of the sickle at harvest time.
Because of the deadly^b sword,
Each man shall turn back to his people,
They shall flee every one to his land.

¹⁷Israel are scattered sheep, harried by lions. First the king of Assyria devoured them, and in the end King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon crunched their bones. ¹⁸Assuredly, thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel: I will deal with the king of Babylon and his land as I dealt with the king of Assyria. ¹⁹And I will lead Israel back to his pasture, and he shall graze in Carmel and Bashan, and eat his fill in the hill country of Ephraim and in Gilead.

- 20 In those days and at that time
—declares the LORD—
The iniquity of Israel shall be sought,
And there shall be none;
The sins of Judah,
And none shall be found;
For I will pardon those I allow to survive.
- 21 Advance against her—^cthe land of Merathaim^c—
And against the inhabitants of Pekod; Ruin and destroy after them to the last
—says the LORD—
Do just as I have commanded you.
- 22 Hark! War in the land
And vast destruction!

14–16: The prophet exhorts the warriors who will attack Babylon. Babylon ultimately surrendered peacefully to the Persian king Cyrus in 539. 17–19: The image of Israel as scattered sheep appears also in Mic. 2.12–13; Ezek. ch 34. 19: The Carmel is the mountain range that runs along the Mediterranean coast from Haifa to the south. The Bashan is now known as the Golan. Ephraim is the hill country of Israel that now comprises the northern part of the West Bank of Samaria (Shomron). Gilead is the Trans-Jordanian region to the south of the Golan in modern Jordan. All of these areas were a part of Israel in antiquity. 20–39: The prophet announces Babylon's punishment because of its harsh treatment of Israel and Judah. 21: Merathaim is a pun that means "double rebellion," used here as a name for Babylon. Pekod means "punishment," also used here as a name for Babylon.

a-a Lit. "She has given her hand"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

23 How the hammer of the whole earth
 Has been hacked and shattered!
 How Babylon has become An appallment among the nations!
 24 I set a snare for you, O Babylon,
 And you were trapped unawares;
 You were found and caught,
 Because you challenged the LORD.
 25 The LORD has opened His armory
 And brought out the weapons of His wrath;
 For that is the task
 Of my Lord GOD of Hosts
 In the land of the Chaldeans.
 26 Come against her ^afrom every quarter;^a Break open her granaries, ^aPile her up like heaps of grain,^a
 And destroy her, let her have no remnant!
 27 ^bDestroy all ^bher bulls,
 Let them go down to slaughter.
 Alas for them, their day is come,
 The hour of their doom!
 28 Hark! fugitives are escaping
 From the land of Babylon,
 To tell in Zion of the vengeance of the LORD
 our God,
 Vengeance for His Temple.
 29 Summon archers against Babylon,
 All who draw the bow!
 Encamp against her roundabout,
 Let none of her people escape.
 Pay her back for her actions,
 Do to her just what she has done;
 For she has acted insolently against the LORD,
 The Holy One of Israel.
 30 Assuredly, her young men shall fall in her squares,
 And all her warriors shall perish in that day
 —declares the LORD.
 31 I am going to deal with you, O Insolence
 —declares the Lord GOD of Hosts—
 For your day is come, the time when I doom you:
 32 Insolence shall stumble and fall,
 With none to raise her up.
 I will set her cities on fire,
 And it shall consume everything around her.

24-32: Babylonia is accused of challenging God, destroying God's Temple, and insolence just as Assyria was charged with arrogance in threatening Jerusalem (Isa. 10.5-34; chs 36-37).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Emendation yields "A sword against"; cf. vvv 35 ff.

33 Thus said the LORD of Hosts:
 The people of Israel are oppressed,
 And so too the people of Judah;
 All their captors held them,
 They refused to let them go.
 34 Their Redeemer is mighty,
 His name is LORD of Hosts.
 He will champion their cause—
 So as to give rest to the earth,
 And unrest to the inhabitants of Babylon.

35 A sword against the Chaldeans
 —declares the LORD—
 And against the inhabitants of Babylon,
 Against its officials and its wise men!
 36 A sword against the diviners, that they be made fools of!
 A sword against the warriors, that they be dismayed!

37 A sword against its horses and chariots,
 And against all the motley crowd in its midst,
 That they become like women!
 A sword against its treasuries, that they be pillaged!

38 A drought^a against its waters, that they be dried up!
 For it is a land of idols;
 They are besotted by their^b dread images.^b
 39 Assuredly,
^bWildcats and hyenas^b shall dwell [there],
 And ostriches shall dwell there;
 It shall never be settled again,
 Nor inhabited throughout the ages.

⁴⁰It shall be as when God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah and their neighbors—declares the LORD; no man shall live there, no human shall sojourn there.

41 Lo, a people comes from the northland;
 A great nation and many kings are roused
 From the remotest parts of the earth.
 42 They grasp the bow and javelin,
 They are cruel, they show no mercy;
 The sound of them is like the roaring sea.
 They ride upon horses,

36–37: The announcement of a sword against Babylonia's diviners, warriors, horses and chariots, and treasuries appears to draw upon Isa. 2.6–21, which employs similar images in a call for judgment on the day of the LORD. 40–46: Sodom and Gomorrah were destroyed by God because of their wickedness (Gen. chs 18–19). The prophets sometimes draw on the Sodom and Gomorrah tradition to portray the punishment of wicked nations (see 20.16; 23.14; cf. Isa. 1.10; 3.9; Amos 4.11; Zeph. 2.9). 41–43: Jeremiah's portrayal of Babylonia's conqueror resembles Isaiah's depiction of Assyria in Isa. 5.26–30.

^a Horeb, play on hereb, "sword" in preceding verses.

^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Accoutered like a man for battle, Against you, O Fair Babylon!

43 The king of Babylon has heard the report of them,
And his hands are weakened;
Anguish seizes him,
Pangs like a woman in childbirth.

44 It shall be as when a lion comes out of the jungle of the Jordan against a secure pasture: in a moment ^aI can harry them out of it and appoint over it anyone I choose.^a Then who is like Me? Who can summon Me? Who is the shepherd that can stand up against Me? ⁴⁵Hear, then, the plan that the LORD has devised against Babylon, and has purposed against the land of Chaldea:

Surely the shepherd boys
Shall drag them away;
Surely the pasture shall be
Aghast because of them.

46 At the sound of Babylon's capture
The earth quakes,
And an outcry is heard among the nations.

51 Thus said the LORD:
See, I am rousing a destructive wind Against Babylon and the inhabitants of Leb-kamai.^b

2 I will send strangers^c against Babylon, and they shall winnow her.

And they shall strip her land bare;
They shall beset her on all sides
On the day of disaster.

3 Let^d the archer draw his bow,
And let him stand ready in his coat of mail!
Show no pity to her young men,
Wipe out all her host!

4 Let them fall slain in the land of Chaldea,
Pierced through in her streets.

5 For Israel and Judah were not bereft^e
Of their God the LORD of Hosts,
But their land was filled with guilt
Before the Holy One of Israel.

44-46: These vv. resemble the prophet's earlier statements concerning Edom in 49.19-21.

51.1-14: The impending downfall of Babylonia anticipates Persian and Median advances against Babylonia in 545 BCE. King Cyrus came to power by uniting Persia and Media under his rule. 1: The image of a destructive wind recalls the "Hamsin" or "Sharav," a dry desert wind much like the Santa Ana winds of southern California, that often causes great destruction at the transition of seasons in the spring and fall. Leb-kamai, lit. "the heart of those who rise against me," is another example of "'at-bash," a cryptic reference to the "kasdim," "Chaldeans," the Heb word for the Neo-Babylonians (see 25.26). The passage specifically notes that God acts because of the Temple.

a-a See note at 49.19.

b A cipher for Kasdim, "Chaldea."

c Change of vocalization yields "winnowers."

d Some Heb. mss. and ancient versions read "Let not" here and in next line.

e Lit. "widowed."

- 6 Flee from the midst of Babylon
And save your lives, each of you!
Do not perish for her iniquity;
For this is a time of vengeance for the LORD,
He will deal retribution to her.
- 7 Babylon was a golden cup in the LORD's hand,
It made the whole earth drunk;
The nations drank of her wine—
That is why the nations are mad.
- 8 Suddenly Babylon has fallen and is shattered;
Howl over her!
Get balm for her wounds:
Perhaps she can be healed.
- 9 We tried to cure Babylon
But she was incurable.
Let us leave her and go,
Each to his own land;
For her punishment reaches to heaven,
It is as high as the sky.
- 10 The LORD has proclaimed our vindication;
Come, let us recount in Zion
The deeds of the LORD our God.
- 11 Polish the arrows,
Fill the quivers!
The LORD has roused the spirit of the kings of Media,
For His plan against Babylon is to destroy her.
This is the vengeance of the LORD,
Vengeance for His Temple.
- 12 Raise a standard against the walls of Babylon!
Set up a blockade; station watchmen;
Prepare those in ambush.
For the LORD has both planned and performed
What He decreed against the inhabitants of Babylon.
- 13 O you who dwell by great waters,
With vast storehouses,
Your time is come, ^athe hour of your end.^a
- 14 The LORD of Hosts has sworn by Himself:
I will fill you with men like a locust swarm,
They will raise a shout against you.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

15 He made the earth by His might,
 Established the world by His wisdom,
 And by His understanding stretched out the skies.
 16 ^aWhen He makes His voice heard,^a
 There is a rumbling of waters in the skies;
 He makes vapors rise from the end of the earth,
 He makes lightning for the rain,
 And brings forth wind from His treasures.
 17 Every man is proved dull, without knowledge;
 Every goldsmith is put to shame because of the idol,
 For his molten image is a deceit—
 There is no breath in them.
 18 They are delusion, a work of mockery;
 In their hour of doom, they shall perish.
 19 Not like these in the Portion of Jacob,
 For it is He who formed all things;
 And [Israel is] His very own tribe.
 LORD of Hosts is His name.

20 You are My war club, [My] weapons of battle;
 With you I clubbed nations,
 With you I destroyed kingdoms;
 21 With you I clubbed horse and rider,
 With you I clubbed chariot and driver,
 22 With you I clubbed man and woman,
 With you I clubbed graybeard and boy,
 With you I clubbed youth and maiden;
 23 With you I clubbed shepherd and flock,
 With you I clubbed plowman and team,
 With you I clubbed governors and prefects.
 24 But I will requite Babylon and all the inhabitants of Chaldea
 For all the wicked things they did to Zion before your eyes —declares the LORD.
 25 See, I will deal with you, O mountain of the destroyer —declares the LORD—Destroyer of the whole earth!
 I will stretch out My hand against you
 And roll you down from the crags,
 And make you a burnt-out mountain.
 26 They shall never take from you
 A cornerstone or foundation stone;
 You shall be a desolation for all time
 —declares the LORD.
 27 Raise a standard on earth,

15-19: The hymnic motifs of this passage extol God as creator.
20-26: God states that Babylonia was the divinely chosen instrument of punishment, but Babylonia will be punished for its cruelty.
27-33: God calls for the Medians to destroy Babylonia. 27: Ararat refers to ancient Urartu, located in southeastern Turkey and north-west Iran. Minni refers to ancient Mannaya, located in northern Iraq. Ashkenaz probably refers to the Scythians, an Indo-European people who lived in the region of modern Armenia (cf. Gen. 10.3). Herodotus claims that they invaded Syria-Israel in the 7th century BCE. The term now refers in modern Heb to Germany and Yiddish-speaking European Jews and their descendants.

a-a Lit. "At the sound of His making."

Sound a horn among the nations,
 Appoint nations against her,
 Assemble kingdoms against her—Ararat, Minni, and Ashkenaz—Designate a marshal against her,
 Bring up horses like swarming^a locusts!
 28 Appoint nations for war against her—
 The kings of Media,
 Her governors and all her prefects,
 And all the lands they rule!

29 Then the earth quakes and writhes,
 For the LORD's purpose is fulfilled against Babylon,

To make the land of Babylon
 A waste without inhabitant.
 30 The warriors of Babylon stop fighting,
 They sit in the strongholds,
 Their might is dried up,
 They become women.
 Her dwellings are set afire,
 Her bars are broken.

31 Runner dashes to meet runner,
 Messenger to meet messenger,
 To report to the king of Babylon
 That his city is captured, from end to end.

32 The fords are captured,
 And the swamp thickets^a are consumed in fire;
 And the fighting men are in panic.

33 For thus said the LORD of Hosts, the God of Israel:
 Fair Babylon is like a threshing floor
 Ready to be trodden;
 In a little while her harvesttime will come.

34 "Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon
 Devoured me and discomfited me;
 He swallowed me like a dragon,
 He filled his belly with my dainties,
 And set me down like an empty dish;
 Then he ^brinsed me out.^b

35 Let the violence done me and my kindred Be upon Babylon," Says the inhabitant of Zion;
 "And let my blood be upon the inhabitants of Chaldea," Says Jerusalem.

34-35: The inhabitant of Zion speaks to call for the punishment of Nebuchadrezzar and Babylon for oppression.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

36 Assuredly, thus said the LORD:
 I am going to uphold your cause
 And take vengeance for you;
 I will dry up her sea
 And make her fountain run dry.
 37 Babylon shall become rubble,
 A den for jackals,
 An object of horror and hissing,^a Without inhabitant.
 38 Like lions, they roar together,
 They growl like lion cubs.
 39 ^bWhen they are heated, I will set out their drink And get them drunk, that they may become hilarious.^b
 And then sleep an endless sleep,
 Never to awake —declares the LORD.
 40 I will bring them down like lambs for slaughter,
 Like rams and he-goats.
 41 How has Sheshach^c been captured,
 The praise of the whole earth been taken!
 How has Babylon become
 A horror to the nations!
 42 The sea has risen over Babylon,
 She is covered by its roaring waves.
 43 Her towns are a desolation,
 A land of desert and steppe,
 A land no man lives in
 And no human passes through.
 44 And I will deal with Bel in Babylon,
 And make him disgorge what he has swallowed,
 And nations shall no more gaze on him with joy.
 Even the wall of Babylon shall fall.
 45 Depart from there, O My people,
 Save your lives, each of you,
 From the furious anger of the LORD.
 46 Do not be downhearted or afraid
 At the rumors heard in the land:
 A rumor will come one year,
 And another rumor the next year
 Of violence in the land,
 And of ruler against ruler.
 47 Assuredly, days are coming,
 When I will deal with Babylon's images;

36–44: God answers the inhabitant of Jerusalem, ensuring action against Babylonia. 41: Sheshach is another example of “’atbash,” a cryptic reference to Babylonia (see 25.26). 45–58: The prophet calls upon Jews to escape from Babylonia, as it is now to be judged (cf. Isa. 48.20–21; contra Jer. ch 29).

^a See note at 18.16.

^{b-b} Emendation yields “With poison [so Syriac] will I set out their drink / And get them drunk till they fall unconscious” (so ancient versions).

^c See note at 25.26.

Her whole land shall be shamed,
 And all her slain shall fall in her midst.
 48 Heavens and earth and all that is in them Shall shout over Babylon;
 For the ravagers shall come upon her from the north —declares the LORD.
 49 Yes, Babylon is to fall
 [For] the slain of Israel,
 As the slain of all the earth
 Have fallen through Babylon.
 50 You fugitives from the sword,
 Go, don't delay!
 Remember the LORD from afar,
 And call Jerusalem to mind.
 51 "We were shamed, we heard taunts;
 Humiliation covered our faces,
 When aliens entered
 The sacred areas of the LORD's House."
 52 Assuredly, days are coming
 —declares the LORD—
 When I will deal with her images,
 And throughout her land the dying shall groan.
 53 Though Babylon should climb to the skies,
 Though she fortify her strongholds up to heaven,
 The ravagers would come against her from Me
 —declares the LORD.
 54 Hark! an outcry from Babylon, Great destruction from the land of the Chaldeans.
 55 For the LORD is ravaging Babylon;
 He will put an end to her great din,
 Whose roar is like waves of mighty waters,
 Whose tumultuous noise resounds.
 56 For a ravager is coming upon Babylon, Her warriors shall be captured, their bows shall be snapped.
 For the LORD is a God of requital,
 He deals retribution.
 57 I will make her officials and wise men drunk,
 Her governors and prefects and warriors;
 And they shall sleep an endless sleep,
 Never to awaken
 —declares the King whose name is
 LORD of Hosts.
 58 Thus said the LORD of Hosts:
 Babylon's broad wall shall be knocked down,
 And her high gates set afire.

48: This hymnic verse offers another example of measure for measure: Babylonia, the nation from the north (see 25.9 n.), will itself be punished from the north.

Peoples shall labor for naught,
And nations have wearied themselves for fire.

⁵⁹The instructions that the prophet Jeremiah gave to Seraiah son of Neriah son of Mahseiah, when the latter went with^a King Zedekiah of Judah to Babylonia, in the fourth year of [Zedekiah's] reign. Seraiah was quartermaster.^b ⁶⁰Jeremiah wrote down in one scroll all the disaster that would come upon Babylon, all these things that are written concerning Babylon. ⁶¹And Jeremiah said to Seraiah, "When you get to Babylon, see that you read out all these words. ⁶²And say, 'O LORD, You Yourself have declared concerning this place that it shall be cut off, without inhabitant, man or beast; that it shall be a desolation for all time.' ⁶³And when you finish reading this scroll, tie a stone to it and hurl it into the Euphrates. ⁶⁴And say, 'Thus shall Babylon sink and never rise again, because of the disaster that I will bring upon it. And [nations] shall have wearied themselves [for fire].' "^c

Thus far the words of Jeremiah.

52^dZedekiah was twenty-one years old when he became king, and he reigned in Jerusalem for eleven years. His mother's name was Hamutal, daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah. ²He did what was displeasing to the LORD, just as Jehoiakim had done. ³Indeed, Jerusalem and Judah "were a cause of anger for the LORD, so that" He cast them out of His presence.

Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon. ⁴And in the ninth year of his^f reign, on the tenth day of the tenth month, King Nebuchadrezzar moved against Jerusalem with his whole army. They besieged it and built towers against it all around. ⁵The city continued in a state of siege until the eleventh year of King Zedekiah. ⁶By the ninth a Emendation yields "at the instance of."

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Cf. v. 58, last line.

d For this chapter cf. chap. 39 above and 2 Kings 24–25.

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. f I.e., Zedekiah's.

51.59–64: Jeremiah's instructions to Seraiah son of Neriah son of Mahseiah. 59: Seraiah is the brother of the scribe Baruch (see 32.12). His name appears on a clay bulla from ancient Jerusalem (see 32.11 n.). The fourth year of [Zedekiah's] reign would be 593 BCE. The reason for his journey to Babylon is not clear, although his title,

"sar menuḥah," lit. "officer of rest" (translated as quartermaster), may actually read "sar minḥah," "officer of the tribute" (cf. Tg. Jon.; Rashi). This would suggest that he journeyed to Babylon to deliver Judah's annual tribute to the Babylonians. 62: The prophet's words concerning the destruction of Babylonia appear to contradict his advice that the exiles accept Babylonian rule (ch 29), although they would point to Babylonia's punishment after its seventy-year rule is complete (cf. ch 25). 63: The symbolic act of sinking the scroll in the Euphrates represents, or perhaps helps to bring about, Babylonia's downfall. Rabbinic sources suggest that Seraiah may be another name for Baruch, and employ this passage to justify the claim that Baruch is a prophet. The claim is disputed (see Num. Rab. 10.5; b. Meg. 14b–15a; Num. Rab. 8.9; Midr. Ruth Rab. 2.1; Seder Olam 20).

52.1–34: Narrative concerning the fall of Jerusalem. This ch largely duplicates 2 Kings 24.18–25.30, although it is slightly longer, and there are differences (see also ch 39). It appears here to illustrate the fulfillment of Jeremiah's prophecies that Judah would be punished if it did not submit to Babylonia (e.g., chs 25–29). The end of 51.64, Thus far the words of Jeremiah, clearly indicates that ch 52 was not an original part of the book, but was added as the book grew (cf. Ps. 72.20). The insertion of what might be termed "a historical narrative from Kings" that validates the earlier prophecies and legitimates the prophet may also be seen in Isa. chs 36–39. 1–3: The initial regnal report gives personal details. Hamutal was also the mother of Jehoahaz, who was removed from the throne and deported to Egypt following Josiah's death in 609 BCE. Jehoakim's mother was Zebudah daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah (2 Kings 23.36). 4–11: The ninth year of his reign would be 589–588. The tenth day of the tenth month is the 10th of Tevet, which is observed as a fast day to mark the beginning of the siege (cf. Zech. 8.19). 5: The eleventh year of King Zedekiah would be 587–586. 6: The ninth day of the fourth month is the 9th of Tamuz. Although originally observed as a fast (Zech. 8.19), it was later replaced by the 17th day of Tamuz to commemorate the day that the Roman general Titus breached the walls of the day of the fourth month, the famine had become acute in the city; there was no food left for the common people.

⁷Then [the wall of] the city was breached. All the soldiers fled; they left the city by night through the gate between the double walls, which is near the king's garden—the Chaldeans were all around the city—and they set out for the Arabah.^a ⁸But the Chaldean troops pursued the king, and they overtook Zedekiah in the steppes of Jericho, as his entire force left him and scattered. ⁹They captured the king and brought him before the king of Babylon at Riblah, in the region of Hamath; and he put him on trial. ¹⁰The king of Babylon had Zedekiah's sons slaughtered before his eyes; he also had all the officials of Judah slaughtered at Riblah. ¹¹Then the eyes of Zedekiah were put out, and he was chained in bronze fetters. The king of Babylon brought him to Babylon and put him in prison, [where he remained] to the day of his death.

¹²On the tenth day of the fifth month—that was the nineteenth year of King Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon—Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, came ^bto represent^b the king of Babylon in Jerusalem. ¹³He burned the House of the LORD, the king's palace, and all the houses of Jerusalem; he burned down the house of ^cevery notable person.^c ¹⁴The entire Chaldean force that was with the chief of the guards tore down all the walls of Jerusalem on every side. ¹⁵The remnant of the people left in the city, the defectors who had gone over to the king of Babylon, and what remained of the craftsmen^d were taken into exile by Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards. But some of the poorest elements of the population—¹⁶some of the poorest in the land—were left by Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, to be vine-dressers and field hands.

¹⁷The Chaldeans broke up the bronze columns of the House of the LORD, the stands, and the bronze tank that was in the House of the LORD; and they carried all the bronze away to Babylon. ¹⁸They also took the pails, scrapers, snuffers, sprinkling bowls, ladles, and all the other bronze vessels used in the service. ¹⁹The chief of the guards took whatever was of gold and whatever was of silver: basins, fire pans, sprinkling bowls, pails, lampstands, ladles, and jars. ²⁰The two columns, the one tank and the twelve bronze oxen which supported it, and the stands, which King Solomon had provided for the House of the LORD—all these objects contained bronze beyond

Second Temple (see b. Ta'an. 28b). 7: The Arabah is the dry Jordan rift that extends from the Jordan River and Dead Sea to the Gulf of Aqabah. 8: Jericho, the major city in this region, is located west of the Jordan and 10 km (6 mi) north of the Dead Sea. 9–11: Hamath is modern Hama in northern Syria. Nebuchadnezzar established his headquarters in Riblah, located in the Lebanese Beqa' Valley. Portions of vv. 10–11 are missing in 2 Kings 25:7. 12–16: The tenth day of the fifth month is the 10th of Av, but 2 Kings 25:8 reads the seventh day or the 7th of Av. B. Ta'anit 29a reconciles these traditions by stating that Nebuzaradan entered the Temple on the 7th, set it on fire on the 9th, and it burned until the 10th. The 9th of Av (Tish'ah be'av) is subsequently observed as the fast day. The Babylonians took skilled workers with them to Babylon, but left the poor and unskilled behind. 17–23: A detailed list of the Temple vessels, furnishings, and fixtures that were taken by the Babylonians. See 1 Kings chs 6–7 for a detailed account of Solomon's construction and provision of the Temple. Some details do not appear in 2 Kings 25:13–17. 22: The pomegranates were decorative, and may have symbolized the role of the Temple as the center of creation. 24–30: The Babylonians deported a number of key officials and officers to Riblah, where they were executed before Nebuchadnezzar. 24: Seraiah the chief priest is Seraiah son of Azariah (1 Chron. 5:40). Ezra is later identified as the son of Seraiah, which clearly must mean that he is a descendant of Seraiah (Ezra 7:1). Zephaniah, the deputy priest, cf. 21:1; 29:24; 37:3. 25: Although this passage lists seven royal privy councilors, 2 Kings 25:19 lists only five. Rashi claims that two were of lesser importance. 28–30: The passage enumerates the numbers of exiles for each of Nebuchadnezzar's three deportations: the seventh year (597 BCE) when Jehoiachin was deported; the eighteenth year (588) when Jerusalem was destroyed; the twenty-third year (582) when Gedaliah was asa See note at 39.4. b-b Lit. "he stood before." c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d Apparently after the deportation of 2 Kings 24:14; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

weighing. ²¹As for the columns, each was eighteen cubits high and twelve cubits in circumference; it was hollow, and [the metal] was four fingers thick. ²²It had a bronze capital above it; the height of each capital was five cubits, and there was a meshwork [decorated] with pomegranates about the capital, all made of bronze; and so for the second column, also with pomegranates. ²³There were ninety-six pomegranates ^a“facing outward;” all the pomegranates around the meshwork amounted to one hundred.

²⁴The chief of the guards also took Seraiah the chief priest and Zephaniah, the deputy priest, and the three guardians of the threshold. ²⁵And from the city he took a eunuch who was in command of the soldiers; seven royal privy councilors, who were present in the city; the scribe of the army commander, who was in charge of mustering the people of the land; and sixty of the common people who were inside the city. ²⁶Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, took them and brought them to the king of Babylon at Riblah. ²⁷The king of Babylon had them struck down and put to death at Riblah, in the region of Hamath.

Thus Judah was exiled from its land. ²⁸This is the number of those whom Nebuchadnezzar exiled in the seventh year: 3,023 Judeans. ²⁹In the eighteenth year of Nebuchadnezzar, 832 persons [were exiled] from Jerusalem. ³⁰And in the twenty-third year of Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuzaradan, the chief of the guards, exiled 745 Judeans. The total amounted to 4,600 persons.

³¹In the thirty-seventh year of the exile of King Jehoiachin of Judah, on the twenty-fifth day of the twelfth month, King Evil-merodach of Babylon, in the year he became king, ^b“took note of” King Jehoiachin of Judah and released him from prison. ³²He spoke kindly to him, and gave him a throne above those of other kings who were with him in Babylon. ³³He removed his prison garments and [Jehoiachin] ate regularly in his presence the rest of his life. ³⁴A regular allotment of food was given him by order of the king of Babylon, an allotment for each day, to the day of his death—all the days of his life.

sassinated (chs 41–42). 2 Kings 25.12 claims that the first deportation took place in Nebuchadnezzar’s eighth year, but Radak states that the deportation began in the seventh and continued through the eighth. 28: 2 Kings 25.14 claims that 10,000 Jews were deported at this time rather than 3,023. Rashi, following Seder Olam, reconciles the traditions by claiming that 10,000 refers to exiles from Israel and 3,023 refers to those from Judah. 29: 2 Kings 25.8 states that the second deportation took place in the nineteenth, not the eighteenth year (cf. v. 12). Rashi and Radak indicate that the discrepancy follows from the earlier discrepancy concerning the first deportation.

31–34: King Jehoiachin’s release from prison. Many modern scholars view this concluding note as an attempt to end Jeremiah and Kings on an optimistic note, where the release of Jehoiachin is meant to foreshadow the broader return to Zion and reestablishment of the Davidic monarchy. 31: The twenty-fifth day of the twelfth month is the 25th of Adar. 2 Kings 25.27 states that it was the twenty-seventh day. Evil-merodach is a Heb version of the name Amel-Marduk (“servant of Marduk”), the son of Nebuchadnezzar who ruled for only two years before he died (562–560).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Lit. “raised the head of.”

Ezekiel

Character

THE BOOK OF EZEKIEL presents the words of Ezekiel son of Buzi, a prophet and a priest, and one of the Jerusalemites exiled to Babylonia with King Jehoiachin in 597 BCE by the Babylonian king Nebuchadnezzar (2 Kings 24.8–17). Like his older contemporary Jeremiah, Ezekiel lived through the time of the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple in 586 and the early years of the Babylonian exile. He presents some of the most theologically challenging and dynamic material among the prophets of the Bible, and some of the most difficult and bizarre passages. His literary style is intricate, with striking imagery and extended metaphors. Many of his oracles are in prose, unlike the other classical prophets. Some of his visions border on the apocalyptic, and may be early examples of this type of literature. He wrestles with the problems posed by the tragedies of Jerusalem's destruction and the Babylonian exile: Why did God allow the Temple and Jerusalem to be destroyed? Why did God allow the people of Israel to be carried away into exile? What future is there for Israel?

The book of Ezekiel, like other biblical writings, attempts to justify the tragedy of the Babylonian exile by arguing that it was a divine punishment for the people's sin and by pointing to God's mercy in the future restoration. It contends that God intends to uphold the covenant with Israel for the sake of the sanctity of the divine name by restoring a remnant of the people to the land of Israel and placing a new Temple at its center. This new Temple is envisioned in detail at the end of the book. Indeed, the most famous chapter in Ezekiel (37), the prophecy concerning the valley of the dry bones, is part of that vision of restoration.

Ezekiel is both a priest and a prophet, and his writings are best understood as a combination of these aspects of his identity. As a priest of the House of Zadok (Zadok was appointed by Solomon as the high priest of the Jerusalem Temple [1 Kings 2.35]), he calls upon his own background to make his case. He often speaks in terms of purity and impurity, and alludes to the Priestly information in Leviticus. It is no accident that his book culminates with an extended description of the new Temple of the future restoration. Ezekiel also functions as a visionary prophet or oracle giver, much like Moses, who isolated himself to speak directly with God in the Tent of Meeting during the period of Israel's wandering in the wilderness (Exod. 33.7–11; 34.29–35; Num. 7.89). Ezekiel is keenly aware of his role as a prophet—as a watchman for Israel whose task is to warn of impending danger. His religious experiences are prophetic, as are his visions, symbolic actions, and oracles. They draw heavily upon Temple imagery and priestly practice, but they are couched in prophetic forms of discourse. His vision of the divine throne chariot or Presence of God in ch 1 appears to him in Babylonia, but it is based upon the features of the Ark of the Covenant that was housed in the Holy of Holies in the Jerusalem Temple. His portrayal of Jerusalem's destruction in ch 9 employs elements of priestly sacrifice at the altar, but it is the Temple itself that is destroyed. His vision of the new Temple in Jerusalem resembles the earlier wilderness tabernacle, Solomon's Temple, and the Second Temple, but it differs from all of them.

Composition

RABBINIC TRADITION MAINTAINS that the men of the great synagogue, a group of scholars that they believed lived in the early postexilic period, wrote Ezekiel (b. B. Bat. 15a). According to a rabbinic tradition, the book's status was questioned until R. Hananiah ben Hezekiah burned three hundred barrels of oil working nights in his upper chamber to resolve its contradictions with the Torah (b. Shab. 13b; b. Hag. 13a; b. Menah. 45a). The Mishnah advises that ch 1 not be expounded before even one person unless he is a sage fully competent in Jewish tradition (m. Hag. 2.1), most likely because mystical traditions were associated with this text. Indeed, Ezekiel's visions of God later become the basis for the development of early Jewish mysticism in the rabbinic period and the later kabbalistic tradition.

Many modern scholars argue that Ezekiel is an edited book in which various elements, such as the prophecy concerning Gog of Magog (chs 38–39) or the vision of the new Temple (chs 40–48), are—in whole or in part—the products of writers other than Ezekiel, who form a “school of Ezekiel,” namely a group deeply influenced by his writings who continued to write using his style and themes. Although a number of prophetic books—including Isaiah, Jeremiah, Hosea, and Amos—show clear signs of extensive later editing and composition, the case for Ezekiel is less compelling. The book is formulated largely as an autobiographical composition in which God instructs the prophet to speak or act out to Israelite exiles, much as God instructed Moses and Moses in turn instructed Israel. In a few cases there is evidence of later editorial work. For example, the clarification of the date of Ezekiel's first vision in 1.2–3 interrupts the prophet's autobiographical account with a third-person report of his name and other details. Additionally, the break in the chronological sequence beginning with the initial oracle concerning Egypt in 29.1 and the proliferation of date formulas for the other Egyptian oracles in 29.17; 30.20; 31.1; 32.1; and 32.17 suggest that the oracles concerning Egypt were an independent collection that was later incorporated into the present form of the book. Likewise, the reference to the twenty-seventh year in 29.17 disrupts the twenty-year chronological pattern that dominates the rest of the book, and suggests to many that it was altered to account for the failure of Nebuchadnezzar to capture Tyre for some thirteen years (see 26.1). Otherwise, the formulation of the book is well structured and relatively consistent, and appears to have been written largely by the prophet himself.

Guide to Reading

RABBINIC TRADITION MAINTAINS that Ezekiel begins with judgment and ends in consolation (b. B. Bat. 14b). Modern scholars generally follow this view by arguing that the book falls largely into three major parts: oracles of judgment against Jerusalem and Israel (chs 1–24); oracles of judgment against the nations (chs 25–32); oracles of restoration for Jerusalem and Israel at the center of the world (chs 33–48).

Although this accounts for the broad thematic patterns of the book, it appears to be organized according to a chronological scheme that is linked to the prophet's identity as a Zadokite priest. The book begins with Ezekiel's inaugural vision of the divine throne chariot in which he is commissioned by God to speak as a prophet to Israel (1.1–3.15). This vision is dated to the fifth day of the fourth month in the thirtieth year, later specified as the fifth year of the exile of King Jehoiachin, 5 Tamuz, 593 BCE. Apart from the reference to the twenty-seventh year in 29.17 and the disruption of the chronological sequence in 29.1, the book proceeds chronologically from the fifth year of Jehoiachin's exile to the twenty-fifth year (40.1) with a series of major sections, each of which begins with its own date formula. Each major section is further divided into oracle reports, each introduced with a version of the prophetic word formula, "the word of the LORD came to me." The result is a twenty-year sequence that begins with Ezekiel's visions by the Chebar canal in the Babylonian city of Tel Aviv, continues with oracles dated to the general period of the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple, and culminates with his vision of the new Temple. Insofar as the priests served in the Temple for twenty years, from the age of thirty to the age of fifty (see Num. 4.23, 39; but note Num. 8.23–26, which specifies active service for the Levites from the age of twenty-five to the age of fifty), it would appear that the book is designed to portray Ezekiel's career in keeping with the period of active service for a priest. This chronological ordering, where the progression of the oracles is connected to the progress of the Babylonian destruction of Jerusalem, is unique among major prophetic books, which are not otherwise organized chronologically. This ordering, however, compensates for many of the other strange features of the book, and makes it relatively easy to understand.

Summary of Contents

THE STRUCTURE OF THE BOOK includes thirteen major blocks, depicting his inaugural vision in the fifth year of Jehoiachin's exile (593 BCE) and culminating with the vision of the restored Temple in the twenty-fifth year (573).

I. Introduction: Ezekiel's oracles concerning his inaugural vision	1.1–7.27
II. Ezekiel's oracles concerning his vision of God's departure from the Temple	8.1–19.14
III. Ezekiel's oracles concerning the punishment of Israel	20.1–23.49
IV. Symbolic actions concerning the destruction of Jerusalem and condemnation of neighboring nations	24.1–25.17
V. Oracles concerning Tyre and its rulers	26.1–28.26
VI. The first oracle concerning Egypt	29.1–16
VII. The second block of oracles concerning Egypt	29.17–30.19
VIII. The first oracle concerning Pharaoh	30.20–26
IX. The second oracle concerning Pharaoh	31.1–18
X. Oracle concerning Pharaoh and Egypt	32.1–16
XI. Final oracle concerning the nations and Ezekiel's role as watchman	32.17–33.20
XII. Oracles concerning the restoration of Israel	33.21–39.29
XIII. The vision of the restored Temple	40.1–48.35

[MARVIN A. SWEENEY]

1 In the thirtieth year,^a on the fifth day of the fourth month, when I was in the community of exiles by the Chebar Canal, the heavens opened and I saw visions of God.² On the fifth day of the month—it was the fifth year of the exile of King Jehoiachin—³ the word of the LORD came to the priest Ezekiel son of Buzi, by the Chebar Canal, in the land of the Chaldeans. And the hand of the LORD came upon him there.

a We do not know the 30th of what.

1.1–7.27: Introduction to the prophecy of Ezekiel: oracles concerning his inaugural vision. The first major section of the book begins with a date formula, which places the prophet's initial visions, symbolic actions, and oracles in the thirtieth year, on the fifth day of the fourth month, i.e., 5 Tamuz, 593 BCE (see 1.1–3 n.). The introduction includes a series of four narratives in 1.1–3.15; 3.16–5.17; 6.1–14; 7.1–27, each of which begins with a version of the formula the word of the LORD came to me (1.3; 3.16; 6.1; 7.1). These narrate his initial prophetic experiences in which God commissioned him to speak as a prophet. They include an account of his inaugural vision in 1.1–3.15, in which God commissions him to speak; his commission as a watchman in 3.16–5.17; his commission to prophesy against the hills of Israel in 6.1–14; and his commission to speak about the end of the land of Israel in 7.1–27. The date formula in 8.1 marks the beginning of the next major section of the book.

1.1–3.15: The inaugural vision and commissioning of Ezekiel. Ezekiel's first prophetic experience is stunningly graphic when compared to other inaugural visions of the prophets (that of Moses in Exod. ch 3 and of Isaiah in Isa. ch 6; cf. also 1 Kings 22.19–22). Ezekiel comes as close as possible to actually seeing God. He sees

God's throne, in technicolor detail, hears it move, and is literally swept away by the divine Presence. Ezek. 1.1–28; 3.12 serves as the haftarah reading for Exod. 19.1–20.23 (and Num. 28.26–31), read on the first day of Shav'ot (the Festival of Weeks) to commemorate the revelation of the Torah on Mt. Sinai. Rabbinic tradition refers to this narrative as "the episode of the chariot" because it employs the imagery of the Ark of the Covenant, referred to as God's chariot in 1 Chron. 28.18 (see also Pss. 68.18; 18.11), to depict the Presence of God. Because of the theologically sensitive nature of this material, the Mishnah requires that it be expounded only by a "sage that understands his own knowledge" (m. Hag. 2.1), i.e., by a sage with full competence in Jewish tradition. M. Megillah 4.10 states that the ch of the chariot should not be read at all, but R. Judah permits it. T. Megillah 4.34 also indicates that it could be read, but without the Aramaic Targum or translation that enabled many ancient Jewish congregations to understand the text. Ezekiel's vision of God's Presence later became the basis for a great deal of esoteric and mystical speculation concerning the nature of God and the hidden meanings of Scripture. Such works as 3 Enoch; the Heikhalot Rabbati (“the great palaces”); the Heikhalot Zutarti (“the lesser palaces”); Re’eyot Yelhezkel (“the visions of Ezekiel”); and others depict attempts to ascend through the seven “palaces” or levels of heaven to behold the presence of God. Such works laid the foundation for the medieval kabbalistic and modern Hasidic traditions that continue to develop mystical notions concerning God, Scripture, and the world at large.

⁴I looked, and lo, a stormy wind came sweeping out of the north—a huge cloud and flashing fire, surrounded by a radiance; and in the center of it, in the center of the fire, a gleam as of amber. ⁵In the center of it were also the figures of four creatures. And this was their appearance:

1.1–3: The introduction. Many prophetic books begin with a superscription that relates the identity, historical setting, and other relevant data about the prophet (Isa. 1.1; Jer. 1.1–3). Others begin with narrative statements by the editor of the book (Jonah 1.1; Zech. 1.1). Ezekiel is atypical in that it begins with a first-person autobiographical narrative, supplemented by an editor, that relates this information. 1: The thirtieth year: The reference point of this is unclear. It may refer to the thirtieth year after the prophet’s commission, the thirtieth year after Josiah’s reform, the year of Jehoiachin’s exile, or the date of the book’s composition. The reference more likely refers to Ezekiel’s age at the time of his commissioning. Ezekiel is a priest of the Zadokite line (1.3), and the age of Levitical priestly service begins at thirty (Num. 4.3; but Num. 8.23–25 states that it begins at twenty-five) and concludes at fifty. The dated oracles of the book extend from the fifth (1.2) to the twenty-fifth year of the exile (40.1), so that the book correlates Ezekiel’s prophetic oracles with the twenty years of active priestly service. The fifth day of the fourth month would be 5 Tamuz, the month in which the Babylonians later made the first breaches in the walls of Jerusalem (2 Kings 25.3–4; Jer. 52.6–7). The river Chelbar is a canal known in Akkadian sources as “nar Kabari” that left the Euphrates River north of Babylon and continued for some 60 miles, passing through the city of Nippur and rejoining the Euphrates south of Warka or biblical Erech. 2: The fifth year of the exile of King Jehoiachin, 593 BCE. Jehoiachin was exiled to Babylonia at the age of eighteen after only three months on the throne (2 Kings 24.8–17; cf. 2 Chron. 36.9–10). This v. is written by an editor, who apparently sought to relate the prophet’s date to Jehoiachin’s exile, a crucial and well-known event to his audience. 3: The formula, the word of the LORD came to the priest Ezekiel, is based on the typical formula for introducing prophetic oracles (see 1 Sam. 15.10; 1 Kings 6.11; Jer. 1.4; Hos. 1.1). Other examples appear in Ezek. 3.16; 6.1; 7.1. According to the Mekhilta to Exod. 12.1, this statement employs an emphatic past tense verb to indicate that Ezekiel had already prophesied earlier in the land of Israel, since according to rabbinic tradition, the Shekhinah (divine presence) does not rest on a prophet outside of the land of Israel unless it has first rested upon the prophet in the land of Israel. The Mekhilta to Exod. 15.9 speculates that Ezek. 2.1 or 12.1 begin earlier prophecies received by Ezekiel while he was still in the land. Had he not been exiled, Ezekiel would probably have served as a Zadokite priest in the Temple. The land of the Chaldeans: Babylonia, so named after the Chaldeans, a tribe related to the Arameans that had become especially prominent in Babylonia by this time.

1.4–28a: The inaugural vision. The imagery of God’s throne chariot (see 1 Chron. 28.15) is based on the Holy of Holies in the Temple where the Ark of the Covenant is kept under the cherubim (1 Kings ch 6; Exod. 25.10–22; 37.1–9). The Bible frequently refers to “the Ark of the Covenant of the LORD of Hosts enthroned on the Cherubim” (1 Sam. 4.4; 2 Sam. 6.2; 1 Chron. 13.6). Cherubim are composite creatures that combine features of different types of animals and human beings, e.g., the body of a lion or a bull, the wings of an eagle, and the head of a human being. Such creatures frequently appear in ancient Near Eastern art and architecture as the guardians of royal thrones, temples, and city gates and may have been well known to Ezekiel, who lived in Babylonia. Ezek. 10.1 later refers to the four creatures of this vision as cherubim. 4: Wind, cloud, and fire appear frequently in texts that depict theophany or divine appearance in the world (Exod. ch 19; 1 Kings ch 19). The imagery of radiance reflects the gleaming gold with which the Ark and other Temple implements were overlaid (Exod. 25.10–22; 37.1–9). The exact meaning of the term “hashmal,” translated here as a gleam as of amber, is uncertain. It may be derived from Akkadian or Egyptian terms for polished bronze. Talmudic tradition identifies it as a name for an angel or a combination of terms, such as “hayot” (“living creatures”), “esh” (“fire”), or a combination of “hashot” (“silent”) and “mimalelot” (“speaking”). The modern Heb “hashmal,” “electricity,” derives from this passage. 5: The four creatures are the four cherubim that surround the Ark. Exod. 25.18–22; 37.7–9; 1 Kings 6.23–28; 1 Chron. 3.10–14 each mention only two cherubim, but this passage combines the totals. The combination is justified because the former texts mention two cherubim in relation to the Ark and the latter mention two

They had the figures of human beings. ⁶ However, each had four faces, and each of them had four wings; ⁷ the legs of each were [fused into] a single rigid leg, and the feet of each were like a single calf's hoof;^a and their sparkle^b was like the luster of burnished bronze. ⁸ They had human hands below their wings. The four of them had their faces and their wings on their four sides. ⁹ Each one's wings touched those of the other. They did not turn when they moved; each could move in the direction of any of its faces.

¹⁰ Each of them had a human face [at the front]; each of the four had the face of a lion on the right; each of the four had the face of an ox on the left; and each of the four had the face of an eagle [at the back]. ¹¹ Such were their faces. As for their wings, they were separated: above, each had two touching those of the others, while the other two covered its body. ¹² And each could move in the direction of any of its faces; they went wherever the spirit impelled them to go, without turning when they moved.

¹³ Such then was the appearance of the creatures. With them was something that looked like burning coals of fire. This fire, suggestive of torches, kept moving about among the creatures; the fire had a radiance, and lightning issued from the fire. ^{14c} Dashing to and fro [among] the creatures was something that looked like flares.^c

¹⁵ As I gazed on the creatures, I saw one wheel on the ground next to each of the four-faced creatures. ¹⁶ As for the appearance and structure of the wheels, they gleamed like beryl. All four had the same form; the appearance and structure of each was as of two wheels cutting through each other. ¹⁷ And when they moved, each could move in the direction of any of its four quarters; they did not veer when they moved. ¹⁸ Their rims were tall and frightening, for the rims of all four were covered all over with eyes. ¹⁹ And when the creatures moved forward, the wheels moved at their sides; and when the creatures were borne above the earth, the wheels were borne too. ²⁰ Wherever the spirit impelled them to go, they went—wherever the spirit impelled them—and the wheels were borne alongside them; for the spirit of the creatures was in the wheels. ²¹ When those moved, these moved; and when those stood still, these stood still; and when those were borne above the earth, the wheels were borne alongside them—for the spirit of the creatures was in the wheels.

²² Above the heads of the creatures was a form: an expanse, with an awe-inspiring gleam as of crystal, was

cherubim as features of the Holy of Holies in the Temple. Ezekiel's total could be based upon his observation of the Ark in the Temple or his reading of earlier texts. The number four also presupposes the four horns of the Temple altar (Exod. 27.2; 38.2; Zech. 2.1–4), which represent the four "winds" or cardinal directions, indicating God's presence in the Temple at the center of creation. 7: Like: The use of similes throughout this vision emphasizes that the prophet can only attempt to describe the divine Presence indirectly, as the limits of human understanding permit; the images are not to be understood as a literal representation of the divine Presence. This passage thus takes a middle position concerning the corporeality of God's representation; some texts describe God as having a human body (Exod. 24.10–11; Dan. 7.9), while others insist otherwise (Deut. 4.15). 10: The four faces may represent the divine qualities of intelligence (human), royalty (lion), strength (ox), and mobility (eagle). 13–14: The burning coals of fire presuppose the sacrificial altar of the Temple (Exod. 27.1–8; 38.1–7) or the incense altars (Exod. 30.1–10; 37.5–28). 15–21: The wheels depict divine motion in all four directions. They are based on the image of the cart that carried the Ark of the Covenant from Philistia to Jerusalem (1 Sam. ch 6; 2 Sam. ch 6) and the rings that held the poles by which the Levites carried the Ark (Exod. 25.12–15; 30.4–5). 16: The wheels cutting through each other represent either a wheel with a hub or another attempt to depict wheels that could travel in any direction. 22: An expanse, with an awe-inspiring gleam as of crystal: The priest Ezekiel is drawing on the Priestly Gen. 1.6–8, which uses the same term, "raki'a" (expanse, "firmament"), to depict the distinction between heaven and earth. The term "kerali" (crystal) also means "ice," which would draw upon the image of creation or manifestations of divine power as the congealing of waters (Gen. 1.8–9; Exod. 14.21–29; 15.8–9).

a i.e., cleft in front. b Or "plumage." c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

spread out above their heads. ²³Under the expanse, each had one pair of wings extended toward those of the others; and each had another pair covering its body. ²⁴When they moved, I could hear the sound of their wings like the sound of mighty waters, like the sound of Shaddai,^a a tumult like the din of an army. When they stood still, they would let their wings droop. ²⁵^bFrom above the expanse over their heads came a sound.^b When they stood still, they would let their wings droop.

²⁶Above the expanse over their heads was the semblance of a throne, in appearance like sapphire; and on top, upon this semblance of a throne, there was the semblance of a human form. ²⁷From what appeared as his loins up, I saw a gleam as of amber—^bwhat looked like a fire encased in a frame;^b and from what appeared as his loins down, I saw what looked like fire. There was a radiance all about him. ²⁸Like the appearance of the bow which shines in the clouds on a day of rain, such was the appearance of the surrounding radiance. That was the appearance of the semblance of the Presence of the LORD. When I beheld it, I flung myself down on my face. And I heard the voice of someone speaking.

2 And He said to me, "O mortal, stand up on your feet that I may speak to you." ²As He spoke to me, a spirit entered into me and set me upon my feet; and I heard what was being spoken to me. ³He said to me, "O mortal, I am sending you to the people of Israel, that nation of rebels, who have rebelled against Me.—They as well as their fathers have defied Me to this very day; ⁴for the sons are brazen of face and stubborn of heart. I send you to them, and you shall say to them: 'Thus said the Lord GOD'—⁵whether they listen or not, for they are a rebellious breed—that they may know that there was a prophet among them.

⁶"And you, mortal, do not fear them and do not fear

a Traditionally "the Almighty"; see Gen. 17.1.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

24: The sound of mighty waters metaphorically portrays the vision as both auditory and visual. 26: Sapphire (possibly lapis lazuli), see Exod. 24.10, which employs the imagery of blue sapphire or lapis to depict the pavement under God's feet, which humans see as the sky. 27: Gleam as of amber and fire convey the power and incorporeality of the divine Presence. 28: The rainbow symbolizes God's covenant with creation (Gen. 9.8–17). The Presence of the LORD, a Priestly term for God's glory (Exod. 16.6–7; 40.34–38). The voice of someone speaking: Cf. 1 Kings 19.12, which portrays the divine Presence as "a still small voice" or "a soft murmuring sound." Ezekiel, in a sign of reverence and fear, lies prostrate before God just as one would lie prostrate before the Ark in the Holy of Holies of the Temple (1 Kings 8.54; Pss. 5.8; 99.5; 132.7; 138.2; 1 Chron. 16.29; 2 Chron. 20.5–18).

2.1–3.15: The commissioning of Ezekiel. For the commissioning of other prophets see Exod. ch 3; 1 Kings ch 22; Isa. ch 6; Jer. ch 1. 2.1–2: God addresses Ezekiel as mortal, lit. "son of Adam" or "human," ninety-three times in the book. "Son of Adam" conveys Ezekiel's mortal status in contrast to God. Midrash Tanhuma, Zav 13 understands the term disparagingly as it notes that unlike Isaiah's restrained account of God's revelation, Ezekiel relates everything that he saw. The spirit (lit. "wind") of the LORD, elsewhere associated with prophecy (see, e.g., 1 Kings 22.21–23), prepares Ezekiel to serve as a prophet (1 Sam. 10.6, 10; 1 Kings 18.12). 3–7: The charge of Israel's rebellion against God is a constant theme throughout the prophets to justify Israel's suffering as an act of divine punishment. Habakkuk and Job question a theology in which those who suffer are presumed to have committed some sin, but they ultimately defend God's righteousness. Such charges of guilt for those who have suffered have been questioned by Jewish (and Christian) theologians in the aftermath of disasters such as the expulsion of the Jews from Spain in 1492 or the Shoah (Holocaust). 3: The reference to that nation of rebels is actually plural ("those nations of rebels"), which rabbinic commentators generally understand as a reference to the tribes of Judah and Benjamin. 4: The messenger formula, Thus said the Lord GOD, is a typical prophetic expression that indicates Ezekiel's role as God's representative (see Jer. 30.5, 12, 18; 31.2, 7, 15, 23, 35, 37; Amos 1.3, 6, 9, 11; 2.1). The formula ultimately derives from the practice of sending messengers for personal and business transactions or diplomatic purposes (Gen. 32.5; 45.9; 2 Kings 18.29; Isa. 36.14). 6: Do not fear, a formula of encouragement, is said to Jeremiah in his dedication as their words, though thistles and thorns "press against" you, and you sit upon scorpions. Do not be afraid of their words and do not be dismayed by them, though they are a rebellious breed;⁷ but speak My words to them, whether they listen or not, for they are rebellious.

⁸"And you, mortal, heed what I say to you: Do not be rebellious like that rebellious breed. Open your mouth and eat what I am giving you."⁹ As I looked, there was a hand stretched out to me, holding a written scroll.¹⁰ He unrolled it before me, and it was inscribed on both the front and the back; on it were written lamentations, dirges, and woes.

3 He said to me, "Mortal, eat what is offered you; eat this scroll, and go speak to the House of Israel."² So I opened my mouth, and He gave me this scroll to eat,³ as He said to me, "Mortal, feed your stomach and fill your belly with this scroll that I give you." I ate it, and it tasted as sweet as honey to me.

⁴Then He said to me, "Mortal, go to the House of Israel and repeat My very words to them.⁵ For you are sent, not to a people of unintelligible speech and difficult language, but to the House of Israel—⁶not to the many peoples of unintelligible speech and difficult language, whose talk you cannot understand. If I sent you to them, they would listen to you.⁷ But the House of Israel will refuse to listen to you, for they refuse to listen to Me; for the whole House of Israel are brazen of forehead and stubborn of heart.⁸ But I will make your face as hard as theirs, and your forehead as brazen as theirs.⁹ I will make your forehead like adamant, harder than flint. Do not fear them, and do not be dismayed by them, though they are a rebellious breed."

¹⁰Then He said to me: "Mortal, listen with your ears and receive into your mind all the words that I speak to you.¹¹ Go to your people, the exile community, and speak to them. Say to them: Thus says the Lord God—whether they listen or not."¹² Then a spirit carried me away, and behind me I heard a great roaring sound: ^b"Blessed is the Presence of the LORD, in His place,"^b ¹³with the sound of the wings of the creatures beating against one another, and the sound of the wheels beside them—a great roaring sound.¹⁴ A spirit seized me and carried me away. I went in bitterness, in the fury of my spirit, while the hand of the LORD was strong upon me.¹⁵ And I came to the exile community that dwelt in Tel Abib by the Chebar Canal, and I well (1.8). 2.8-3.3: Ezekiel eats the scroll to symbolize his internalizing the divine message. Symbolic actions using the prophet's mouth are an important part of other prophetic dedications (Isa. 6.6-7; Jer. 1.9). 3.3: Although the scroll is inscribed with lamentations, dirges, and woes (2.10), Ezekiel states that it tasted as sweet as honey (Jer. 15.16). 3.4-11: Ezekiel's mission is outlined. 6: Many peoples of unintelligible speech and difficult language, see Isa. 33.19. Many peoples were conquered by the Assyrian and Babylonian empires, and the men were frequently required to serve in the conqueror's army. Such practice aids in explaining the many references throughout the Bible to the nations that threaten Jerusalem (Isa. 14.24-17; 17.12-14; Pss. 2; 46; 47; 48). God stresses that the message is for Israel, not the nations. 12-15: The prophet relates his bitterness at being compelled to speak such a harsh message of judgment, yet he seems not to have the ambivalences concerning his prophetic role seen in Jeremiah. 12: The statement, Blessed is the Presence of the LORD, in His place, appears as part of the "Kedushah" in the "Amidah" prayer. The proposed emendation is almost certainly correct, and involves the confusion of a single letter with a very similar letter in the old Hebrew script. The emendation fits a main theme of the initial section of Ezekiel: divine abandonment reflected through the gradual departure of the divine spirit from the Temple (see esp. 11.23). 15: Tel Abib, "hill of barley," likely derives from the Babylonian expression "til abubi," "hill of the flood"; the Tigris and Euphrates rivers make Babylonia prone to flooding in the spring. (The name was given to the new city of Tel Aviv in 1909 to symbolize the rebirth of the land of Israel.) As a result of this experience, Ezekiel sits stunned for seven days prior to speaking his oracles in the following passage. His seven days of silence may well relate to mourning practices (see esp. Job 2.13), or to the seven-day incubation period during the priestly ora-a Lit. "are with."

b-b Emendation yields "as the Presence of the LORD rose from where it stood."

remained where they dwelt. And for seven days I sat there stunned among them.

¹⁶After those seven days, the word of the LORD came to me: ¹⁷“O mortal, I appoint you watchman for the House of Israel; and when you hear a word from My mouth, you must warn them for Me. ¹⁸If I say to a wicked man, ‘You shall die,’ and you do not warn him—you do not speak to warn the wicked man of his wicked course in order to save his life—he, the wicked man, shall die for his iniquity, but I will require a reckoning for his blood from you. ¹⁹But if you do warn the wicked man, and he does not turn back from his wickedness and his wicked course, he shall die for his iniquity, but you will have saved your own life. ²⁰Again, if a righteous man abandons his righteousness and does wrong, when I put a stumbling block before him, he shall die. He shall die for his sins; the righteous deeds that he did shall not be remembered; but because you did not warn him, I will require a reckoning for his blood from you. ²¹If, however, you warn the righteous man not to sin, and he, the righteous, does not sin, he shall live because he took warning, and you will have saved your own life.”

²²Then the hand of the LORD came upon me there, and He said to me, “Arise, go out to the valley, and there I will speak with you.” ²³I arose and went out to the valley, and there stood the Presence of the LORD, like the Presence that I had seen at the Chebar Canal; and I flung myself down on my face. ²⁴And a spirit entered into me and set me upon my feet. And He spoke to me, and said to me: “Go, shut yourself up in your house. ²⁵As for you, O mortal, cords have been placed upon you, and you have been bound with them, and you shall not go out among them.” ²⁶And I will make your tongue cleave to your palate, and you shall be dumb; you shall not be a reprover to them, for they are a rebellious breed. ²⁷But when I speak with a i.e., the people.

dination ceremony (Lev. 8.33–35; Exod. 29.35–37). Ezekiel maintains priestly practice throughout the book, although he adapts his practice to account for his prophetic role and the changed circumstances of life outside of the Jerusalem Temple.

3.16–5.17: Initial commission as a watchman and related symbolic actions. This section presents oracles and symbolic actions that are concerned with the destruction of Jerusalem and fall of Judah. Although many scholars separate the accounts of Ezekiel’s symbolic action in chs 4–5 from the accounts concerning his role as watchman (3.16–21) and his dumbness (3.22–27), these narratives provide an introduction to chs 4–5 by emphasizing Ezekiel’s identity as a Zadokite priest. Chs 4–5 also continue the divine instruction speech that begins in 3.16–21, 3.22–27. 3.16–21: God appoints Ezekiel as the watchman for the House of Israel, who is responsible for the lives and moral guidance of the people (Jer. 6.17; Hos. 9.8). This function corresponds to the fundamental responsibility of the priesthood to teach God’s requirements to the people so that they will maintain their holy status (Lev. 10.10–11; Deut. 33.10; Ezek. 44.23; Hag. 2.20–23; 2 Chron. 15.3; cf. Exod. 24.12; 2 Kings 12.3). Like sentinels posted on city walls to watch for danger (2 Sam. 18.24; 2 Kings 9.14), gatekeepers are appointed from among the priests to guard the Temple (1 Chron. 9.17–27; 26.1–19). This watchman role is developed more fully in ch 33 and is consistent with the role of the prophet, who also watches and warns. The prophet’s responsibility to warn the people concerning their wickedness is presented in four cases. If the prophet fails to warn the person, then he is responsible for the person’s sin. If the person is warned, however, and fails to act righteously or abandons righteousness, then the person is responsible. These principles are further developed in rabbinic culture, where an individual is only fully culpable for a sin after being forewarned. 3.22–27: The conditions of Ezekiel’s mission: isolation and silence. The meaning of this silence is unclear, but may suggest that Ezekiel must be silent except when he is speaking the divine word. 24–25: Shut yourself up . . . you shall not go out: Ezekiel’s isolation resembles that of Moses, who spoke directly to God as an oracle diviner in the Tent of Meeting (Exod. 33.7–11; 34.35; Num. ch 11), and the high priest, who appears alone before God and the Ark at Yom Kippur or the Day of Atonement (Lev. ch 16). 26: God prevents Ezekiel from carrying out his role as one who warns Israel. Like Balaam in Num. chs 22–24, he cannot speak except for what God tells him.

you, I will open your mouth, and you shall say to them, 'Thus says the Lord God!' He who listens will listen, and he who does not will not—for they are a rebellious breed."

4 "And you, O mortal, take a brick and put it in front of you, and incise on it a city, Jerusalem. ²Set up a siege against it, and build towers against it, and cast a mound against it; pitch camps against it, and bring up battering rams roundabout it. ³Then take an iron plate and place it as an iron wall between yourself and the city, and set your face against it. ⁴Thus it shall be under siege, you shall besiege it. This shall be an omen for the House of Israel.

⁴"Then lie on your left side, and let it bear the punishment of the House of Israel;^b for as many days as you lie on it you shall bear their punishment. ⁵For I impose upon you three hundred and ninety days, corresponding to the number of the years of their punishment; and so you shall bear the punishment for the House of Israel. ⁶When you have completed these, you shall lie another forty days on your right side, and bear the punishment of the House of Judah.^b I impose on you one day for each year.

⁷"Then, with bared arm, set your face toward besieged Jerusalem and prophesy against it. ⁸Now I put cords upon you, so that you cannot turn from side to side until you complete your days of siege.

⁹"Further, take wheat, barley, beans, lentils, millet, and emmer. Put them into one vessel and bake them into bread. Eat it as many days as you lie on your side: three hundred and ninety. ¹⁰The food that you eat shall be by weight, twenty shekels a day; this you shall eat in the space of a day. ¹¹And you shall drink water by measure; drink a sixth of a hin in the space of a day.

¹²"Eat it as a barley^c cake; you shall bake it on human excrement before their eyes. ¹³So," said the LORD, "shall the people of Israel eat their bread, unclean, among the nations to which I will banish them." ¹⁴Then I said, "Ah, the sin of Judah is not entirely certain. The Septuagint states that Ezekiel shall lie on his left side for one hundred fifty or one hundred ninety days for the sin of Israel and forty days for the sin of Judah. Ezekiel thus symbolically bears the punishment of the people in keeping with the role of the priests to bear the guilt of the sanctuary (Num. 18.1). Rashi follows Seder Olam 26 by stating that Israel sinned for three hundred ninety years from the time that Israel entered the land under Joshua until the destruction of the Northern Kingdom of Israel in the reign of King Hoshea Son of Elah. He also notes the calculations of R. Joseph, who states that Israel sinned in the period of the Judges for one hundred fifty-one years and in the period of the northern kings for two hundred thirty-nine years. The forty years of Judah's sin includes twenty-two years for King Manasseh son of Hezekiah (based on the statement in 2 Kings 21.3 that compares Manasseh to Ahab son of Omri, who ruled for twenty-two years), two years for Amon son of Manasseh, eleven years for Jehoia-kim son of Josiah, and five years for Zedekiah son of Josiah (since Ezekiel received prophecy in the fifth year of his reign). Because Josiah was righteous, the years of his reign are not included. An alternative calculation is possible. If one counts backwards from the destruction of the Temple in 586 BCE, the total of four hundred thirty years points to the time of the establishment of the united monarchy of Israel under Saul in 1016 (the calculation of Saul's reign is problematic; see 1 Sam. 13.1). Three hundred ninety years forward from that date takes one to 627, the twelfth year of Josiah's reign, in which his reforms begin (2 Chron. 34.3; cf. 2 Kings 22.3). Josiah failed in his attempt to reunite Israel and Judah. The remaining forty years accounts for the time between the beginning of Josiah's reform and the destruction of Jerusalem in 586. 9-17: God instructs Ezekiel to perform a second symbolic act that requires him to a I.e., in hostility.

b Since left and right also denote north and south (e.g. 16.46), the left side represents Israel, the northern kingdom, and the right side Judah, the southern kingdom.

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

4.1-5.17: God instructs Ezekiel to perform symbolic actions. Prophets perform symbolic actions to dramatize their statements and enable them to take effect (Isa. ch 20; Jer. chs 13; 19). Such actions also support the fundamental role of the priests as the teachers of

"torah" to the people (Lev. 10.10-11; Deut. 33.10). 4.1-8: God instructs Ezekiel to build a model of Jerusalem under siege. The action draws upon the imagery of Jer. 1.18. 4-6: The basis for calculating three hundred and ninety years for the sin of Israel and forty years for Lord God, my person was never defiled; nor have I eaten anything that died of itself or was torn by beasts from my youth until now, nor has foul flesh entered my mouth."¹⁵ He answered me, "See, I allow you cow's dung instead of human excrement; prepare your bread on that."

¹⁶And He said to me, "O mortal, I am going to break the staff of bread in Jerusalem, and they shall eat bread by weight, in anxiety, and drink water by measure, in horror,¹⁷ so that, lacking bread and water, they shall stare at each other, heartsick over their iniquity. ¹And you, O mortal, take a sharp knife; use it as a barber's razor and pass it over your head and beard. Then take scales and divide the hair.^b ²When the days of siege are completed, destroy a third part in fire in the city, take a third and strike it with the sword all around 'the city,'^c and scatter a third to the wind and unsheath^d a sword after them.

³"Take also a few [hairs] from there and tie them up in your skirts. ⁴And take some more of them and cast them into the fire, and burn them in the fire. From this a fire shall go out upon the whole House of Israel."

⁵Thus said the Lord God: I set this Jerusalem in the midst of nations, with countries round about her. ⁶But she rebelled against My rules and My laws, acting more wickedly than the nations and the countries round about her; she^e rejected My rules and disobeyed My laws. ⁷Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: Because you have outdone the nations that are round about you—you have not obeyed My laws or followed My rules, nor have you observed the rules of the nations round about you—⁸ assuredly, thus said the Lord God: I, in turn, am going to deal with you, and I will execute judgments in your midst in the sight of the nations. ⁹On account of all your abominations, I will do among you what I have never done, and the like of which I will never do again.

¹⁰Assuredly, parents shall eat their children in your midst, and children shall eat their parents. I will execute judgments against you, and I will scatter all your survivors in every direction.

¹¹Assuredly, as I live—said the Lord God—because you defiled My Sanctuary with all your detestable things and all your abominations, I in turn will shear [you] away^f and show no pity. I in turn will show no compassion: ¹²One-third of you shall die of pestilence or perish in your midst eat impure food in an impure land. As a priest, Ezekiel would live in the holy precincts of the Temple and eat only food that had been properly offered by the people at the Temple and prepared in accordance with the dietary laws of the time (see Lev. chs 7; 10–11; Num. ch 18; Deut. ch 14). The coming disaster will result in the people lacking food, so that they and the priests will be compelled to violate their food restrictions, and will have to eat impure food when Jerusalem and the Temple are under siege and ultimately destroyed. Ezekiel mixes a variety of grains, including those not normally consumed in bread, to demonstrate that there is insufficient grain to make an entire loaf of bread. Twenty shekels, about 225 gm (10 ounces). A sixth of a hin, about six-tenths of a liter (two-thirds of a quart). In order to demonstrate the difficult and impure conditions of the coming siege, God commands Ezekiel to bake bread using human dung as fuel. When he protests that this is a severe breach of priestly purity, God allows him to use cow's dung, which was used as a fuel, especially when wood was not available. 16–17: See Isa. 3.1. 5.1–4: The sharp knife (alternatively, "sharp sword") or barber's razor (Isa. 7.20) symbolizes the weapons of the Babylonians. One third of the hair is burned to represent those who die when the city is burned; one third is struck with the sword to symbolize those killed around the city; and one third is scattered to symbolize those who escape only to be pursued by the Babylonians. Some of the hair is burned once again to symbolize the suffering of the people. 5–17: God concludes the instruction speech to Ezekiel by summing up the significance of the punishment and impurity that Ezekiel's symbolic actions illustrate. Charging that Israel acts like the nations (see 1 Sam. 8.4–5) by defiling the Temple, God suggests that the people will be treated like the nations, and will suffer war and a Resuming the thought of v. 11. b Lit. "them." c-c Heb. "it."

d Cf. v. 12; lit. "I will unsheathe." e Heb. "they."

f Cf. Isa. 15.2 and Jer. 48.37; here an allusion to the symbolism in v. 1.

by famine, one-third shall fall by the sword around you, and I will scatter one-third in every direction and will unsheathe the sword after them. ¹³I will vent all My anger and satisfy My fury upon them; and when I vent all My fury upon them, they shall know that I the LORD have spoken in My passion. ¹⁴I will make you a ruin and a mockery among the nations roundabout you, in the sight of every passerby. ¹⁵And when I execute judgment upon you in anger and rage and furious chastisement, you^a shall be a mockery and a derision, a warning and a horror, to the nations roundabout you: I the LORD have spoken. ¹⁶When I loose the deadly arrows of famine against those doomed to destruction, when I loose them against you to destroy you, I will heap more famine upon you and break your staff of bread. ¹⁷I will let loose against you famine and wild beasts and they shall bereave you; pestilence and bloodshed shall sweep through you, and I will bring the sword upon you. I the LORD have spoken.

6 The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, turn your face toward the mountains of Israel and prophesy to them ³and say: O mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God. Thus said the Lord God to the mountains and the hills, to the streams and the valleys: See, I will bring a sword against you and destroy your shrines. ⁴Your altars shall be wrecked and your incense stands smashed, and I will hurl down your slain in front of your fetishes. ⁵I will cast the corpses of the people of Israel in front of their fetishes, and scatter your bones around your altars ⁶in all your settlements. The towns shall be laid waste and the shrines shall be devastated. Thus your altars shall be laid waste and ^bbear their punishment; ^byour fetishes shall be smashed and annihilated, your incense stands cut down, and your handiwork wiped out; ⁷and the slain shall fall in your midst. Then you shall know that I am the LORD. ⁸Yet I will leave a remnant, in that some of you shall escape the sword among the nations and be scattered through the lands. ⁹And those of you that escape will remember Me among the na-

a Heb. "she." b-b Targum and other ancient versions read "shall be devastated."

exile, ultimately perishing by pestilence, famine, and sword.

14: God's threat to make Israel a ruin and a mockery among the nations roundabout you and to unleash famine, wild animals, etc., against the people recalls threats made in the roughly contemporaneous Jer. 24.9–10 (see also Deut. 28.37; 1 Kings 9.7).

6.1–14: Oracle against the mountains of Israel. 1: The passage begins with the prophetic word formula, the word of the LORD came to me (see 1.3; 3.16; 7.1). Ezekiel does not distinguish between Israel and Judah, but addresses the entire land and people of Israel arrayed around the Temple (Num. ch 2; Ezek. ch 48). The Holy of Holies serves as the sacred center of the Temple, the Jerusalem Temple as the sacred center of Israel, and Israel as sacred center of the world. 2: The mountains of Israel, the biblical homeland of Israel in the hills of Samaria and Judah. The choice of mountains may reflect the invocation of mountains as witnesses elsewhere in the Bible (e.g., Deut. 32.1; Isa. 1.2). 3–7: Ezekiel identifies the cause of punishment in the various altars and high places where the people worship, which compromise the sanctity of the land. An example of such a sanctuary was excavated at the site of 7th-century Arad, where a "matzevah" or cultic pillar was found in the Holy of Holies of the temple located there. Ezekiel holds that legitimate worship of God must take place only in the Jerusalem Temple (Deut. ch 12). In contrast to other prophets such as Amos and Isaiah, Ezekiel tends to emphasize the people's cultic infractions rather than moral sins. 5: The scattering of dead corpses around the altars renders the land impure (Num. ch 19; see also Lev. 21.10–12). 7: Ezekiel employs the so-called "proof saying," then you shall know that I am the LORD, throughout the book to identify God as the source of his prophetic words. The "proof saying" appears especially in the context of priestly instruction as a means to validate the particular teaching at hand (Exod. 20.2; Lev. 19.3, 4, etc.; see also Exod. 3.13–22; Deut. 5.6). It is extremely common in Ezekiel, appearing over fifty times, four times in this chapter alone (vv. 7, 10, 13, 14). 8–10: Ezekiel relies on Isaiah's concept of a remnant of Israel (Isa. 4.2–6; 6.13; 10.20–23) to demonstrate that God's power to destroy and punish will leave only a portion of the people to be scattered among the tions where they have been taken captive, ^ahow I was brokenhearted through^a their faithless hearts which turned away from Me, and through their eyes which lusted after their fetishes. And they shall loathe themselves for all the evil they committed and for all their abominable deeds. ¹⁰Then they shall realize it was not without cause that I the LORD resolved to bring this evil upon them.

¹¹Thus said the Lord God: Strike your hands together and stamp your feet and cry: Aha! over all the vile abominations of the House of Israel who shall fall by the sword, by famine, and by pestilence. ¹²He who is far away shall die of pestilence, and he who is near shall fall by the sword, and he who survives and is protected shall die of famine. Thus I will spend My fury upon them. ¹³And you shall know that I am the LORD, when your slain lie among the fetishes round about their altars, on every high hill, on all the mountaintops, under every green tree, and under every leafy oak—wherever they presented pleasing odors to all their fetishes.

¹⁴I will stretch out My hand against them, and lay the land waste and desolate in all their settlements, from the wilderness as far as Diblah;^b then they shall know that I am the LORD.

7 The word of the LORD came to me: ²You, O mortal, [say:] Thus said the Lord God to the land of Israel: Doom! Doom is coming upon the four corners of the land. ³Now doom is upon you! I will let loose My anger against you and judge you according to your ways; I will requite you for all your abominations. ⁴I will show you no pity and no compassion; but I will requite you for your ways and for the abominations in your midst. And you shall know that I am the LORD.

⁵Thus said the Lord God: ^cA singular disaster; a disaster^c is coming. ⁶Doom is coming! The hour of doom is coming! It stirs against you; there it comes! ⁷^dThe cycle has come around for you, O inhabitants of the land; the time has come; the day is near. There is panic on the mountains, not joy.^d ⁸Very soon I will pour out My wrath a-a Emendation yields "how I broke."

b A few Heb. mss. read "Riblah"; cf. 2 Kings 23.33; 25.6 ff.

c-c A number of mss. and editions, as well as Targum, read "Disaster after disaster."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

nations. 11-14: Ezekiel returns to the imagery of sword, pestilence, and famine (5.1-17) to tie his oracles against Israel to the fate of Jerusalem. 13: Altars, on every high hill, on all the mountaintops, under every green tree, and under every leafy oak, a common Deuteronomic formulaic description of pagan worship (Deut. 12.2; 1 Kings 14.23;

Jer. 2.20). 14: The wilderness designates the Negev desert in southern Judah. Diblah: Some manuscripts read Riblah (see translators' note b; Heb letters "resh" and "dalet" are similar and sometimes confused; see "Reuel" in Num. 2.14, but "Deuel" in Num. 1.14), apparently based on the reference to the Aramean city Riblah where Pharaoh Neco of Egypt imprisoned King Jehohaz son of Josiah after removing him from the throne (2 Kings 23.33). It is also the place where the Babylonian king Nebuchadnezzar camped during the destruction of Jerusalem (2 Kings 25.6). Riblah is situated on the northern border of Israel (Num. 34.11).

7.1-27: Prophecy of doom. The passage begins with the prophetic word formula, the word of the LORD came to me. Ezekiel's three oracles draw upon the "Day of the LORD" traditions to announce the "doom" of Israel (Amos 5.18-20; 8.1-14; Isa. 2.6-22; ch 13). This passage is the culmination of the first major section of the book, presenting the "doom" of Israel as the outcome of God's initial revelation to Ezekiel in 1.1-3.15. Perhaps as the culminating prophecy, it is more poetic in style than the previous chapters. The "Day of the LORD" motif apparently functioned originally as an announcement of God's defense of Israel, but various prophets reconfigured it as an announcement of God's punishment against Israel and Judah (see esp. Amos 5.18-20; Zeph. 1.7-18; 2.1-3). The motif could also express God's decision to punish the nations that carried out punishment against Israel (see Obadiah; Joel). 1-4: The first oracle announces the doom of Israel. 2: Doom is drawn from Amos's prophecy against Bethel (Amos 8.1-3), which includes the imagery of dead bodies scattered about the altar as in 6.1-7. The four corners of the land indicates the complete destruction of the land, and rehearses the four cardinal directions that underlie the symbolism of the four living creatures in ch 1 and the four horns of the Tem-upon you and spend My anger on you; I will judge you according to your ways, and I will requite you for all your abominations. ⁹I will show you no pity and no compassion; but I will requite you for your ways, and for the abominations in your midst. And you shall know it was I the LORD who punished.

¹⁰Here is the day! See, the ^acycle has come round; it has appeared. The rod has blossomed; arrogance has budded, ¹¹lawlessness has grown into a rod of wickedness. Nothing comes of them, nor of their abundance, nor of their wealth; nor is there preeminence among them. ^a ¹²The time has come, the day has arrived. Let not the buyer rejoice nor the seller mourn—for divine wrath shall overtake all her multitude. ¹³For the seller shall not return to what he sold so long as they remain among the living. For the vision concerns all her multitude, it shall not be revoked. And because of his guilt, no man shall hold fast to his life.

¹⁴They have sounded the horn, and all is prepared; but no one goes to battle, for My wrath is directed against all her multitude. ¹⁵The sword is outside and pestilence and famine are inside; he who is in the open shall die by the sword, he who is in the town shall be devoured by famine and pestilence. ¹⁶And if any survive, they shall take to the mountains; they shall be ^blike doves of the valley, moaning together—^bevery one for his iniquity. ¹⁷All hands shall grow weak, and all knees shall turn to water. ¹⁸They shall gird on sackcloth, and horror shall cover them; every face shall betray shame, and every head shall be made bald.

¹⁹They shall throw their silver into the streets, and their gold shall be treated as something unclean. Their silver and gold shall not avail to save them in the day of the LORD's wrath—to satisfy their hunger or to fill their stomachs. Because they made them stumble into guilt—²⁰for out of their beautiful adornments, in which they took pride, they made their images and their detestable abominations—therefore I will make them ^can unclean thing to them. ²¹I will give them as spoil to strangers, and as plunder to the wicked of the earth; and they shall defile them. ²²I will turn My face from them, and My treasures shall be defiled; ruffians shall invade it and defile it.

²³^aForge the chain,^a for the land is full of bloody crimes, and the city is full of lawlessness. ²⁴I will bring in

ple altar (Exod. 27.1-2; 37.25; Zech. 2.1-4). 5-9: Ezekiel again employs the statement doom is coming, but shifts his language to that of the "Day of the LORD" traditions.

10-27: The third oracle elaborates upon the imagery of the land's destruction in the "Day of the LORD."

10-11: The blossoming rod may recall Aaron's rod which designates Levi as the priestly tribe (Num. ch 17), but Jeremiah (also a priest) employs it as a sign of Judah's punishment (Jer. 1.11-12). The ivory pomegranate-shaped cap, recently acquired by the Israel Museum in Jerusalem, is believed to have once adorned the rod of a Temple priest. The reference to the budding arrogance indicates Ezekiel's view that the priestly rod is now employed for the punishment of Israel, just as Moses' rod punished Egypt (Exod. chs 7-11).

12-13: Normal life will end. Radak maintains that the buyer is happy with a purchase whereas the seller mourns for that which is sold (see also b. B. M. 51a). The buyer may not rejoice because he will soon be exiled and therefore lose what he has bought. The seller may not mourn because he is going into exile and would have lost the property anyway. Normally, land that was sold to pay a debt would be returned to the original owner during the jubilee year (Lev. ch 25). 14-17: Ezekiel again takes up the imagery of sword, pestilence, and famine (chs 5-6). 18-21: See Isa. 2.6-21, which anticipates that people will throw away their silver and gold idols on the "Day of the LORD." 20: An unclean thing: Heb "nidah," menstrual flow, considered ritually impure (Lev. 15.19-30; 18.19; 20.18), serves as a metaphor for the impurity of idols. See also Zeph. 1.18; Lam. 1.17. 22: God will withdraw His protection from the people. My treasures, actually singular (Heb "tzafun"), lit. "hidden," is understood to refer to the Holy of Holies in the Temple, which shall be defiled when Jerusalem is taken. 23-27: Ezekiel makes it clear that the leaders (vv. 26-27: prophet, priest, elders, king, prince,

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Emendation yields "like moaning doves. All of them shall perish."

c I.e., their adornments.

the worst of the nations to take possession of their houses; so shall I turn to naught the pride of the powerful, and their sanctuaries shall be defiled.

²⁵Horror^a comes, and they shall seek safety, but there shall be none. ²⁶Calamity shall follow calamity, and rumor follow rumor. Then they shall seek vision from the prophet in vain; instruction shall perish from the priest, and counsel from the elders. ²⁷The king shall mourn, the prince shall clothe himself with desolation, and the hands of the people of the land shall tremble. I will treat them in accordance with their own ways and judge them according to their deserts. And they shall know that I am the LORD.

8 In the sixth year, on the fifth day of the sixth month, I was sitting at home, and the elders of Judah were sitting before me, and there the hand of the Lord God fell upon me. ²As I looked, there was a figure that had the appearance of fire:^b from what appeared as his loins down, [he was] fire; and from his loins up, his appearance was resplendent and had the color of amber. ³He stretched out the form of a hand, and took me by the hair of my head. A spirit lifted me up between heaven and earth and brought me in visions of God to Jerusalem, to the entrance of the

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Septuagint "a man."

the people [others "the landed gentry"] are responsible for the punishment because of their own actions. Because they did not act properly in the past, they will be unable to fulfill their roles at the time of disaster when the people will need them the most. The so-called "proof saying," they shall know that I am the LORD, brings the oracle to a close.

8.1–19.14: Oracles concerning the vision of God's departure from the Temple. The second major section of the book focuses on Ezekiel's vision of God's departure from the Jerusalem Temple and the following oracles that elaborate upon the significance of this event. The section begins with a date formula in 8.1, in the sixth year, on the fifth day of the sixth month, i.e., 5 Elul, 592 BCE, fourteen months after his inaugural vision. Following the initial presentation of his second vision in 8.1–11.13, a series of fourteen oracle accounts follow in 11.14–25; 12.1–7; 12.8–16; 12.17–20; 12.21–25; 12.26–28; 13.1–23; 14.1–11; 14.12–23; 15.1–8; 16.1–63; 17.1–10; 17.11–24; 18.1–19.14. Whereas the vision account begins with the formula, and there the hand of the Lord God fell upon me, the oracle accounts each begin with a version of the typical prophetic formula, and the word of the LORD came to me. Many scholars group the prophet's vision of God's departure in chs 8–11 with the account of his inaugural vision in chs 1–7, but the presence of the date formulas and the prophetic formulas indicates an interest in setting out the prophet's vision, and then providing oracles that elaborate upon its significance or meaning. Overall, the oracles prompt the reader to consider the means by which Jerusalem will be purified later so that the restoration of Israel and God's Presence to Jerusalem may take place.

8.1–11.13: Vision of the destruction of Jerusalem. The account of Ezekiel's vision employs the imagery of priestly sacrifice to portray the destruction of Jerusalem and the departure of the divine Presence as an act that purges the city from impurity. The imagery draws upon the conceptualization of the purification (or sin) offering ("ḥata't"; see Lev. 7.7–10; 4.1–5.13) and the guilt offering ("asham"; see Lev. 7.1–6; 5.14–26), which both function as part of the process by which the priests purge the Temple by making atonement for the sins, particularly the ritual impurities, of the people (see also Num. 18.1; Lev. ch 16). Such atonement replaces the need to purge the community of persons who commit sins, but when the sanctity of the Temple is so thoroughly compromised, such sacrifices are hardly acceptable (see Hag. 1.1–11; 2.10–19). Instead, the people who have committed sins are to be purged themselves as part of the overall scenario for God's destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple. Accounts of such purges appear in Exod. chs 32–34, in which the Levites slaughtered those who worshipped the golden calf at Mt. Sinai; Num. ch 14, in which God decided to kill the wilderness generation because of their failure to accept God's promise of the land of Israel; Num. ch 16, in which Korah, Dathan, and Abiram were killed for compromising the sanctity of the people by making improper offerings; Josh. ch 7, in which Achan and his family were killed for having stolen from the sacred treasury of the people; 1 Kings ch 18, in which the four hundred fifty prophets of Baal and the four hundred prophets of Asherah were killed because of their idolatry; etc. Various narratives likewise recount the purging of the Temple in the time of Hezekiah (1 Kings 18.1–8; 2 Chron. chs 29–31); Josiah (2 Kings 23.1–25); and Judah the Maccabee (1 Macc. 4.36–51). Although Ezekiel functions as prophet in relating this vision, his prophetic role is heavily influenced by his priestly identity.

Penimith^a Gate that faces north; that was the site of the infuriating image that provokes fury. ⁴And the Presence of the God of Israel appeared there, like the vision that I had seen in the valley.^b

⁵And He said to me, "O mortal, turn your eyes northward." I turned my eyes northward, and there, "north of the gate of the altar, was^c that infuriating image on the approach."⁶ And He said to me, "Mortal, do you see what they are doing, the terrible abominations that the House of Israel is practicing here, "to drive Me far^d from My Sanctuary? You shall yet see even greater abominations!"

⁷Then He brought me to the entrance of the court;^e and I looked, and there was a hole in the wall. ⁸He said to me, "Mortal, break through the wall"; so I broke through the wall and found an entrance. ⁹And He said to me, "Enter and see the vile abominations that they are practicing here." ¹⁰I entered and looked, and there all detestable forms of creeping things and beasts and all the fetishes of the House of Israel were depicted over the entire wall. ¹¹Before them stood seventy men, elders of the House of Israel, with Jaazaniah son of Shaphan standing in their midst. Everyone had a censer in his hand, and a thick cloud of incense smoke ascended. ¹²Again He spoke to me, "O mortal, have you seen what the elders of the House of Israel are doing in the darkness, everyone in his image-covered chamber? For they say, 'The LORD does not

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b See chap. 1 and 3.22-23.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "north of the gate was the altar of."

d-d Or "at a distance."

e I.e., the outer court of the Temple.

It is doubtful if all of the cultic infractions "observed" by Ezekiel were actually taking place contemporaneously; it is more likely that he is being shown a set of infractions that transpired over a long period of time which have cumulatively caused the divine Presence to leave the Temple.

8.1-18: The impurity of the Temple. 1: In the sixth year, on the fifth day of the sixth month, 5 'Elul, 592 BCE. The presence of the elders in Ezekiel's home indicates that the Jewish community in Babylonian exile was organized with recognized leadership and that Ezekiel's status in society was high (cf. 14.1). Many interpreters see this verse as evidence for the origins of the synagogue, but there is no evidence for the development of this institution for several centuries (see 11.16 n.). 2: Ezekiel returns to the imagery of his inaugural vision to describe a human-like being. The Septuagint reads the expression a figure that had the appearance of fire as "the appearance (or likeness) of a man," apparently based upon the similarity of the Heb term "'esh" (fire) with "'ish" ("man"), although the consonantal Heb text does not support such a reading ("sh" [fire], "ysh" [man]). The language employed here, fire and resplendent and had the color of amber, describe a being that cannot be defined in earthly terms. The term "zohar" (resplendent) was later employed as the name of the well-known kabbalistic commentary on the Torah (see also Dan.

12.3). The exact meaning of the expression, the entrance of the Penimith Gate that faces north, is uncertain, although it may refer to a gate to the inner court of the Temple on the north side. This would place the prophet at the entry of the most sacred areas of the Temple. The Presence of the God of Israel indicates that the divine throne chariot from ch 1 has once again appeared. 5-6: The infuriating image north of the altar indicates the presence of a pagan idol that would defile the holy Temple precincts. 7-13: The portrayal of the prophet breaking or digging through the walls of the Temple suggests the later Babylonian attempts to breach the walls of Jerusalem (2 Kings 25.1-4; Jeremiah 52.4-7). 10: Detestable forms . . . fetishes: Such depictions were in direct disobedience to the command (Deut. 4.15-18) against images. In addition, creeping things are ritually impure (see Lev. 20.25) and would defile the Temple. 11: The seventy men, elders of the house of Israel and Jaazaniah son of Shaphan indicates that the highest leaders of the nation are involved in pagan worship inside the Temple. The institution of Israel's seventy elders is well known in biblical tradition as the primary ruling body of the nation (Exod. 24.1; Num. 11.16) which later played a role in selecting and advising kings (2 Sam. 5.3; cf. 1 Kings 12.6; 20.7). In postbiblical Judaism, the Sanhedrin was composed of seventy leaders. Shaphan played a major role in Josiah's reform (2 Kings ch 22); his sons Ahikam, Elasah, and Gemariah, and grandson Micaiah supported Jeremiah (Jer. chs 26; 29; 36). Although the text identifies Jaazniah as an apostate, his family's exemplary credentials as supporters of the Elide/Levitical priest Jeremiah suggest that Ezekiel's vision may reflect tensions between the Zadokite and Levitical priests, especially since the Levitical priests were associated with sanctuaries outside of Jerusalem that were deemed illegitimate (see 2 Kings 23.8-9). 12: The claim that the LORD has abandoned see us; the LORD has abandoned the country.' " ¹³ And He said to me, "You shall see even more terrible abominations which they practice."

¹⁴ Next He brought me to the entrance of the north ^agate of the House of the LORD;^a and there sat the women bewailing Tammuz.^b ¹⁵ He said to me, "Have you seen, O mortal? You shall see even more terrible abominations than these."

¹⁶ Then He brought me into the inner court of the House of the LORD, and there, at the entrance to the Temple of the LORD, between the portico and the altar, were about twenty-five men, their backs to the Temple of the LORD and their faces to the east; they were bowing low to the sun in the east. ¹⁷ And He said to me, "Do you see, O mortal? Is it not enough for the House of Judah to practice the abominations that they have committed here, that they must fill the country with lawlessness and provoke Me still further and ^cthrust the branch to their nostrils?^c ¹⁸ I in turn will act with fury, I will show no pity or compassion; though they cry aloud to Me, I will not listen to them."

9 Then He called loudly in my hearing, saying, "Approach, you men in charge of the city, each bearing his weapons of destruction!" ² And six men entered by way of the upper gate that faces north, each with his club in his hand; and among them was another, clothed in linen, with a writing case at his waist. They came forward and stopped at the bronze altar. ³ Now the Presence of the God of Israel had moved from the cherub on which it had rested to the platform^d of the House. He called to the man clothed in linen with the writing case at his waist; ⁴ and a-a I.e., the gate of the inner court. b A Babylonian god.

c-c Apparently meaning "goad Me to fury"; "their" is a euphemism for "My."

d The raised platform on which the Temple stood; cf. 47.1.

the country indicates the belief that God would no longer protect Jerusalem from Babylon. The quotation and refutation of a folk-saying by the prophet is characteristic of Ezekiel (see 11.2, 15; 18.2).

14-15: A pagan practice taking place at the Temple itself. Women weep for Tammuz, the Babylonian vegetation god who dies at the onset of the dry season and must be brought back to life to inaugurate the rains. According to Babylonian mythology, the goddess Ishtar descends to the underworld each year to return Tammuz to the world of the living for the six months of the rainy season.

Mourning rituals by women for the dead Tammuz play a role in bringing the god back to life.

16-18: Ezekiel sees twenty-five men engaged in sun worship. The sun god Shamash was the Babylonian god of law and justice. They apparently turn their backs to the Temple to face the east where the sun rises. Traditional interpreters understand this as an expression of their rejection of God, since Jewish worshippers face the Temple and the Holy of Holies (see, as an earlier instance, Dan. 6.11). The meaning of the expression, thrust the branch to their nostrils, is unknown, although it is generally understood to refer to some noxious idolatrous practice. Radak follows the Mekhilta to Exod. 15.7 in maintaining that this statement is one of the eighteen "emendations of the scribes" that originally read, "thrust the branch to my (God's) nostrils." The various actions described in this narrative indicate that the Temple has been profaned, and must be purified to restore its sacred character.

9.1-11: The slaughter of Jerusalem. Ezekiel's depiction of the killing of the people of Jerusalem employs the imagery of sacrificial slaughter. It would also draw upon images of the Babylonian soldiers slaughtering the defenders of Jerusalem. 1: The verb "karevu" (approach) frequently appears as a technical term that refers to the presentation of an offering to God (Exod. 29.4; 40.12; Lev. 3.6; 7.35; 8.6; Num. 8.9; 16.5). It may also refer to drawing near for battle (Exod. 14.20; Judg. 20.24). 2-3: The six men come from the upper gate to the north with weapons in their hands to begin the slaughter. The Babylonian army would have entered Judah from the north (see Jer. 1.13-16). The bronze altar had been moved to the north by Ahaz to accommodate an Assyrian altar (2 Kings 16.14). The Talmud maintains that the bronze altar had been destroyed (b. Shab. 55a). The man clothed in linen wears the apparel of a priest who serves at the altar (Exod. 28.39; Lev. 6.10) and carries a writing case to record the sacrifices. Angels, who are generally understood as the heavenly counterparts to the priests, also dress in white linen (Dan. 10.5; 12.6). The living beings are now named cherubim. 4: God commands that a mark (the ancient form of the Hebrew letter "tav," here translated mark, looks like an X) be placed on the foreheads of the men who moan and the LORD said to him, "Pass through the city, through Jerusalem, and put a mark on the foreheads of the men who moan and groan because of all the abominations that are committed in it." ⁵To the others He said in my hearing, "Follow him through the city and strike; show no pity or compassion. ⁶Kill off graybeard, youth and maiden, women and children; but do not touch any person who bears the mark. Begin here at My Sanctuary." So they began with the elders who were in front of the House. ⁷And He said to them, "Defile the House and fill the courts with the slain. Then go forth." So they went forth and began to kill in the city. ⁸When they were out killing, and I remained alone, I flung myself on my face and cried out, "Ah, Lord GOD! Are you going to annihilate all that is left of Israel, pouring out Your fury upon Jerusalem?" ⁹He answered me, "The iniquity of the Houses of Judah and Israel is very very great, the land is full of crime and the city is full of corruption. For they say, 'The LORD has forsaken the land, and the LORD does not see.' ¹⁰I, in turn, will show no pity or compassion; I will give them their deserts." ¹¹And then the man clothed in linen with the writing case at his waist brought back word, saying, "I have done as You commanded me."

10 I looked, and on the expanse over the heads of the cherubs, there was something like a sapphire stone; an appearance resembling a throne could be seen over them. ²He spoke to the man clothed in linen and said, "Step inside the wheelwork, under the cherubs, and fill your hands with glowing coals from among the cherubs, and scatter them over the city." And he went in as I looked groan because of all the abominations to protect them from death. The mark presumably indicates someone who is to be spared. A mark on the doorpost protects the Israelites from God's plague against the Egyptians (Exod. 12.23), and a mark on the forehead of Cain is a sign of divine protection (Gen. 4.15). All who lack the mark are to die, defiling the sanctuary. But the meaning of this v. is not entirely certain as the ch subsequently depicts the slaughter of all Jerusalem's inhabitants except for Ezekiel (see 9.8–10). Interpreters therefore waver as to whether the mark indicates those who are guilty or innocent, and sometimes propose that God reneged by slaughtering everyone without distinction. 8–9: Ezekiel, as a prophet, attempts to intercede as Moses and other prophets did (Exod. 32.1–14; Num. ch 14), but God states that the people believe that God lacks power and therefore deserve the punishment. Unlike most prophets, who emphasize repentance, the theology of Ezekiel is that the peoples' sin is so great repentance at this point is impossible. (See similarly Jer. ch 25.) The purpose of Ezekiel's prophecies is thus to explain the disaster, not to try to avert it. Radak states that the executioners are to begin at the Temple with the seventy elders because they engaged in idolatry (Ezek. 8.11), but he cites Rashi and b. Shabbat 55a who maintain that they were the men who kept Torah from "alef" to "tav," (first to last) indicating God's failure to keep a promise.

10.1–11.13: The LORD's departure from Jerusalem. God's throne chariot will return in 43.1–12 when the city is purified and the Temple reestablished. The departure of the Presence [Glory] of the LORD from the Temple contrasts with depictions of the manifestation of the divine Presence as fire and cloud in the wilderness Tabernacle (Exod. 40.34–38) and in Solomon's Temple (1 Kings 8.6–13; 2 Chron. 5.3–6.2). Once God has left, the city is open to foreign invasion and destruction. 10.1: The expanse over the heads of the cherubs is associated with sapphire. The blue image of sapphire recalls the identification of the expanse as the sky or heavens in Gen. 1.6–8 and the pavement of sapphire (or lapis) under the feet of God seen by Moses, Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and the seventy elders in Exod. 24.9–11. In later kabbalistic tradition, the term sapphire (Heb "sapir") is sometimes associated with the Heb term "sefirah" ("counting"), which in kabbalistic texts signify the "emanations" of God or divine qualities manifested in the world. The two terms, however, are not related etymologically. 2: God commands the man clothed in linen to take glowing coals from among the cherubs and scatter them over the city. This act resembles Josiah's destruction of the Bethel altar in which he commanded that the altar be burned and ground to dust and that the bodies of the idolatrous priest be burned on the site to desecrate it (2 Kings 23.15–18). It also resembles the later purification of the Temple by Judah the Maccabee, who had to destroy the defiled altar in order to rededicate the Temple (1 Macc. 4.36–59). Insofar as Ezekiel envisions the restoration of the Temple at some time following its destruction (11.14–21; chs 40–48), the sacrificial imagery of this act also likens it to the purification and guilt offerings pre-on.³ Now the cherubs were standing on the south side of the House when the man entered, and the cloud filled the inner court.⁴ But when the Presence of the LORD moved from the cherubs to the platform^a of the House, the House was filled with the cloud, and the court was filled with the radiance of the Presence of the LORD.⁵ The sound of the cherubs' wings could be heard as far as the outer court, like the voice of El Shaddai^b when He speaks.

⁶ When He commanded the man dressed in linen: "Take fire from among the cherubs within the wheelwork," he went in and stood beside a wheel.⁷ And a cherub stretched out his hand among the cherubs to the fire that was among the cherubs; he took some and put it into the hands of him who was clothed in linen, who took it and went out.⁸ The cherubs appeared to have the form of a man's hand under their wings.

⁹ I could see that there were four wheels beside the cherubs, one wheel beside each of the cherubs; as for the appearance of the wheels, they gleamed like the beryl stone.¹⁰ In appearance, the four had the same form, as if there were two wheels cutting through each other.¹¹ And when they moved, each could move in the direction of any of its four quarters; they did not veer as they moved. The [cherubs] moved in the direction in which one of the heads faced, without turning as they moved.¹² Their entire bodies—backs, hands, and wings—and the wheels, the wheels of the four of them, were covered all over with eyes.¹³ It was these wheels that I had heard called "the wheelwork."^c ¹⁴ Each one had four faces: One was a cherub's face, the second a human face, the third a lion's face, and the fourth an eagle's face.

¹⁵ The cherubs ascended; those were the creatures that I had seen by the Chebar Canal.¹⁶ Whenever the cherubs went, the wheels went beside them; and when the cherubs lifted their wings to ascend from the earth, the wheels did not roll away from their side.¹⁷ When those stood still, these stood still; and when those ascended, these ascended with them, for the spirit of the creature was in them.

¹⁸ Then the Presence of the LORD left the platform^a of the House and stopped above the cherubs.¹⁹ And I saw the cherubs lift their wings and rise from the earth, with the wheels beside them as they departed; and they^d stopped at the entrance of the eastern gate of the House of the LORD, with the Presence of the God of Israel above them.²⁰ They were the same creatures that I had seen below the God of Israel at the Chebar Canal; so now I sent in the Temple (Lev. chs 4–5; 7.1–10). Such sacrifices play a role in atoning for iniquity and impurity so that the offender can "return" as a member of the community.⁴ God's presence is signified by the cloud (Exod. 19.9; 1 Kings 8.10–11) and radiance of the Presence of the LORD as it moves about the Temple complex.^{6–7}: Because of the sanctity of the throne chariot or ark, the man clothed in linen is unable to approach and a cherub hands him the fire (2 Sam. 6.6–11).^{9–14}: Ezekiel's detailed description of the cherubim and the wheels differs from that in ch 1 in that one of their four faces is a cherub rather than an ox.

¹⁹: The Presence of the God of Israel above the entrance of the eastern gate of the House of the LORD is the main or processional entrance to the Temple (Pss. 24.7–9; 118.19–20).

^{11.1–13}: Ezekiel continues to employ the image of sacrifice to prophesy judgment for the people.

^{1–4}: The spirit or "wind" transports Ezekiel to the east gate of the Temple where he sees twenty-five officials, apparently the same men who were worshipping the sun in 8.16. His earlier position in the inner court allowed him to see only their backs. Now that he is at the eastern gate, he can see their faces as they face the sun.³: Their statement, there is no need now to build houses, rejects Jeremiah's call to build and to plant (Jer. 1.10; 31.28). Their statement, this [city] is the pot, and we are the meat, indicates their belief that Jerusalem is to be sacrificed since sacrificial meat was cooked in pots (24.1–14; Jer. 1.13–19; 1 Sam. 2.12–17). Because they conclude that judgment is final, they have rejected God to worship the sun.^{5–13}: God instructs Ezekiel to hold the twenty-five leaders responsible for the deaths of the people in Jerusalem.⁷: In stating that the dead will become the meat and the city the pot, God turns their statement against them and thereby continues the metaphorical portrayal of the destruction of Jerusalem with sacrificial imagery. Because the city of Jerusalem is to be purified by the

^a See note at 47.1. ^b See note at Gen. 17.1. ^c See v. 2. ^d Lit. "it."

knew that they were cherubs.^a ²¹ Each one had four faces and each had four wings, with the form of human hands under the wings. ²² As for the form of their faces, they were the very faces that I had seen by the Chebar Canal—their appearance and ^btheir features^b—and each could move in the direction of any of its faces.

11 Then a spirit lifted me up and brought me to the east gate of the House of the LORD, which faces eastward; and there, at the entrance of the gate, were twenty-five men, among whom I saw Jaazaniah son of Azzur and Pelatiah son of Benaiah, leaders of the people. ²[The LORD] said to me, "O mortal, these are the men who plan iniquity and plot wickedness in this city, ³ who say: 'There is no need now to build houses; this [city] is the pot, and we are the meat.'^c ⁴I adjure you, prophesy against them; prophesy, O mortal!"

⁵ Thereupon the spirit of the LORD fell upon me, and He said to me, "Speak: Thus said the LORD: Such are your thoughts, O House of Israel; I know what comes into your mind. ⁶ Many have you slain in this city; you have filled its streets with corpses. ⁷ Assuredly, thus says the Lord GOD: The corpses that you have piled up in it are the meat for which it is the pot; but you shall be taken out of it. ⁸ You feared the sword, and the sword I will bring upon you—declares the Lord GOD. ⁹ I will take you out of it and deliver you into the hands of strangers, and I will execute judgments upon you. ¹⁰ You shall fall by the sword; I will punish you at the border of Israel. And you shall know that I am the LORD. ¹¹ This [city] shall not be a pot for you, nor you the meat in it; I will punish you at the border of Israel. ¹² Then you shall know that I am the LORD, whose laws you did not follow and whose rules you did not obey, acting instead according to the rules of the nations around you."

¹³ Now, as I prophesied, Pelatiah son of Benaiah dropped dead. I threw myself upon my face and cried out aloud, "Ah, Lord GOD! You are wiping out the remnant of Israel!"

¹⁴ Then the word of the LORD came to me: ¹⁵ "O mortal, [I will save] your brothers, your brothers, the men of your kindred,^d all of that very House of Israel to whom the inhabitants of Jerusalem say, 'Keep far from the LORD; the land has been given as a heritage to us.' ¹⁶ Say then: Thus said the Lord GOD: I have indeed removed them far among the nations and have scattered them among the process of sacrifice, they will be excluded from the pot. 10-11: God alludes to their fear of foreign invaders, and again turns their fears against them by stating that they will die at the border of Israel (see 2 Kings 25.18-21; Jer. 52.24-27). 13: The immediate death of Pelatiah son of Benaiah confirms Ezekiel's word and proves that he is a true prophet (see Amos 7.10-17; Isa. chs 36-37; Jer. chs 27-28).

11.14-21: Oracle concerning the restoration of Israel. The first of fourteen oracles associated with Ezekiel's vision of God's departure from Jerusalem anticipates the future restoration of Israel once the punishment is complete. It thereby attempts to point to divine mercy as the ultimate outcome of the process of judgment. 15: The reference to your brothers, the men of your kindred can also be read as "your brothers, the men of your redemption." The Heb term "ge'ulatekha" has a background in the Priestly laws of redemption whereby a family member, "go'el," must redeem land sold to pay a debt in the jubilee year (Lev. 25.23-55; Ruth 2.20). Ezekiel apparently envisions that those exiled from the land of Israel will redeem the land following the destruction of those who defiled it. Ironically, those who remain in the land claim that the exiles (which would include Ezekiel) must keep far from God because they are no longer entitled to the land. 16: God claims to be a diminished sanctity: God's presence in the world, rather than the Temple's presence in Jerusalem, insures their future. Jewish tradition reads into "mikdash me'at," "a little sanctuary," a reference to the origins of synagogues; based especially on the translation of Targum Jonathan, "and I have become for them synagogues, second to My Temple." Although the origins of synagogues are obscure, they can first be traced to the 3rd century BCE, and only emerged as the primary Jewish centers for study and worship following the destruction of the Second Temple by the Ro-countries, and I have become to them a diminished sanctity in the countries whither they have gone. ¹⁷Yet say: Thus said the Lord God: I will gather you^a from the peoples and assemble you out of the countries where you have been scattered, and I will give you the Land of Israel. ¹⁸And they shall return there, and do away with all its detestable things and all its abominations. ¹⁹I will give them one heart and put a new spirit in them;^b I will remove the heart of stone from their bodies and give them a heart of flesh, ²⁰that they may follow My laws and faithfully observe My rules. Then they shall be My people and I will be their God. ²¹But as for them whose heart is set upon their detestable things and their abominations, I will repay them for their conduct—declares the Lord God.”

^a Because they had been called "cherubs" (cf. v. 2). ^{b-b} Lit. "themselves."
^c I.e., the exiles will not return. ^d I.e., the exiles.

²²Then the cherubs, with the wheels beside them, lifted their wings, while the Presence of the God of Israel rested above them. ²³The Presence of the LORD ascended from the midst of the city and stood on the hill east of the city. ²⁴A spirit carried me away and brought me in a vision by the spirit of God to the exile community in Chaldea. Then the vision that I had seen left me, ²⁵and I told the exiles all the things that the LORD had shown me.

12 The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, you dwell among the rebellious breed. They have eyes to see but see not, ears to hear but hear not; for they are a rebellious breed. ³Therefore, mortal, get yourself gear for exile, and go into exile by day before their eyes. Go into exile from your home to another place before their very eyes; perhaps they will take note, even though they are a rebellious breed. ⁴Carry out your gear as gear for exile by day before their very eyes; and go out again in the evening before their eyes, as one who goes out into exile. ⁵Before their eyes, break through the wall and carry [the gear] out through it; ⁶before their eyes, carry it on your shoulder. Take it out in the dark, and cover your face that you may not see the land; for I make you a portent to the House of Israel.

a. I.e., the exiles. b. Heb. "you."

mans in 70 CE. 17: God promises to gather the people from exile, to give them the Land of Israel so that they might purify it from abominations. 19: The promise of one heart (some manuscripts read “a new heart”) and a new spirit in them (“you”) takes up a theme from Jeremiah (Jer. 32.39; see also Ezek. 18.31; 36.26) concerning a new covenant in which God’s “torah” is written upon their hearts (Jer. 31.33–34; see also Ezek. 16.59–63). These chs offer a radical solution to prevent Israel from sinning again and experiencing another exile: Free choice is replaced by a new heart which is pre-programmed for obedience. 20: They shall be My people, and I will be their God, a formulation which characterizes the covenant between God and Israel/Judah (14.11; 36.28; 37.23; Jer. 7.23; 31.33; 32.38; Hos. 2.23; Zech. 8.8). Christianity understands this new covenant as a reference to the coming of Jesus (New Testament means “new covenant”). Judaism understands it as a continuation of the original covenant in which the people will renew their commitment to God. Targum Jonathan translates vv. 19–20, “and I will break the heart of wickedness, which is as strong as stone, from their flesh, and I shall give them a fearing heart before Me to perform My will.”

11.22–24: The Presence of the LORD departs from the city.

23: Rabbinic tradition identifies the hill east of the city as the Mount of Olives, and claims that the divine Presence remained there for three and a half years hoping that Israel would repent (Lam. Rab. 25).

24: Ezekiel is returned to Chaldea (Babylonia) to report to the exiles.

12.1–7: Symbolic action concerning the exile. God instructs Ezekiel to perform a symbolic act that depicts the exile of the House of Israel. Most interpreters maintain that Ezekiel’s action is directed to his fellow exiles. 1: Like the other oracles that follow Ezekiel’s vision, the passage begins with the formula, the word of the LORD came to me. 2: God calls Israel the rebellious breed, but adds they have eyes to see but see not, ears to hear but hear not, apparently in reference to Isa. 69–10. 3–6: Ezekiel is to prepare his baggage, dig through the wall, and depart with his face covered so that all may see that the exile of Israel is taking place. Ironically, this action contrasts with Exod. 12.11, which instructs the people of Israel to eat the Passover sacrifice with “your loins girded, your sandals on your feet, and your staff in your hand.” Portent frequently appears as a term for God’s miracles at the time of the Exodus (Exod. 4.21; 7.3; Deut. 4.34; Ps. 78.43).

⁷I did just as I was ordered: I took out my gear by day as gear for exile, and in the evening I broke through the wall ^awith my own hands.^a In the darkness I carried [the gear] out on my shoulder, carrying it before their eyes.

⁸In the morning, the word of the LORD came to me: ⁹O mortal, did not the House of Israel, that rebellious breed, ask you, "What are you doing?" ¹⁰Say to them: "Thus said the Lord GOD: This pronouncement concerns the prince in Jerusalem and all the House of Israel who are in it." ¹¹Say: "I am a portent for you: As I have done, so shall it be done to them; they shall go into exile, into captivity. ¹²And the prince among them shall carry his gear on his shoulder as he goes out in the dark. He^b shall break through the wall in order to carry [his gear] out through it; he shall cover his face, because he himself shall not see the land with his eyes." ¹³I will spread My net over him, and he shall be caught in My snare. I will bring him to Babylon, the land of the Chaldeans, but he shall not see it;^c and there he shall die. ¹⁴And all those around him, his helpers and all his troops, I will scatter in every direction; and I will unsheathe the sword after them. ¹⁵Then, when I have scattered them among the nations and dispersed them through the countries, they shall know that I am the LORD. ¹⁶But I will spare a few of them from the sword, from famine, and from pestilence, that they may recount all their abominable deeds among the nations to which they come; and they shall know that I am the LORD!

¹⁷The word of the LORD came to me: ¹⁸O mortal, eat your bread in trembling and drink your water in fear and anxiety. ¹⁹And say to the people of the land: Thus said the Lord GOD concerning the inhabitants of Jerusalem in the land of Israel: They shall eat their bread in anxiety and drink their water in desolation, because their land will be desolate of its multitudes on account of the lawlessness of all its inhabitants. ²⁰The inhabited towns shall be laid waste and the land shall become a desolation; then you shall know that I am the LORD.

²¹The word of the LORD came to me: ²²O mortal, what is this proverb that you have in the land of Israel, that you a-a Lit. "by hand." b Heb. "They." c Cf. 2 Kings 25.7.

12.8–16: Ezekiel's explanation for his symbolic action. God instructs Ezekiel to explain his action to satisfy the questions that it provokes. He relates the symbolic action to the exile of the Davidic king, which strikes at the foundation of Judean identity and the promise of God's protection of Jerusalem and the house of David (2 Sam. ch 7; Pss. 89; 132). 10: He calls the action a pronouncement, a technical term for prophetic oracles that explain God's actions in the world (see Isa. 13.1; Hab. 1.1). 12–13: Ezekiel's scenario of the prince's escape and capture reflects Zedekiah's capture near Jericho and blinding at Riblah prior to imprisonment in Babylon (2 Kings 25.1–7; Jer. 52.4–11). Rashi and Radak quote an unknown midrashic source indicating that Zedekiah tunneled out of Jerusalem to Jericho, but God caused a gazelle to run along the top of the tunnel pursued by Babylonian soldiers, who then captured him as he emerged. 16: But I will spare a few of them reflects the tradition of a remnant that is common in prophetic literature. Yet the view of this remnant is bleak, in contrast to other prophetic passages (e.g., Isa. 6.13).

12.17–20: Symbolic action concerning eating and drinking. Eating meals in fear dramatizes the realities of exile. Again, eating and drinking in fear contrasts with the experience of the exodus, in which the Israelites carried their kneading bowls and hurriedly ate matzot (unleavened bread) as they escaped from Egypt to travel through the wilderness (Exod. 12.33–39; 13.1–8; cf. 12.11–15). The effectiveness of this symbolic action assumes that members of the exile community are regularly visiting Ezekiel to observe his actions (see 8.1 n.).

12.21–25: Oracle concerning the fulfillment of prophecy. Ezekiel's oracle affirms the imminent fulfillment of God's visions and challenges those prophets and prophetesses who proclaim false messages of peace. Ezekiel responds to those who claim in essence that he is a false prophet, and that his visions will not be fulfilled (see 11.13 n.). 22: Proverb here refers to a common saying among the people. Vision refers to both visual and auditory experience (see Isa. 2.1). Jeremiah also attacks false prophets (Jer. 23.9–40; chs 27–28; 29.20–28; cf. Deut. 18.15–22).

say, "The days grow many and every vision comes to naught?" ²³ Assuredly, say to them, Thus said the Lord God: I will put an end to this proverb; it shall not be used in Israel any more. Speak rather to them: The days draw near, and the fulfillment of every vision. ²⁴ For there shall no longer be any false vision or soothing divination in the House of Israel. ²⁵ But whenever I the LORD speak what I speak, that word shall be fulfilled without any delay; in your days, O rebellious breed, I will fulfill every word I speak—declares the Lord God.

²⁶ The word of the LORD came to me: ²⁷ See, O mortal, the House of Israel says, "The vision that he sees is far ahead, and he prophesies for the distant future." ²⁸ Assuredly, say to them: Thus said the Lord God: There shall be no more delay; whenever I speak a word, that word shall be fulfilled—declares the Lord God.

13 The word of the LORD came to me: ² O mortal, prophesy against the prophets of Israel who prophesy; say to those who prophesy out of their own imagination: Hear the word of the LORD! ³ Thus said the Lord God: Woe to the degenerate prophets, who follow their own fancy, without having had a vision! ⁴ Your prophets, O Israel, have been like jackals among ruins. ⁵ You did not enter the breaches and repair the walls for the House of Israel, that they might stand up in battle in the day of the LORD. ⁶ They prophesied falsehood and lying divination; they said, "Declares the LORD," when the LORD did not send them, and then they waited for their word to be fulfilled. ⁷ It was false visions you prophesied and lying divination you uttered, saying, "Declares the LORD," when I had not spoken.

⁸ Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: Because you speak falsehood and prophesy lies, assuredly, I will deal with you—declares the Lord God. ⁹ My hand will be against the prophets who prophesy falsehood and utter lying divination. They shall not remain in the assembly of My people, they shall not be inscribed in the lists of the House of Israel, and they shall not come back to the land of Israel. Thus shall you know that I am the Lord God.

¹⁰ Inasmuch as they have misled My people, saying, "It is well," when nothing is well, daubing with plaster the flimsy wall which "the people" were building, ¹¹ say to those daubers of plaster: It shall collapse; a driving rain shall descend—and you, O great hailstones, shall fall—and a hurricane wind shall rend it. ¹² Then, when the wall

12.26-28: Oracle concerning the imminent fulfillment of Ezekiel's vision. Prophetic visions often do not have a clear time-period associated with them. In this context, Ezekiel responds to the charge that his visions will be fulfilled only in the distant future by stating that they are about to be realized.

13.1-23: Oracle concerning false prophets. Like Jeremiah, Ezekiel condemns prophets who announce well-being for the people of Israel (Jer. chs 27-28; cf. 23.9-40; 29.20-28). 2: Ezekiel charges that they prophesy out of their own imagination rather than speaking the word of God. 4: He compares them to jackals (lit. "foxes"), animals associated with ruins. Instead of helping to prevent the destruction, the prophets preside over it. 10: God is against those prophets who announce "It is well [shalom] when nothing is well. The expression may be translated, "saying, 'peace,' when there is no peace." Much like Hananiah in Jer. chs 27-28, such prophets of peace would have relied upon the Davidic tradition of God's promise of security for the monarchy and Jerusalem. Ezekiel compares these prophecies to daubing with plaster [a] flimsy wall that is then destroyed by rain, hail, and wind. Walls made of sun-dried brick are frequently destroyed by heavy rain and wind. Heb "tafel" (plaster) also means "folly" (cf. Lam. 2.14), and may here function as a pun with "yipol/tipol" (it shall collapse). A somewhat similar metaphor appears in Amos's vision of the plumb line, in which God employs a plumb line to show him that the "wall" or Israel is about to fall (Amos 7.7-9).

a-a Heb. "it."

collapses, you will be asked, "What became of the plaster you daubed on?"

¹³ Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: In My fury I will let loose hurricane winds; in My anger a driving rain shall descend, and great hailstones in destructive fury. ¹⁴ I will throw down the wall that you daubed with plaster, and I will raze it to the ground so that its foundation is exposed; and when it falls, you shall perish in its midst; then you shall know that I am the LORD. ¹⁵ And when I have spent My fury upon the wall and upon those who daubed it with plaster, I will say to you: Gone is the wall and gone are its daubers, ¹⁶ the prophets of Israel who prophesy about Jerusalem and see a vision of well-being for her when there is no well-being—declares the Lord God.

¹⁷ And you, O mortal, set your face against the women of your people, who prophesy out of their own imagination. Prophesy against them ¹⁸ and say: Thus said the Lord God: Woe to those who sew pads^a on all arm-joints and make bonnets^a for the head of every person, in order to entrap! Can you hunt down lives among My people, while you preserve your own lives? ¹⁹ You have profaned ^bMy name^b among My people in return for handfuls of barley and morsels of bread; you have announced the death of persons who will not die and the survival of persons who will not live—lying to My people, who listen to your lies.

²⁰ Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: I am going to deal with your pads,^a ^cby which^c you hunt down lives like birds, and I will tear them from your arms and free the persons whose lives you hunt down like birds. ²¹ I will tear off your bonnets^a and rescue My people from your hands, and they shall no longer be prey in your hands; then you shall know that I am the LORD. ²² Because you saddened the heart of the innocent with lies, when I would not inflict suffering on him, and encouraged the wicked not to repent of his evil ways and so gain life—²³ assuredly, you shall no longer prophesy lies or practice divination! I will save My people from your hands, and you shall know that I am the LORD.

14 Certain elders of Israel came to me and sat down before me. ² And the word of the LORD came to me: ³ O mortal, these men have turned their thoughts upon their fetishes and set their minds upon the sin through which they stumbled: Shall I respond to their inquiry?

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^{b-b} Heb. "Me." ^{c-c} Heb. "where."

17–23: Ezekiel then condemns the women who prophesy falsely and practice divination. Miriam (Exod. 15.20–21), Deborah (Judg. chs 4–5), the wife of Isaiah (Isa. 8.1–4), Huldah (2 Kings 22.14–20), and Noadiah (Neh. 6.14) demonstrate that female prophets appeared in both Israel and Judah. A careful analysis of the condemnation of these female prophets in contrast to their male counterparts reveals important assumptions about gender in ancient Israel. 18: Ezekiel points to the divinatory side of their activities in which they employ wristbands and veils (see Moses' veil in Exod. 34.29–35), and indicates that they are paid for their services. The exact identity and function of these devices that the women use to aid them in prophecy are unclear. 19: Prophecy is a profession in the ancient world for which payment is received (1 Sam. 9.7; but see Amos 7.10–17); Ezekiel's point is that they deliver life-and-death prophecies for negligible compensation. Death of persons . . . survival of persons: The false prophetesses and diviners apparently play a role in deciding capital cases in which a person's life is at stake. 20: God will tear the bands from their hands and let the lives of such people go free like birds. Birds were frequently employed in divination in the ancient world (see Isa. 8.19).

14.1–11: Threats against false prophets and diviners. Here and in the following section, Ezekiel uses the form of case law, familiar from ancient Near Eastern and biblical law collections, to frame his address. As a priest, he would have been especially familiar with this type of law (see 7.26; 22.26; Jer. 18.18). Divination is prohibited in the Bible because it is associated with idolatry and apostasy (Deut. 13.2–6; Isa. 2.6–9). 1: See 8.1 n. 3: God states that the elders have turned their thoughts upon their fetishes and set their minds upon the sin through which they stumbled, apparently a reference to their consulting pagan diviners or a charge

⁴Now speak to them and tell them: Thus said the Lord God: If anyone of the House of Israel turns his thoughts upon his fetishes and sets his mind upon the sin through which he stumbled, and yet comes to the prophet, I the LORD will respond to him ^aas he comes with^a his multitude of fetishes. ⁵Thus I will hold the House of Israel to account for their thoughts, because they have all been estranged from Me through their fetishes.

⁶Now say to the House of Israel: Thus said the Lord God: Repent, and turn back from your fetishes and turn your minds away from all your abominations. ⁷For if any man of the House of Israel, or of the strangers who dwell in Israel, breaks away from Me and turns his thoughts upon his fetishes and sets his mind upon the sins through which he stumbled, and then goes to the prophet to inquire of Me through him, I the LORD will respond to him directly. ⁸I will set My face against that man and make him a sign and a byword, and I will cut him off from the midst of My people. Then you shall know that I am the LORD.

⁹And if a prophet is seduced and does speak a word [to such a man], it was I the LORD who seduced that prophet; I will stretch out My hand against him and destroy him from among My people Israel. ¹⁰Thus they shall bear their punishment: The punishment of the inquirer and the punishment of the prophet shall be the same, ¹¹so that the House of Israel may never again stray from Me and defile itself with all its transgressions. Then they shall be My people and I will be their God—declares the Lord God.

¹²The word of the LORD came to me: ¹³O mortal, if a land were to sin against Me and commit a trespass, and I stretched out My hand against it and broke its staff of bread, and sent famine against it and cut off man and beast from it, ¹⁴even if these three men—Noah, Daniel, and Job—should be in it, they would by their righteousness save only themselves—declares the Lord God. ¹⁵Or, if I were to send wild beasts to roam the land and they depopulated it, and it became a desolation with none passing through it because of the beasts, ¹⁶as I live—declares the Lord God—those three men in it would save neither sons nor daughters; they alone would be saved, but the land would become a desolation. ¹⁷Or, if I were to bring the sword upon that land and say, “Let a sword sweep through the land so that I may cut off from it man and beast,” ¹⁸if those three men should be in it, as I live—declares the Lord God—they would save neither sons nor daughters, but that other Judean prophets are false. The coarse term for fetishes, lit. “dung balls,” demonstrates Ezekiel’s disdain for such persons and suggests that they are not worthy of an answer. 4: In response to those who consult idols or false prophets, God states, “I, the LORD, will respond to him.” 7: The reference to strangers who dwell in Israel is generally understood as a reference to non-Israelites who joined the community, either in Babylonia or in the land of Israel (Exod. 12.19; Lev. 16.29; 17.8; 25.47; Num. 9.14; Deut. 1.16; 16.11; 26.11). 9: Both the idolater and the prophet who is seduced into being his accomplice will be held accountable. God calls upon such persons to repent, but also claims deliberately to seduce or deceive the false prophets so that they will be destroyed. This recalls the case of Micaiah ben Imlah, who claims to have witnessed God’s command to send a lying spirit to the prophets of Ahab (1 Kings ch 22). It also recalls God’s commission to Isaiah to make sure that the people would not repent and be saved (Isa. ch 6). Jeremiah claims to have been seduced by God (Jer. 20.7). 11: The covenant formula (see 11.14–21 n.), they shall be My people and I will be their God, conveys God’s intention to convince the people to remain loyal. Formulae are often used to end oracles in Ezekiel.

14.12–23: Oracle concerning individual righteousness. Ezekiel claims that individual people are responsible for their own moral actions and that the wicked will not be saved because of the few among them who are righteous. Abraham (Gen. ch 18) argued with God to save Sodom if there could be found in it the minimum number of righteous people; Ezekiel argues that Jerusalem could not be saved even for the three most righteous. 13: The form imitates the casuistic law collections, “if a man. . . .” 14: Noah, Daniel, and Job were exemplary righteous persons who had the capacity to save others. Noah saved his family during a-a Emendation yields “directly, because of”; cf. v. 7.

they alone would be saved. ¹⁹Or, if I let loose a pestilence against that land, and poured out My fury upon it in blood, cutting off from it man and beast, ²⁰should Noah, Daniel, and Job be in it, as I live—declares the Lord God—they would save neither son nor daughter; they would save themselves alone by their righteousness.

²¹Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: How much less [should any escape] now that I have let loose against Jerusalem all four of My terrible punishments—the sword, famine, wild beasts, and pestilence—to cut off man and beast from it! ²²Yet there are survivors left of it, ^asons and daughters who are being brought out.^a They are coming out to you; and when you see their ways and their deeds, you will be consoled for the disaster that I brought on Jerusalem, for all that I brought on it. ²³You will be consoled through them, when you see their ways and their deeds and realize that not without cause did I do all that I did in it—declares the Lord God.

15 The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, how is the wood of the grapevine better than the wood of any branch to be found among the trees of the forest? ³Can wood be taken from it for use in any work? Can one take a peg from it to hang any vessel on? ⁴Now suppose it was thrown into the fire as fuel and the fire consumed its two ends and its middle was charred—is it good for any use? ⁵Even when it was whole it could not be used for anything; how much less when fire has consumed it and it is charred! Can it still be used for anything?

⁶Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: Like the wood of the grapevine among the trees of the forest, which I have designated to be fuel for fire, so will I treat the inhabitants of Jerusalem. ⁷I will set My face against them; they escaped from fire, but fire shall consume them. When I set my face against them, you shall know that I am the LORD. ⁸I will make the land a desolation, because they committed trespass—declares the Lord God.

16 The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, proclaim Jerusalem's abominations to her, ³and say: Thus said the Lord God to Jerusalem: By origin and birth a-a Several ancient versions read "who are bringing out sons and daughters."

the flood (Gen. chs 6–9), and Job saved his three friends who spoke wrongly about God (Job 42.7–9). Daniel probably refers not to the Daniel in the book of Daniel, but to Dan-El in the Canaanite legend of Aqhat, found among the Ugaritic tablets. The righteous Dan-El saves his son Aqhat from death. It is therefore striking that Dan-El in Ezekiel is spelled according to the Canaanite pattern

(see 28.3). In a similar vein, Jeremiah argues that the wicked would suffer punishment even if Moses and Samuel were present (Jer. 15.1). The theme of this section, individual responsibility and retribution, is spelled out in greater detail in ch 18. 21–23: The same punishments are applied to Jerusalem. Those who are righteous will survive to form the remnant of Israel.

15.1–8: The allegory of the useless vine. Ezekiel uses the genre of riddles, known in ancient Near Eastern wisdom literature, to compare the inhabitants of Jerusalem to the wood of a grapevine, which is entirely useless except for burning (see Judg. 9.7–21). The allegory may draw upon Isaiah's (Isa. 5.1–7) depiction of Israel as God's vineyard, which was planted with good grapes that went bad and was therefore destroyed, but it is not formulated with the poetic artistry of that ch. 3: The wood of the vine cannot be used to make anything, since vine branches are twisted and weak. 4–5: Even when burned, the charred ends are useless. 6–8: Like useless vine branches, Jerusalem will be burned because of its trespasses.

16.1–63: The allegory of Jerusalem as God's adulterous wife. Prophets often employ the metaphor of marriage to portray the relationship between God, the husband, and Israel, the bride (Hos. chs 1–3; Jer. chs 2–3; Isa. chs 49–54; 66.7–14; 8.5–8; Zeph. 3.14–20). Rabbinic interpreters are very uncomfortable with the specific use of this imagery in this chapter because of its lewd portrayal of Jerusalem. R. Eliezer rules that it should not be read as a haftarah portion (m. Meg. 4.10). Maimonides read it as the haftarah for Shemot (Exod. 1.1–6.1), but it is no longer read as a haftarah for any text. Along with ch 23, which is similar, it has been the subject of much recent feminist interpretation. 1–5: Ezekiel portrays Jerusalem as an unwanted baby who is abandoned to die. 3: Your you are from the land of the Canaanites—your father was an Amorite and your mother a Hittite. ⁴As for your birth, when you were born your navel cord was not cut, and you were not bathed in water to ^asmooth you;^a you were not rubbed with salt, nor were you swaddled. ⁵No one pitied you enough to do any one of these things for you out of compassion for you; on the day you were born, you were left lying, rejected, in the open field. ⁶When I passed by you and saw you wallowing in your blood, I said to you: “Live in spite of your blood.” ^bYea, I said to you: “Live in spite of your blood.”^b ⁷I let you grow like the plants of the field; and you continued to grow up until you attained ^ato womanhood,^a until your breasts became firm and your hair sprouted.

You were still naked and bare ⁸when I passed by you [again] and saw that your time for love had arrived. ^cSo I spread My robe over you^c and covered your nakedness, and I entered into a covenant with you by oath—declares the Lord God; thus you became Mine. ⁹I bathed you in water, and washed the blood off you, and anointed you with oil. ¹⁰I clothed you with embroidered garments, and gave you sandals of ^adolphin leather^a to wear, and wound fine linen about your head, and dressed you in silks. ¹¹I decked you out in finery and put bracelets on your arms and a chain around your neck. ¹²I put a ring in your nose, and earrings in your ears, and a splendid crown on your head. ¹³You adorned yourself with gold and silver, and your apparel was of fine linen, silk, and embroidery. Your food was choice flour, honey, and oil. You grew more and more beautiful, and became fit for royalty. ¹⁴Your beauty won you fame among the nations, for it was perfected through the splendor which I set upon you—declares the Lord God.

¹⁵But confident in your beauty and fame, you played the harlot: you lavished your favors on every passerby; ^athey were his.^a ¹⁶You even took some of your cloths and made yourself ^atapestried platforms^a and fornicated on them—^dnot in the future; not in time to come.^d ¹⁷You took your beautiful things, made of the gold and silver that I had given you, and you made yourself phallic images and fornicated with them. ¹⁸You took your embroidered cloths to cover them; and you set My oil and My incense before them. ¹⁹The food that I had given you—the choice father was an Amorite, and your mother a Hittite: The indigenous inhabitants of Canaan were idolaters, and Ezekiel is thus suggesting that Jerusalem has idolatrous antecedents and is therefore predisposed to sin. The Bible generally suggests that Israel's origins were elsewhere, and that they must be distinguished from the native Canaanites (see esp. Deut. 20.16–19). Some modern scholars, however, believe that this statement reflects the historical truth—that the people Israel originated in the land of Israel by differentiating itself from the native Canaanites. 4–5: A catalogue of activities performed on the typical newborn. 6–7: God wills the abandoned infant to live. She lives and grows to puberty. Live in spite of your blood may also be understood as “live because of your blood,” and with this understanding these words are incorporated into the circumcision ceremony. 8: Upon reaching puberty, she is ready for marriage. I spread my robe over you and covered your nakedness indicates God's marriage to the young woman; a similar metaphor expresses Boaz's marriage to Ruth (Ruth 3.9), and the rape of Israel by the Assyrians (Isa. 8.7–8). God is depicted in strikingly anthropomorphic terms (contrast ch 1). 9: With her “marriage” to God comes Jerusalem's washing and anointing—that is, her purification and beautification. 10–13: The description of fine clothing, jewelry, and food (see Isa. 3.18–23) demonstrates God's generosity to the unwanted Jerusalem, who is treated as a queen. 15–29: God's charge that Jerusalem used the gifts to become a whore is a way to describe religious unfaithfulness. The metaphor then shifts to political and trade alliances with foreign nations. Israel allied itself with Egypt during the reigns of Solomon (1 Kings 3.1) and later Hoshea (2 Kings 17.4). Israel is depicted as a sexually overcharged ingrate. 29: Chaldea, that land of traders, the Heb reads, “Chaldea, that land of Canaan.” The term “Canaan”

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b This sentence is missing from some ancient versions and a few Heb. mss.

c-c An act symbolizing espousal; cf. note at Dent. 23.1, Ruth 3.9.

d-d See note at Exod. 25.4.

flour, the oil, and the honey, which I had provided for you to eat—you set it before them for a pleasing odor.^a And so it went—declares the Lord GOD. ²⁰You even took the sons and daughters that you bore to Me and sacrificed them to those [images] as food—as if your harlotries were not enough, ²¹you slaughtered My children and presented them as offerings to them! ²²In all your abominations and harlotries, you did not remember the days of your youth, when you were naked and bare, and lay wallowing in your blood.

²³After all your wickedness (woe, woe to you!)—declares the Lord GOD—²⁴you built yourself an eminence and made yourself a mound in every square. ²⁵You built your mound at every crossroad; and you sullied your beauty and spread your legs to every passerby, and you multiplied your harlotries. ²⁶You played the whore with your neighbors, the lustful^b Egyptians—you multiplied your harlotries to anger Me. ²⁷Now, I will stretch out My arm against you and withhold your maintenance; and I will surrender you to the will of your enemies, the Philistine women, who are shocked by your lewd behavior.

²⁸In your insatiable lust you also played the whore with the Assyrians; you played the whore with them, but were still unsated. ²⁹You multiplied your harlotries with Chaldea, that land of traders; yet even with this you were not satisfied.

³⁰^cHow sick was your heart^c—declares the Lord GOD—when you did all those things, the acts of a self-willed whore, ³¹building your eminence at every crossroad and setting your mound in every square! Yet you were not like a prostitute, for you spurned fees; ³²[you were like] the adulterous wife who welcomes strangers instead of her husband. ³³Gifts are made to all prostitutes, but you made gifts to all your lovers, and bribed them to come to you from every quarter for your harlotries. ³⁴You were the opposite of other women: you solicited instead of being solicited; you paid fees instead of being paid fees. Thus you were just the opposite!

³⁵Now, O harlot, hear the word of the LORD. ³⁶Thus said the Lord GOD: Because of your brazen effrontery, offering your nakedness to your lovers for harlotry—^djust like the blood of your children, which you gave to all your abominable fetishes:^d—³⁷I will assuredly assemble all the sometimes signifies merchants or traders (Zeph. 1.11; Zech. 14.21; cf. Ezek. 17.4). Following Israel's destruction in 722 BCE, Assyria granted Philistia control of Israelite and Judean territory in the coastal plain. Israel made an alliance with Assyria during the reign of Menahem (2 Kings 15.17–22), and Judah turned to Assyria during the reign of Ahaz (2 Kings ch 16). Hezekiah established relations with Chaldea or Babylonia (2 Kings ch 20; Isaiah ch 39). 30–34: Ezekiel charges that Jerusalem, contrary to the expectations of a prostitute, pays her lovers! Ahaz's "bribe" to Tiglath-pileser (2 Kings 16.8) would be a case in point. When Nebuchadnezzar first conquered Jerusalem, he stripped the Temple of its wealth (2 Kings 24.10–17). 35–43: God states that all of Jerusalem's lovers, the nations with whom she was allied, will come to punish her. Deut. 22.22–24 requires that an adulteress and her lover be stoned to death by the community, but here the paramours are destroying Jerusalem. As in many prophetic oracles, the punishment is introduced with the word Now ("lakhen").

a I.e., as a sacrifice; cf. Lev. 2.2.

b Lit. "big of phallus"; cf. 23.20.

c-c Change of vocalization yields "How furious I was with you"; lit. "How I was filled with your fury" (libbat, as in Akkadian and Old Aramaic).

d-d Construction of Heb. uncertain.

lovers to whom you gave your favors, along with everybody you accepted and everybody you rejected. I will assemble them against you from every quarter, and I will expose your nakedness to them, and they shall see all your nakedness. ³⁸I will inflict upon you the punishment of women who commit adultery and murder, and I will direct bloody and impassioned fury against you. ³⁹I will deliver you into their hands, and they shall tear down your eminence and level your mounds; and they shall strip you of your clothing and take away your dazzling jewels, leaving you naked and bare. ⁴⁰Then they shall assemble a mob against you to pelt you with stones and pierce you with their swords. ⁴¹They shall put your houses to the flames and execute punishment upon you in the sight of many women; thus I will put a stop to your harlotry, and you shall pay no more fees. ⁴²When I have satisfied My fury upon you and My rage has departed from you, then I will be tranquil; I will be angry no more.

⁴³Because you did not remember the days of your youth, but infuriated Me with all those things, I ^awill pay you back for your conduct^a—declares the Lord God.

Have you not committed depravity on top of all your other abominations? ⁴⁴Why, everyone who uses proverbs applies to you the proverb “Like mother, like daughter.” ⁴⁵You are the daughter of your mother, who rejected her husband and children. And you are the sister of your sisters, who rejected their husbands and children; for you are daughters of a Hittite mother and an Amorite father. ⁴⁶Your elder sister was Samaria, who lived with her daughters to the north of you; your younger sister was Sodom, who lived with her daughters to the south of you. ⁴⁷Did you not walk in their ways and practice their abominations? Why, you were almost^b more corrupt than they in all your ways. ⁴⁸As I live—declares the Lord God—your sister Sodom and her daughters did not do what you and your daughters did. ⁴⁹Only this was the sin of your sister Sodom: arrogance! She and her daughters had plenty of bread and untroubled tranquillity; yet she did not support the poor and the needy. ⁵⁰In their haughtiness, they committed abomination before Me; and so I removed them, as you saw.^c ⁵¹Nor did Samaria commit even half your sins. You committed more abominations than they, and by all the abominations that you committed you made your sisters look righteous. ⁵²Truly, you must bear the disgrace of 44–52: Charging that Jerusalem is like her mother who rejected her husband and children, God points to the sexual “abominations” of the nations who possessed the land before Israel (Lev. 18.24–30; 20.23; Gen. 15.16). 44: Ezekiel again shows his familiarity with popular proverbs (see 8.12 n.). 46: For shock value, God compares Jerusalem to Samaria, the elder sister . . . to the north, and Sodom, the younger sister . . . to the south. 47: According to biblical tradition (2 Kings ch 17; Gen. chs 18–19), both cities were destroyed for their sins, but God states that Jerusalem’s sins are even worse.

a-a Construction of Heb. uncertain. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Construed as second-person feminine; cf. qere, vv. 47 and 51; and see above vv. 13, 18, 22, 31, 43.

serving as your sisters' advocate: Since you have sinned more abominably than they, they appear righteous in comparison. So be ashamed and bear your disgrace, because you have made your sisters look righteous.

⁵³I will restore their fortunes—the fortunes of Sodom and her daughters and the fortunes of Samaria and her daughters—and your fortunes along with theirs. ⁵⁴Thus you shall bear your disgrace and feel your disgrace for behaving in such a way that they could take comfort. ⁵⁵Then your sister Sodom and her daughters shall return to their former state, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former state, and you and your daughters shall return to your former state. ⁵⁶Was not your sister Sodom a byword in your mouth in the days of your pride, ⁵⁷before your own wickedness was exposed? So must you now bear the mockery of the daughters of Aram^a and all her neighbors, the daughters of Philistia who jeer at you on every side. ⁵⁸You yourself must bear your depravity and your abominations—declares the LORD.

⁵⁹Truly, thus said the Lord GOD: I will deal with you as you have dealt, for you have spurned the pact and violated the covenant. ⁶⁰Nevertheless, I will remember the covenant I made with you in the days of your youth, and I will establish it with you as an everlasting covenant. ⁶¹You shall remember your ways and feel ashamed, when you receive your older sisters and your younger sisters, and I give them to you as daughters, though they are not of your covenant. ⁶²I will establish My covenant with you, and you shall know that I am the LORD. ⁶³Thus you shall remember and feel shame, and you shall be too abashed to open your mouth again, when I have forgiven you for all that you did—declares the Lord GOD.

17The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, pro-pound a riddle and relate an allegory to the House of Israel. ³Say: Thus said the Lord GOD: The great eagle with the great wings and the long pinions, ^bwith the full plumage and the brilliant colors, ^bcame to the Lebanon range and seized the top of the cedar. ⁴He plucked off its

a Many Heb. mss. and editions read "Edom."

b-b This description suggests the golden eagle; the vulture, called by the same word in Heb. (nesher) has a bald head (Mic. 1.16) and dark feathers.

53: God intends to restore . . . the fortunes of both Sodom and Samaria and their daughters, a reference to cities allied with each. In addition, God will restore Jerusalem. 54: God intends to punish or cleanse Israel from sins so it will continue to experience the shame of its past actions. 57: Jerusalem has become a mockery to Aram (some manuscripts read "Edom"; the letters "dalet" and "resh" are similar) and Philistia, Judah's surviving neighbors. 60–61: The everlasting covenant with Jerusalem alludes to God's eternal protection for Jerusalem and the House of David (2 Sam. ch 7; Isa. 55.3). Many compare it to Jeremiah's new covenant (Jer. 31.31–34), but it is not "new"; God "remembers" the covenant, and calls upon Jerusalem to do the same. Jerusalem and not God is charged with violating the "eternal covenant," according to which Jerusalem is destroyed. Samaria and Sodom were sisters, but they will become Jerusalem's daughters, indicating Jerusalem's premier status. The remembrance of the covenant at the end of this unit may be patterned after Lev. 26.42, 45. 62: I will establish My covenant with you, and you shall know that I am the LORD restates the covenant formula (Hos. 2.22). 63: God's remembering (vv. 60–61) has as its ultimate goal making Israel remember.

17.1–24: The allegory of the eagles, the vine, and the cedar. The allegory describes Jehoiachin's exile to Babylon, the installation of Zedekiah as king, and Zedekiah's demise when he allied himself with Egypt and revolted against Babylonia (see 2 Kings chs 24–25; 2 Chron. ch 36; Jer. ch 52). 1–2: God instructs Ezekiel to speak a riddle (i.e., a puzzle) and an allegory (elsewhere translated "proverb" [12.22], "theme" [Job 27.1] "byword" [Ps. 69.12]; the basic meaning is "likeness" or "comparison"). 3–10: The allegory proceeds in three stages. 3–4: The first describes an eagle, later identified as Nebuchadnezzar, who breaks off the top shoot of the cedar and carries it to the land of traders (lit. "to the land of Canaan"; cf. 16.29; Zeph. 1.11; Zech. 14.21) and a city of merchants. Lebanon was known for "the cedars of Lebanon" (Ps. 92.12), but a portion of the Davidic palace in Jerusalem, since it was built with cedar, is called the "House of the Forest of Lebanon" (1 Kings 7.2; Isa. 22.9). The "top shoot" therefore symbolizes the Davidic monarch, Jehoiach-topmost bough and carried it off to the land of traders^a and set it in a city of merchants.⁵ He then took some of the seed of the land^b and planted it in a fertile field; ^che planted and set it like a willow^c beside abundant waters.⁶ It grew and became a spreading vine of low stature; it became a vine, produced branches, and sent out boughs. [He had intended] that its twigs should turn to him, and that its roots should stay under him.

⁷But there was another great eagle with great wings and full plumage; and this vine now bent its roots in his direction and sent out its twigs toward him, that he might water it more than the bed where it was planted—⁸though it was planted in rich soil beside abundant water—so that it might grow branches and produce boughs and be a noble vine.

⁹Say: Thus said the Lord God: Will it thrive? Will he^d not tear out its roots and rip off its crown, so that its entire foliage withers? It shall wither, despite any strong arm or mighty army [that may come] to remove it from its roots.¹⁰ And suppose it is transplanted, will it thrive? When the east wind strikes it, it shall wither—wither upon the bed where it is growing.

¹¹Then the word of the LORD came to me: ¹²Say to the rebellious breed: Do you not know what these things mean? Say: The king of Babylon came to Jerusalem, and carried away its king and its officers and brought them back with him to Babylon.¹³ He took one of the seed royal and made a covenant with him and imposed an oath on him, and he carried away the nobles of the land—¹⁴so that it might be a humble kingdom and not exalt itself, but keep his covenant and so endure.

¹⁵But [that prince] rebelled against him and sent his envoys to Egypt to get horses and a large army. Will he succeed? Will he who does such things escape? Shall he break a covenant and escape? ¹⁶As I live—declares the Lord God—in the very homeland of the king who made him king, whose oath he flouted and whose covenant he broke—right there, in Babylon, he shall die.¹⁷ Pharaoh will not fight at his side with a great army and with numerous troops in the war, when mounds are thrown up and siege towers erected to destroy many lives.¹⁸ He flouted a pact and broke a covenant; he gave his promise and did all these things—he shall not escape.¹⁹ Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: As I live, I will pay him back for flouting My pact and breaking My covenant.²⁰ I will spread My net chin (Isa. 11.1); and the “land of trade” is Babylonia (Ezek. 16.29).

5–6: The second stage describes the planting of seed that becomes a vine, which is identified as Zedekiah. 7–8: The third stage describes the second great eagle, the Egyptian Pharaoh Psammetichus II, to whom Zedekiah turned for support in his revolt against Nebuchadnezzar (Jer. ch 27). 9–10: The rhetorical questions portray the destruction of the vine. The first eagle, Nebuchadnezzar, will destroy the vine (Zedekiah).

11–21: The allegory is explained; the realpolitik of the situation is detailed. 20: God identifies with the Babylonian king by referring to Zedekiah’s revolt against Babylonia as the trespass which he committed against Me. In 2 Chron. 36.13, Zedekiah is punished for not upholding his oath of vassal-dom to Babylonia. 22–24: God employs the allegory of the cedar to promise the restoration of the Davidic monarchy (Isa. 11.1–10; Jer. 23.5–6; 33.15). The cedar, the grandest of trees, will tower over all the other trees (nations), and all will see the power of God, who is responsible for the fall and rise of Judah. Radak maintains that these statements refer to Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel, the grandson of King Jehoiachin whom Haggai declared to be God’s “signet ring” or regent (Hag. 2.20–23; see 1 Chron. 3.17–19, but note the problems in the genealogy), and who commenced the building of the Second Temple (Ezra ch 3). 24: The ch is brought to a close by a modified, expanded version of formulae used throughout Ezekiel.

a Cf. 16.29. b Emendation yields “cedar.”

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d I.e., the first eagle.

over him and he shall be caught in My snare; I will carry him to Babylon and enter with him into judgment there for the trespass which he committed against Me.²¹ And all the fugitives^a of all his battalions shall fall by the sword, and those who remain shall scatter in every direction; then you will know that I the LORD have spoken.

²²Thus said the Lord GOD: Then I in turn will take and set [in the ground a slip] from the lofty top of the cedar; I will pluck a tender twig from the tip of its crown, and I will plant it on a tall, towering mountain.²³ I will plant it in Israel's lofty highlands, and it shall bring forth boughs and produce branches^b and grow into a noble cedar. Every bird of every feather shall take shelter under it, shelter in the shade of its boughs.²⁴ Then shall all the trees of the field know that it is I the LORD who have abased the lofty tree and exalted the lowly tree, who have dried up the green tree and made the withered tree bud. I the LORD have spoken, and I will act.

18 The word of the LORD came to me: ²What do you mean by quoting this proverb upon the soil of Israel, "Parents eat sour grapes and their children's teeth are blunted"?^c ³As I live—declares the Lord GOD—this proverb shall no longer be current among you in Israel. ⁴Consider, all lives are Mine; the life of the parent and the life of the child are both Mine. The person who sins, only he shall die.

⁵Thus, if a man is righteous and does what is just and right: ⁶If he has not eaten on the mountains^d or raised his eyes to the fetishes of the House of Israel; if he has not defiled another man's wife or approached a menstruous woman; ⁷if he has not wronged anyone; if he has returned the debtor's pledge to him and has taken nothing by robbery; if he has given bread to the hungry and clothed the naked; ⁸if he has not lent at advance interest or exacted accrued interest;^e if he has abstained from wrongdoing and executed true justice between man and man;

a Many mss. read "picked men." b Others "fruit." c Others "set on edge."
d I.e., in idolatry. Emendation yields "with the blood"; cf. 33.25; Lev. 17.10–11, 19.26.
e I.e., interest deducted in advance or interest added at the time of repayment; cf. Lev. 25.36.

18.1–19.14: Concerning the responsibility of the individual and the demise of the monarchy. The formula the word of the LORD came to me in 18.1 and its absence in 19.1 may indicate that chs 18 and 19 are to be read together. Ch 18 states the principle of individual moral responsibility. Ch 19 would therefore indicate that the House of David fell, not because of the sins of past kings (Josiah was righteous), but because of the sins of the kings (the sons and grandson of Josiah) during the current period leading up to the exile.

18.1–32: The prophet disputes the view that Israel's punishment is due to the sins of past generations. Instead, each individual is responsible for his or her own actions. Contrast the Decalogue (Exod. 20.5; Deut. 5.9), which indicates that God visits "the guilt of the parents upon the children, upon the third and upon the fourth generations of those who reject Me" (cf. Exod. 34.7). 2: The opposing view is quoted as a proverb, "Parents eat sour grapes and their children's teeth are blunted." Jeremiah takes up the same proverb to argue for individual moral responsibility in the future (see Jer. 31.29–30), but for Ezekiel this principle of individual responsibility is already currently operative. It allows the individuals in exile to free themselves from the guilt that is ultimately responsible for the destruction of the Temple and Jerusalem. 5–23: Ezekiel describes four cases. 5–9: The first is a righteous man, whose actions are described largely in accordance with provisions from the Priestly Holiness Collection (Lev. chs 17–26). 6: Eaten on the mountains, eat meat without disposing of blood properly at the Temple (Lev. ch 17; 19.26; Targum Jonathan stipulates that this means "did not worship pagan deities by eating sacrifices of the dead"); raised his eyes to the fetishes of the House of Israel, improper worship of God (Exod. 20.4–6; Lev. 19.4); defiled another man's wife, adultery (Lev. 20.10; 19.20–22); approached a menstruous woman, had relations with a woman during her menstrual period (Lev. 15.19–24). 7: Wronged anyone, economic oppression is unholy (Lev. 19.13); has returned the debtor's pledge to him and has taken nothing by robbery . . . has given bread to the hungry and clothed the naked, a person's only cloak could be taken in pledge for a loan, but it had to be returned if the debtor needed it (Exod. 22.25–27). 8: Has not lent at advance interest or exacted accrued interest (Exod. 22.25; Lev. 25.35–38); executed true justice be-

⁹ if he has followed My laws and kept My rules and acted honestly—he is righteous. Such a man shall live—declares the Lord GOD.

¹⁰ Suppose, now, that he has begotten a son who is a ruffian, a shedder of blood, who ^adoes any of these things,^a ¹¹ whereas he himself did none of these things. That is, [the son] has eaten on the mountains,^b has defiled another man's wife, ¹² has wronged the poor and the needy, has taken by robbery, has not returned a pledge, has raised his eyes to the fetishes, has committed abomination, ¹³ has lent at advance interest, or exacted accrued interest—shall he live? He shall not live! If he has committed any of these abominations, he shall die; he has forfeited his life.

¹⁴ Now suppose that he, in turn, has begotten a son who has seen all the sins that his father committed, but has taken heed and has not imitated them: ¹⁵ He has not eaten on the mountains^b or raised his eyes to the fetishes of the House of Israel; he has not defiled another man's wife; ¹⁶ he has not wronged anyone; he has not seized a pledge or taken anything by robbery; he has given his bread to the hungry and clothed the naked; ¹⁷ he has ^crefrained from oppressing the poor;^c he has not exacted advance or accrued interest; he has obeyed My rules and followed My laws—he shall not die for the iniquity of his father, but shall live. ¹⁸ To be sure, his father, because he practiced fraud, robbed his brother, and acted wickedly among his kin, did die for his iniquity; ¹⁹ and now you ask, “Why has not the son shared the burden of his father's guilt?” But the son has done what is right and just, and has carefully kept all My laws: he shall live!

²⁰ The person who sins, he alone shall die. A child shall not share the burden of a parent's guilt, nor shall a parent share the burden of a child's guilt; the righteousness of the righteous shall be accounted to him alone, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be accounted to him alone.

²¹ Moreover, if the wicked one repents of all the sins that he committed and keeps all My laws and does what is just and right, he shall live; he shall not die. ²² None of the transgressions he committed shall be remembered against him; because of the righteousness he has practiced, he shall live. ²³ Is it my desire that a wicked person shall die?—says the Lord GOD. It is rather that he shall turn back from his ways and live.

tween man and man, in a court of law (Lev. 19.15–19). 9: The righteous person shall live. Note that Ezekiel's examples begin with issues between God and human beings and then turn to issues between humans, much like the Decalogue (Exod. ch 20; Deut. ch 5). 10–13: If a righteous person's child sins, that child is responsible for his or her own sins and shall die. 14–18: Conversely, if a sinner's child behaves righteously, that child shall be spared. 19–20: Ezekiel's opponents contend in keeping with the statement in the Decalogue noted above that the son is guilty for the sins of the father, but Ezekiel explicitly polemicalizes against the Decalogue, stating that only the person who commits sins shall be punished for them. 21–24: A new principle enters the debate. Ezekiel contends that a wicked person who repents shall be saved, but a righteous person who sins shall be condemned. Even a person's own past actions do not determine his fate, if he changes his course of action. This concluding section of the ch in a sense takes the previous part metaphorically, understanding the father and children as the actions of single individuals at different times of their lives.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b I.e., in idolatry. Emendation yields “with the blood”; cf. 33.25; Lev. 17.10–11, 19.26.

c-c Lit. “turned his hand back from the poor.” Emendation yields “abstained from wrongdoing”; cf. v. 8.

²⁴So, too, if a righteous person turns away from his righteousness and does wrong, practicing the very abominations that the wicked person practiced, shall he live? None of the righteous deeds that he did shall be remembered; because of the treachery he has practiced and the sins he has committed—because of these, he shall die.

²⁵Yet you say, "The way of the Lord is unfair." Listen, O House of Israel: Is My way unfair? It is your ways that are unfair!²⁶ When a righteous person turns away from his righteousness and does wrong, he shall die for it; he shall die for the wrong he has done. ²⁷And if a wicked person turns back from the wickedness that he practiced and does what is just and right, such a person shall save his life. ²⁸Because he took heed and turned back from all the transgressions that he committed, he shall live; he shall not die.

²⁹Yet the House of Israel say, "The way of the Lord is unfair." Are My ways unfair, O House of Israel? It is your ways that are unfair! ³⁰Be assured, O House of Israel, I will judge each one of you according to his ways—declares the Lord God. Repent and turn back from your transgressions; let them not be a stumbling block of guilt for you. ³¹Cast away all the transgressions by which you have offended, and get yourselves a new heart and a new spirit, that you may not die, O House of Israel. ³²For it is not My desire that anyone shall die—declares the Lord God. Repent, therefore, and live!

19 And you are to intone a dirge over the princes of Israel,² and say:

What a lioness was your mother
Among the lions!

Crouching among the great beasts,
She reared her cubs.

³ She raised up one of her cubs,
He became a great beast;
He learned to hunt prey—
He devoured men.

⁴ Nations heeded [the call] against him;
He was caught in their snare.
They dragged him off with hooks
To the land of Egypt.

⁵ When she saw herself frustrated,
Her hope defeated,
She took another of her cubs
And set him up as a great beast.

⁶ He stalked among the lions,
He was a great beast;

25-29: Ezekiel restates the preceding principle about repentance, to answer those living in Babylonia who think that all is lost and who might object, thinking that they are now being punished for sins of past generations 30-32: A new heart and a new spirit (11.19; Jer. 31.31-34; 32.36-41): When considered in relation to the principle stated in the ten commandments above, Ezekiel's proposal is innovative. V. 32 has come to play a significant part in the high holiday liturgy, which under rabbinic influence is understood as a period of retrospection and personal repentance. 19.1-14: Ezekiel illustrates his principle of individual moral responsibility with two allegories, concerning the demise of the Davidic monarch, styled as dirges or songs of mourning.

1: And you are to intone a dirge over the princes of Israel: Heb poetry typically has three stressed syllables in each line. The lament, however, uses a three-stress line followed by a two-stress line. Poetry using the 3/2 stress pattern (called "qinah" or dirge meter) was recited at the death of an individual (e.g., 2 Sam. ch 1), but the prophets use it metaphorically to signal the demise of the people (Amos 5.1; Jer. 9.9). Ezekiel refers to the kings as "princes," thereby expressing the king's diminished status in relation to the priests (34.24; 45.7-8).

2-9: The lion symbolizes the tribe of Judah and the royal House of David (Gen. 49.8-12). 2: A lioness was your mother refers to Judah or all Israel. Note the identification of Israel or Jerusalem as the bride of God in Hos. chs 1-3; Zeph. 3.14-20; Jer. chs 2-3; Isa. chs 49-54; 66. 4: The first cub who is brought with hooks to the land of Egypt is King Jehoahaz son of Josiah, who was exiled to Egypt by Pharaoh Neco after Josiah's death (2 Kings 23.31-34; 2 Chron. 36.1-4).

He learned to hunt prey—
 He devoured men.
 7 He ^aravished their widows,^a Laid waste their cities;
 The land and all in it were appalled
 At the sound of his roaring.
 8 Nations from the countries roundabout
 Arrayed themselves against him.
 They spread their net over him,
 He was caught in their snare.
 9 With hooks he was put in a cage,
 They carried him off to the king of Babylon
 And confined him in a fortress,
 So that never again should his roar be heard
 On the hills of Israel.
 10 Your mother was like a vine ^bin your blood,^b Planted beside streams,
 With luxuriant boughs and branches
 Thanks to abundant waters.
 11 And she had a mighty rod^c
 Fit for a ruler's scepter.^c
 It towered highest ^damong the leafy trees,^d
 It was conspicuous by its height,
 By the abundance of its boughs.
 12 But plucked up in a fury,
 She was hurled to the ground.
 The east wind withered her branches,
 They broke apart and dried up;
 And her mighty rod was consumed by fire.
 13 Now she is planted in the desert,
 In ground that is arid and parched.
 14 Fire has issued from her twig-laden branch
 And has consumed her boughs,
 She is left without a mighty rod,
 A scepter to rule with.

This is a dirge, and it has become a [familiar] dirge.

20 In the seventh year, on the tenth day of the fifth month, certain elders of Israel came to inquire of the LORD, and sat down before me. ²And the word of the LORD came to me:

³O mortal, speak to the elders of Israel and say to them:

a-a Emendation yields "ravaged their castles."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "in a vineyard."

c Heb. plural.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

6: The second cub who learned to hunt prey . . . devoured men would be King Jehoiakim son of Josiah, whom Pharaoh Neco placed on the throne after exiling Jehoahaz. Jeremiah condemns Jehoiakim for his injustice (Jer. 21.11–22.19).

9: Carried him off to the king of Babylon and confined him in a fortress refers to King Jehoiachin son of Jehoiakim, who was exiled to Babylon following Jehoiakim's failed revolt and death (2 Kings 24.8–17; 2 Chron. 36.9–10).

10–14: This poem employs the imagery of the vine (see chs 15; 17; cf. Isa. 5.1–7). It is impossible to identify the poem's imagery with specific individuals or countries (see Isa. 10.5–11.16; 1.29–31; 6.13), though Radak identifies King Zedekiah son of Josiah, who is not referred to in the preceding vv., as the subject of the allegory. 12: The east wind withered her branches: The "Sharav" or "Hamsin," a dry desert wind like the Santa Ana winds of southern California, is frequently employed as a symbol of God's power (Exod. 14.21; 15.8–10; Isa. 11.15). 13: Now she is planted in the desert: Zedekiah was captured in the desert (wilderness) near Jericho, although he was exiled to Babylonia (2 Kings ch 25; Jer. ch 52).

20.1–23.49: Oracles concerning the punishment of Israel. The third major section of Ezekiel provides the basis for punishment against the entire land of Israel. This section begins with the introductory date formula, In the seventh year, on the tenth day of the fifth month, 10 Av, 591 BCE. Once again, the formula and the word of the LORD marks the various oracle reports that comprise this section, including 20.1–44; 21.1–5; 21.6–12; 21.13–22; 21.23–37; 22.1–16; 22.17–22; 22.23–31; 23.1–49. The sequence begins with an examination of Israel's past history in the wilderness, which provides a basis for returning the nation to the wilderness so that it might be purged. It continues with prophecies against the Negev desert, oracles concerning God's sword, and the

Thus said the Lord God: Have you come to inquire of Me? As I live, I will not respond to your inquiry—declares the Lord God.

^{4a}Arraign, arraign them, O mortal!^a ⁵Declare to them the abhorrent deeds of their fathers. ⁵Say to them: Thus said the Lord God:

On the day that I chose Israel, I ^bgave My oath^b to the stock of the House of Jacob; when I made Myself known to them in the land of Egypt, I gave my oath to them. When I said, “I the LORD am your God,” ⁶that same day I swore to them to take them out of the land of Egypt into a land flowing with milk and honey, a land which I had sought out for them, the fairest of all lands.

⁷I also said to them: Cast away, every one of you, the detestable things ^cthat you are drawn to,^c and do not defile yourselves with the fetishes of Egypt—I the LORD am your God. ⁸But they defied Me and refused to listen to Me. They did not cast away the detestable things they were drawn to, nor did they give up the fetishes of Egypt. Then I resolved to pour out My fury upon them, to vent all My anger upon them there, in the land of Egypt. ⁹But I acted for the sake of My name, that it might not be profaned in the sight of the nations among whom they were. For it was before their eyes that I had made Myself known to Israel^d to bring them out of the land of Egypt.

¹⁰I brought them out of the land of Egypt and I led them into the wilderness. ¹¹I gave them My laws and taught them My rules, by the pursuit of which a man shall live. ¹²Moreover, I gave them My sabbaths to serve as a sign between Me and them, that they might know that it is I the LORD who sanctify them. ¹³But the House of Israel rebelled against Me in the wilderness; they did not follow My laws and they rejected My rules—by the pursuit of which a man shall live—and they grossly desecrated My sabbaths. Then I thought to pour out My fury upon them in the wilderness and to make an end of them; ¹⁴but I acted for the sake of My name, that it might not be profaned in the sight of the nations before whose eyes I had terms of Israel's rebellion, God's punishment, and divine compassion. Ezek. 20.12–20 serves as the haftarah for the parashah of Kedoshim (Lev. 19.1–20.27) in the Sephardi tradition. 1–2: The seventh year . . . tenth day . . . fifth month, 10 Av, 591 BCE. According to Jer. 52.12, the Babylonians burned the Temple, the king's palace, and all the houses of Jerusalem (cf. 2 Kings 25.8, which states that was the seventh day), so that this oracle was delivered four years prior to the day when the Temple would be destroyed. 3–4: Inquire of the LORD is a technical term for seeking a divine oracle. God refuses to answer the elders, and instead calls upon Ezekiel to judge them. Although God here states, I will not respond to your inquiry, God later states, I will respond to the House of Israel (36.37). 5–32: God rehearses the history of Israel's rebellion during the exodus and wilderness periods (see Ps. 106). 5–6: I chose Israel, God uses royal language (see 2 Sam. 6.21; 1 Kings 8.16) to prepare the reader for God's role as king (v. 33). I the LORD am your God . . . I swore to them to take them out of the land of Egypt, see also Exod. 20.2. 7–8: Apostasy in Egypt; actually, immediately during and following the exodus (Exod. 14.10–12; Josh. 24.14; Ps. 106.7). 9: I acted for the sake of My name, a key issue in Ezekiel (20.14, 22; 36.22; cf. Exod. 15.3; 32.12). 10–26: Apostasy in the wilderness. See Exod. chs 32–34; Num. chs 14; 25. 11–12: The Sabbath is the foundational sign of the covenant (Exod. 20.8–11; 31.12–17). Many scholars believe that the Sabbath became particularly significant in the exile, as holy time replaced the vacuum of holy space (the Temple); this might explain why the Sabbath plays such a significant role here. As in Exod. 31.13, 17 (in the Priestly tradition), it is viewed as a sign, namely a symbol acknowledging God as creator, following the Priestly creation story of Gen 1.1–2.4a. 13–17: The rebellion of the first generation is the golden calf incident and the reaction to the report of the spies in a-a Lit. “Will you arraign them, will you arraign, O mortal?”

b-b Lit. “raised My hand.” c-c Lit. “of his eyes.” d Lit. “them.”

allegory of Oholah and Oholibah which outlines the sins of Samaria and Jerusalem. The date formula in 24.1 marks the beginning of the fourth major section of the book.

20.1–44: Ezekiel's assessment of Israel's past and future. Ezekiel's overview of Israel's history in the wilderness calls for a new exodus, in which Israel will return to the wilderness so that it might be purged and restored to the land. This historical précis is very selective, and like that in Ps. 106 and Neh. ch 9, presents the past in led them out. ¹⁵However, I swore^a to them in the wilderness that I would not bring them into the land flowing with milk and honey, the fairest of all lands, which I had assigned [to them], ¹⁶for they had rejected My rules, disobeyed My laws, and desecrated My sabbaths; their hearts followed after their fetishes. ¹⁷But I had pity on them and did not destroy them; I did not make an end of them in the wilderness.

¹⁸I warned their children in the wilderness: Do not follow the practices of your fathers, do not keep their ways, and do not defile yourselves with their fetishes. ¹⁹I the LORD am your God: Follow My laws and be careful to observe My rules. ²⁰And hallow My sabbaths, that they may be a sign between Me and you, that you may know that I the LORD am your God.

²¹But the children rebelled against Me: they did not follow My laws and did not faithfully observe My rules, by the pursuit of which man shall live; they profaned My sabbaths. Then I resolved to pour out My fury upon them, to vent all My anger upon them, in the wilderness. ²²But I held back My hand and acted for the sake of My name, that it might not be profaned in the sight of the nations before whose eyes I had led them out. ²³However, I swore^a to them in the wilderness that I would scatter them among the nations and disperse them through the lands, ²⁴because they did not obey My rules, but rejected My laws, profaned My sabbaths, and looked with longing to the fetishes of their fathers. ²⁵Moreover, I gave them laws that were not good and rules by which they could not live: ²⁶When they set aside every first issue of the womb, I defiled them by their very gifts^b—that I might render them desolate;^c that they might know that I am the LORD.

²⁷Now, O mortal, speak to the House of Israel and say to them: Thus said the Lord GOD: By this too your fathers affronted Me and committed trespass against Me: ²⁸When I brought them to the land that I had sworn^a to give them, and they saw any high hill or any leafy tree, they slaughtered their sacrifices there and presented their offensive offerings there; there they produced their pleasing odors and poured out their libations. ²⁹Then I said to them, “What is this shrine which you visit?” (Therefore such [a shrine] is called bamah^d to this day.)

³⁰Now say to the House of Israel: Thus said the Lord GOD: If you defile yourselves as your fathers did and go astray after their detestable things, ³¹and if to this very which Moses persuaded God not to destroy the entire people (Exod. 33.12–33; Num. 14.13–25). 18–26: Following Israel’s rebellion at the report of the spies, God condemned the people to death in the wilderness (Num. 14.26–38). The rebellion of the second generation refers to acts of apostasy following the incident of the spies (e.g., Meribah, Num. ch 20; Baal Peor, Num. ch 25). Since the people disobeyed God’s good laws, He gave them bad laws instead, exemplified by child sacrifice. Whether this is the way some Israelites interpreted Exod. 22.28; 34.19, and whether at an early point in Israelite religion sacrifice of the first-born was regularly practiced, is unclear. It seems, however, that some believed that God approved of child sacrifice (Deut. 12.29; Jer. 7.31; 19.5; 32.25). The notion that God misled the people so that He could then condemn them for it is found also in 14.9. 27–31: Apostasy in the land of Israel.

a Lit. “raised My hand.” b See v. 31.

c Emendation yields “guilty.” d As if from ba “visit” and mah “what.”

day you defile yourselves in the presentation of your gifts by making your children pass through the fire to all your fetishes, shall I respond to your inquiry, O House of Israel? As I live—declares the Lord GOD—I will not respond to you.³² And what you have in mind shall never come to pass—when you say, “We will be like the nations, like the families of the lands, worshiping wood and stone.”³³ As I live—declares the Lord GOD—I will reign over you with a strong hand, and with an outstretched arm, and with overflowing fury.³⁴ With a strong hand and an outstretched arm and overflowing fury I will bring you out from the peoples and gather you from the lands where you are scattered,³⁵ and I will bring you into the wilderness of the peoples; and there I will enter into judgment with you face to face.³⁶ As I entered into judgment with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I enter into judgment with you—declares the Lord GOD.³⁷ I will make you pass under the shepherd’s staff,^a and I will bring you into the bond^b of the covenant.³⁸ I will remove from you those who rebel and transgress against Me; I will take them out of the countries where they sojourn, but they shall not enter the land of Israel. Then you shall know that I am the LORD.

³⁹ As for you, O House of Israel, thus said the Lord GOD: Go, every one of you, and worship his fetishes and continue,^b if you will not obey Me; but do not profane My holy name any more with your idolatrous gifts.⁴⁰ For only on My holy mountain, on the lofty mount of Israel—declares the Lord GOD—there, in the land, the entire House of Israel, all of it, must worship Me. There I will accept them, and there I will take note of your contributions and the choicest offerings of all your sacred things.⁴¹ When I bring you out from the peoples and gather you from the lands in which you are scattered, I will accept you as a pleasing odor; and I will be sanctified through you in the sight of the nations.⁴² Then, when I have brought you to the land of Israel, to the country that I swore^c to give to your fathers, you shall know that I am the LORD.⁴³ There you will recall your ways and all the acts by which you defiled yourselves; and you will loathe yourselves for all the evils that you committed.⁴⁴ Then, O House of Israel, you shall know that I am the LORD, when I deal with you for My name’s sake—not in accordance with your evil ways and corrupt acts—declares the Lord GOD.

32: We will be like the nations, see Deut. 17.14; 1 Sam. 8.4–5 concerning the institution of kingship.

33–44: God returns Israel to the wilderness to purge and to restore the nation. A strong hand, and . . . an outstretched arm, typically used of God liberating Israel from Egypt (e.g., Deut. 4.34), are here reversed, and used of God punishing Israel.

33: I will reign over you, one of God’s fundamental claims to kingship. 35: Wilderness of the peoples associates Israel’s exile among the nations with the wilderness tradition. 37: Pass under the shepherd’s staff, be counted like the sheep to determine the offering due to God (see Lev. 27.32). God uses this metaphor to portray the purge of Israel that will take place when the Temple is destroyed. A similar image is developed more extensively in ch 34. 40–44: My holy mountain, the Jerusalem Temple where the people will present their offerings to God. As in the conclusion to ch 23, Ezekiel emphasizes that Israel’s restoration is for God’s sake only, and that Israel will fully understand its shame in the future.

a I.e., to be counted; see Lev. 27.32.

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Lit. “raised My hand.”

21 The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, set your face toward Teman,^a and proclaim to Darom,^a and prophesy against the brushland of the Negeb.^a ³Say to the brushland of the Negeb: Hear the word of the LORD. Thus said the Lord God: I am going to kindle a fire in you, which shall devour every tree of yours, both green and withered. Its leaping flame shall not go out, and every face from south to north shall be scorched by it. ⁴Then all flesh shall recognize that I the LORD have kindled it; it shall not go out. ⁵And I said, "Ah, Lord God! They say of me: He is just a riddlemonger."

⁶Then the word of the LORD came to me: ⁷O mortal, set your face toward Jerusalem and proclaim against her sanctuaries and prophesy against the land of Israel. ⁸Say to the land of Israel: Thus said the LORD: I am going to deal with you! I will draw My sword from its sheath, and I will wipe out from you both the righteous and the wicked. ⁹In order to wipe out from you both the righteous and the wicked, My sword shall assuredly be unsheathed against all flesh from south to north; ¹⁰and all flesh shall know that I the LORD have drawn My sword from its sheath, not to be sheathed again.

¹¹And you, O mortal, sigh; with tottering limbs and bitter grief, sigh before their eyes. ¹²And when they ask you, "Why do you sigh?" answer, "Because of the tidings that have come." Every heart shall sink and all hands hang nerveless; every spirit shall grow faint and all knees turn to water because of the tidings that have come. It is approaching, it shall come to pass—declares the Lord God.

¹³The word of the LORD came to me: ¹⁴O mortal, prophesy and say: Thus said the Lord God: A sword! A sword has been whetted and polished. ¹⁵It has been whetted to wreak slaughter; ^b[therefore] it has been ground to a brilliant polish. ^b ^cHow can we rejoice? My son, it scorns^c the rod and every stick. ¹⁶It has been given to be polished and then grasped in the hand; for this has the sword been whetted, for this polished—to be put into the hand of a slayer. ¹⁷Cry and wail, O mortal, for this shall befall My people, this shall befall all the chieftains of Israel: they shall be cast before the sword together with My people; oh, strike the thigh [in grief]. ¹⁸^cConsider: How shall it fail to happen, seeing that it even scorns the rod?^c—says the Lord God.

¹⁹Further, O mortal, prophesy, striking hand against

21.1–5: A prophecy against the Negeb. The Negeb (Negev) is the desert region of southern Judah; here it is an allusion to Jerusalem. 2: Teman designates the location of the Edomites (25.13), who are condemned for assisting Babylonians in Judah's destruction (25.12–14). Both Teman and Darom refer to the south. The repetition is for emphasis. 5: Riddlemonger, Heb "memashal meshalim," "an allegorizer of allegories" (echoing 17.2).

21.6–12: The first oracle concerning God's sword. The three oracles concerning God's sword in 21.6–12; 21.13–22; and 21.23–27 may have accompanied a symbolic action involving a sword (see 5.1–4; 14.21). Ezekiel speaks toward the Jerusalem sanctuary as the holy center of the nation. 8: God's threat to wipe out from you both the righteous and the wicked contradicts Ezekiel's concept of individual moral responsibility (ch 18), and instead conforms to the portrayal of slaughter in ch 9.

21.13–22: The second oracle concerning the sword. 15: My son, it scorns the rod and every stick: A rod might normally be used for discipline (Prov. 10.13; 22.15), but now a deadly instrument is required. 19: The third strike of the sword is enigmatic, although the commentators understand it as a reference to Zedekiah's disaster, which was far greater than Jehoiakim's or Jehoiachin's.

a Teman, Darom, Negeb are three terms for "the south." The allusion is to Jerusalem (v. 7), which was always approached from Babylon by way of the north.

b-b Lit. "it has been polished in order that it may have lightning."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

hand. Let the sword strike a second time and yet a third time; it is a sword for massacre, a sword for great carnage, that presses^a upon them. ²⁰Thus hearts shall lose courage and many shall fall. At all their gates I have appointed slaughter^a by the sword. Ah! it is made to flash brilliantly, it is honed^a for slaughter. ²¹Be united,^b go to the right, turn left; whither are you bound? ²²I, too, will strike hand against hand and will satisfy My fury upon you; I the LORD have spoken.

²³The word of the LORD came to me: ²⁴And you, O mortal, choose two roads on which the sword of the king of Babylon may advance, both issuing from the same country; and select a spot, select it where roads branch off to [two] cities. ²⁵Choose a way for the sword to advance on Rabbah of the Ammonites or on fortified Jerusalem in Judah. ²⁶For the king of Babylon has stood at the fork of the road, where two roads branch off, to perform divination: He has shaken arrows, consulted teraphim, and inspected the liver.^c ²⁷In his right hand came up the omen against Jerusalem—to set battering rams, to proclaim murder, to raise battle shouts, to set battering rams against the gates, to cast up mounds, to erect towers.

²⁸^dIn their eyes, the oaths they had sworn to them were like empty divination; but this shall serve to recall their guilt, for which they shall be taken to task. ²⁹Assuredly, thus said the Lord GOD: For causing your guilt to be recalled, your transgressions to be uncovered, and your sins to be revealed—all your misdeeds—because you have brought yourselves to [My] mind, you shall be taken to task.

³⁰And to you, O dishonored wicked prince of Israel, whose day has come—the time set for your punishment—³¹thus said the Lord GOD: Remove the turban and lift off the crown! This shall not remain as it is; exalt the low and abase the high. ³²Ruin, an utter ruin I will make it. ^eIt shall be no more^e until he comes to whom it rightfully belongs; and I will give it to him.

³³Further, O mortal, prophesy and say: Thus said the Lord GOD concerning the Ammonites and their blasphemies: Proclaim: O sword! O sword unsheathed for slaughter, polished to the utmost, to a flashing brilliance! ³⁴Because they have prophesied falsely about you and have 21.23–37: The third oracle concerning the sword. The sword of Babylonia. 23–28: When the Babylonian king reaches a fork in the road, he employs divination to decide which route to take. His alternatives are Jerusalem and Rabbah (the modern city of Amman, Jordan), the capital of Ammon. Ammon is one of Judah's allies against Babylonia (Jer. 27.3). Jerusalem is a former ally of Babylonia (2 Kings 20.12–19; Isa. ch 39), but Judah's revolt justifies the protracted siege. 26: He has shaken arrows, consulted teraphim, and inspected the liver, reflecting Ezekiel's familiarity with common techniques of divination. Teraphim, family gods (Gen. 31.19; Judg. 17.5; 18.17, 20). 30: The dishonored, wicked prince of Israel, Zedekiah. 33–37: The sword will be wielded against Ammon, but it will be destroyed in Babylonia where it was created.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; Targum reads "Be whetted." Cf. xv. 14–16.

c I.e., of a sacrificed animal.

d The inhabitants of Jerusalem disregarded their oaths to the Babylonians; cf. 17.13 ff.

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

divined deceitfully concerning you, you shall be wielded over the necks of the dishonored wicked ones, for their day has come, the time ^aset for their punishment.^a ^{35b}Return it to its sheath!^b In the place where you were created, in the land of your origin, I will judge you. ³⁶I will pour out My indignation upon you, I will blow upon you with the fire of My wrath; and I will deliver you into the hands of barbarians, craftsmen of destruction. ³⁷You shall be fuel for the fire, your blood shall sink into the earth, you shall not be remembered, for I the LORD have spoken.

22 The word of the LORD came to me: ²Further, O mortal, ^carraign, arraign^c the city of bloodshed; declare to her all her abhorrent deeds! ³Say: Thus said the Lord GOD: O city in whose midst blood is shed, so that your hour is approaching; within which fetishes are made, so that you have become unclean! ⁴You stand guilty of the blood you have shed, defiled by the fetishes you have made. You have brought on your day; ^dyou have reached your year.^d Therefore I will make you the mockery of the nations and the scorn of all the lands. ⁵Both the near and the far shall scorn you, O besmirched of name, O laden with iniquity!

⁶Every one of the princes of Israel in your midst used his strength for the shedding of blood. ⁷Fathers and mothers have been humiliated within you; strangers have been cheated in your midst; orphans and widows have been wronged within you. ⁸You have despised My holy things and profaned My sabbaths.

⁹Base^e men in your midst were intent on shedding blood; in you they have eaten ^fupon the mountains;^f and they have practiced depravity in your midst. ¹⁰In you they have uncovered their fathers' nakedness;^g in you they have ravished women during their impurity. ¹¹They have committed abhorrent acts with other men's wives; in their depravity they have defiled their own daughters-in-law; in you they have ravished their own sisters, daughters of their fathers. ¹²They have taken bribes within you to shed blood. You have taken advance and accrued interest;^h you have defrauded your countrymen to your profit. You have forgotten Me—declares the Lord GOD.

22.1–16: Oracle concerning bloodshed in Jerusalem. Ezek. 22.1–19 in the Ashkenazi tradition or Ezek. 22.1–16 in the Sephardi tradition serve as the haftarah portion for the parashah of 'Aḥarei Mot (Lev. 16.1–18.30), which focuses on the atonement of guilt at Yom Kippur, the proper treatment of blood, and incestuous sexual relations. Ezek. 22.1–16 draws heavily on Isa. 1.2–31. Ezekiel's preoccupation with blood derives from his role as a priest, which requires the proper treatment of blood (Lev. ch 17). Rabbinic interpretation relates this oracle to Manasseh's shedding of innocent blood in Jerusalem (2 Kings 21.6). As in ch 18, the catalogue of crimes listed here derives especially from the Holiness Collection in Lev. chs 17–26. 2–6: Bloodshed (Lev. 19.26; Gen. 9.1–7). 7: Contempt for parents (Lev. 20.9; Exod. 21.17); extortion of the aliens, orphans, and widows (Lev. 19.33–34; Exod. 22.21–22; Deut. 14.29). 8: Despised . . . holy things . . . sabbaths (Lev. 19.30). 9: Base men employs a term commonly used for slander (Lev. 19.16). 10: Uncovered their father's nakedness (Lev. 18.8; 20.11; Radak relates this to the Talmud's charge based on 2 Chron. 33.23 that King Ammon had relations with his mother [b. Sanh. 103b]); relations with menstruating women (Lev. 18.19). 11: Incest (Lev. chs 18; 20). 12: Bribery (Lev. 19.15; Deut. 16.19); interest on loans (Lev. 25.36–37); extortion of a neighbor (Lev. 19.15–18, 35–36).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Emendation yields "Return to your scabbard!" In this and the following verses, the prophet describes the future punishment of Babylon, still symbolized by the sword.

c-c Lit. "will you arraign, arraign." d-d Some Babylonian mss. and ancient versions read "the time of your years has come." e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

f-f I.e., in idolatry. Emendation yields "with the blood"; cf. Lev. 19.26.

g I.e., have cohabited with a former wife of the father; cf. Lev. 18.7–8. h Cf. note at 18.8.

¹³Lo, I will strike My hands over the ill-gotten gains that you have amassed, and over the bloodshed that has been committed in your midst. ¹⁴Will your courage endure, will your hands remain firm in the days when I deal with you? I the LORD have spoken and I will act. ¹⁵I will scatter you among the nations and disperse you through the lands; I will consume the uncleanness out of you. ¹⁶You shall be dishonored in the sight of nations, and you shall know that I am the LORD.

¹⁷The word of the LORD came to me: ¹⁸O mortal, the House of Israel has become dross to Me; they are all copper, tin, iron, and lead. ^aBut in a crucible, the dross shall turn into silver. ^a ¹⁹Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: Because you have all become dross, I will gather you into Jerusalem. ²⁰As silver, copper, iron, lead, and tin are gathered into a crucible to blow the fire upon them, so as to melt them, so will I gather you in My fierce anger and cast you [into the fire] and melt you. ²¹I will gather you and I will blow upon you the fire of My fury, and you shall be melted in it. ²²As silver is melted in a crucible, so shall you be melted in it. And you shall know that I the LORD have poured out My fury upon you.

²³The word of the LORD came to me: ²⁴O mortal, say to her: You are an uncleansed land, ^anot to be washed with rain ^a on the day of indignation. ^{25^b}Her gang of prophets^b are like roaring lions in her midst, rending prey. They devour human beings; they seize treasure and wealth; they have widowed many women in her midst. ²⁶Her priests have violated My Teaching; they have profaned what is sacred to Me, they have not distinguished between the sacred and the profane, they have not taught the difference between the unclean and the clean, and they have closed their eyes to My sabbaths. I am profaned in their midst. ²⁷Her officials are like wolves rending prey in her midst; they shed blood and destroy lives to win ill-gotten gain. ²⁸Her prophets, too, daub the wall for them with plaster:^c They prophesy falsely and divine deceitfully for them; they say, "Thus said the Lord God," when the LORD has not spoken. ²⁹And the people of the land have practiced fraud and committed robbery; they have wronged the poor and needy, have defrauded the stranger without redress. ³⁰And I sought a man among them to repair the wall or to stand in the breach before Me in behalf of this

22.17–22: Oracle concerning the smelting of Jerusalem. Again, this oracle draws heavily upon Isa. 1.2–31, esp. Isa. 1.21–26, which employs the metaphor of metal smelting to portray the purification of Jerusalem. Just as precious metals are smelted to remove dross, Israel will be purified in fire to remove its sins and impurities.

22.23–31: Oracle condemning the leadership and people of Jerusalem. Again, the oracle draws upon the imagery of Isa. 1.2–31, which focuses on the wrongdoing of Jerusalem's leaders and the people at large. The emphasis is on the ritual impurity created through these actions; as in the Holiness Collection, Ezekiel believes that both cultic infractions and ethical violations create impurity. 25–29: The prophet names all classes of people in Jerusalem, including her . . . prophets, her priests, her officials, and the people of the land (a technical term for the landed gentry).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Septuagint reads "Whose chieftains." c Cf. 13.10 ff.

land, that I might not destroy it; but I found none. ³¹I have therefore poured out My indignation upon them; I will consume them with the fire of My fury. I will repay them for their conduct—declares the Lord God.

23 The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, once there were two women, daughters of one mother. ³They played the whore in Egypt; they played the whore while still young. There their breasts were squeezed, and there their virgin nipples were handled. ⁴Their names were: the elder one, Oholah;^a and her sister, Oholibah.^b They became Mine, and they bore sons and daughters. As for their names, Oholah is Samaria, and Oholibah is Jerusalem.

⁵Oholah whored while she was Mine, and she lusted after her lovers, after the Assyrians, warriors^c ⁶clothed in blue, governors and prefects, horsemen mounted on steeds—all of them handsome young fellows. ⁷She bestowed her favors upon them—upon all the pick of the Assyrians—and defiled herself with all their fetishes after which she lusted. ⁸She did not give up the whoring she had begun with the Egyptians; for they had lain with her in her youth, and they had handled her virgin nipples and had poured out their lust upon her. ⁹Therefore I delivered her into the hands of her lovers, into the hands of the Assyrians after whom she lusted. ¹⁰They exposed her nakedness; they seized her sons and daughters, and she herself was put to the sword. And because of the punishment inflicted upon her, she became a byword among women.

¹¹Her sister Oholibah saw this; yet her lusting was more depraved than her sister's, and her whoring more debased. ¹²She lusted after the Assyrians, governors and prefects, warriors^c gorgeously clad, horsemen mounted on steeds—all of them handsome young fellows. ¹³And I saw how she had defiled herself. Both of them followed the same course, ¹⁴but she carried her harlotries further. For she saw men sculptured upon the walls, figures of Chaldeans drawn in vermilion, ¹⁵girded with belts round their waists, and with flowing turbans on their heads, all of them looking like officers—a picture of Babylonians whose native land was Chaldea. ¹⁶At the very sight of them she lusted after them, and she sent messengers for them to Chaldea. ¹⁷So the Babylonians came to her for lovemaking and defiled her with their whoring; and she defiled herself with them until she turned from them in disgust. ¹⁸She flaunted her harlotries and exposed her

23.1–49: Oholah and Oholibah.

Presupposing the portrayal of Israel as God's wife (cf. Hos. chs 1–3; Jer. chs 2–3), Ezekiel employs the metaphor of harlotry to describe Samaria and Jerusalem. Here as elsewhere, adultery is equated with idolatry. The punishment for adultery is death, and so the adulterous cities are destroyed. This ch has much in common with ch 16. 3: In contrast to modern sensibilities, Israel is being blamed for its own abuse. 4: Oholah, “her tent,” refers to Samaria. The name Oholah alludes to the presence of God, who dwells in a tent (according to the exodus and wilderness traditions; see 2 Sam. 7.6). Oholibah, “my tent is in her,” refers to Jerusalem and the presence of the Temple (Rashi, Radak).

5–10: Oholah's or Samaria's relations with the officers of Assyria presuppose its earlier alliance with Assyria under the Jehu dynasty, specifically, Menahem (2 Kings 15.17–22), and Hoshea (2 Kings 17.1–6). Ezekiel portrays this alliance as harlotry, and argues that it led to Israel's destruction (in 722 BCE). The reference to the Assyrians, warriors, deliberately employs the ambiguous Heb term “kerovim,” lit. “those who draw near,” for war, sacrifice, sex, etc. 11–21: Ezekiel charges that Oholibah, Jerusalem, was even worse than her sister in pursuing both the Assyrians and the Chaldeans or Babylonians (see Jer. 3.6–10, 11). King Ahaz of Judah requested Assyrian assistance against Israel in the Syro-Ephraimitic War (2 Kings ch 16), and Hezekiah later made an alliance with Babylonia against Assyria (2 Kings 20.11–19; Isa. ch 39). The reference to relations with Egypt may recall Solomon's early alliance with Egypt (1 Kings 3.1) and Jehoikim's support from Pharaoh Neco before he turned to Babylonia (2 Kings 23.31–24.7).

a i.e., “Tent.” b i.e., “My Tent Is in Her.” c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

nakedness, and I turned from her in disgust, as I had turned disgusted from her sister. ¹⁹But she whored still more, remembering how in her youth she had played the whore in the land of Egypt; ²⁰she lusted for concubinage with them, whose members were like those of asses and whose organs^a were like those of stallions. ²¹Thus you reverted to the wantonness of your youth, remembering^b your youthful breasts, when the men of Egypt handled your nipples.

²²Assuredly, Oholibah, thus said the Lord GOD: I am going to rouse against you the lovers from whom you turned in disgust, and I will bring them upon you from all around—²³the Babylonians and all the Chaldeans, [the people of] Pekod, Shoa, and Koa, and all the Assyrians with them, all of them handsome young fellows, governors and prefects, officers and warriors,^c all of them riding on horseback. ²⁴They shall attack you with fleets^a of wheeled chariots and a host of troops; they shall set themselves against you on all sides with bucklers, shields, and helmets. And I will entrust your punishment to them, and they shall inflict their punishments on you. ²⁵I will direct My passion against you, and they shall deal with you in fury: they shall cut off your nose and ears. The last of you shall fall by the sword; they^c shall take away your sons and daughters, and your remnant shall be devoured by fire. ²⁶They shall strip you of your clothing and take away your dazzling jewels. ²⁷I will put an end to your wantonness and to your whoring in the land of Egypt, and you shall not long for them or remember Egypt any more.

²⁸For thus said the Lord GOD: I am going to deliver you into the hands of those you hate, into the hands of those from whom you turned in disgust. ²⁹They shall treat you with hate, and they shall take away all you have toiled for, and leave you naked and bare; your naked whoredom, wantonness, and harlotry will be exposed. ³⁰These things shall be done to you for your harlotries with the nations, for defiling yourself with their fetishes. ³¹You walked in your sister's path; therefore I will put her cup into your hand.

³²Thus said the Lord GOD:

You shall drink of your sister's cup,
So deep and wide;
It shall cause derision and scorn,
It holds so much.

22-35: As in ch 16, Ezekiel declares that Oholibah's "lovers," the Babylonians and their allies, will strip and conquer Jerusalem. 23: Pekod (see Jer. 50.21), Shoa, and Koa, Aramean tribes allied with Babylonia. 32: Drinking from the sister's cup, a common motif in Judean prophecy (Isa. 51.17, 22; Jer. 25.15-29; 51.7; Hab. 2.16). As in other contexts, the cup contains strong wine and ultimately poison.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^b Lit. "for the sake of."
^c I.e., the former lovers, rv. 22 ff.

33 You shall be filled with drunkenness and woe.
The cup of desolation and horror,
The cup of your sister Samaria—
34 You shall drink it and drain it, ^aAnd gnaw its shards;^a
And you shall tear your breasts.

For I have spoken—declares the Lord God.

³⁵ Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: Because you have forgotten Me and cast Me behind your back, you in turn must suffer for your wanton whoring.

³⁶ Then the LORD said to me: O mortal, arraign^b Oholah and Oholibah, and charge them with their abominations. ³⁷ For they have committed adultery, and blood is on their hands; truly they have committed adultery with their fetishes, and have even offered to them as food the children they bore to Me. ³⁸ At the same time they also did this to Me: they defiled My Sanctuary and profaned My sabbaths. ³⁹ On the very day that they slaughtered their children to their fetishes, they entered My Sanctuary to desecrate it. That is what they did in My House.

⁴⁰ Moreover, they sent for men to come from afar, [men] to whom a messenger was sent; and they came. For them, [Oholibah,] you bathed, painted your eyes, and donned your finery; ⁴¹ and you sat on a grand couch with a set table in front of it—and it was My incense and My oil you laid upon it. ⁴² And the noise of a carefree multitude was there, ^aof numerous men brought drunk from the desert;^a and they put bracelets on their arms and splendid crowns upon their heads. ⁴³ Then I said, ^a“To destruction with adultery! Look, they are still going on with those same fornications of hers.”^a ⁴⁴ And they would go to her as one goes to a prostitute; that is how they went to Oholah and Oholibah, wanton women. ⁴⁵ But righteous men shall punish them with the punishments for adultery and for bloodshed, for they are adulteresses and have blood on their hands.

⁴⁶ For thus said the Lord God: Summon an assembly against them, and make them an object of horror and plunder. ⁴⁷ Let the assembly pelt them with stones and cut them down with their swords; let them kill their sons and daughters, and burn down their homes. ⁴⁸ I will put an end to wantonness in the land; and all the women shall take warning not to imitate your wantonness. ⁴⁹ They shall punish you for your wantonness, and you shall suffer the penalty for your sinful idolatry. And you shall know that I am the Lord God.

38: They defiled My Sanctuary and profaned My sabbaths, see ch 8.

39: They slaughtered their children, see 20.26. 40: Moreover, they sent for men to come from afar, a reference to Judean attempts to find allies (cf. Jer. 27.3). 46-47: The sisters' punishment reflects that of an adulterous woman (Lev. 20.10) or a person who profanes God (Lev. 20.2-5). 48: The metaphorical nature of the image is forgotten, and is here literalized—real women are to learn proper sexual behavior from this metaphor. 49: The prophecy is brought to a close, like so many others, with the stereotypical And you shall know that I am the Lord God.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Lit. “will you arraign”; cf. 22.2.

24 In the ninth year, on the tenth day of the tenth month, the word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, record this date, this exact day; for this very day the king of Babylon has laid siege to Jerusalem. ³Further, speak in an allegory to the rebellious breed and say to them: Thus said the Lord GOD:

Put the caldron [on the fire], put it on,
And then pour water into it.

4 Collect in it the pieces [of meat].
Every choice piece, thigh and shoulder;
Fill it with the best cuts^a—

5 Take the best of the flock.
Also pile the cuts^b under it;
Get it boiling briskly,
And cook the cuts in it.

6 Assuredly, thus said the Lord GOD:
Woe to the city of blood—
A caldron whose scum^c is in it,
Whose scum has not been cleaned out!
Empty it piece by piece;
^dNo lot has fallen upon it.^d

7 For the blood she shed is still in her;
She set it upon a bare rock;
She did not pour it out on the ground
To cover it with earth.

8 She^e set her blood upon the bare rock,
So that it was not covered,
So that it may stir up [My] fury
To take vengeance.

9 Assuredly, thus said the Lord GOD:
Woe to the city of blood!
I in turn will make a great blaze.

10 Pile on the logs,
Kindle the fire,

^a Lit. "limbs." ^b Emendation yields "wood"; cf. v. 10.

^c Or "rust." ^{d-d} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^e Heb. "I."

24.1–25.17: Symbolic actions concerning the destruction of Jerusalem and condemnation of neighboring nations. The introductory date formula marks Ezek. 24.1–25.17 as the fourth major section of the book. The ninth year, on the tenth day of the tenth month would be 10 Tvet, 589–588 BCE, which is identified as the day that the Babylonian king Nebuchadnezzar laid siege to Jerusalem (see also 2 Kings 25.1; Jer. 52.4; cf. Zech. 8.19). The day is marked as a public fast day in Judaism. The prophetic word formula introduces each of three oracle reports that comprise the section, including the allegory of the pot (24.1–14), the death of Ezekiel's wife (24.15–27), and the oracles against Israel's neighbors (25.1–27). Although most interpreters view ch 25 as the first ch of the oracles concerning the nations which comprise chs 25–32, the date formula and the prophetic word formula indicate a different understanding of the arrangement of these oracles. The first two oracles take up symbolic actions concerning the destruction of Jerusalem; the oracles against Israel's neighbors, including Ammon, Moab, Edom, and Philistia, condemn nations that assisted the Babylonians in their destruction of Jerusalem and Judah. A new date formula introduces the oracle against Tyre in 26.1.

24.1–14: The allegory of the pot. As a Temple priest, Ezekiel's duties include tending to pots used to cook sacrificial meat (1 Sam. 2.12–17). Like Jeremiah (a priest descended from Eli), he employs activities from his own life as symbolic actions to express God's words (see Jer. 1.13). 1–2: The ninth year . . . the tenth day . . . the tenth month, 10 Tvet, 589–588 BCE, the day on which Nebuchadnezzar began the siege of Jerusalem (2 Kings 25.1; Jer. 52.4; cf. Zech. 8.19), observed as a public fast day in Judaism. 4: Thigh and shoulder: The choice offerings (Num. 18.12), including the breast and thigh (Exod. 29.26–28; Lev. 7.28–36; 10.12–15; Num. 18.18; Gen. 32.32), are given to the priests. 6–8: The imagery of the corroded bottom of the pot symbolizes the bloody crimes of Jerusalem. Blood must be covered when shed (Lev. 17.13–16; Gen. 9.1–7). 7: Rabbinic interpretation relates this v. to the murder of Zechariah son of Jehoiada, the prophet and priest, during the reign of King Joash son of Ahaziah (2 Chron. 24.20–22). His blood had not been required (2 Chron. 24.22), but lay seething on the pavement when Nebuchadnezzar's commander Nebuzaradan entered the Temple courts. Nebuzaradan therefore killed thousands of people in order to appease it (b. Git. 57b; Pesik. Rav Kah. 122a; Lam. Rab. 23). 9–14: As a caldron is cleansed by fire, Ezekiel calls for the "cleansing" of Jerusalem by fire.

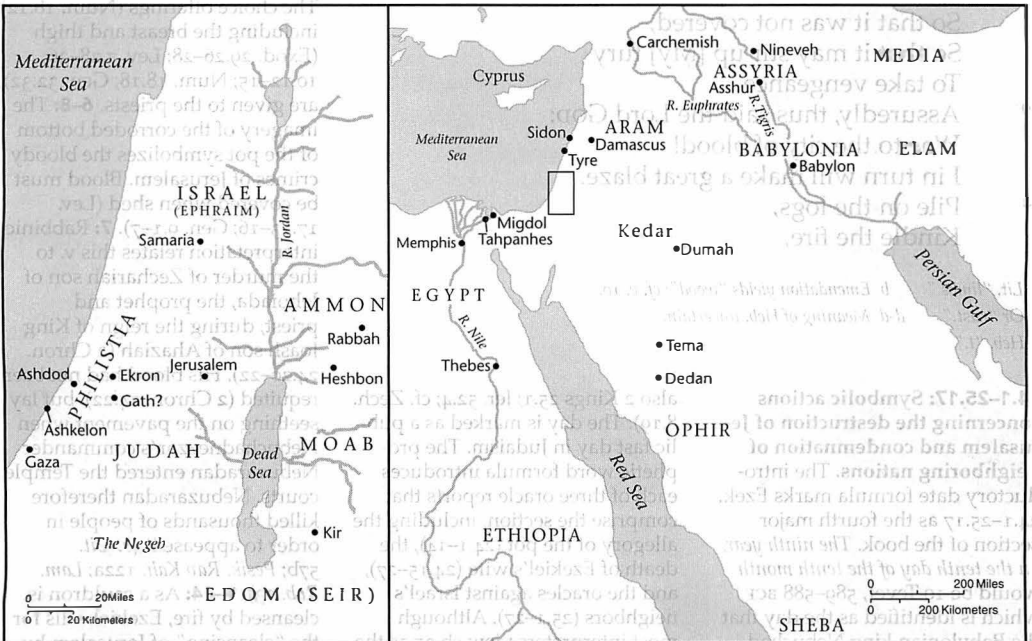

Cook the meat through
 And stew it completely,
 And let the bones be charred.
 11 Let it stand empty on the coals,
 Until it becomes so hot
 That the copper glows.
 Then its uncleanness shall melt away in it,
 And its rust be consumed.
 12 ^bIt has frustrated all effort,
 Its thick scum will not leave it—
 Into the fire with its scum!^b

¹³For your vile impurity—because I sought to cleanse you of your impurity, but you would not be cleansed—you shall never be clean again until I have satisfied My fury upon you. ¹⁴I the LORD have spoken: It shall come to pass and I will do it. I will not refrain or spare or relent. You shall be punished according to your ways and your deeds—declares the Lord God.

¹⁵The word of the LORD came to me: ¹⁶O mortal, I am about to take away the delight of your eyes from you

24.15-27: The death of Ezekiel's wife. The death of Ezekiel's wife symbolizes the destruction of Jerusalem, and in his treatment of it, Ezekiel makes it a radical symbolic action. The ch seems to suggest that regular rituals of mourning are insufficient for the cataclysmic destruction of the Temple. 15-18: Ezekiel's action draws upon priestly sanctity to symbolize the inability of God and the people of Judah to mourn the loss of Jerusalem when in exile. Priests may not come into contact with the dead (Lev. 21.1-12), and the high priest may not mourn for the dead (Lev. 21.10-12; cf. 10.1-7). 16: The delight of your eyes: The same term is used for the Temple in v. 21. 17: Rabbinic tradition reads this v. as an instruction for proper mourning. A mourner does not wear tefillin or shoes; he wraps his head; and others serve him food (b. Mo'ed Kat. 15, 27b). 21: I am going to desecrate My Sanctuary: Only the priests could enter the Holy of Holies. 23: The people a-a Emendation yields "Pour out the broth." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Places mentioned in the oracles against the nations

through pestilence; but you shall not lament or weep or let your tears flow. ¹⁷Moan softly; observe no mourning for the dead: Put on your turban and put your sandals on your feet; do not cover over your upper lip, and do not eat the bread of comforters.”^a

¹⁸In the evening my wife died, and in the morning I did as I had been commanded. And when I spoke to the people that morning, ¹⁹the people asked me, “Will you not tell us what these things portend for us, that you are acting so?” ²⁰I answered them, “The word of the LORD has come to me: ²¹Tell the House of Israel: Thus said the Lord GOD: ‘I am going to desecrate My Sanctuary, your pride and glory, the delight of your eyes and the desire of your heart; and the sons and daughters you have left behind shall fall by the sword. ²⁴^bAnd Ezekiel shall become a portent for you: you shall do just as he has done, when it happens; and you shall know that I am the Lord GOD.’ ²²Accordingly, you shall do as I have done: you shall not cover over your upper lips or eat the bread of comforters;^a ²³and your turbans shall remain on your heads, and your sandals upon your feet. You shall not lament or weep, but you shall be heartsick because of your iniquities and shall moan to one another.”^b

²⁵You, O mortal, take note: On the day that I take their stronghold from them, their pride and joy, the delight of their eyes and the longing of their hearts—their sons and daughters—²⁶on that day a fugitive will come to you, to let you hear it with your own ears. ²⁷On that day your mouth shall be opened to the fugitive, and you shall speak and no longer be dumb. So you shall be a portent for them, and they shall know that I am the LORD.

25 The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, set your face toward the Ammonites and prophesy against them. ³Say to the Ammonites: Hear the word of the Lord GOD! Thus said the Lord GOD: Because you cried a Lit. “men.” b V. 24 moved up for clarity.

are to be fully dressed, with turbans and sandals, as they go into exile. See the portrayal of the Israelites at the time of the exodus and at the observance of Passover in the Jerusalem Temple (Exod. 12.11, 33–39; 13.18 [“armed” is sometimes understood as “girded”). 25–27: During the Temple service, the priests officiated in silence. When the Temple is destroyed, Ezekiel will be able to speak again. The arrival of the fugitive is recorded in 33.21, in a chapter immediately following the oracles concerning the nations (chs 25–32). The placement of these oracles here thus disrupts the flow of the book, but also heightens the tension, as the destruction of the Temple is imminent.

25.1–32.32: Oracles concerning the nations. Like other prophetic books (Isa. chs 13–23; Jer. chs 46–51), Ezekiel contains a section of oracles concerning foreign nations, which demonstrate that God is not merely a national God, concerned with His people and land, Israel, but expresses His power throughout the world. The nations included here, Ammon, Moab, Edom, Philistia, Tyre, and Egypt, would all be considered as targets of the Babylonian empire, although Egypt was never taken. Ezekiel, like Jeremiah, identifies the projected expansion of Babylonia as an act of God. In contrast to Jer. chs 50–51, however, Ezekiel does not prophesy against Babylonia. The appearance of the date formulas in 24.1; 26.1; 29.1; 29.17; 30.20; 31.1; 32.1; 32.17 mark the major segments within the larger structure of the book of Ezekiel.

25.1–17: Oracles condemning Israel’s neighbors: Ammon, Moab, Edom, Philistia. The oracles against Ammon, Moab, Edom, and Philistia are grouped together with the oracle reports of the allegories concerning the pot (24.1–14) and the death of Ezekiel’s wife (24.15–27). Insofar as the earlier oracles take up the destruction of Jerusalem, these oracles condemn those neighboring nations that are understood to have assisted Babylonia in carrying out the destruction. (There is no extrabiblical information concerning the participation of nations in the attack on Jerusalem.) The entire ch is formulated as an instruction speech in which God tells Ezekiel what to say. The prophetic messenger formula, Thus said the Lord GOD, introduces each oracle. Ammon, Moab, and Edom are mentioned in this order following their geographic location, from north to south. 1–7: Oracle concerning Ammon. The Babylonians employed Ammonites against Judah (2 Kings 24.1–2). Later, the Ammonites joined Judah in an anti-Babylonian coalition (Jer. 27.3). Ammon was located east of the Jordan River. 3: The Ammonites are condemned “Aha!” over My Sanctuary when it was desecrated, and over the land of Israel when it was laid waste, and over the House of Judah when it went into exile—⁴ assuredly, I will deliver you to the Kedemites as a possession. They shall set up their encampments among you and pitch their dwellings in your midst; they shall eat your produce and they shall drink your milk. ⁵I will make Rabbah a pasture for camels and Ammon a place for sheep to lie down. And you shall know that I am the LORD.

⁶For thus said the Lord God: Because you clapped your hands and stamped your feet and rejoiced over the land of Israel with such utter scorn—⁷ assuredly, I will stretch out My hand against you and give you as booty to the nations; I will cut you off from among the peoples and wipe you out from among the countries and destroy you. And you shall know that I am the LORD.

⁸Thus said the Lord God: Because Moab ^aand Seir^a said, “See, the House of Judah is like all other nations”—⁹ assuredly, I will lay bare the flank of Moab, all its towns to the last one—Beth-jeshimoth, Baal-meon, and Kiriathaim, the glory of the country. ¹⁰I will deliver it, together with Ammon, to the Kedemites as their possession. Thus Ammon shall not be remembered among the nations, ¹¹ and I will mete out punishments to Moab. And they shall know that I am the LORD.

¹²Thus said the Lord God: Because Edom acted vengefully against the House of Judah and incurred guilt by wreaking revenge upon it—¹³ assuredly, thus said the Lord God: I will stretch out My hand against Edom and cut off from it man and beast, and I will lay it in ruins; from Tema to Dedan they shall fall by the sword. ¹⁴I will wreak My vengeance on Edom through My people Israel, and they shall take action against Edom in accordance with My blazing anger; and they shall know My vengeance—declares the Lord God.

¹⁵Thus said the Lord God: Because the Philistines, in their ancient hatred, acted vengefully, and with utter scorn sought revenge and destruction—¹⁶ assuredly, thus said the Lord God: I will stretch out My hand against the Philistines and cut off the Cherethites and wipe out the last survivors of the seacoast. ¹⁷I will wreak frightful vengeance upon them by furious punishment; and when I inflict My vengeance upon them, they shall know that I am the LORD.

a-a Lacking in some Septuagint mss.

in part for mocking the destruction of the Jerusalem Temple. 4: The Kedemites, “sons of the east,” are nomadic Arab tribes from the northern Arabian desert who moved into Ammon and Moab following their destruction by Babylon. 5: Rabbah, the site of present day Amman, Jordan, was the capital of Ammon. Jeremiah indicates that the Ammonites instigated the assassination of the Judean governor Gedaliah following the destruction of Jerusalem (Jer. 40.14) and that they seized the territory of the tribe of Gad (cf. Zeph. 2.8). 8–11: Oracle concerning Moab. Like Ammon, the Moabites assisted the Babylonians against Judah (2 Kings 24.1–2) and later joined the anti-Babylonian coalition (Jer. 27.3). Moab was located east of the southern portion of the Dead Sea. Cf. Zeph. 2.8. Both geographical proximity and familial relations (see Gen. 19.37–38) are responsible for Moab and Ammon being mentioned adjacently here, as they are so often in the Bible. 9: Beth-jeshimoth is situated in southern Moab, northeast of the Dead Sea (Num. 33.49; Josh. 1.3; 13.20). Baal-meon is Beth-baal-meon, located a few miles inland from the Dead Sea (Josh. 13.17), and Kiriathaim is to its south (Num. 32.37; Josh. 13.19; Jer. 48.1, 23). 12–14: Oracle concerning Edom. Edom symbolizes God’s wrath, perhaps because of its role in the destruction of the Jerusalem Temple (Ps. 137.7; Lam. 4.21–22; Obadiah 1–14). It was located southeast of the Dead Sea, and sometimes encroached upon southern Judean territories. Edom’s ancestor, Esau, was Jacob’s twin brother (Gen. chs 25–35). Tema to Dedan, towns associated with Edom (Jer. 49.7–8). They are several hundred km southeast of Judah. 15–17: Oracle concerning Philistia. The Philistine territory was occupied by Assyria in the 8th and 7th centuries BCE and turned into an industrial center for the production of olive oil. It is not clear what action the Philistines took against Judah in the 6th century. Philistia was located along 26 In the eleventh year, on the first of the month,^a the word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, because Tyre gloated over Jerusalem, "Aha! The gateway^b of the peoples is broken, it has become mine; I shall be filled, now that it is laid in ruins"—³assuredly, thus said the Lord God:

I am going to deal with you, O Tyre!
I will hurl many nations against you,
As the sea hurls its waves.

4 They shall destroy the walls of Tyre
And demolish her towers;
And I will scrape her soil off her
And leave her a naked rock.
5 She shall be in the heart of the sea
A place for drying^c nets;
For I have spoken it —declares the Lord God.
She shall become spoil for the nations,
6 And her daughter-towns in the country
Shall be put to the sword.
And they shall know that I am the LORD.

⁷For thus said the Lord God: I will bring from the north, against Tyre, King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon, a king of kings, with horses, chariots, and horsemen—a great mass of troops.

8 Your daughter-towns in the country
He shall put to the sword;
He shall erect towers against you,
And cast up mounds against you,
And raise [a wall of] bucklers against you.
9 He shall turn the force of his battering rams Against your walls
And smash your towers with his axes.^d
10 From the cloud raised by his horses
Dust shall cover you;
From the clatter of horsemen
And wheels and chariots,
Your walls shall shake—
When he enters your gates
As men enter a breached city.
11 With the hoofs of his steeds
He shall trample all your streets.
He shall put your people to the sword,
And your mighty pillars shall crash to the ground.
12 They shall plunder your wealth

the Mediterranean coast, west and south of the hill country of Judah.

16: Cherethites, the Cretans, ancestors of the Philistines (Zeph. 2.5; cf. 2 Sam. 8.18; Amos 9.7).

26.1–28.19: Oracles concerning Tyre and its rulers. The initial date formula identifies the oracles concerning Tyre in 26.1–28.19 as the fifth major section of the book of Ezekiel. The prophetic word formula introduces the various segments of this section in 26.1–21; 27.1–36; 28.1–10; 28.11–19; 28.20–26. The eleventh year, on the first of the month is uncertain because the month is not recorded. The year would be 586 BCE, when the city of Jerusalem fell (2 Kings 25.2; Jer. 52.5). Tyre, the preeminent maritime power of the ancient world, joined Judah in revolt against Babylonia (Jer. 27.3). The Phoenician city of Tyre was an island until its conquest in 332 BCE by Alexander the Great, who built an earthen corridor through the water to assault the city by land. Shortly after his conquest of Jerusalem, Nebuchadrezzar laid siege to Tyre for thirteen years. Although he was not able to conquer the city, it finally submitted to him. The large number of oracles about Tyre reflects its economic significance at this time.

26.1–21: Four oracles concerning the destruction of Tyre. 1: The eleventh year, on the first of the month, 586 BCE, shortly after the fall of Jerusalem. 2–6: Ezekiel's indictment and sentencing of Tyre presupposes that the city was a commercial rival to Judah. 2: The gateway of the peoples, lit. "gateways," indicates Judah's role in controlling inland trade routes. 4: Naked rock, "sela" or rock in Heb, plays upon the Hebrew name "Tzor," Tyre, which is another term for rock. 6: Daughter-towns designates nearby towns (suburbs) that were subsidiary to Tyre. 7–14: Ezekiel's description presupposes the tactics and weapons of land warfare, which were useless against an island state. 7: Nebuchadrezzar, the Akkadian (the lan-

^a The month is not indicated. ^b Targum reads "trafficker"; cf. 27.3.

^c Lit. "spreading out." ^d Lit. "swords."

And loot your merchandise.
 They shall raze your walls
 And tear down your splendid houses,
 And they shall cast into the water
 Your stones and timber and soil.

13 I will put an end to the murmur of your songs,
 And the sound of your lyres shall be heard no more.

14 I will make you a naked rock,
 You shall be a place for drying^a nets;
 You shall never be rebuilt.
 For I have spoken —declares the Lord GOD.

15 Thus said the Lord GOD to Tyre: The coastlands shall quake at the sound of your downfall, when the wounded groan, when slaughter is rife within you. 16 All the rulers of the sea shall descend from their thrones; they shall remove their robes and strip off their embroidered garments. They shall clothe themselves with trembling, and shall sit on the ground; they shall tremble every moment, and they shall be aghast at you. 17 And they shall intone a dirge over you, and they shall say to you:

How you have perished, ^byou who were peopled^b
 from the seas,

O renowned city!
 Mighty on the sea were she and her inhabitants,
 Who cast their terror on all ^cits inhabitants.^c

18 Now shall the coastlands tremble
 On the day of your downfall,
 And the coastlands by the sea
 Be terrified at your end.

19 For thus said the Lord GOD: When I make you a ruined city, like cities empty of inhabitants; when I bring the deep over you, and its mighty waters cover you, 20 then I will bring you down, with those who go down to the Pit, to the people of old. I will install you in the netherworld, with those that go down to the Pit, like the ruins of old, so that you shall not be inhabited and shall not radiate^d splendor in the land of the living. 21 I will make you a horror, and you shall cease to be; you shall be sought, but shall never be found again—declares the Lord GOD.

27 The word of the LORD came to me: ²Now you, O mortal, intone a dirge over Tyre. ³Say to Tyre:

guage of ancient Mesopotamia) name, Nabu-kudurri-utzur (“May Nebo [the name of a Babylonian god] protect my labor”), is frequently mispronounced in Heb as Nebuchadnezzar (Dan. 1.1).

16: Rulers of the sea, an allusion to Tyre’s trading partners and allies.
17: They shall intone a dirge over you, see 19.1 n. 19–21: Ezekiel employs mythological language to portray Tyre’s fall. 19: I bring the deep over you reverses the imagery of creation in which dry land emerges from the waters (Gen. ch 1). 20: Go down to the Pit, descend into the underworld at death (see 32.17–22; Isa. 24.22; Pss. 63.9; 139.15). This was a characteristic motif of Babylonian mythology, in which the fertility god Tammuz had to be rescued from the underworld each year by the goddess Ishtar.

27.1–36: Lamentation over Tyre.
 The ch begins as a eulogy for the commercial beauty and prominence of Tyre, a vibrant center of trade, where people from distant and exotic lands came to exchange their wares. 3–9: Ezekiel portrays Tyre as a well-built ship, which symbolizes the way in which Tyre achieved wealth through maritime trade.

a Lit. “spreading out.” b-b Septuagint reads “vanished.”

c-c I.e., of the sea. Emendation yields “the dry land.”

d Understanding nathatti as second-person singular feminine; cf. 16.50 and note. But meaning of Heb. uncertain.

O you who dwell at the gateway of the sea,
 Who trade with the peoples on many coastlands:
 Thus said the Lord GOD:

^aO Tyre, you boasted,

I am perfect in beauty.^a

4 Your frontiers were on the high seas,
 Your builders perfected your beauty.

5 From cypress trees of Senir
 They fashioned your planks;
 They took a cedar from Lebanon
 To make a mast for you.

6 From oak trees of Bashan
 They made your oars;
 Of boxwood from the isles of Kittim,
 Inlaid with ivory,
 They made your decks.

7 Embroidered linen from Egypt
 Was the cloth
 That served you for sails;
 Of blue and purple from the coasts of Elishah
 Were your awnings.

8 The inhabitants of Sidon and Arvad
 Were your rowers; ^bYour skilled men, O Tyre,^b were within you,
 They were your pilots.

9 Gebal's elders and craftsmen were within you,
 Making your repairs.

All the ships of the sea, with their crews,
 Were ^cin your harbor^c
 To traffic in your wares.

10 Men of Paras, Lud, and Put
 Were in your army,
 Your fighting men;
 They hung shields and helmets in your midst,
 They lent splendor to you.

11 Men of Arvad and Helech Manned your walls all around,
 And men of Gammad were stationed in your towers;
 They hung their quivers all about your walls;
 They perfected your beauty.

¹²Tarshish traded with you because of your wealth of all kinds of goods; they bartered silver, iron, tin, and lead

5: Senir, Mt. Hermon in northern Israel (Deut. 3.9). 6: Bashan, the region east of the Sea of Galilee. The isles of Kittim, the Greek islands, although later usage includes the Romans. 7: Elishah, Cyprus (cf. Gen. 10.4). 8: Sidon is north of Tyre (Gen. 10.15). Arvad, Phoenicia (Gen. 10.18). Zemar (see translators' note b-b), "Tyre" in Heb. 9: Gebal, Byblos (1 Kings 5.32), a major center of papyrus production in antiquity. 10–11: Tyre's defenders include mercenary troops. 10: Paras, Persia. Lud, Lydia. Put, Libya. 11: Helech means "your army" in Heb. Gammad is uncertain, although Targum Jonathan identifies it with Cap-podocia. 12–25a: A prose section contains a catalogue of Tyre's extensive commercial relations. 12: Tarshish, Tartessos in southern Spain.

a-a Emendation yields: "O Tyre, you are a ship / Perfect in beauty."

b-b Emendation yields "The skilled men of Zemar"; cf. Gen. 10.18.

c-c Lit. "in you."

for your wares. ¹³Javan, Tubal, and Meshech—they were your merchants; they trafficked with you in human beings and copper utensils. ¹⁴From Beth-togarmah they bartered horses, horsemen, and mules for your wares. ¹⁵The people of Dedan were your merchants; many coastlands traded under your rule and rendered you tribute in ivory tusks and ebony. ¹⁶Aram traded with you because of your wealth of merchandise, dealing with you in turquoise, purple stuff, embroidery, fine linen, coral, and agate.^a ¹⁷Judah and the land of Israel were your merchants; they trafficked with you in wheat of ^bMinnith and Pannag,^b honey, oil, and balm. ¹⁸Because of your wealth of merchandise, because of your great wealth, Damascus traded with you in Helbon wine and white wool. ¹⁹^cVedan and Javan from Uzal traded for your wares; they trafficked with you in polished iron, cassia, and calamus. ²⁰Dedan was your merchant in saddlecloths for riding.^c ²¹Arabia and all Kedar's chiefs were traders under your rule; they traded with you in lambs, rams, and goats. ²²The merchants of Sheba and Raamah were your merchants; they bartered for your wares all the finest spices, all kinds of precious stones, and gold. ²³Haran, Canneh, and Eden, the merchants of Sheba, Assyria, and Chilmad traded with you. ²⁴^cThese were your merchants in choice fabrics, embroidered cloaks of blue, and many-colored carpets tied up with cords and preserved with cedar—among your wares.^c ²⁵The ships of Tarshish were in the service of your trade.

“So you were full and richly laden
On the high seas.

- 26 Your oarsmen brought you out Into the mighty waters;
The tempest wrecked you
On the high seas.
- 27 Your wealth, your wares, your merchandise,
Your sailors and your pilots,
The men who made your repairs,
Those who carried on your traffic,
And all the fighting men within you—
All the multitude within you—Shall go down into the depths of the sea
On the day of your downfall.
- 28 At the outcry of your pilots

13: Javan, Ionians or Greeks. Tubal and Meshech, Asia Minor (Gen. 10.2). 14: Beth-togarmah, Armenia (Gen. 10.3). 15: Dedan, an Arabian people south of Israel in central Arabia (Gen. 10.6–7; 25.1–3; Isa. 21.13; Jer. 25.23; 49.8). 16: Turquoise, purple stuff, embroidery: Phoenicia was known for trade in purple dye derived from a shellfish. The names for the country, Phoenicia (Gk, “Phoinikos”) and Canaan, both mean “purple.” 17: Minnith, in Ammonite territory (Judg. 11.33). Pannag: Radak considers this to be a place name, but the meaning is uncertain. 18: Helbon, 22 km (13 mi) north of Damascus. 19: Vedan and Javan from Uzal: Uzal is Sana in Yemen (Gen. 10.27). 20: Dedan, in central Arabia. 21: Kedar, in Arabia (Gen. 25.13). 22: Sheba, in Arabia or Ethiopia (Gen. 10.7). Raamah is believed to be near the Persian Gulf. 23: Haran, Canneh, Eden, cities in Syria (Gen. 12.4; 10.10; Isa. 10.9; 2 Kings 19.12; Isa. 37.12; Amos 1.5). Assyria, the ancient Assyrian empire in northern Iraq. Chilmad, Media. 25b–36: The lament resumes with a description of Tyre as a ship sinking by the tempest, lit. “the east wind,” a common symbol of God’s power (Exod. 14.21). As the city-ship sinks into the sea, losing all her precious cargo, all those around her mourn and lament. Many of these laments are expressed in the qinah or dirge meter.

a The exact identity of these stones is uncertain.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; cf. “Minnith,” Judg. 11.33.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d Resuming the description of Tyre as a ship, as in vv. 3b–9a.

29 The billows shall heave;
 And all the oarsmen and mariners,
 All the pilots of the sea,
 Shall come down from their ships
 And stand on the ground.
 30 They shall raise their voices over you
 And cry out bitterly;
 They shall cast dust on their heads
 And strew ashes on themselves.
 31 On your account, they shall make Bald patches on their heads,
 And shall gird themselves with sackcloth.
 They shall weep over you, brokenhearted,
 With bitter lamenting;
 32 They shall intone a dirge over you as they wail,
 And lament for you thus:

Who was like Tyre when she was silenced
 In the midst of the sea?
 33 When your wares were unloaded from the seas,
 You satisfied many peoples;
 With your great wealth and merchandise
 You enriched the kings of the earth.
 34 But when you were wrecked on the seas,
 In the deep waters sank your merchandise
 And all the crew aboard you.
 35 All the inhabitants of the coastlands
 Are appalled over you;
 Their kings are aghast,
 Their faces contorted.^a 36 The merchants among the peoples hissed^b at you;
 You have become a horror,
 And have ceased to be forever.

28 The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, say to the prince of Tyre: Thus said the Lord God:

Because you have been so haughty and have said, "I am a god; I sit enthroned like a god in the heart of the seas," whereas you are not a god but a man, though you deemed your mind equal to a god's^c—

³ Yes, you are wiser than Daniel;
 In no hidden matter can anyone Compare to you.

⁴ By your shrewd understanding
 You have gained riches,

28.1–10: Oracle concerning the prince of Tyre. 2: Self-deification was a claim of some ancient Near Eastern rulers, but in this case, says Ezekiel, the prince has gone too far and is guilty of hubris. 3: Yes, you are wiser than Daniel: Ezekiel apparently holds the Tyrian king in high regard and compares him to Daniel (Heb. Dan El), the wise ruler of Canaanite mythology who may stand behind the figure of Daniel in biblical tradition (see 14.12–20).

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b I.e., to ward off the calamity from the viewer; cf. Jer. 18.16, 49.17; Job 27.23; Lam. 2.15.

c This sentence is continued in v. 6; vv. 3–5 are parenthetical.

And have amassed gold and silver
 In your treasuries.
 5 By your great shrewdness in trade
 You have increased your wealth,
 And you have grown haughty
 Because of your wealth.
 6 Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: Because you have deemed your mind equal to a god's,
 7 I swear I will bring against you
 Strangers, the most ruthless of nations.
 They shall unsheathe their swords
 Against your prized shrewdness,
 And they shall strike down^a your splendor.
 8 They shall bring you down to the Pit;
 In the heart of the sea you shall die
 The death of the slain.
 9 Will you still say, "I am a god"
 Before your slayers,
 When you are proved a man, not a god,
 At the hands of those who strike you down?
 10 By the hands of strangers you shall die
 The death of the uncircumcised;^b
 For I have spoken —declares the Lord God.

11 The word of the LORD came to me: 12 O mortal, intone a dirge over the king of Tyre and say to him: Thus said the Lord God:

You were the seal of perfection,
 Full of wisdom and flawless in beauty.
 13 You were in Eden, the garden of God;
 Every precious stone was your adornment:
 Carnelian, chrysolite, and amethyst;
 Beryl, lapis lazuli, and jasper;
 Sapphire, turquoise, and emerald;
 And gold ^cbeautifully wrought for you,
 Mined for you, prepared the day you were created.^c
 14 ^dI created you as a cherub
 With outstretched shielding wings;^d
 And you resided on God's holy mountain;
 You walked among stones of fire.
 15 You were blameless in your ways,
 From the day you were created Until wrongdoing was found in you.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b According to popular belief, those who die uncircumcised and those left unburied are relegated to the lower level of the netherworld; cf. 31.18; 32.19 ff.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. On the stones, see note at Exod. 28.17.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

5: Ezekiel charges that the king has overstepped his bounds.

8: The mythological language of descent into the sea and the Pit reappears. 10: The uncircumcised: While the Phoenicians (Tyrians) practiced circumcision, they are threatened with the death of the uncircumcised, thought to be worse than the death of the circumcised.

28.11–19: Dirge for the king of Tyre. While it was the "prince" who was condemned in vv. 1–10, here the lament is for the "king." This king is pictured as a quasi-mythical being in a bejeweled garden of Eden. References to the garden of Eden are quite rare outside of Genesis; it is mentioned in Joel 2.3, and several times in Ezekiel. The king boasts of his wisdom and beauty, qualities that Israelite kings as well were expected to have (e.g., 1 Sam. 16.18, of David). 12: Seal, a sign of royal authority. 13–15: Ezekiel employs the imagery of the garden of Eden story to describe the Tyrian king's downfall. 14: He employs the imagery of the cherub to stress the Tyrian king's power and high position. The once-perfect creature is shown to have sinned and therefore was struck down. 16: The prophet charges the king with corrupt trade practices.

16 By your far-flung commerce
 You were filled with lawlessness
 And you sinned.
 So I have struck you down
 From the mountain of God,
 And I have destroyed you, O shielding cherub,
 From among the stones of fire.

17 You grew haughty because of your beauty,
 You debased your wisdom for the sake of your splendor;
 I have cast you to the ground,
 I have made you an object for kings to stare at.

18 By the greatness of your guilt,
 Through the dishonesty of your trading,
 You desecrated your sanctuaries.
 So I made a fire issue from you,
 And it has devoured you;
 I have reduced you to ashes on the ground,
 In the sight of all who behold you.

19 All who knew you among the peoples
 Are appalled at your doom.
 You have become a horror
 And have ceased to be, forever.

28.20-26: Oracle concerning Sidon. 21: Sidon, another Phoenician port city, 40 km (25 mi) north of Tyre. Sidon joined the revolt (Jer. 27.3) and probably fell to Nebuchadrezzar. 25-26: Once the nations that treated Israel with contempt are destroyed, the exiles will return to the land of Israel sworn to Jacob (Gen. chs 28; 35) and rebuild their community; thus will they manifest God's holiness in the world. And they shall know that I the LORD am their God, the self-identification formula.

²⁰The word of the LORD came to me: ²¹O mortal, set your face toward Sidon and prophesy against her. ²²Say: Thus said the Lord GOD:

I am going to deal with you, O Sidon.
 I will gain glory in your midst;
 And they shall know that I am the LORD,
 When I wreak punishment upon her
 And show Myself holy through her.

23 I will let pestilence loose against her
 And bloodshed into her streets.
 And the slain shall fall in her midst
 When the sword comes upon her from all sides.
 And they shall know that I am the LORD.

²⁴Then shall the House of Israel no longer be afflicted with prickling briars and lacerating thorns from all the neighbors who despise them; and they shall know that I am the Lord God.

²⁵Thus said the Lord GOD: When I have gathered the House of Israel from the peoples among which they have been dispersed, and have shown Myself holy through them in the sight of the nations, they shall settle on their own soil, which I gave to My servant Jacob, ²⁶and they shall dwell on it in security. They shall build houses and plant vineyards, and shall dwell on it in security, when I have meted out punishment to all those about them who despise them. And they shall know that I the LORD am their God.

29 In the tenth year, on the twelfth day of the tenth month, the word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, turn your face against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and prophesy against him and against all Egypt. ³Speak these words:

Thus said the Lord God:

I am going to deal with you, O Pharaoh king of Egypt,

Mighty monster, sprawling in your^a channels,
Who said,

My Nile is my own;

I made it for myself.

⁴ I will put hooks in your jaws,
And make the fish of your channels
Cling to your scales;

I will haul you up from your channels,
With all the fish of your channels
Clinging to your scales.

⁵ And I will fling you into the desert,
With all the fish of your channels.
You shall be left lying in the open,
Ungathered and unburied:

I have given you as food
To the beasts of the earth
And the birds of the sky.

⁶ Then all the inhabitants of Egypt shall know That I am the LORD.

Because you^b were a staff of reed
To the House of Israel:

⁷ When they grasped you with the hand, you would splinter,
And wound all their shoulders,^c
And when they leaned on you, you would break,
And make all their loins unsteady.^d

^a Lit. "its."

^b Lit. "they."

^c Septuagint and Syriac read "palms"; cf. 2 Kings 18.21; Isa. 36.6.

^d Taking 'amad as a byform of ma'ad; cf. Syriac translation.

29.1–16: The first oracle concerning Egypt. The initial date formula marks 29.1–16 as the first of five sections concerned with oracles against Egypt and its rulers in 29.1–16; 29.17–30.19; 30.20–26;

31.1–18; 32.1–32 (+33.1–39.29). Because of its focus on the downfall of Egypt, 28.25–29.21 transcends these divisions to constitute the haftarah reading for the parashah of Va-'era' (Exod. 6.2–9.35), which relates the plagues against Egypt at the time of the exodus. Egypt played a major role in instigating the revolt against its enemy Babylonia. When Pharaoh Hophra attempted to relieve Jerusalem from the Babylonian siege in 588 BCE, he was repulsed (Jer. ch 37; 44.30; see also Jer. ch 32). 1: Commentators note that the initial date formula, in the tenth year, on the twelfth day of the tenth month, 12 Tevet, 588–587 BCE, disrupts the chronological sequence of the book since it is perhaps some three months earlier than the date given in 26.1 for the oracles concerning Tyre. Radak states that the oracle concerning Tyre appears first because it was fulfilled first, i.e., whereas Tyre submitted to Nebuchadnezzar in 573 BCE after thirteen years of siege, Egypt was conquered by the Persian king Cambyses in 525. Although it is not clear in the English translation, this particular date formula lacks the verb "vayehi" ("and it came to pass") that appears in the other chronological formulae of the book (except 40.1). When considered in relation to the disruption of the book's chronological sequence, this suggests that the oracles concerning Egypt may have once circulated independently, and were combined here as a group. 2–7: God instructs Ezekiel to address Pharaoh, probably Hophra (ruled 589–570) after his failed attempt to rescue Jerusalem. 3: Mighty monster, lit. "the great dragon." Egypt is compared to a dragon in Isa. 11.15, which employs the imagery of the seven-headed Leviathan (Lothan) of Canaanite mythology, and in Isa. 30.7 to the sea dragon Rahab (see also Isa. 51.9–10; Job 9.13; 26.12–13; Ps. 89.9–10). The Nile river forms the natural "backbone" of Egypt and serves as the source of Egypt's life. 6: A staff of reed to the House of Israel symbolizes an unreliable support (cf. Isa. 36.6 || 2 Kings 18.21). 8–12: Egypt's judgment results from Pharaoh's claim that the Nile is his and not God's (28.2). 10: From Migdol to Syene, cities that define the northern and southern borders of Egypt. Syene is modern

⁸ Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: Lo, I will bring a sword against you, and will cut off man and beast from you, ⁹ so that the land of Egypt shall fall into desolation and ruin. And they shall know that I am the LORD—because he boasted, “The Nile is mine, and I made it.” ¹⁰ Assuredly, I am going to deal with you and your channels, and I will reduce the land of Egypt to utter ruin and desolation, ^a from Migdol to Syene, all the way to the border of Nubia. ^a ¹¹ No foot of man shall traverse it, and no foot of beast shall traverse it; and it shall remain uninhabited for forty years. ¹² For forty years I will make the land of Egypt the most desolate of desolate lands, and its cities shall be the most desolate of ruined cities. And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations and disperse them throughout the countries.

¹³ Further, thus said the Lord God: After a period of forty years I will gather the Egyptians from the peoples among whom they were dispersed. ¹⁴ I will restore the fortunes of the Egyptians and bring them back to the land of their origin, the land of Pathros,^b and there they shall be a lowly kingdom. ¹⁵ It shall be the lowliest of all the kingdoms, and shall not lord it over the nations again. I will reduce the Egyptians,^c so that they shall have no dominion over the nations. ¹⁶ Never again shall they be the trust of the House of Israel, recalling its guilt in having turned to them. And they shall know that I am the Lord God.

¹⁷ In the twenty-seventh year, on the first day of the first month, the word of the LORD came to me: ¹⁸ O mortal, King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon has made his army expend vast labor on Tyre; every head is rubbed bald and every shoulder scraped. But he and his army have had no return for the labor he expended on Tyre. ¹⁹ Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: I will give the land of Egypt to Nebuchadrezzar, king of Babylon. He shall carry off her wealth and take her spoil and seize her booty; and she shall be the recompense of his army. ²⁰ As the wage for which he labored, for what they did for Me, I give him the land of Egypt—declares the Lord God.

²¹ On that day I will ^dendow the House of Israel with strength, and you shall be vindicated^d among them. And they shall know that I am the LORD.

a-a I.e., the length of Egypt, from north to south. Syene is modern Aswan.

b I.e., southern Egypt.

c Heb. “them.”

d-d Lit. “cause a horn to sprout for the House of Israel, and I will grant you opening of the mouth.”

Aswan. 11: Forty years, a common number for a complete and lengthy period of time (Num. 14.33; Judg. 3.31; 1 Kings 2.11). 13–16: Egypt will be restored to its land as a minor kingdom. The prophet clearly has in mind Egypt’s failure to aid Israel in its time of need. 14: Pathros, Upper Egypt, the southern portion of the kingdom. In Egypt, “up” is south (upstream on the Nile) and “down” is north (downstream on the Nile). 16: The oracle ends with the self-identification formula, but it is applied to Egypt rather than to Israel.

29.17–30.19: The second block of oracles concerning Egypt.

The initial date formula marks 29.17–30.19 as the seventh major section of the book of Ezekiel. The prophetic word formula, the word of the LORD came to me, in 29.17 and 30.1 marks the two oracle reports that appear in this section. 29.17: The twenty-seventh year, on the first day of the first month, 1 Nisan 571–570 BCE. This date falls outside of the twenty-year pattern evident in the other date formulae throughout the book (see 1.1–3 n.). Seder Olam Rabbah 26 maintains that this refers to the twenty-seventh year (578 BCE) of Nebuchadrezzar’s reign when Egypt fell into his hands. Nebuchadrezzar reigned for forty-three years, 605–562, but he never conquered Egypt. Modern commentators maintain that this date was written at a later time, perhaps by Ezekiel himself in old age or by someone else, following the delayed fulfillment of the oracle concerning Tyre. The oracle may originally have been dated to the eleventh year (see 26.1; 30.20). 18: Ezekiel refers to Nebuchadrezzar’s failure to conquer Tyre as a basis for his campaign against Egypt. Following the conclusion of his siege against Tyre in 573 BCE, Nebuchadrezzar attacked Egypt in 668 but failed to conquer the land. Although Tyre submitted to him, the failure to conquer the city meant that his troops would receive little booty. 21: I will endow

30 The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, prophesy and say: Thus said the Lord God:

Wail, alas for the day!

³ For a day is near;

A day of the LORD is near.

It will be a day of cloud,

An hour of [invading] nations.

⁴ A sword shall pierce Egypt,

And Nubia shall be seized with trembling,

When men fall slain in Egypt

And her wealth is seized

And her foundations are overthrown.

⁵Nubia, Put, and Lud, and all ^athe mixed populations,^a and Cub, and the inhabitants of the allied countries shall fall by the sword with them.

⁶ Thus said the LORD:

Those who support Egypt shall fall,

And her proud strength shall sink;

There they shall fall by the sword,

From Migdol to Syene

—declares the Lord God.

⁷They shall be the most desolate of desolate lands, and her cities shall be the most ruined of cities, ⁸when I set fire to Egypt and all who help her are broken. Thus they shall know that I am the LORD.

⁹On that day, messengers shall set out at My bidding to strike terror into confident Nubia. And they shall be seized with trembling on Egypt's day [of doom]—for it is at hand.

¹⁰Thus said the Lord God: I will put an end to the wealth of Egypt through King Nebuchadrezzar of Babylon. ¹¹He, together with his troops, the most ruthless of the nations, shall be brought to ravage the land. And they shall unsheathe the sword against Egypt and fill the land with the slain.

¹²I will turn the channels into dry ground, and I will deliver the land into the hands of evil men. I will lay waste the land and everything in it by the hands of strangers. I the LORD have spoken.

¹³Thus said the Lord God: I will destroy the fetishes and make an end of the idols in Noph; and no longer shall there be a prince in the land of Egypt; and I will strike the land of Egypt with fear. ¹⁴I will lay Pathros waste, I will set fire to Zoan, and I will execute judgment on No. ¹⁵I

the House of Israel with strength, lit. "I will cause a horn to sprout for the house of Israel!"; the restoration of the Davidic monarchy in the aftermath of Egypt's collapse (see Isa. 11.1–16; Ps. 132.17). This phrase plays a prominent role in the daily "Amidah" prayer concerning the restoration of Davidic kingship. 30.1–19: This section contains four oracles (vv. 2–5, 6–9, 10–12, 13–19), each identified by the prophetic messenger formula, thus said the Lord God. 2–5: God instructs Ezekiel to lament for Egypt and Ethiopia. Egypt was ruled by an Ethiopian dynasty during the late 7th and early 6th centuries BCE (see Isa. ch 20). The prophet employs the "Day of the LORD" motif (Amos 5.18–20; Joel chs 1–2; Isa. 2.6–21; chs 13; 34; Obadiah; Zeph. 1.2–18; 2.1–3) to express the overthrow of Egypt. 5: Put, and Lud, see 27.10–11 n. Cub is unknown. 6–9: This oracle resembles oracles in Isaiah. 6: Proud strength shall sink, Isa. 2.6–21. 9: Messengers shall set out, Isa. 18.1–2. 12: I will turn the channels into dry ground, Isa. 19.1–15. 13–19: Ezekiel cites Egyptian place names to demonstrate that destruction will encompass the entire land. 13: Noph is Memphis, the early capital south of Cairo. 14: Pathros, see 29.14. Zoan, also called Rameses, Tanis, and Avaris, the site where the Heb slaves worked in the Nile Delta (Ps. 78.12, 43; Exod. 1.11; Num. 13.22). No is Thebes, Egypt's capital throughout much of Israel's history (Nah. 3.8; Jer. 46.25). 15: Sin is Pelusium, near Zoan in the northeastern Delta. 17: Aven is "On" or Heliopolis, 10 km (6 mi) northeast of Cairo (Jer. 43.13). Pibeseth, Bubastis in the eastern Delta. 18: Tehaphnehes, by the north shore of the Gulf of Suez (Jer. 2.16; 43.7, 8–13). 19: The judgment executed against Egypt recalls language of the exodus tradition (e.g., Exod. 6.6), suggesting that this event, the biblical paradigm for God's power, will be reenacted.

30.20–26: The first oracle concerning Pharaoh. The introductory date formula marks this as the

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

will pour out my anger upon Sin, the stronghold of Egypt, and I will destroy the wealth of No. ¹⁶I will set fire to Egypt; Sin shall writhe in anguish and No shall be torn apart; *and Noph [shall face] adversaries in broad daylight.^a ¹⁷The young men of Aven^b and Pi-beseth shall fall by the sword, and those [towns] shall go into captivity. ¹⁸In Tehaphnehes^c daylight shall be withheld,^d when I break there the power of Egypt, and there her proud strength comes to an end. [The city] itself shall be covered with cloud, and its daughter towns shall go into captivity. ¹⁹ Thus I will execute judgment on Egypt; And they shall know that I am the LORD.

²⁰In the eleventh year, on the seventh day of the first month, the word of the LORD came to me: ²¹O mortal, I have broken the arm of Pharaoh king of Egypt; it has not been bound up to be healed nor firmly bandaged to make it strong enough to grasp the sword. ²²Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: I am going to deal with Pharaoh king of Egypt. I will break his arms, both the sound one and the injured, and make the sword drop from his hand. ²³I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations and disperse them throughout the countries. ²⁴I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon and put My sword in his hand; and I will break the arms of Pharaoh, and he shall groan before him with the groans of one struck down. ²⁵I will make firm the arms of the king of Babylon, but the arms of Pharaoh shall fail. And they shall know that I am the LORD, when I put My sword into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he lifts it against the land of Egypt. ²⁶I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations and disperse them throughout the countries. Thus they shall know that I am the LORD.

31 In the eleventh year, on the first day of the third month, the word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, say to Pharaoh king of Egypt and his hordes:

Who was comparable to you in greatness?
³ Assyria was a cedar in Lebanon
 With beautiful branches and shady thickets,
 Of lofty stature,
 With its top among ^fleafy trees.^f

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Elsewhere called "Oin"; cf. Gen. 41.45, 50; 46.20.

c Elsewhere vocalized "Tahpanhes"; e.g., Jer. 2.16; 44.1.

d Some Heb. mss. and editions read "darkened."

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. f-f Septuagint reads "clouds."

eight major section of the book. 20: In the eleventh year, on the seventh day of the first month, 7 Nisan, 587-586 BCE. 21: The broken arm of Pharaoh refers to Nebuchadrezzar's defeat of Hophra, who attempted to relieve Jerusalem in 588 (2 Kings 24.7; Jer. 37.5). 22-26: The prophet anticipates an even more devastating defeat of Egypt, but this did not transpire.

31.1-18: The second oracle concerning Pharaoh. The introductory date formula identifies 31.1-18 as the ninth major section of the book of Ezekiel. The imagery of a fallen cedar of Lebanon portrays Pharaoh's downfall. The fall of Assyria forms the precedent and model for the fall of Egypt. Isa. 14.3-23 likewise portrays the downfall of the Babylonian king, and relates it to the downfall of Assyria (Isa. 14.24-27). Thematically, this oracle is similar to those against Tyre in chs 27 and 28. 1: In the eleventh year, on the first day of the third month, 1 Sivan, 587-586 BCE, six days prior to the festival of Shavu'ot, and about two months prior to the destruction of the Temple. 2-9: See Isaiah's portrayal of the Assyrian monarch as a tall tree that is to be felled (Isa. 10.5-34) and the tradition of the well-watered tree in the garden of Eden that plays a role in the downfall of Adam and Eve (Gen. chs 2-3).

4 Waters nourished it,
 The deep made it grow tall,
 Washing with its streams
 The place where it was planted,
 Making its channels well up ^aTo all^a the trees of the field.

5 Therefore it exceeded in stature
 All the trees of the field;
 Its branches multiplied and its boughs grew long Because of the abundant water
 That welled up for it.

6 In its branches nested
 All the birds of the sky;
 All the beasts of the field
 Bore their young under its boughs,
 And in its shadow lived
 All the great nations.

7 It was beautiful in its height,
 In the length of its branches,
 Because its stock stood
 By abundant waters.

8 Cedars in the garden of God
 Could not compare with it;
 Cypresses could not match its boughs,
 And plane trees could not vie with its branches;
 No tree in the garden of God
 Was its peer in beauty.

9 I made it beautiful
 In the profusion of its branches;
 And all the trees of Eden envied it
 In the garden of God.

10-14: Because of its height and arrogance, the tree is cut down (see Isa. 2.6-21; 10.5-34). 11: The mightiest of nations, lit. "the ram of the nations," Nebuchadrezzar. The Babylonians boasted of the trees they took from Lebanon. 14: Pit, the underworld (see Isa. 14.3-23). 15-18: Sheol, the Heb name for the underworld.

¹⁰Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: Because it^b towered high in stature, and thrust its top up among the ^cleafy trees,^c and it was arrogant in its height, ¹¹I delivered it into the hands of the mightiest of nations. They treated it as befitted its wickedness. I banished it. ¹²Strangers, the most ruthless of nations, cut it down and abandoned it; its branches fell on the mountains and in every valley; its boughs were splintered in every watercourse of the earth; and all the peoples of the earth departed from its shade and abandoned it. ¹³Upon its fallen trunk all the birds of the sky nest, and all the beasts of the field lodge among its boughs—¹⁴so that no trees by water should exalt themselves in stature or set their tops among the ^cleafy trees,^c a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "more than for all."

b Heb. "you." c-c Septuagint reads "clouds."

and that no well-watered tree may reach up to them in height. For they are all consigned to death, to the lowest part of the netherworld,^a together with human beings who descend into the Pit.

¹⁵ Thus said the Lord God: On the day it went down to Sheol, I closed^b the deep over it and covered it; I held back its streams, and the great waters were checked. I made Lebanon mourn deeply for it, and all the trees of the field languished on its account. ¹⁶ I made nations quake at the crash of its fall, when I cast it down to Sheol with those who descend into the Pit; and all the trees of Eden, the choicest and best of Lebanon, all that were well watered, were consoled in the lowest part of the netherworld. ¹⁷ They also descended with it into Sheol, to those slain by the sword, together with its supporters,^c they who had lived under its shadow among the nations.

¹⁸ [Now you know] who is comparable to you in glory and greatness among the trees of Eden. And you too shall be brought down with the trees of Eden to the lowest part of the netherworld; you shall lie among the uncircumcised and those slain by the sword. Such shall be [the fate of] Pharaoh and all his hordes—declares the Lord God.

32.1-16: Oracle concerning Pharaoh and Egypt. The introductory date formula identifies 32.1-16 as the tenth major section of the book. In the twelfth year, on the first day of the twelfth month, 1 Adar, 585 BCE, the year following the destruction of the Temple. The oracle is in the form of a dirge. 2-15: The portrayal of Pharaoh's defeat by God draws upon the mythological traditions of God's defeat of the sea dragon Leviathan at creation (Isa. 11.15; 27.1; Pss. 74.12-17; 104.7-9; Job 38.8-11; see also Exod. ch 15). In addition, it evokes the crocodiles of the Nile; Pharaoh is a monster crocodile. The motif of oozing blood (v. 6) recalls the plague of blood (Exod. 7.19-24); the motif of darkness recalls the plague of darkness against Egypt (Exod. 10.21-29) and also the Day of the Lord traditions (Joel 2.1-2; 3.15; Zeph. 1.15).

32 In the twelfth year, on the first day of the twelfth month, the word of the LORD came to me: ² O mortal, intone a dirge over Pharaoh king of Egypt. Say to him:

^d O great beast among the nations,^d you are doomed!

You are like the dragon in the seas,
Thrusting through their^e streams,
Stirring up the water with your feet
And muddying their streams!

³ Thus said the Lord God:

I will cast My net over you
In an assembly of many peoples,
And you shall be hauled up in My toils.

⁴ And I will fling you to the ground,

Hurl you upon the open field.
I will cause all the birds of the sky
To settle upon you.

I will cause the beasts of all the earth
To batten on you.

⁵ I will cast your carcass upon the hills

And fill the valleys with your^d rotting flesh.^d a To which popular belief relegated those who died uncircumcised or by the sword; cf. v. 18.

b Cf. Aramaic 'abulla, "gate." c Heb. "arm."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. e Heb. "your."

6 I will drench the earth
 With your oozing blood upon the hills,
 And the watercourses shall be filled with your [gore].

7 When you are snuffed out,
 I will cover the sky
 And darken its stars;
 I will cover the sun with clouds
 And the moon shall not give its light.

8 All the lights that shine in the sky
 I will darken above you;
 And I will bring darkness upon your land
 —declares the Lord GOD.

9 I will vex the hearts of many peoples
 When I bring your ^ashattered remnants^a among the nations,
 To countries which you never knew.

10 I will strike many peoples with horror over your fate;
 And their kings shall be aghast over you,
 When I brandish My sword before them.
 They shall tremble continually,
 Each man for his own life,
 On the day of your downfall.

11 For thus said the Lord GOD:
 The sword of the king of Babylon shall come upon you.

12 I will cause your multitude to fall
 By the swords of warriors,
 All the most ruthless among the nations.
 They shall ravage the splendor of Egypt,
 And all her masses shall be wiped out.

13 I will make all her cattle vanish from beside abundant waters;
 The feet of man shall not muddy them any more,
 Nor shall the hoofs of cattle muddy them.

14 Then I will let their waters settle,
 And make their rivers flow like oil
 —declares the Lord GOD:

15 When I lay the land of Egypt waste,
 When the land is emptied of [the life] that filled it,
 When I strike down all its inhabitants.
 And they shall know that I am the LORD.

16 This is a dirge, and it shall be intoned;
 The women of the nations shall intone it,

11: The sword of the king of Babylon, Nebuchadnezzar. The nations will witness God's victory (Exod. 15.13–18). 16: Women served as mourners in the ancient Near East (see Jer. 9.17–18).

32.17–33.20: Final oracle concerning the nations and Ezekiel's role as the watchman of Israel. Although 32.17–32 is the last of the oracles concerning Egypt—and the nations in general—the presence of the date formula in 32.17 and the absence of a date formula until 33.21 indicates that 32.17–33.20 forms the eleventh major block of material in the book of Ezekiel. The prophetic word formula, the word of the LORD came to me, identifies oracle reports of this block as 32.17–32 and 33.1–20. It is unlikely that these oracles were originally composed as a single block, but the current arrangement combines the motifs of the downfall of Israel's enemies among the nations, beginning with Egypt, and God's designation of Ezekiel as Israel's watchman. Insofar as the oracle defines his role in relation to the repentance of Israel, this block anticipates the emphasis on the restoration of Israel that follows in 33.21–39.29. Such a combination of motifs suggests a second exodus in the aftermath of the Babylonian destruction of Jerusalem (see also Second Isaiah, Isa. chs 40–55, who stresses the concept of a second exodus at the time of Babylonia's submission to Cyrus of Persia). This combination also helps to better anchor the oracles concerning the nations in their current place.

a-a Septuagint reads "captives."

They shall intone it over Egypt and all her multitude —declares the Lord God.

¹⁷In the twelfth year, on the fifteenth day of the month,^a the word of the LORD came to me: ¹⁸^bO mortal, wail [the dirge]—along with the women of the mighty nations—over the masses of Egypt, accompanying their descent to the lowest part of the netherworld, among those who have gone down into the Pit. ¹⁹^cWhom do you surpass in beauty? Down with you, and be laid to rest with the uncircumcised! ²⁰They shall lie amid those slain by the sword,^c ^b[amid those slain by] the sword [Egypt] has been dragged and left with all her masses.

²¹From the depths of Sheol the mightiest of warriors speak to him and his allies; the uncircumcised, the slain by the sword, have gone down and lie [there]. ²²Assyria is there with all her company, their graves round about, all of them slain, fallen by the sword. ²³Their graves set in the farthest recesses of the Pit, all her company are round about her tomb, all of them slain, fallen by the sword—they who struck terror in the land of the living. ²⁴There too is Elam and all her masses round about her tomb, all of them slain, fallen by the sword—they who descended uncircumcised to the lowest part of the netherworld, who struck terror in the land of the living—now they bear their shame with those who have gone down to the Pit. ²⁵They made a bed for her among the slain, with all her masses; their graves are round about her. They are all uncircumcised, slain by the sword. Though their terror was once spread over the land of the living, they bear their shame with those who have gone into the Pit; they are placed among the slain. ²⁶Meshech and Tubal and all their masses are there; their graves are round about. They are all uncircumcised, pierced through by the sword—they who once struck terror in the land of the living. ²⁷And they do not lie with the fallen uncircumcised warriors, who went down to Sheol with their battle gear, who put their swords beneath their heads and their iniquities^d upon their bones—for the terror of the warriors was upon the land of the living. ²⁸And you too shall be shattered amid the uncircumcised, and lie among those slain by the sword. ²⁹Edom is there, her kings and all her chieftains, who, for all their might, are laid among those who are slain by the sword; they too lie with the uncircumcised and with those who have gone down to the Pit. ³⁰All the 32.17–32: Oracle against Egypt and the nations. In the twelfth year, on the fifteenth day of the month, 15 Adar, 585 BCE. Although the month is not specified, it likely follows from the reference to the twelfth month in 32.1 (see translators' note a on v. 17). Ironically, this date would later mark Shushan Purim, the day following Purim in which the victory over Israel's enemies is celebrated in walled cities, such as Shushan (Susa), the capital of the Persian empire (Esth. 9.6–19). The association highlights the motif of coming restoration. 18: God instructs Ezekiel to wail for Egypt as its people descend into the underworld. 19–32: Egypt will join the nations that have been destroyed. 22: Assyria was conquered by Babylonia and Media during the period 627–609, and was thus representative of a once great nation now totally destroyed. 24: Elam was destroyed by the Assyrians in the mid-7th century BCE. 26: Meshech and Tubal, two unidentified kingdoms in Asia Minor that perhaps were taken by Assyria. 29: Edom was conquered by Babylonia.

a Presumably the twelfth month; cf. v. 1. b Construction of these verses uncertain.
c-c Cf. 31.18 ff. and note a on 31.14. d Emendation yields "shields."

princes of the north and all the Sidonians are there, who went down in disgrace with the slain, in spite of the terror that their might inspired; and they lie, uncircumcised, with those who are slain by the sword, and bear their shame with those who have gone down to the Pit.

³¹ These Pharaoh shall see, and he shall be consoled for all his masses, those of Pharaoh's men slain by the sword and all his army—declares the Lord God. ³² ^a I strike terror into the land of the living; Pharaoh^a and all his masses are laid among the uncircumcised, along with those who were slain by the sword—said the Lord God.

33 The word of the LORD came to me: ² O mortal, speak to your fellow countrymen and say to them: When I bring the sword against a country, the citizens of that country take one of their number and appoint him their watchman. ³ Suppose he sees the sword advancing against the country, and he blows the horn and warns the people. ⁴ If anybody hears the sound of the horn but ignores the warning, and the sword comes and dispatches him, his blood shall be on his own head. ⁵ Since he heard the sound of the horn but ignored the warning, his bloodguilt shall be upon himself; had he taken the warning, he would have saved his life. ⁶ But if the watchman sees the sword advancing and does not blow the horn, so that the people are not warned, and the sword comes and destroys one of them, that person was destroyed for his own sins; however, I will demand a reckoning for his blood from the watchman.

⁷ Now, O mortal, I have appointed you a watchman for the House of Israel; and whenever you hear a message from My mouth, you must transmit My warning to them. ⁸ When I say to the wicked, "Wicked man, you shall die," but you have not spoken to warn the wicked man against his way, he, that wicked man, shall die for his sins, but I will demand a reckoning for his blood from you. ⁹ But if you have warned the wicked man to turn back from his way, and he has not turned from his way, he shall die for his own sins, but you will have saved your life.

¹⁰ Now, O mortal, say to the House of Israel: This is what you have been saying: "Our transgressions and our sins weigh heavily upon us; we are sick at heart about them. How can we survive?" ¹¹ Say to them: As I live—declares the Lord God—it is not My desire that the wicked shall die, but that the wicked turn from his [evil] ways and live. Turn back, turn back from your evil ways, that you may not die, O House of Israel!

30: The princes of the north, probably the Phoenicians, as indicated by the reference to the Sidonians.

33.1-20: Ezekiel's appointment as Israel's watchman. This is a transitional section in the book, bridging the oracles concerning the nations and the end of the book, mostly comprised of prophecies of consolation. This short section contains many echoes of earlier portions of Ezekiel. 1-9: The role of a prophet is like that of a watchman who stands watch over a city; this picks up on the earlier use of the image (see 3:16-21). The watchman is not responsible for the fate of the people if he warns them, but he is fully responsible if he does not. The passage presupposes that the threat of death for the wicked can be reversed if they change their ways. 10-20: This paraphrases many sections of 18:21-32. Ezekiel debates with those who believe that past righteousness can deliver someone who commits wrongdoing later in life and that past wrongdoing will still condemn those who have turned to righteousness.

a-a Emendation yields "because he struck terror in the land of the living, Pharaoh."

¹²Now, O mortal, say to your fellow countrymen: The righteousness of the righteous shall not save him when he transgresses, nor shall the wickedness of the wicked cause him to stumble when he turns back from his wickedness. The righteous shall not survive through ^ahis righteousness^a when he sins. ¹³When I say of the righteous "He shall surely live," and, relying on his righteousness, he commits iniquity, none of his righteous deeds shall be remembered; but for the iniquity that he has committed he shall die. ¹⁴So, too, when I say to the wicked, "You shall die," and he turns back from his sinfulness and does what is just and right—¹⁵if the wicked man restores a pledge, makes good what he has taken by robbery, follows the laws of life,^b and does not commit iniquity—he shall live, he shall not die. ¹⁶None of the sins that he committed shall be remembered against him; since he does what is just and right, he shall live.

¹⁷Your fellow countrymen say, "The way of the Lord is unfair." But it is their way that is unfair! ¹⁸When a righteous man turns away from his righteous deeds and commits iniquity, he shall die ^cfor it.^c ¹⁹And when a wicked man turns back from his wickedness and does what is just and right, it is he who shall live by virtue of these things. ²⁰And will you say, "The way of the Lord is unfair"? I will judge each one of you according to his ways, O House of Israel!

²¹In the twelfth year of our exile, on the fifth day of the tenth month, a fugitive came to me from Jerusalem and reported, "The city has fallen." ²²Now the hand of the LORD had come upon me the evening before the fugitive arrived, and He opened my mouth before he came to me in the morning; thus my mouth was opened and I was no longer speechless.

²³The word of the LORD came to me: ²⁴O mortal, those who live in these ruins in the land of Israel argue, "Abraham was but one man, yet he was granted possession of the land. We are many; surely, the land has been given as a possession to us." ²⁵Therefore say to them: Thus said the Lord GOD: You eat with the blood, you raise your eyes to your fetishes, and you shed blood—yet you expect to possess the land! ²⁶You have relied on your sword, you have committed abominations, you have all defiled other men's wives—yet you expect to possess the land!

²⁷Thus shall you speak to them: Thus said the Lord

33.21-39.29: Oracles concerning the restoration of Israel. The introductory date formula and the absence of another date formula until 40.1 identify 33.21-39.29 as the twelfth major block of the book. Once the prophet is informed of the fall of Jerusalem (33.21-22), the book emphasizes restoration for Israel (33.21-39.29) and the Temple (chs 40-48). Following the notification of Jerusalem's fall, the prophetic word formulas identify six oracular reports in this block, including 33.23-33; 34.1-31; 35.1-36.15; 36.16-37.14; 37.15-28; 38.1-39.29, which take up various aspects and images of Israel's restoration. Many of the prophecies of restoration take images from the earlier prophecies of retribution and overturn them.

33.21-22: In the twelfth year of our exile, on the fifth day of the tenth month, 5 Sivan, 585 BCE. The prophet first receives word of Jerusalem's fall some seven months after the event, at which time he is released from his speechlessness (3.26-27), as was predicted in 24.27. 23-29: Ezekiel counters the claim that those who live in these ruins, desert nomads, will take control of the land. Ezekiel argues that they will be destroyed because they do not observe God's requirements for holy life in the land (see Lev. chs 17-18). For the crimes enumerated here, see ch 18. Following the failure of the Bar Kokhba revolt, Jewish legend states that R. Shimeon dwelt in a cave for twelve years teaching his son the secrets of heaven or Jewish mysticism (b. Shab. 33b). This would help to explain his association with those who are in the strongholds and caves. He is later portrayed as a primary figure in the "Zohar."

a-a Heb. "it." b Cf. Lev. 18.5.

c-c Or "in spite of them," i.e., his righteous deeds.

GOD: As I live, those who are in the ruins shall fall by the sword, and those who are in the open I have allotted as food to the beasts, and those who are in the strongholds and caves shall die by pestilence. ²⁸I will make the land a desolate waste, and her proud glory shall cease; and the mountains of Israel shall be desolate, with none passing through. ²⁹And they shall know that I am the LORD, when I make the land a desolate waste on account of all the abominations which they have committed.

³⁰Note well, O mortal: your fellow countrymen who converse about you by the walls and in the doorways of their houses and say to each other and propose to one another, "Come and hear what word has issued from the LORD." ³¹They will come to you ^ain crowds and sit before you in thrones^a and will hear your words, but they will not obey them. For ^bthey produce nothing but lust with their mouths;^b and their hearts pursue nothing but gain. ³²To them you are just a singer of bawdy songs, who has a sweet voice and plays skillfully; they hear your words, but will not obey them. ³³But when it^c comes—and come it will—they shall know that a prophet has been among them.

34 The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, prophesy against the shepherds^d of Israel. Prophesy, and say to them:

To the shepherds: Thus said the Lord GOD: Ah, you shepherds of Israel, who have been tending yourselves! Is it not the flock that the shepherds ought to tend? ³You partake of the fat,^e you clothe yourselves with the wool, and you slaughter the fatlings; but you do not tend the flock. ⁴You have not sustained the weak, healed the sick, or bandaged the injured; you have not brought back the strayed, or looked for the lost; but you have driven them with harsh rigor, ⁵and they have been scattered for want of anyone to tend them; scattered, they have become prey for every wild beast. ⁶My sheep stray through all the mountains and over every lofty hill; My flock is scattered all over the face of the earth, with none to take thought of them and none to seek them. ⁷Hear then, O shepherds, the word of the LORD! ⁸As I live—declares the Lord GOD: Because My flock has been a spoil—My flock has been a prey for all the wild beasts, for want of anyone to tend them since My shepherds have not taken thought of My flock, 29: In many ways, this v. summarizes the main point of Ezekiel: Contrary to what many people believed, the destruction of Jerusalem does not indicate that God is powerless and has abandoned the Israelites, but that He is powerfully and legitimately punishing them for their deeds. 30–33: God charges that people come to hear Ezekiel, but will not do as he says. That attitude, however, will change with the destruction of the Temple, when Ezekiel is fully legitimated as a true prophet.

34.1–31: Oracle concerning Israel's leaders or "shepherds." Ezekiel contends that Israel's leaders have acted improperly and must be replaced. Yet ultimately this ch does not suggest the abolition of Davidic kingship, but a type of power-sharing between David and God. 1–10: The image of the shepherd is commonly used to portray monarchs in biblical and ancient Near Eastern literature (e.g., David, 1 Sam. 16.11; ch 17; and much earlier, Hammurabi of Babylon). God charges that the "shepherds" have not taken care of the "flock" so that they are "scattered" or sent into exile. 2: Ah, lit. "woe!"

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Lit. "as a people come, and sit before you as My people."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c I.e., the punishment predicted. d I.e., rulers.

e Septuagint and Vulgate, reading the Hebrew consonants with different vowels, translate "milk."

for the shepherds tended themselves instead of tending the flock—⁹hear indeed, O shepherds, the word of the LORD: ¹⁰Thus said the Lord GOD: I am going to deal with the shepherds! I will demand a reckoning of them for My flock, and I will dismiss them from tending the flock. The shepherds shall not tend themselves any more; for I will rescue My flock from their mouths, and it shall not be their prey. ¹¹For thus said the Lord GOD: Here am I! I am going to take thought for My flock and I will seek them out. ¹²As a shepherd seeks out his flock when some [animals] in his flock have gotten separated, so I will seek out My flock, I will rescue them from all the places to which they were scattered on a day of cloud and gloom. ¹³I will take them out from the peoples and gather them from the countries, and I will bring them to their own land, and will pasture them on the mountains of Israel, by the watercourses and in all the settled portions of the land. ¹⁴I will feed them in good grazing land, and the lofty hills of Israel shall be their pasture. There, in the hills of Israel, they shall lie down in a good pasture and shall feed on rich grazing land. ¹⁵I Myself will graze My flock, and I Myself will let them lie down—declares the Lord God. ¹⁶I will look for the lost, and I will bring back the strayed; I will bandage the injured, and I will sustain the weak; and the fat and healthy ones I will destroy.^a I will tend them rightly.

¹⁷And as for you, My flock, thus said the Lord GOD: I am going to judge between one animal and another.

To the rams and the bucks: ¹⁸Is it not enough for you to graze on choice grazing ground, but you must also trample with your feet what is left from your grazing? And is it not enough for you to drink ^bclear water,^b but you must also muddy with your feet what is left? ¹⁹And must My flock graze on what your feet have trampled and drink what your feet have muddied? ²⁰Assuredly, thus said the Lord GOD to them: Here am I, I am going to decide between the stout animals and the lean. ²¹Because you pushed with flank and shoulder against the feeble ones and butted them with your horns until you scattered them abroad, ²²I will rescue My flock and they shall no longer be a spoil. I will decide between one animal and another.

²³Then I will appoint a single shepherd over them to tend them—My servant David. He shall tend them, he shall be a shepherd to them. ²⁴I the LORD will be their God, and My servant David shall be a ruler among them—I the LORD have spoken. ²⁵And I will grant them a 11–16: God acts as the ideal “shepherd” (Ps. 23) who will return the people who have been scattered.

12: This verse is reused in the “unetaneh tokef” prayer of the high holidays, as part of the image of God’s annual judgment of each Jew. 16: The fat and healthy ones I will destroy: They will be destroyed because they neglected the people. Heb reads “’ashmid” (I will destroy), the Greek Septuagint reads “I will tend them rightly” (presumably based on Heb “’eshmor,” [“resh” looks like “dalet” and the two are often confused]; see translators’ note n).

17–22: Ezekiel portrays the leaders as stronger sheep who trample the pasture and dirty the water that others must use, and who push the weaker aside. Thus, some of the flock must be destroyed.

23–31: God’s rule will be manifested in the establishment of a David as ruler (“nasi” rather than “melekh”). Though other biblical passages imagine a descendant of David as the ideal, future king (e.g., Isa. 11.1–10), this passage seems to envisage a return of David himself, the earlier, ideal king. 24: It is possible that the title ruler (“nasi” rather than “melekh”) given here and in chs 40–48 to the king represents a diminution of royal power: He is a ruler, but not a full-fledged king.

25: A covenant of friendship, the idyllic situation for those whom God will return to the land. Contrary to those who assert that “those who live in these ruins” will take over the land (33.23–29), Ezekiel maintains that God will protect the people of Israel.

^a Several ancient versions read “guard.” ^{b-b} Lit. “water that has settled.”

covenant of friendship. I will banish vicious beasts from their land, and they shall live secure in the wasteland, they shall even sleep in the woodland. ²⁶I will make ^athese and the environs of My hill^a a blessing; I will send down the rain in its season, rains that bring blessing. ²⁷The trees of the field shall yield their fruit and the land shall yield its produce. [My people] shall continue secure on its own soil. They shall know that I am the LORD when I break the bars of their yoke and rescue them from those who enslave them. ²⁸They shall no longer be a spoil for the nations, and the beasts of the earth shall not devour them; they shall dwell secure and untroubled. ²⁹I shall establish for them ^aa planting of renown;^a they shall no more be carried off by famine, and they shall not have to bear again the taunts of the nations.^b ³⁰They shall know that I the LORD their God am with them and they, the House of Israel, are My people—declares the Lord God.

³¹For you, My flock, flock that I tend, are men; and I am your God—declares the Lord God.

35 The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, set your face against Mount Seir and prophesy against it. ³Say to it: Thus said the Lord GOD: I am going to deal with you, Mount Seir: I will stretch out My hand against you and make you an utter waste. ⁴I will turn your towns into ruins, and you shall be a desolation; then you shall know that I am the LORD. ⁵Because you harbored an ancient hatred and handed the people of Israel over to the sword in their time of calamity, the time set for their punishment—⁶assuredly, as I live, declares the Lord GOD, ^aI will doom you with blood; blood shall pursue you; I swear that, for your bloodthirsty hatred, blood shall pursue you.^a ⁷I will make Mount Seir an utter waste, and I will keep all passersby away from it. ⁸I will cover its mountains with the slain; men slain by the sword shall lie on your hills, in your valleys, and in all your watercourses. ⁹I will make you a desolation for all time; your towns shall never be inhabited. And you shall know that I am the LORD.

¹⁰Because you thought “The two nations and the two lands shall be mine and we shall possess them”—^calthough the LORD was there^c—¹¹assuredly, as I live, declares the Lord GOD, I will act with the same anger and passion that you acted with in your hatred of them. And I will make Myself known through them when I judge you.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Cf. 36.30.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields “and the LORD heard it.”

27–29: The references to trees and beasts of the earth together with the threat of enemies (see Lev. ch 26) recall God’s role as creator of the natural world and protector in the human world. 31: For you, My flock, flock that I tend, are men; and I am your God, a variation of the covenant formula (11.20; 14.11) that emphasizes that God will be Israel’s ultimate shepherd-king.

35.1–36.15: Edom and Israel.

Ezekiel delivers contrasting oracles to Mount Seir, which personifies Edom, concerning judgment against Edom (see Isa. ch 34; Jer. 49.7–22; Obadiah) and to the mountains of Israel concerning the restoration of Israel. The restoration here, as elsewhere in prophetic literature, envisions the restoration of both kingdoms, Israel and Judah. The oracles presuppose Edom’s actions against Jerusalem at the time of the Babylonian assault (see Obadiah 11–14; Ps. 137.7–9). This may explain their placement here, rather than with the earlier collection of oracles concerning the nations.

35.1–15: The prophecy concerning Edom begins with an initial oracle in vv. 3–4, followed by “proof sayings” in vv. 5–9, 10–13 that establish the grounds for punishment.

2: Mount Seir, the mountain range extending south from the Dead Sea and east of the Arabah that was Edom’s homeland (Gen. 36.8; Num. 24.18; cf. Gen. 33.16).

3–4: The initial oracle calls for Edom’s destruction. 5–9: The first “proof saying” indicates that Edom played a role in Israel’s destruction; it has Edom’s desolation as its theme, and repeats this word several times. 5: Ancient hatred likely alludes to the feud between Esau (= Edom) and Jacob or the long history of conflict between Israel and Edom (Num. 20.14–21). 10–13: The second “proof saying.” 10: The two nations and the two lands: In addition to the conflict between Esau and Jacob, there is a tradition of God’s self-revelation from Seir (Deut. 33.2; Judg. 5.4).

¹²You shall know that I the LORD have heard all the taunts you uttered against the hills of Israel: "They have been laid waste; they have been given to us as prey." ¹³And you spoke arrogantly against Me and ^a"multiplied your words" against Me: I have heard it.

¹⁴Thus said the Lord GOD: When the whole earth rejoices, I will make you a desolation. ¹⁵As you rejoiced when the heritage of the House of Israel was laid waste, so will I treat you: the hill country of Seir and the whole of Edom, all of it, shall be laid waste. And they shall know that I am the LORD.

36 And you, O mortal, prophesy to the mountains of Israel and say: O mountains of Israel, hear the word of the LORD:

²Thus said the Lord GOD: Because the enemy gloated over you, "Aha! Those ancient heights have become our possession!" ³therefore prophesy, and say: Thus said the Lord GOD: Just because ^bthey eagerly lusted to see you become a possession of the other nations round about, so that you have become the butt of gossip in every language and of the jibes from every people^b—⁴truly, you mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord GOD: Thus said the Lord GOD to the mountains and the hills, to the watercourses and the valleys, and to the desolate wastes and deserted cities which have become a prey and a laughing-stock to the other nations round about:

⁵Assuredly, thus said the Lord GOD: I have indeed spoken in My blazing wrath against the other nations and against all of Edom which, ^bwith wholehearted glee and with contempt, have made My land a possession for themselves for pasture and for prey.^b ⁶Yes, prophesy about the land of Israel, and say to the mountains and the hills, to the watercourses and to the valleys, Thus said the Lord GOD: Behold, I declare in My blazing wrath: Because you have suffered the taunting of the nations, ⁷thus said the Lord GOD: I hereby swear that the nations which surround you shall, in their turn, suffer disgrace. ⁸But you, O mountains of Israel, shall yield your produce and bear your fruit for My people Israel, for their return is near. ⁹For I will care for you: I will turn to you, and you shall be tilled and sown. ¹⁰I will settle a large population on you, the whole House of Israel; the towns shall be resettled, and the ruined sites rebuilt. ¹¹I will multiply men and beasts upon you, and they shall increase and be fertile, and I will resettle you as you were formerly, and will 14-15: Edom disappeared following the 6th century as it was overrun by Arab nomads who later became known as the Nabateans.

36.1-15: The oracle concerning the restoration of the mountains of Israel is a deliberate contrast with that against Mount Seir. As a prophecy of consolation, it also reverses some of the imagery of the prophecy of retribution in ch 6. 2: God begins by citing Edom's intentions to take control of Israel. 3-12: The oracle presupposes the depopulation and desolation of the entire land, which must now be replenished. 3, 5: The other nations, lit. "the remnant of the nations"; Edom elsewhere is a symbol for nations that threaten Israel (Isa. ch 34; 63.1-6). 11: They shall increase and be fertile, see Gen. 1.22, 28; 9.7.

a-a Emendation yields "and spoke arrogantly." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

make you more prosperous than you were at first. And you shall know that I am the LORD.¹² I will lead men—My people Israel—to you, and they shall possess you. You shall be their heritage, and you shall not again cause them to be bereaved.

¹³ Thus said the Lord God: Because they say to you, “You are [a land] that devours men, you have been a bereaver of your nations,”^a ¹⁴ assuredly, you shall devour men no more, you shall never again bereave your nations—declares the Lord God. ¹⁵ No more will I allow the jibes of the nations to be heard against you, no longer shall you suffer the taunting of the peoples; and never again shall you cause your nations to stumble^b—declares the Lord God.

¹⁶ The word of the LORD came to me: ¹⁷ O mortal, when the House of Israel dwelt on their own soil, they defiled it with their ways and their deeds; their ways were in My sight like the uncleanness of a menstruous woman. ¹⁸ So I poured out My wrath on them for the blood which they shed upon their land, and for the fetishes with which they defiled it. ¹⁹ I scattered them among the nations, and they were dispersed through the countries: I punished them in accordance with their ways and their deeds. ²⁰ But when they came “to those nations,”^c they caused My holy name to be profaned,^d in that it was said of them, “These are the people of the LORD, yet they had to leave His land.” ²¹ Therefore I am concerned for My holy name, which the House of Israel have caused to be profaned among the nations to which they have come.

²² Say to the House of Israel: Thus said the Lord God: Not for your sake will I act, O House of Israel, but for My holy name, which you have caused to be profaned among the nations to which you have come. ²³ I will sanctify My great name which has been profaned among the nations—among whom you have caused it to be profaned. And the nations shall know that I am the LORD—declares the Lord God—when I manifest My holiness before their eyes through you. ²⁴ I will take you from among the nations and gather you from all the countries, and I will bring you back to your own land. ²⁵ I will sprinkle clean water upon you, and you shall be clean: I will cleanse you from all your uncleanness and from all your fetishes. ²⁶ And I will give you a new heart and put a new spirit into you: I will

13–15: The prophet promises that the land will no longer be open to the accusation of devouring the peoples.

36.16–37.14: The purification and restoration of Israel. The prophetic word formula, the word of the LORD came to me, marks 36.16–37.14 as a unit, although many scholars see them as two separate oracles. Ezek. 36.16–38 speaks of the purification of the defiled people and their land, and 37.1–14 portrays the resuscitation of the dead bones, representing the coming back to life of Israel.

36.16–38: Sanctification of God’s name. Ezek. 36.16–38 (Sephardi lectionary, 36.16–36) serves as the haftarah on Shabbat Parah, the third of the four special Shabbats preceding Passover (III. Meg. 3.4). Num. 19.1–22 discusses the laws of the red heifer, whose ashes are used for purification from corpse contamination, and the haftarah likewise takes up purification. 16–22: The prophet initially employs the imagery of menstrual blood (see Lev. 15.19–30) to portray the impurity of the land. The impurity resulted from the blood which they shed upon their land, which is another metaphor for idolatrous practices (see Ps. 104.38). The exile of the people profanes God’s name in that it may suggest to others that the Israelite God is weaker than other gods, and did not have the power to prevent their exile. 22–32: In order to reclaim God’s name, Israel must be restored. As the vv. make clear, this is done for God’s sake, not because Israel is deserving. 25: God intends to purify Israel with clean water, which is the standard procedure for purification in such cases (Lev. 15.7, 11–12, etc.; see also Lev. 14.5–6, 50–52; Num. 19.17). Women and men immerse themselves in running water for purification (Lev. 11.36). 26–27: Once the land and people are cleansed, God will provide a new heart and a new spirit (11.19; 18.31; Jer. 31.31–34) that will prompt the people to live a holy a I.e., Israel and Judah; cf. 37.15–22.

b Many mss. read “be bereaved”; cf. vv. 13–14.

c-c Lit. “the nations they came to.”

d I.e., the exile of Israel was taken by the nations to be evidence of the LORD’s weakness.

remove the heart of stone from your body and give you a heart of flesh; ²⁷and I will put My spirit into you. Thus I will cause you to follow My laws and faithfully to observe My rules. ²⁸Then you shall dwell in the land which I gave to your fathers, and you shall be My people and I will be your God.

²⁹And when I have delivered you from all your uncleanness, I will summon the grain and make it abundant, and I will not bring famine upon you. ³⁰I will make the fruit of your trees and the crops of your fields abundant, so that you shall never again be humiliated before the nations because of famine. ³¹Then you shall recall your evil ways and your base conduct, and you shall loathe yourselves for your iniquities and your abhorrent practices. ³²Not for your sake will I act—declares the Lord GOD—take good note! Be ashamed and humiliated because of your ways, O House of Israel!

³³Thus said the Lord GOD: When I have cleansed you of all your iniquities, I will people your settlements, and the ruined places shall be rebuilt; ³⁴and the desolate land, after lying waste in the sight of every passerby, shall again be tilled. ³⁵And men shall say, "That land, once desolate, has become like the garden of Eden; and the cities, once ruined, desolate, and ravaged, are now populated and fortified." ³⁶And the nations that are left around you shall know that I the LORD have rebuilt the ravaged places and replanted the desolate land. I the LORD have spoken and will act.

³⁷Thus said the Lord GOD: Moreover, in this I will respond to the House of Israel and act for their sake: I will multiply their people like sheep. ³⁸As Jerusalem is filled with sacrificial sheep during her festivals, so shall the ruined cities be filled with flocks of people. And they shall know that I am the LORD.

37 The hand of the LORD came upon me. He took me out by the spirit of the LORD and set me down in the valley. It was full of bones. ²He led me all around them; there were very many of them spread over the valley, and they were very dry. ³He said to me, "O mortal, can these bones live again?" I replied, "O Lord GOD, only You know." ⁴And He said to me, "Prophecy over these bones and say to them: O dry bones, hear the word of the LORD! ⁵Thus said the Lord GOD to these bones: I will cause breath to enter you and you shall live again. ⁶I will lay sinews upon you, and cover you with flesh, and form skin over you. And I will put breath into you, and you shall live again. And you shall know that I am the LORD!"

life in accordance with God's commandments. 28: The covenant formula signifies the restoration of Israel's relationship with God and the fertility of the land. 33-36: Replenishing of the land to resemble the garden of Eden (Gen. chs 2-3) reveals God to the nations (Exod. 15.13-18). 37-38: Along with the agricultural plenty comes the image of pastoral plenty, which is then related to the abundance of sacrificial sheep that fill Jerusalem during festivals, suggesting that these festivals will once again be celebrated in Jerusalem.

37.1-14: The valley of dry bones. Ezekiel's vision of the dry bones symbolizes the restoration of the people Israel. Ezekiel is speaking metaphorically in this vision; he was not envisioning an actual physical resurrection of the dead. But when, in postbiblical times, the doctrine of resurrection took hold, Ezekiel's vision was interpreted literally. Modern commentators assume that, if the vision has a basis in reality, it is based upon the prophet's observation of a battlefield filled with the bones of dead soldiers. When Shabbat falls during the intermediate days of Passover, 36.37-37.14 (Sephardi lectionary, 37.1-14) is read as the haftarah, most likely because the restoration envisaged here is interpreted as a second, liberating Passover-like experience or because of the rabbinic tradition that the second, ultimate liberation would transpire on Passover. 1-10: God instructs him to prophesy. 1-2: Valley, or "plain," the location of his initial visions (1.22-27). 5, 8, 9: Breath, lit. "wind."

7 I prophesied as I had been commanded. And while I was prophesying, suddenly there was a sound of rattling, and the bones came together, bone to matching bone. 8 I looked, and there were sinews on them, and flesh had grown, and skin had formed over them; but there was no breath in them. 9 Then He said to me, "Prophesy to the breath, prophesy, O mortal! Say to the breath: Thus said the Lord GOD: Come, O breath, from the four winds, and breathe into these slain, that they may live again." 10 I prophesied as He commanded me. The breath entered them, and they came to life and stood up on their feet, a vast multitude.

11 And He said to me, "O mortal, these bones are the whole House of Israel. They say, 'Our bones are dried up, our hope is gone; we are doomed.' 12 Prophesy, therefore, and say to them: Thus said the Lord GOD: I am going to open your graves and lift you out of the graves, O My people, and bring you to the land of Israel. 13 You shall know, O My people, that I am the LORD, when I have opened your graves and lifted you out of your graves. 14 I will put My breath into you and you shall live again, and I will set you upon your own soil. Then you shall know that I the LORD have spoken and have acted"—declares the LORD.

15 The word of the LORD came to me: 16 And you, O mortal, take a stick and write on it, "Of Judah and the Israelites associated with him"; and take another stick and write on it, "Of Joseph—the stick of Ephraim—and all the House of Israel associated with him." 17 Bring them close to each other, so that they become one stick, joined together in your hand. 18 And when any of your people ask you, "Won't you tell us what these actions of yours mean?" 19 answer them, "Thus said the Lord GOD: I am going to take the stick of Joseph—which is in the hand of Ephraim—and of the tribes of Israel associated with him, and I will place the stick of Judah upon it and make them into one stick; they shall be joined in My hand." 20 You shall hold up before their eyes the sticks which you have inscribed, 21 and you shall declare to them: Thus said the Lord GOD: I am going to take the Israelite people from among the nations they have gone to, and gather them from every quarter, and bring them to their own land. 22 I will make them a single nation in the land, on the hills of Israel, and one king shall be king of them all. Never again shall they be two nations, and never again shall they be

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

11–14: Traditional Jewish exegetes find here the idea of the resurrection of the dead before the day of judgment, a fundamental belief of rabbinic Judaism ascribed to Moses (m. Sanh. 10.1; b. Sanh. 90b; see also Isa. 26.19; Dan. 12.1–4). In its plain-sense meaning, the image symbolizes the restoration of Israel to its own land. 11: As elsewhere, Ezekiel refutes a popular proverb (see 8.12 n).

37.15–28: The two sticks.

Ezekiel's symbolic action represents the unification of Israel and Judah under the rule of a Davidic king. Isa. ch 11 also employs the image of a growing tree to symbolize the unification of Israel and Judah under a Davidic king. Ezek. 37.15–28 serves as the haftarah for the parashah of Va-yiggash (Gen. 44.18–47.17), in which Joseph reveals himself to his brothers, thereby reuniting the twelve sons of Jacob. This may be a highly idealized prophecy, since it is unlikely that significant remnants of the ten northern tribes survived until this period. 15–19: On the use of a stick or staff to represent a tribe, see Num. 17.1–26. 16: Judah is the Southern Kingdom, and Joseph is the father of Ephraim, the central tribe of the Northern Kingdom, Israel. Stick, lit. "tree" or "wood." 20–28: Just as one gathers sticks for a fire (Isa. 27.11), God will gather the exiles to establish them as one nation, with David as their king, undoing the damage caused after the death of Solomon with the division of the monarchy. King David, however, is clearly subservient to God: He is God's servant (v. 24) and is called a prince (v. 25) rather than a full-fledged king. 26: Ezekiel draws upon the tradition of permanent Davidic rule (2 Sam. ch 7; Pss. 89; 132), the eternal covenant of friendship, lit. "covenant of peace," granted to the priest Phineas the son of Eleazar and grandson of Aaron (Num. 25.10–13; see also Ezek. 34.25); and upon the role of the Temple as the center of both Israel and all cre-divided into two kingdoms. ²³Nor shall they ever again defile themselves by their fetishes and their abhorrent things, and by their other transgressions. I will save them in all their settlements where they sinned, and I will cleanse them. Then they shall be My people, and I will be their God.

²⁴My servant David shall be king over them; there shall be one shepherd for all of them. They shall follow My rules and faithfully obey My laws. ²⁵Thus they shall remain in the land which I gave to My servant Jacob and in which your fathers dwelt; they and their children and their children's children shall dwell there forever, with My servant David as their prince for all time. ²⁶I will make a covenant of friendship with them—it shall be an everlasting covenant with them—I will establish^a them and multiply them, and I will place My Sanctuary among them forever. ²⁷My Presence^b shall rest over them; I will be their God and they shall be My people. ²⁸And when My Sanctuary abides among them forever, the nations shall know that I the LORD do sanctify Israel.

38 The word of the LORD came to me: ²O mortal, turn your face toward Gog of the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal. Prophecy against him ³and say: Thus said the Lord God: Lo, I am coming to deal with you, O Gog, chief prince of Meshech and Tubal! ⁴I will turn you around and put hooks in your jaws, and lead you out with all your army, horses, and horsemen, all of them clothed in splendor, a vast assembly, all of them with bucklers and shields, wielding swords. ⁵Among them shall be Persia, Nubia, and Put, everyone with shield and helmet; ⁶Gomer and all its cohorts, Beth-togarmah [in] the remotest parts of the north and all its cohorts—the many peoples with you.^c ⁷Be ready, prepare yourselves, you and all the battalions mustered about you, and hold yourself in reserve for them.^d ⁸After a long time you shall be summoned; in the distant future you shall march against the land [of a people] restored from the sword, gathered from the midst of many peoples—against the mountains of Israel, which have long lain desolate—[a people] liberated from the nations, and now all dwelling secure. ⁹You shall advance, coming like a storm; you shall be like a cloud covering the earth, you and all your cohorts, and the many peoples with you.

¹⁰Thus said the Lord God: On that day, a thought will ation (Exod. ch 40; see also Gen. 2.1-3).

38.1-39.29: The Gog and Magog oracles. Ezekiel's oracles against Gog, ruler from the land of Magog, express an apocalyptic scenario of God's victory over the nations that threaten Israel. The original identity of Gog is uncertain, although some have identified him with Gyges, a 7th-century ruler of Lydia in Asia Minor. The land of Magog appears together with Meshech, Tubal, Gomer (Cimmerians in central Asia Minor), and Togarmah (cf. Beth-togarmah, in Armenia), apparently in reference to lands in Asia Minor and Greece. Gomer, Magog, Meshech, and Tubal were sons of Japheth (Gen. 10.2), who is associated with Europe and Asia beyond the Middle East. Ezekiel's oracles draw upon Isaiah's prophecies concerning the downfall of a Mesopotamian ruler (Isa. ch 14) and Jeremiah's prophecies concerning a "foe from the north" (Jer. chs 2-3). The original identity of Gog matters little as later interpreters have understood him to be a transnational symbol of evil, much like Edom and Egypt (e.g., Isa. ch 34; 63.1-6; Mal. 1.2-5; Exod. ch 15) or chaos monsters such as Leviathan or behemoth (Pss. 74; 104; Job chs 38-41). Ezek. 38.18-39.16 is the haftarah for the Intermediate Days of Sukkot when Exod. 33.12-34.26 and the relevant day's passage from Num. ch 29 are read as the Torah portion. Exod. 33.12-34.26 relates God's revelation to Moses and the restoration of the two tablets of the covenant after the golden calf incident, which corresponds to the focus on Israel's restoration in Ezek. 38.1-39.16. 38.1-9: God's initial instructions to Ezekiel present Gog as the leader of a host of nations that threaten Israel, a well-known motif in the tradition about Zion as an invincible fortress (cf. Pss. 2; 46-48). 5: Persia, Nubia (or Ethiopia), and Put (Libya) are distant lands from throughout the ancient Near Eastern world. 10-13: God portrays Gog's intentions to plun-occur to you, and you will conceive a wicked design. ¹¹You will say, "I will invade a land of open towns, I will fall upon a tranquil people living secure, all of them living in unwalled towns and lacking bars and gates, ¹²in order to take spoil and seize plunder"—to turn your hand against repopulated wastes, and against a people gathered from among nations, acquiring livestock and possessions, living at the center of the earth. ¹³Sheba and Dedan, and the merchants and all the magnates of Tarshish will say to you, "Have you come to take spoil? Is it to seize plunder that you assembled your hordes—to carry off silver and gold, to make off with livestock and goods, to gather an immense booty?"

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^b Lit. "dwelling place."
^c I.e., with Gog. ^d Septuagint reads "Me."

¹⁴Therefore prophesy, O mortal, and say to Gog: Thus said the Lord GOD: Surely, on that day, when My people Israel are living secure, you will ^atake note,^a ¹⁵and you will come from your home in the farthest north, you and many peoples with you—all of them mounted on horses, a vast horde, a mighty army—¹⁶and you will advance upon My people Israel, like a cloud covering the earth. This shall happen on that distant day: I will bring you to My land, that the nations may know Me when, before their eyes, I manifest My holiness through you, O Gog!

¹⁷Thus said the Lord GOD: Why, you are the one I spoke of in ancient days through My servants, the prophets of Israel, who prophesied for years in those days that I would bring you against them!

¹⁸On that day, when Gog sets foot on the soil of Israel—declares the Lord GOD—My raging anger shall flare up. ¹⁹For I have decreed in My indignation and in My blazing wrath: On that day, a terrible earthquake shall befall the land of Israel. ²⁰The fish of the sea, the birds of the sky, the beasts of the field, all creeping things that move on the ground, and every human being on earth shall quake before Me. Mountains shall be overthrown, cliffs shall topple, and every wall shall crumble to the ground. ²¹^bI will then summon the sword against him throughout My mountains^b—declares the Lord GOD—and every man's sword shall be turned against his brother. ²²I will punish him with pestilence and with bloodshed; and I will pour torrential rain, hailstones, and sulfurous fire upon him and his hordes and the many peoples with him. ²³Thus will I manifest My greatness and My holiness, and make Myself known in the sight of many nations. And they shall know that I am the LORD.

der nations. 13: Sheba, southern Arabia. Dedan, central Arabia, although some identify it as Rhodes. Tarshish, Tartessos in Spain. 14–16: God portrays Gog's advance with a mighty army against Israel. 16: That distant day (others "in the latter days") normally refers to the future, and many believe the expression to have eschatological meaning in contexts such as this one. That the nations may know Me draws upon earlier traditions (e.g., Exod. ch 15; Isa. 2.1–4; Mic. 4.1–5; Pss. 46–48) in which the nations recognize God's power and sovereignty. 17–23: The Lord GOD portrays the defeat of Gog as a cosmic event that was announced by the prophets. This suggests that by the period of Ezekiel, a collection of prophetic works was available to be studied. 18: On that day is a formula that appears throughout Isa. chs 1–39 (e.g., Isa. 4.2; 7.18, 20, 21, 23). 19–20: The cosmic dimensions of the defeat appear in the quaking of the land, including the fish of the sea, the birds of the sky, the beasts of the field, all creeping things, and every human being, which alludes to the created order as described in the Priestly creation story of Gen. ch 1. 21–22: Likewise, the defeat of Gog by the sword and natural elements, such as torrential rain, hailstones, and sulfurous fire, appeals to God's role as creator as well as to the tradition about the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. chs 18–19). This is logical in this context, which suggests the universal acknowledgment of God.

a-a Septuagint reads "rouse yourself."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

39 And you, O mortal, prophesy against Gog and say: Thus said the Lord GOD: I am going to deal with you, O Gog, chief prince of Meshech and Tubal! ²I will turn you around and ^adrive you on,^a and I will take you from the far north and lead you toward the mountains of Israel. ³I will strike your bow from your left hand and I will loosen the arrows from your right hand. ⁴You shall fall on the mountains of Israel, you and all your battalions and the peoples who are with you; and I will give you as food to carrion birds of every sort and to the beasts of the field, ⁵as you lie in the open field. For I have spoken—declares the Lord GOD. ⁶And I will send a fire against Magog and against those who dwell secure in the coastlands. And they shall know that I am the LORD. ⁷I will make My holy name known among My people Israel, and never again will I let My holy name be profaned. And the nations shall know that I the LORD am holy in Israel. ⁸Ah! it has come, it has happened—declares the Lord GOD: this is that day that I decreed.

⁹Then the inhabitants of the cities of Israel will go out and make fires and feed them with the weapons—shields and bucklers, bows and arrows, clubs and spears; they shall use them as fuel for seven years. ¹⁰They will not gather firewood in the fields or cut any in the forests, but will use the weapons as fuel for their fires. They will despoil those who despoiled them and plunder those who plundered them—declares the Lord GOD.

¹¹On that day I will assign to Gog a burial site there in Israel—the Valley of the Travelers, east of the Sea. It shall block the path of travelers, for there Gog and all his multitude will be buried. It shall be called the Valley of Gog's Multitude. ¹²The House of Israel shall spend seven months burying them, in order to cleanse the land; ¹³all the people of the land shall bury them. ^aThe day I manifest My glory shall bring renown to them^a—declares the Lord GOD. ¹⁴And they shall appoint men to serve permanently, to traverse the land and bury any invaders who remain above ground, in order to cleanse it. The search shall go on for a period of seven months. ¹⁵As those who traverse the country make their rounds, any one of them who sees a human bone shall erect a marker beside it, until the buriers have interred them in the Valley of Gog's Multitude. ¹⁶^aThere shall also be a city named Multitude.^a And thus the land shall be cleansed.

¹⁷And you, O mortal, say to every winged bird and to all the wild beasts: Thus said the Lord GOD: Assemble, 39.4–5: Unburied corpses on the mountains recall the imagery of the vision of dry bones (37.1–14), the death of the Babylonian king in the open (Isa. 14.3–23), and the defeat of Assyria on the mountains of Israel (Isa. 14.24–27). Lying unburied reflected serious shame in antiquity. 9: The victory fires that burn for seven years throughout the land represent the vast amount of weaponry that could not defeat Israel, protected by its God. It also recalls the sabbatical (seven-year) agricultural and economic cycle (Lev. 25.1–7; Exod. 23.10–11 [cf. 21.1–6]; Deut. 15.1–18). 11: The burial of Gog marks the final stage of the cleansing of the land of Israel prior to its restoration. The Valley of the Travelers or the “Valley of those who pass by” is apparently a word play on the Valley of Abarim east of the Dead Sea. Heb for “travelers, passers-by” is “ha’orim.” The Valley of Gog’s Multitude (Heb “gei’ hamon gog”), a wordplay on the Valley of Hinnom, southwest of Jerusalem, which was known for idolatry, the burning of children, and dead bodies (2 Kings 23.10; Jer. 7.30–34). 12–13: The seven months of burial purify the land so that God’s glory or presence may appear. The length of time again emphasizes the vast number of people who were defeated by God. 16: A city named Multitude (Heb “Hamonah”), see above, v. 11 n. 17–29: the feast of the birds and wild animals recalls the covenant curses (e.g., Deut. 28.16–44) in which Israel is fed to the birds and animals, but they are now applied to Israel’s enemies (Lev. 26.22; Deut. 28.26).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

come and gather from all around for the sacrificial feast that I am preparing for you—a great sacrificial feast—upon the mountains of Israel, and eat flesh and drink blood.¹⁸ You shall eat the flesh of warriors and drink the blood of the princes of the earth: rams, lambs, he-goats, and bulls—fatlings of Bashan all of them.¹⁹ You shall eat fat to satiety and drink your fill of blood from the sacrificial feast that I have prepared for you.²⁰ And you shall sate yourselves at My table with horses, charioteers,^a warriors, and all fighting men—declares the Lord God.²¹ Thus will I manifest My glory among the nations, and all the nations shall see the judgment that I executed and the power that I wielded against them.

²²From that time on, the House of Israel shall know that I the LORD am their God.²³ And the nations shall know that the House of Israel were exiled only for their iniquity, because they trespassed against Me, so that I hid My face from them and delivered them into the hands of their adversaries, and they all fell by the sword.²⁴ When I hid My face from them, I dealt with them according to their uncleanness and their transgressions.

²⁵Assuredly, thus said the Lord God: I will now restore the fortunes of Jacob and take the whole House of Israel back in love; and I will be zealous for My holy name.²⁶ They will bear^b their shame and all their trespasses that they committed against Me, when they dwell in their land secure and untroubled,²⁷ when I have brought them back from among the peoples and gathered them out of the lands of their enemies and have manifested My holiness through them in the sight of many nations.²⁸ They shall know that I the LORD am their God when, having exiled them among the nations, I gather them back into their land and leave none of them behind.²⁹ I will never again hide My face from them, for I will pour out My spirit upon the House of Israel—declares the Lord God.

40 In the twenty-fifth year of our exile,^c the fourteenth year after the city had fallen, at the beginning of the year, the tenth day of the month—on that very day—the hand of the LORD came upon me, and He brought me a Lit. "chariots"; Septuagint reads "riders."

b Change of diacritical point yields "forget."

c I.e., the exile of King Jehoiachin; see 1.2.

17: The sacrificial feast reverses the imagery of the banquet on Zion (Isa. 25.6–10). 18–21: These actions enable God to display the divine glory to the nations. 23–24: The image of God hiding His face, namely turning away from Israel and choosing not to help them, is common in the Bible (e.g., Deut. 31.17–18; Ps. 13.2), but is found only here in Ezekiel, and never in Priestly literature. 25: Restore the fortunes of Jacob recalls God's promise to remember the covenant of Jacob (Lev. 26.40–45) if the people confess their iniquity.

40.1–48.35: The vision of the restored Temple in Jerusalem. The date formula identifies 40.1–48.35 as the thirteenth and culminating major section of the book of Ezekiel. In the twenty-fifth year . . . at the beginning of the year, the tenth day of the month, 10 Tishri, 573–572 BCE, Yom Kippur. Ezekiel's vision of the Temple builds upon God's earlier promises (37.24–38) to make a covenant of friendship (peace) with Israel and to place the sanctuary among them forever. This vision provides a literary and conceptual envelope for the book that complements the visions of God's departure and the Temple's destruction in chs 1–7; 9–11 with one of the Temple's restoration and God's return. Ezek. 40.1–43.12 relates instruction concerning the building of the Temple and the return of God's glory; 43.13–47.12 provides instruction concerning the associated structures and activities of the Temple complex; and 47.13–48.35 guides the reestablishment of the land and people of Israel around the Temple. The details of the Temple, its courts, furnishing, and laws and the technical terminology presented here differ in many respects from those for the wilderness Tabernacle (see esp. Exod. chs 25–30; 35–45), Solomon's Temple (1 Kings chs 6–7; 2 Chron. chs 3–4), and the Second Temple (III. Mid. 5). It is unclear if certain of these details reflect the Temple standing in Jerusalem when Ezekiel was exiled in 597, or if they are fanciful. Indeed, the differences in the portrayal of the Temple were, according to the Rabbis, a major discrepancy that Hananiah son of Hezekiah reconciled so that Ezekiel could be included in the biblical canon (b. Shab. 13b). Because of the discrepancies, Jewish tradition regards these chs as Ezekiel's vision of the Third Temple to be built in the days of the Messiah (Seder Olam 26; Rashi; Radak).

there.² He brought me, in visions of God, to the Land of Israel, and He set me down on a very high mountain^a on which there seemed to be the outline of a city^b on the south.^b ³ He brought me over to it, and there, standing at the gate, was a man who shone like copper. In his hand were a cord of linen and a measuring rod. ⁴ The man spoke to me: "Mortal, look closely and listen attentively and note well everything I am going to show you—for you have been brought here in order to be shown—and report everything you see to the House of Israel."

⁵ Along the outside of the Temple [area] ran a wall on every side. The rod that the man held was six cubits long, plus one handbreadth for each cubit; and when he applied it to that structure, it measured one rod deep^c and one rod high.

⁶ He went up to the gate that faced eastward and mounted its steps. He measured the threshold of the gate; it was one rod deep^c—^dthe one threshold was one rod deep.^d ⁷ Each recess was one rod wide and one rod deep, with [a partition of] 5 cubits between recesses; and the threshold of the gate, at the inner vestibule of the gate, was one rod deep. ⁸ ^dFor when he measured it at the inner vestibule of the gate, it was one rod [deep].^d ⁹ Next he measured the vestibule of the gate, and it measured 8 cubits and its supports 2 cubits; the vestibule of the gate was at its inner end. ¹⁰ ^eOn either side of this eastern gate there were three recesses, all three of the same size; of identical sizes were also the supports^f on either side. ¹¹ He measured the opening of the gate and found it 10 cubits wide, while the gate itself measured 13 cubits across.^g ¹² At the fronts of the recesses on either side were ^dbarriers of one cubit;^d the recesses on either side were 6 cubits [deep]. ¹³ Their openings faced each other directly across the gate passage, so that when he measured from rear^h of recess to rear^h of recess he obtained a width of 25 cubits.ⁱ ¹⁴ ^dHe made the vestibule^j—60 cubits—and the gate next to the support on every side of the court.^d ¹⁵ And [the distance] from the front of the outer^h

40.1–43.12: The Temple and the return of God's Presence. 40.1:

The date is 10 Tishri, Yom Kippur, 573–572 BCE. Ezekiel's visions began at the age of thirty in the fifth year of the exile (1.1–3). After twenty years, Ezekiel would be ready to retire from priestly service at the age of fifty (Num. 4.3; 8.23–25). The beginning of the year, not the first day of the year but 10 Tishri or Yom Kippur (the Day of Atonement; Lev. 23.26–32; Num. 29.7–11). Yom Kippur is also the day when the high priest would enter the Holy of Holies and speak the name of God as part of the atonement on behalf of Israel (Lev. ch 16; m. Yoma 3.8; 4.2; 6.2; m. Sot. 7.6; m. Tamid 3.8; 7.2).

2: Ezekiel is transported to Mt.

Zion, the site of the Temple (see Isa. 2.1; Mic. 4.1). The city of Jerusalem is immediately to the south.

3: Ezekiel's guide recalls the bronze-colored creatures that supported God's throne chariot (1.5–14; see also 8.2). The cord of linen and the measuring rod enable the guide to instruct Ezekiel in the dimensions of the Temple structures. 5–47: The Temple walls, gates, and courtyards. 5: Six cubits long, plus one handbreadth for each cubit, over 3 m (10 ft). Whereas the normal cubit is five handbreadths, the cubit used for the construction of the Temple is six handbreadths. The long cubit is about 518 mm or 20.68 in. 6–7: The gate that faced eastward is the main gate of the Temple complex, which faces east toward the sun. It is built according to the basic pattern of the fortified Solomonian gates at Gezer, Hazor, and Megiddo, with an initial threshold of the gate, three recessed chambers on either side, and the inner vestibule of the gate.

9: Its supports, projecting columns that may have served as a door jamb. Windows provide light for the recessed chambers and the vestibule. 14: And the gate next to the support on every side of the court: There were five gates to the women's courtyard of the Second Temple, the two Hulda gates to the south, the Kiponos gate to the west, the Tadi gate to the north, a Cf. Isa. 2.1; Mic. 4.1. b-b Septuagint reads "in the distance."

c In this description, the Hebrew word which ordinarily corresponds to English "width" sometimes designates a measurement from an opening or outer surface inward, and so corresponds to the English "depth"; and the word which ordinarily corresponds to English "length" designates the distance from side to side of a vestibule or a passage, and so corresponds to the English "width."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. e This verse would read well before v. 7.

f In connection with recesses, the "supports" are partitions.

g The opening was perhaps narrowed by a stone on each side for receiving the hinge of a door-leaf. h Meaning of Heb. uncertain. i Since each of the recesses was 6 cubits deep (v. 7a) and the passage in the middle was 13 cubits wide (v. 11).

j Elim here is the same as elam in vv. 16, 21, 22, etc.

gate to the front of the inner vestibule of the gate was 50 cubits. ¹⁶The recesses—and their supports—had windows ^awith frames^a on the interior of the gate complex on both sides, and the interiors of the vestibules also had windows on both sides; and the supports were adorned with palms.

¹⁷He took me into the outer court. There were chambers there, and there was a pavement laid out all around the court. There were 30 chambers on the pavement. ¹⁸The pavements flanked the gates; the depth of the lower^b pavements paralleled that of the gates. ¹⁹Then he measured the width of ^cthe lower^b court, from in front of the inner gate to in front of the outer gate^c—100 cubits.

^aAfter the east [gate], the north [gate].^a ²⁰Next he measured the gate of the outer court that faced north: its length and its width, ²¹its three recesses on either side and its supports, as also its vestibule. It measured, like the first gate, 50 cubits in length and 25 cubits in width. ²²Its windows and [those of] its vestibule, as also its palm trees, corresponded to those of the gate that faced east. [From the outside] one had to climb 7 steps to reach it, and its vestibule was ^dahead of them.^d ²³Like the east gate, the north gate faced a gate leading into the inner forecourt; and when he measured the distance from gate to gate, it was 100 cubits.

²⁴Then he took me to the south side. There was also a gate on the south side, and he got the same measurements as before for its supports and its vestibule. ²⁵Both it and its vestibule had windows like the aforementioned ones. It was 50 cubits long and 25 cubits wide. ²⁶Its staircase consisted of 7 steps; its vestibule was ^eahead of them,^e and its supports were decorated on both sides with palm trees. ²⁷The inner court likewise had a gate facing south; and on the south side, too, he measured a distance of 100 cubits from the [outer] gate to the [inner] gate.

²⁸He now took me into the inner forecourt through its south gate. When he measured this south gate, it had the same measurements as the foregoing. ²⁹Its recesses, its supports, and its vestibule had the same measurements. Both it and its vestibule had windows on both sides; it was 50 cubits long and 25 cubits wide—³⁰^evestibules on both sides, 25 cubits long, 5 cubits wide.^e ³¹Its vestibule, and the eastern gate (m. Mid. 1.3). 17–19: The 30 chambers that line the outer court (the “women’s court”; m. Mid. 2.5) were used by the Levites for various activities (Jer. 35.2–4; Neh. 13.4–14). The lower court and the inner gate rearranges the nouns and adjectives so that they will agree in gender (see translators’ note c-c). They likely refer to the “inner court” in Heb, and “the lower gate,” that would allow entry. 20–27: The gates for the outer court to the north and south are similar to the eastern gate. There is no western gate mentioned here as the Temple occupies the western side of the compound (contra m. Mid. 1.3, which mentions the western gate, but states that the northern gate was not used). Each of the three gates faces corresponding gates to the inner court. 28–37: The south, east, and north gates to the inner forecourt (lit. “the inner court,” or the “court of the Israelites”; m. Mid. 2.6) are similar to those for the outer court. The Second Temple had seven gates to this court (m. Mid. 1.4–5), three to the south (Kindling, Firstlings, and Water Gates); three to the north (Flame, Offering, and Chamber of the Hearth Gates), and one to the east (Nicanor Gate).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b The outer court and its gates were 8 steps lower than the inner ones: v. 34.

c-c In this rendering, the adjectives “lower” and “inner” are construed, not with the nouns they stand next to in the Hebrew, but with those with which they agree in gender.

d-d Septuagint reads “at its inner end.”

e-e Connection unclear; wanting in some Heb. mss. and versions.

however, gave on the outer court.^a Its supports were adorned on either side with palms, and its staircase consisted of 8 steps.

³²Then he took me to the eastern side of the inner forecourt; and when he measured the gate there, he got the same measurements: ³³its recesses, supports, and vestibule had the above measurements. Both it and its vestibule had windows on both sides; it was 50 cubits long and 25 cubits wide, ³⁴and its vestibule gave on the outer court. Its supports were decorated on both sides with palm trees, and its staircase consisted of 8 steps.

³⁵Then he took me to the north gate, and found its measurements to be identical, ³⁶with the same recesses, supports, vestibule, windows on both sides, and a length of 50 cubits and a width of 25 cubits. ³⁷Its supports^b gave on the outer court; its supports were decorated on both sides with palm trees; and its staircase consisted of eight steps.

³⁸A chamber opened into the gate;^c there the burnt offering would be washed. ³⁹And inside the vestibule of the gate, there were two tables on each side, at which the burnt offering, the sin offering, and the guilt offering were to be slaughtered; ⁴⁰while outside—^das one goes up toward^d the opening of the north gate—there were two tables on one side, and there were two tables on the other side of the gate's vestibule. ⁴¹Thus there were four tables on either flank of the gate—eight tables in all—at which [the sacrifices] were to be slaughtered. ⁴²As for the four tables for the burnt offering^e—they were of hewn stone, one and a half cubits long, one and a half cubits wide, and one cubit high—^fon them were laid out the instruments with which burnt offerings and sacrifices were slaughtered.^f ⁴³Shelves,^g one handbreadth wide, were attached all around the inside; and the sacrificial flesh was [laid] on the tables.

⁴⁴There were ^hchambers for singers^h in the inner forecourt: [one] beside the north gate facing south, and one beside the eastⁱ gate facing north. ⁴⁵[The man] explained to me: "The chamber that faces south is for the priests who perform the duties of the Temple; ⁴⁶and the chamber that

38-43: Chambers were built by the vestibule of the gate to prepare sacrificial animals for the burnt offering (Lev. 1.3-17), the sin (or purification) offering (Lev. 4.1-5.13), and the guilt offering (Lev. 5.14-6.7). 44-47: Chambers were placed by the sides of the north and east (Septuagint reads "south") for the priests who have charge of the Temple and the altar. The measurements of the inner court of the Second Temple differ from the 100 square cubit figure given here. M. Middot 2.6 states that they are 135 by 11 cubits.

a I.e., in the inner gates the vestibules were situated at their entrances, and so they were true vestibules, in contrast to the "inner vestibules" of the outer gates.

b Septuagint reads "vestibules"; cf. vv. 31, 34.

c Heb. "gates"; the reference is apparently to the north gate; cf. v. 40 and Lev. 1.11; 4.24; 7.2. d-d Emendation yields "the vestibule at."

e See v. 39. f-f This clause would read well after v. 43.

g Meaning of Heb. uncertain. h-h Septuagint reads "two chambers."

i Septuagint reads "south."

faces north is for the priests who perform the duties of the altar—they are the descendants of Zadok, who alone of the descendants of Levi may approach the LORD to minister to Him.”

⁴⁷He then measured the forecourt: 100 cubits long and 100 cubits broad—foursquare. In front of the Temple stood the altar. ⁴⁸He took me into the portico of the Temple and measured it. The jambs^a of the portico were 5 cubits deep on either side. The width of the gate-opening was ^b[14 cubits, and the flanking wall of the gate was]^b 3 cubits on either side. ⁴⁹The portico was 20 cubits wide^c and 11^d cubits deep, and ^eit was by steps that it was reached. ^fThere were columns by the jambs on either side.

41 He then led me into the great hall. He measured the jambs, 6 cubits on either side; such was the depth^g of each jamb.^g ²The entrance was 10 cubits wide, and the flanking walls of the entrance were each 5 cubits wide. Next he measured the depth [of the hall], 40 cubits, and the width, 20 cubits. ³And then he entered the inner room. He measured each jamb of the entrance, 2 cubits [deep]; the entrance itself, 6 cubits across; and the width of ^h[the flanking wall on either side of]^h the entrance, 7 cubits. ⁴Then he measured the depth, 20 cubits; and the width at the inner end of the great hall was also 20 cubits. And he said to me, “This is the Holy of Holies.”

⁵Then he measured the wall of the Temple. [It was] 6 cubits [thick] on every side of the Temple, and the side-chamber measured 4 cubits [across].ⁱ ⁶The side chambers were arranged one above the other, in 33 sections.^j All around, there were projections in the Temple wall to serve the side chambers as supports, so that [their] supports should not be the Temple wall itself. ⁷The ^kwinding passage^k of the side chambers widened from story to story; ^land since the structure was furnished all over with winding passages from story to story, the structure itself became wider from story to story.^l It was by this means that 40.48–41.26: The Temple.

40.48–41.4: The Temple is constructed according to a three-room pattern, like that of Solomon's Temple (1 Kings ch 6) and other examples of temples and royal palaces from Canaan and elsewhere. The detail offered here may seem excessive, but is much less than the detail offered at the end of Exodus concerning the construction of the Tabernacle. This great concern with detail in both cases reflects the notion that God's house must be custom-built to its exact specification so God will enjoy dwelling there amidst Israel.

40.48: The portico (Heb, “ulam,” 20 by 11 cubits [about 10 m by 6 m, 30 ft by 17 ft]) was an entry or reception room. 41.1: The great hall (Heb, “heikhal,” 40 by 20 cubits [about 20 m by 10 m, 60 ft by 30 ft]) was the main hall where the Temple furnishings are placed.

3: The 2 cubit (1 m, 3 ft) measurement for the entrance conflicts with the 1 cubit (5 m, 18 in) mentioned in m. Middot 4.7. 4: The Holy of Holies (20 by 20 cubits [10 m by 10 m, 30 ft by 30 ft]) was God's throne room, which according to Kings housed the Ark of the Covenant in Solomon's Temple. After the Ark was removed, only a stone remained in the Second Temple (m. Yoma 5.2). Ezekiel does not enter the Holy of Holies as this is restricted to the high priest on Yom Kippur or the Day of Atonement (Lev. ch 16; m. Yoma 5.1).

5–11: Three stories of chambers with thirty chambers each line the walls of the Temple. They have an independent support structure so that they are not supported by the Temple itself. 7: A winding passage, perhaps a spiral staircase, provides access to the upper stories. The supports and stairways occupy more space on the lower stories so that each story is progressively larger.

a i.e., the edges of the flanking walls. b-b Preserved in the Septuagint.

c See note on v. 5. d Septuagint reads “12”; see note d on 41.13.

e-e Septuagint reads “it was reached by ten steps.” f See note on 40.5.

g This sense is demanded by the context; usually, obel means “tent.”

h-h Preserved in the Septuagint.

i i.e., on the ground level; cf. v. 7.

j Lit. “times.” Emendation yields “in three sections of three tiers each,” i.e., one section next to each of the two side walls of the Temple and one next to its rear wall; cf. v. 7.

k-k So Targum; cf. Mishnah Tamid 1.1.

l-l Exact meaning of Heb. uncertain, but for the general sense cf. 1 Kings 6.6a, 8b.

one ascended from the bottom story to the top one by way of the middle one.

⁸I observed that the Temple was surrounded by a raised pavement—the foundations of the side chambers; its elevation was a rod's length, or 6 cubits. ⁹The outer wall of the side chamber was 5 cubits thick, and that which served as a walk between the Temple's side chambers ¹⁰and the chamber complexes^a was 20 cubits wide all around the Temple. ¹¹Of entrances to the side chambers giving on the walk, there was one entrance on the north side and one entrance on the south side; and the space^b of the walk was 5 cubits thick all around. ¹²And the structure that fronted on the vacant space at the [Temple's] western end was 70 cubits deep;^c the walls of the structure were 5 cubits thick on every side; and it was 90 cubits wide.^c

¹³He measured the [total] depth of the Temple, 100 cubits;^d and the depth of the vacant space and of the structure, with its walls, also came to 100 cubits.^e ¹⁴The front side of the Temple, like the vacant space on the east, was 100 cubits wide.^f ¹⁵He also measured the width^c of the structure facing the vacant space in the rear, inclusive of its ledges,^g 100 cubits.

Both the great hall inside and the portico next to the court—¹⁶the thresholds^h—and the windows “with framesⁱ and the ledges^j at the threshold, all over the three parts of each, were completely overlaid^k with wood. There was wainscoting from the floor to the windows, including the window [frames] ¹⁷and extending above the openings, ¹⁸both in the inner Temple and outside.ⁱ And all over the wall, ¹⁹both in the inner one and in the outer,^j ran a pattern.^k ¹⁸It consisted of cherubs and palm trees, with a palm tree between every two cherubs. Each cherub had two faces: ¹⁹a human face turned toward the palm tree on one side

8: Raised pavement, the foundations of the side chambers (cf. “foundations of the earth”; Mic. 6.2; Isa. 24.18; Jer. 31.37; Ps. 82.5).
12–15a: The unidentified building is behind the Temple to the west.
15b–26: The interior decoration of the Temple. 18–19: The cherubs and palm trees carved into the wainscoting or paneling of the interior walls represent images from the garden of Eden. Unlike the cherubim who bear the throne chariot, these have only two faces, a human and a young lion (see 1 Kings 6.29).

a See 42.1 ff. b Emendation yields “parapet.” c See note on 40.5.

d Comprising the 5 cubits of 40.48, the 12 of 40.49 (see note there), the 6 of 41.1, the 40 of 41.2, the 2 of 41.3, the 20 of 41.4, the 6 of 41.5a, the 4 of 41.5b, and the 5 of 41.9.

e The structure was 70 cubits deep and its front and rear walls each 5 cubits thick (v. 12). The remaining 20 cubits are accounted for by the vacant space; cf. 42.1–2.

f To the inside width of 20 cubits (40.49; 41.2–4) must be added on each side: one Temple wall of 6 cubits equals 12; one side-chamber wall of 5 cubits equals 10; one side chamber's inner depth of 4 cubits equals 8; a walk's width of 20 cubits (40.9–10) equals 40; and a parapet's thickness of 5 cubits (v. 11) equals 10; totaling 100 cubits.

g Emendation yields “walls”; cf. v. 12. h-h Septuagint reads “were paneled.”

i-i Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

j Here perhaps designating the door frames, since it is these that (as required by the continuation of the verse) are situated at the threshold and consist of three parts (a lintel and two doorposts). k Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

l-l Meaning perhaps the great hall and the vestibule; cf. v. 5.

and a lion's face turned toward the palm tree on the other side. This was repeated all over the Temple; ²⁰the cherubs and the palm trees were carved on^a the wall from the floor to above the openings.

As regards the great hall, ²¹the great hall had four doorposts; and before the Shrine was something resembling ²²a wooden altar 3 cubits high and 2 cubits long and having inner corners;^b and its length^c and its walls were of wood. And he said to me, "This is the table^d that stands before the LORD."²³ The great hall had a double door, and the Shrine likewise had ²⁴a double door, and each door had two "swinging leaves:"^e two for the one door and two "such leaves"^e for the other. ²⁵Cherubs and palm trees were carved on these—on the doors of the hall—just as they were carved on the walls; and there was a lattice^f of wood outside in front of the portico. ²⁶And there were windows "with frames"^e and palm trees on the flanking walls of the portico on either side [of the entrance] "and [on] the Temple's side chambers and [on] the lattices."^e

42 He took me out, by way of the northern gate, into the outer court, and he led me [westward] up to a "complex of chambers"^g that ran parallel to the northern ends of the vacant space and the structure. ²The width^h of its façade—its north side, the one from which it was enteredⁱ—was 100 cubits, and its depth^h was 50 cubits. ³At right angles to the 20 cubits^j of the inner court and to the pavement of the outer court,^k the complex rose ledge by ledge^l in three tiers. ⁴There was an areaway, 10 cubits wide and ^ma road of one cubit,^m running along the inner-court side of the chamber complex, but its entrances were on its north side. ⁵Here its upper chambers were cut back, because ledges took away from them as construction proceeded backward from the bottom ones and then from the middle ones. ⁶For they were arranged in three tiers, and they had no columns like those of the chambers in the courts.ⁿ That is why the rise proceeded by stages: from the 21-22: Something resembling a wooden altar, the table for the presentation of rows of "showbread" (Exod. 25:23-30; Lev. 24:5-9; 1 Kings 6:20-22). The table that stands before the LORD, i.e., the altar. Talmudic tradition cites this v. to argue that the table in the Jewish home may substitute for the altar (b. Ber. 55a).

42.1-14: Chambers are built in three stories along the walls that define the outer and inner courts.

a Heb. "and."

b Apparently meaning that it had a rim around the top, like the table of Exod. 25:25; see the final note on the present verse.

c Septuagint reads "base."

d Serving to hold the bread of display; cf. Exod. 25:30; 40:22-23; 1 Kings 7:48.

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. f Meaning of Heb. uncertain. g-g Heb. simply "chambers," and so elsewhere. h See note c at 40.6. i-i Lit. "the north entrance"; but cf. v. 4. j I.e., the vacant space; cf. 41.13 with note e. k Cf. 40.17.

l Because this part of the inner court was considerably higher than the outer; 40.28-31 and 41.8, 9b-10.

m-m Septuagint and Syriac read "and 100 cubits long"; cf. vv. 2-3.

n See vv. 8-9 referring to chambers along the west wall.

ground, from the bottom ones, and from the middle ones.⁷ In the outer court, a wall 50 cubits long ran parallel to the chamber complex up to the chambers in the outer court;^a ⁸ for the chambers in the outer court were themselves 50 cubits deep, thus completing 100 cubits alongside the edifice.^b ⁹ Thus, at the foot of that complex of chambers ran a passage^c—^dof a width set by the wall in the outer court^d—which one entered from the east in order to gain access to them from the outer court.

¹⁰ There was another chamber complex to the east^e of the vacant space and the structure, ¹¹ likewise with a passage in front—just like the complex on the north side, with which this one agreed in width^f and depth^f and in the exact layout of its exits and entrances. ¹² Accordingly, the entrances to the chamber complex on the south side were approached from the east by the entrance at the head of ⁹the corresponding passage along the matching wall.^g

¹³ And he said to me, “The northern chambers and the southern chambers by the vacant space are the consecrated chambers in which the priests who have access to the LORD shall eat the most holy offerings. There they shall deposit the most holy offerings—the meal offerings, the sin offerings, and the guilt offerings, for the place is consecrated. ¹⁴ When the priests enter, they shall not proceed from the consecrated place to the outer court without first leaving here the vestments in which they minister; for the [vestments] are consecrated. Before proceeding to the area open to the people,^h they shall put on other garments.”

¹⁵ When he had finished the measurements of the inner Temple [area], he led me out by way of the gate which faces east, and he measured off the entire area. ¹⁶ He measured the east side with the measuring rod, 500 [cubits]—in rods, by the measuring rod. He turned ¹⁷[and] measured the north side: 500 [cubits]—in rods, by the measuring rod. He turned ¹⁸[and] measured the south side: 500 [cubits]—in rods, by the measuring rod. ¹⁹ Then he turned to the west side [and] measured it: 500 cubits—in rods, by the measuring rod. ²⁰ Thus he measured it on the four sides; it had a wall completely surrounding it, 500 [cubits] long ⁱon each side,ⁱ to separate the consecrated from the unconsecrated.

13–14: The priests use the chambers to store and eat “the grain offering” (Lev. 2.1–16), “the sin (or purification) offering” (Lev. 4.1–5.13), and “the guilt offering” (Lev. 5.14–6.7). The priests must leave their holy vestments in these chambers before entering the outer court. 15–20: The Temple complex is 500 rods square. Based on Ezek. 40.5, a rod is 6 cubits so that the Temple complex is 3,000 cubits square (Rashi), or about 1,500 m (4,500 ft) on a side. This is an extremely large area, equivalent to about 500 acres or two-thirds the area of Central Park in New York. Based on Ezek. 45.2, Radak argues that it is 500 cubits square, but does not explain the term rods. (This interpretation, giving an area of about 250 m [750 ft] on a side, or about 14 acres, is the one followed in the NJPS.) The outer wall marks the separation between the holy Temple and the profane world.

a See vv. 8–9 referring to chambers along the west wall.

b Apparently meaning the chamber complex of v. 1.

c So kethib; qere “thing giving access.” d-d Brought up from v. 10 for clarity.

e Septuagint reads “south”; cf. v. 13. f See note c at 40.6.

g-g Exact meaning of Heb. uncertain; the phrase apparently refers to vv. 7–8.

h Cf. 44.19 and note b. i-i Lit. “and 500 wide.”

43² Then he led me to a gate, the gate that faced east. ² And there, coming from the east with a roar like the roar of mighty waters, was the Presence of the God of Israel, and the earth was lit up by His Presence. ³ The vision was like the vision I had seen when I^a came to destroy the city, the very same vision that I had seen by the Chebar Canal. Forthwith, I fell on my face.

⁴ The Presence of the LORD entered the Temple by the gate that faced eastward. ⁵ A spirit carried me into the inner court, and lo, the Presence of the LORD filled the Temple; ⁶ and I heard speech addressed to me from the Temple, though [the] man^b was standing beside me. ⁷ It said to me:

O mortal, this is the place of My throne and the place for the soles of My feet, where I will dwell in the midst of the people Israel forever. The House of Israel and their kings must not again defile My holy name by their apostasy and by the corpses of their kings ^cat their death. ^c ⁸ When they placed their threshold next to My threshold and their doorposts next to My doorposts with only a wall between Me and them,^d they would defile My holy name by the abominations that they committed, and I consumed them in My anger. ⁹ Therefore, let them put their apostasy and the corpses of their kings far from Me, and I will dwell among them forever.

¹⁰ [Now] you, O mortal, describe the Temple to the House of Israel,^e and let them measure its design. But let them be ashamed of their iniquities: ¹¹ When they are ashamed of all they have done, make known to them the plan of the Temple and its layout, its exits and entrances—its entire plan, and all the laws and instructions pertaining to its entire plan. Write it down before their eyes, that they may faithfully follow its entire plan and all its laws. ¹² Such are the instructions for the Temple on top of the mountain: the entire area of its enclosure shall be most holy. Thus far the instructions for the Temple.

¹³ And these are the dimensions of the altar, in cubits where each is a cubit and a handbreadth. The trench^g shall be a cubit deep and a cubit wide, with a rim one span high

43.1–12: The divine Presence (chs 1; 8–11) returns to the Temple complex through the eastern gate from which it had earlier departed (10.19). 5: Ezekiel recalls his inaugural vision, and reports that he is transported to the inner court where he sees the Presence of the LORD filling the Temple (Exod. 40.34–35; 1 Kings 8.10–13). 7: God informs him that this will be the place of My throne (see 1 Chron. 28.2; Ps. 132.7; Isa. 60.13; Lam. 2.1). The corpses of their kings refers to burials of kings near the Temple, which defile it (1 Kings 2.10; 11.43; 2 Kings 21.18, 26). 10–12: God instructs Ezekiel to teach the people the plan for the Temple.

43.13–47.12: The Temple complex and its activities. Instructions concerning structures associated with the Temple and regulations concerning Temple rituals and practice. 43.13–27: The altar (Exod. 20.21–23) is a four-level stepped structure, like a Mesopotamian ziggurat (a type of pyramid). 13: The trench, also rendered “base,” lit. “bosom of the earth” (signifying the placement of the altar at the center of the earth), is 18 cubits (about 9 m, 27 ft) square.

a Six mss. and two ancient versions read “He.”

b I.e., the guide of 40.3 ff.

c-c So with a number of Heb. mss. The usual vocalization yields “their shrines.”

d The south wall of the First Temple enclosure was also the north wall of the royal enclosure; the two communicated by the Gate of the Guard (2 Kings 11.19). Thus Temple and palace could be regarded as a single dwelling (“tent”) in the sense of Num. 19.14, and the death of a king in the palace would defile the Temple. Hence the zoning provisions of 45.2 ff.

e In accordance with the three preceding chapters; cf. 40.4.

f Some of the terms and details in vv. 13–17 are obscure.

g Lit. “bosom.”

around its edge. And the height^a shall be as follows: ¹⁴From the trench in the ground to the lower ledge, which shall be a cubit wide: 2 cubits; from the ^blower ledge to the upper-^b ledge, which shall likewise be a cubit wide: 4 cubits; ¹⁵and the height of the altar hearth shall be 4 cubits, with 4 horns projecting upward from the hearth: 4 cubits. ¹⁶Now the hearth shall be 12 cubits long and 12 broad, square, with 4 equal sides. ¹⁷Hence, the [upper] base^c shall be 14 cubits broad, with 4 equal sides. The surrounding rim shall be half a cubit [high],^d and the surrounding trench shall measure one cubit. And the ramp^e shall face east.

¹⁸Then he' said to me: O mortal, thus said the Lord GOD: These are the directions for the altar on the day it is erected, so that burnt offerings may be offered up on it and blood dashed against it. ¹⁹You shall give to the levitical priests who are of the stock of Zadok, and so eligible to minister to Me—declares the Lord GOD—a young bull of the herd for a sin offering. ²⁰You shall take some of its blood and apply it to ^gthe four horns [of the altar],^g to the four corners of the base, and to the surrounding rim; thus you shall purge it and perform purification upon it. ²¹Then you shall take the bull of sin offering and burn it in the ^hdesignated area^h of the Temple, outside the Sanctuary.

²²On the following day, you shall offer a goat without blemish as a sin offering; and the altar shall be purged [with it] just as it was purged with the bull. ²³When you have completed the ritual of purging, you shall offer a bull of the herd without blemish and a ram of the flock without blemish. ²⁴Offer them to the LORD; let the priests throw salt on them and offer them up as a burnt offering to the LORD. ²⁵Every day, for seven days, you shall present a goat of sin offering, as well as a bull of the herd and a ram of the flock; you' shall present unblemished ones. ²⁶Seven days they shall purge the altar and cleanse it; ⁱthus shall it be consecrated.ⁱ

²⁷And when these days are over, then from the eighth day onward the priests shall offer your burnt offerings and your offerings of well-being on the altar; and I will extend My favor to you—declares the Lord GOD.

14: The lower ledge is 16 cubits (about 8 m or 24 ft) square. The upper ledge is 14 cubits (about 7 m or 21 ft) square. 15: The hearth (Heb "hahar'el," "mountain of God" or "God appeared"; compare Ariel of Isa. 29.1) with 4 horns, see Exod. 27.2; 29.12; 1 Kings 1.50-51; Zech. 2.1-4. The height of the structure is 10 cubits (5 m or 15 ft). 17: Its ramp faces the eastern gate. 18-26: The seven-day consecration of the altar is performed at Sukkot (Tabernacles; 1 Kings 8.65-66; Ezra 3.1-7; but cf. Num. ch 7) and resembles the ordination of priests (Exod. 29.1-37; Lev. ch 8). 20: The purification of the altar with blood is analogous to the sprinkling of blood on the priests at their ordination (Exod. 29.16), on the altar at Yom Kippur to make atonement for the people (Lev. 16.18-19), and on the people to seal the covenant (Exod. 24.1-8). In Priestly literature, blood is understood as a ritual detergent. 22-25: The use of a goat as sin offering for the dedication of the Temple is an innovation. 24: Salt is offered with grain offerings (Lev. 2.13; Num. 18.19). Ezek. 43.10-27 is the haftarah for the parashah of Tetsavveh (Exod. 27.20-30.10), which relates the consecration of the priests and the construction of the altar.

a Lit. "bulge." b-b Lit. "lesser ledge to the greater."

c Heb. 'azarah, which in v. 14 means "ledge." The altar consists of 3 blocks, each smaller than the one below it.

d Half a cubit is identical with the one span of v. 13.

e Leading up to the altar; cf. Exod. 20.23.

f I.e., the guide of 40.3 ff. g-g Heb. "its four horns."

h-h Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "burning place"; cf. Lev. 6.2; Isa. 33.14; Ps. 102.4 (for the word), and Lev. 4.12; 6.4 (for the place).

i Heb. "they." j-j Lit. "they shall fill its hands"; cf. note at Exod. 28.41.

44 Then he led me back to the outer gate of the Sanctuary that faced eastward; it was shut. ²And the LORD said to me: This gate is to be kept shut and is not to be opened! No one shall enter by it because the LORD, the God of Israel, has entered by it; therefore it shall remain shut. ³Only the prince may sit in it and eat bread before the LORD, since he is a prince; he shall enter by way of ^athe vestibule of the gate,^a and shall depart by the same way.

⁴Then he led me, by way of the north gate, to the front of the Temple. I looked, and lo! the Presence of the LORD filled the Temple of the LORD; and I fell upon my face. ⁵Then the LORD said to me: O mortal, mark well, look closely and listen carefully to everything that I tell you regarding all the laws of the Temple of the LORD and all the instructions regarding it. Note well who may enter the Temple and all who must be excluded from the Sanctuary. ⁶And say to the rebellious House of Israel: Thus said the Lord God: Too long, O House of Israel, have you committed all your abominations, ⁷admitting aliens, uncircumcised of spirit and uncircumcised of flesh, to be in My Sanctuary and profane My very Temple, when you offer up My food—the fat and the blood. You^b have broken My covenant with all your abominations. ⁸You have not discharged the duties concerning My sacred offerings, but have appointed them to discharge the duties of My Sanctuary for you.

⁹Thus said the Lord God: Let no alien, uncircumcised in spirit and flesh, enter My Sanctuary—no alien whatsoever among the people of Israel. ¹⁰But the Levites who forsook Me when Israel went astray—straying from Me to follow their fetishes—shall suffer their punishment: ¹¹They shall be servitors in My Sanctuary, appointed over the Temple gates, and performing the chores of My Temple; they shall slaughter the burnt offerings and the sacrifices for the people. They shall attend on them and serve them. ¹²Because they served the House of Israel in the presence of their fetishes and made them stumble into guilt, therefore—declares the Lord God—I have sworn concerning them that they shall suffer their punishment: ¹³They shall not approach Me to serve Me as priests, to come near any of My sacred offerings, the most holy things. They shall bear their shame for the abominations that they committed. ¹⁴I will make them watchmen of the Temple, to perform all its chores, everything that needs to be done in it.

44.1–46.24: Regulations concerning the Temple. 44.1–3: The eastern gate remains closed because God enters the Temple through the eastern gate. The prince eats here. Following 37.25 he is no longer called “king.” 4–14: Those who have engaged in idolatry or abominations are to be excluded from the Temple. 9: Foreigners shall not enter (Lev. 22.25; contrast Isa. 56.3–8). 10–14: Deut. 18.6–8 allows Levites to serve at the altar, but they are disenfranchised here for idolatrous behavior and allowed to perform only secondary service. The passage may presuppose the judgment leveled against the house of Eli (1 Sam. ch 2) for inappropriate Levitical service at the high places mentioned throughout Kings.

a-a This does not contradict v. 2 because the vestibule is at the inner end of the gate; cf. 40.9.

b Heb. “They.”

¹⁵ ^aBut the levitical priests descended from Zadok,^a who maintained the service of My Sanctuary when the people of Israel went astray from Me—they shall approach Me to minister to Me; they shall stand before Me to offer Me fat and blood—declares the Lord God. ¹⁶They alone may enter My Sanctuary and they alone shall approach My table to minister to Me; and they shall keep My charge. ¹⁷And when they enter the gates of the inner court, they shall wear linen vestments: they shall have nothing woolen upon them when they minister inside the gates of the inner court. ¹⁸They shall have linen turbans on their heads and linen breeches on their loins; they shall not gird themselves with anything that causes sweat. ¹⁹When they go out to the outer court—the outer court where the people are—they shall remove the vestments in which they minister and shall deposit them in the sacred chambers;^b they shall put on other garments, lest they make the people consecrated^c by [contact with] their vestments. ²⁰They shall neither shave their heads nor let their hair go untrimmed; they shall keep their hair trimmed. ²¹No priest shall drink wine when he enters into the inner court. ²²They shall not marry widows^d or divorced women; they may marry only virgins of the stock of the House of Israel, or widows who are widows of priests.

²³They shall declare to My people what is sacred and what is profane, and inform them what is clean and what is unclean. ²⁴In lawsuits, too, it is they who shall act as judges; they shall decide them in accordance with My rules. They shall preserve My teachings and My laws regarding all My fixed occasions; and they shall maintain the sanctity of My sabbaths.

²⁵[A priest] shall not defile himself by entering [a house] where there is a dead person. He shall defile himself only for father or mother, son or daughter, brother or unmarried sister. ²⁶After he has become clean, seven days shall be counted off for him; ²⁷and on the day that he reenters the inner court of the Sanctuary to minister in the Sanctuary, he shall present his sin offering—declares the Lord God.

²⁸This shall be their portion, for I am their portion; and no holding shall be given them in Israel, for I am their holding. ²⁹The meal offerings, sin offerings, and guilt offerings shall be consumed by them. Everything proscribed^e in Israel shall be theirs. ³⁰All the choice first fruits

15-31: This passage serves as the haftarah for the parashah of 'Emor (Lev. 21.1-24.23), which relates regulations concerning the sanctity and roles of the priests. 15-16: The Levites of the Zadokite line (1 Kings 2.26-27) shall enter the sanctuary and serve at the altar. 17-31: They shall wear only linen (Exod. 28.39); they shall not wear holy garments outside of the inner court (Ezek. 42.14); they shall trim their hair, but not shave it (Lev. 21.5); they shall not drink wine in the inner court (Lev. 10.9); they shall marry only virgins or the widows of other priests (Lev. 21.7, 13-14); they shall instruct the people concerning holiness and purity (Lev. 10.10-11; Deut. 33.8-10; Hag. 2.10-13); they shall act as judges (Exod. 22.9; Deut. 17.8-9; 19.17; 21.1-5); they shall observe the festivals (Lev. ch 23; Num. chs 28-29; Deut. ch 16); they shall avoid contact with the dead and mourning, except for parents and siblings (Lev. 21.1-3; Num. ch 19); they shall receive no inheritance other than a share of the first fruits and offerings at the Temple (Num. ch 18; Lev. 27.28-29); and they shall not eat meat that was not properly slaughtered (Lev. 22.8).

a-a By contrast with the Levite-priests whose demotion has just been announced.

b Cf. 42.13-14. c Thereby rendering the people unfit for ordinary activity.

d I.e., of laymen. e See Lev. 27.28.

of every kind, and all the gifts of every kind—of all your contributions—shall go to the priests. You shall further give the first of the yield of your baking^a to the priest, that a blessing may rest upon your home.

³¹ Priests shall not eat anything, whether bird or animal, that died or was torn by beasts.

45 When you allot the land as an inheritance, you shall set aside from the land, as a gift sacred to the LORD, an area^b 25,000 [cubits] long and 10,000^c wide: this shall be holy through its entire extent. ²Of this, a square measuring a full 500 by 500 shall be reserved for the Sanctuary,^d and 50 cubits for an open space all around it. ³Of the aforesaid area, you shall measure off, as most holy and destined to include the Sanctuary, [a space] 25,000 long by 10,000 wide; ⁴it is a sacred portion of the land; it shall provide space for houses for the priests, the ministrants of the Sanctuary who are qualified to minister to the LORD, as well as holy ground for the Sanctuary. ⁵Another [space], 25,000 long by 10,000 wide, shall be the property of the Levites, the servants of the Temple—“twenty chambers.” ⁶Alongside the sacred reserve, you shall set aside [a space] 25,000 long by 5,000 wide, as the property of the city; it shall belong to the whole House of Israel. ⁷And to the prince shall belong, on both sides of the sacred reserve and the property of the city and alongside the sacred reserve and the property of the city, on the west extending westward and on the east extending eastward, a portion^b corresponding to one of the [tribal] portions that extend from the western border to the eastern border ⁸of the land.’ That shall be his property in Israel; and My princes shall no more defraud My people, but shall leave the rest of the land to the several tribes of the House of Israel.

⁹Thus said the Lord God: Enough, princes of Israel! Make an end of lawlessness and rapine, and do what is right and just! Put a stop to your evictions of My people—declares the Lord God. ¹⁰Have honest balances, an honest ephah, and an honest bath.⁹ ¹¹The ephah and the bath shall comprise the same volume, the bath a tenth of a homer and the ephah a tenth of a homer; their capacity shall be gauged by the homer. ¹²And the shekel shall weigh 20 gerahs. ^h20 shekels, 25 shekels [and] 10 plus 5 shekels shall count with you as a mina.^h

45.1-9: The size and distribution of the gift sacred to the LORD in the land for the use of the priests, the Levites, Israel, and the prince.

1: According to the Heb text, 10,000 [cubits] wide, the combined land area is 250,000,000 square cubits, slightly more than 13,000 acres. The priestly portion includes the area for the sanctuary.

5-6: The Levites’ portion equals that of the priests, but the portion for the rest of Israel is half of that.

7-9: The portion of the prince is not included in the sacred reserve or city; he may not evict Israel.

10-12: Holiness in the Temple requires just, standardized measures (Lev. 19.35-36; Deut. 25.13-16; cf. Amos 8.5; Mic. 6.10-11; Prov. 11.1; 20.10). The homer equals 229.7 liters (6.524 bushels); the ephah is a dry measure that equals 22.9 liters (20.878 quarts); the bath is a liquid measure that equals 23 liters (6.073 gallons); the shekel is a measure of weight equivalent to 11.42 gm (176.29 grains); 50 shekels constitute a mina equivalent to 571.2 gm (20.148 ounces); if this passage refers to the Mesopotamian mina (see translators’ note h-h), it is then equivalent to 685.44 gm (24.178 ounces).

a See Num. 15.20-21. b Lit. “length.” c Septuagint reads 20,000; cf. vv. 3-5.

d Cf. 42.15 ff. e-e Septuagint reads “for towns to dwell in.”

f Cf. for all the foregoing 48.1 ff.

g The ephah is used for dry measure and the bath for liquid measure.

h-h The Mesopotamian mina of 60 shekels; but meaning of Heb. uncertain.

¹³This is the contribution you shall make: One-sixth of an ephah from every homer of wheat and one-sixth of an ephah from every homer of barley, ¹⁴while the due from the oil—^athe oil being measured by the bath^a—shall be one-tenth of a bath from every kor.—As 10 baths make a homer, so 10 baths make a homer.^b—¹⁵And [the due] from the flock shall be one animal from every 200. [All these shall be contributed] from Israel's products^c for meal offerings, burnt offerings, and offerings of well-being, to make expiation for them—declares the Lord GOD. ¹⁶In this contribution, the entire population must join with the prince in Israel.

¹⁷But the burnt offerings, the meal offerings, and the libations on festivals, new moons, sabbaths—all fixed occasions—of the House of Israel shall be the obligation of the prince; he shall provide the sin offerings, the meal offerings, the burnt offerings, and the offerings of well-being, to make expiation for the House of Israel.

¹⁸Thus said the Lord GOD: On the first day of the first month, you shall take a bull of the herd without blemish, and you shall cleanse the Sanctuary. ¹⁹The priest shall take some of the blood of the sin offering and apply it to the doorposts of the Temple, to the four corners of the ledge^a of the altar, and to the doorposts of the gate of the inner court. ²⁰You shall do the same ^don the seventh day of the month^d to purge the Temple from uncleanness caused by unwitting or ignorant persons.

²¹On the fourteenth day of the first month you shall have the passover sacrifice; and during a festival of seven days unleavened bread shall be eaten. ²²On that day, the prince shall provide a bull of sin offering on behalf of himself and of the entire population;²³ and during the seven days of the festival, he shall provide daily—for seven days—seven bulls and seven rams, without blemish, for a burnt offering to the LORD, and one goat daily for a sin offering. ²⁴He shall provide a meal offering of an ephah^e for each bull and an ephah for each ram, with a hin of oil to every ephah. ²⁵So, too, during the festival of the seventh month, for seven days from the fifteenth day on, he shall provide the same sin offerings, burnt offerings, meal offerings, and oil.

46 Thus said the Lord GOD: The gate of the inner court which faces east shall be closed on the six working days; it shall be opened on the sabbath day and it shall be opened on the day of the new moon. ²The prince shall 13-17: The people pay percentages of wheat (1.5 percent), barley (1.5 percent), oil (1 percent), sheep (.5 percent) as a tax for the meal offerings (Lev. ch 2), the burnt offerings (Lev. ch 1), and the offerings of well-being (Lev. ch 3). 16: The people pay their tax to the prince. The prince in turn is obligated to provide the "sin offerings" (Lev. 4.1-5.13), the "meal offerings" (Lev. ch 2), the "burnt offerings" (Lev. ch 1), and the "offerings of well-being" (Lev. ch 3) on behalf of the people at all "festivals, new moons, sabbaths," and "fixed occasions" (appointed festivals). Ezek. 45.16-46.18 (Sephardi lectionary 45.18-46.15) serves as the haftarah for Shabbat Ha-Īodesh (the Shabbat prior to 1 Nisan or 1 Nisan if it is Shabbat).

18-25: Observance of Passover and Sukkot (Tabernacles). R. Joshua (and Radak) maintain that Israel's redemption from exile will begin in Nisan (b. Rosh Hash. 11a).

18-20: The prescribed ritual is similar to that performed on the 10th of Tishri, Yom Kippur (Lev. ch 16). This would suggest that the Temple was purified twice annually, a custom not attested elsewhere. 19: The blood of a sin offering purifies the Temple, altar, and inner court on the first day of the first month. The animal blood atones for an individual who has sinned inadvertently. Note the smearing of blood on the doorposts at the exodus (Exod. 12.21-28). 21-25: Many regard this as a festival calendar, but it merely specifies the obligation of the prince to provide offerings for Passover (Exod. 23.15; Lev. 23.4-8; Deut. 16.1-8) and Sukkot (Exod. 23.16; Lev. 23.33-36; Deut. 16.13-15). 22: There is no precedent for the offering of a bull on 14 Nisan. 23: The offering of seven bulls and seven rams daily conflicts with Num. 28.19 (cf. b. Menah. 45a). 46.1-18: Regulations concerning offerings and property for the prince and the people. 1-8: The eastern gate is opened on Sabbaths and new moons so that the prince may enter to present his offerings.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b The Vulgate reads "kor"; homer and kor are synonyms. c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Septuagint reads "in the seventh month." e Of choice flour.

enter by way of the vestibule outside the gate, and shall attend at the gatepost while the priests sacrifice his burnt offering and his offering of well-being; he shall then bow low at the threshold of the gate and depart. The gate, however, shall not be closed until evening.³ The common people^a shall worship before the LORD on sabbaths and new moons at the entrance of the same gate.

⁴The burnt offering which the prince presents to the LORD on the sabbath day shall consist of six lambs without blemish and one ram without blemish—⁵with a meal offering of an ephah for the ram, a meal offering of as much as he wishes for the lambs, and a hin of oil with every ephah.⁶ And on the day of the new moon, it shall consist of a bull of the herd without blemish, and six lambs and a ram—they shall be without blemish.⁷ And he shall provide a meal offering of an ephah for the bull, an ephah for the ram, and as much as he can afford for the lambs, with a hin of oil to every ephah.

⁸When the prince enters, he shall come in by way of the vestibule of the gate, and he shall go out the same way.

⁹But on the fixed occasions, when the common people come before the LORD, whoever enters by the north gate to bow low shall leave by the south gate; and whoever enters by the south gate shall leave by the north gate. They shall not go back through the gate by which they came in, but shall go out ^bby the opposite one.^b ¹⁰And as for the prince, he shall enter with them when they enter and leave when they leave.

¹¹On festivals and fixed occasions, the meal offering shall be an ephah for each bull, an ephah for each ram, and as much as he wishes for the lambs, with a hin of oil for every ephah.

¹²The gate that faces east shall also be opened for the prince whenever he offers a freewill offering—be it burnt offering or offering of well-being—freely offered to the LORD, so that he may offer his burnt offering or his offering of well-being just as he does on the sabbath day. Then he shall leave, and the gate shall be closed after he leaves.

¹³Each day you shall offer a lamb of the first year without blemish, as a daily burnt offering to the LORD; you shall offer one every morning.¹⁴ And every morning regularly you shall offer a meal offering with it: a sixth of an ephah, with a third of a hin of oil to moisten the choice flour, as a meal offering to the LORD—a law for all time.

2: The prince shall attend at the gatepost (see 2 Kings 11.14) and bow down at the threshold of the gate. 3: The people bow down at the same gate entrance. 4: The sacrifice of six lambs and one ram conflicts with Num. 28.9. See Num. 28.9-15 for Sabbath and new moon sacrifices. 9-10: The people enter by the north and south gates, but exit by the opposite gates for efficient crowd management. 11-15: The freewill and daily offerings of the prince are specified (Lev. 22.18-23, vow or freewill offering; Num. 28.3-8, daily offering).

^a I.e., those other than the priests, the Levites, and the prince; lit. "the people of the land."

^{b-b} Lit. "straight before him."

¹⁵The lamb, the meal offering, and oil shall be presented every morning as a regular burnt offering.

¹⁶Thus said the Lord GOD: If the prince makes a gift to any of his sons, it shall become the latter's inheritance; it shall pass on to his sons; it is their holding by inheritance.

¹⁷But if he makes a gift from his inheritance to any of his subjects, it shall only belong to the latter until the year of release.^a Then it shall revert to the prince; his inheritance must by all means pass on to his sons.

¹⁸But the prince shall not take property away from any of the people and rob them of their holdings. Only out of his own holdings shall he endow his sons, in order that My people may not be dispossessed of their holdings.

¹⁹Then he led me into the passage at the side of the gate to the sacred chambers of the priests, which face north, and there, at the rear of it, in the west, I saw a space. ²⁰He said to me, "This is the place where the priests shall boil the guilt offerings and the sin offerings, and where they shall bake the meal offerings, so as not to take them into the outer court and ^bmake the people consecrated."^b

²¹Then he led me into the outer court and led me past the four corners of the court; and in each corner of the court there was an enclosure. ²²These unroofed^c enclosures, [each] 40 [cubits] long and 30 wide, were in the four corners of the court; the four corner enclosures had the same measurements. ²³[On the inside,] running round the four of them, there was a row of masonry, equipped with hearths under the rows all around. ²⁴He said to me, "These are the kitchens where the Temple servitors shall boil the sacrifices of the people."

47 He led me back to the entrance of the Temple, and I found that water was issuing from below the platform^d of the Temple—eastward, since the Temple faced east—but the water was running out at the ^esouth of the altar,^e under the south wall of the Temple. ²Then he led me out by way of the northern gate and led me around to the outside of the outer gate that faces in the direction of the east;^f and I found that water was gushing from [under] the south wall. ³As the man went on eastward

16-18: The prince may pass property on to his sons, but property passed to servants reverts to the prince at the jubilee year (Lev. 25.8-17). The prince may not pass property of the people to his own sons. 19-24: Areas for the preparation of sacrifices for consumption by the priests are located in the northwestern area of the inner court. Kitchens for the people are located at the four corners of the outer court. 47.1-12: Once the Temple is reestablished, water streams up from below the platform of the Temple eastward to water the land of Israel. This indicates the role of the Temple as the center of creation (the garden of Eden, Gen. 2.10-14; Ps. 46.4). The course of the water reflects that of the Gihon spring (cf. the Edenic river, Gen. 2.10, 13), and emerges east of the City of David where its waters flow south into the Siloam pool (see 1 Kings 1.32-40; Isa. 7.3; 2 Chron. 32.4). The water flows into the Jordan Valley and eventually into the Arabah (the Jordan rift where the Dead Sea is located) to transform the waters of the Dead Sea into fresh water that supports fish and fruit trees (see Gen. 2.1-14).

a Cf. Lev. 25.10. b-b See note c at 44.19.

c So Mishnah Middoth 2.5; emendation yields "small."

d See note at 9.3.

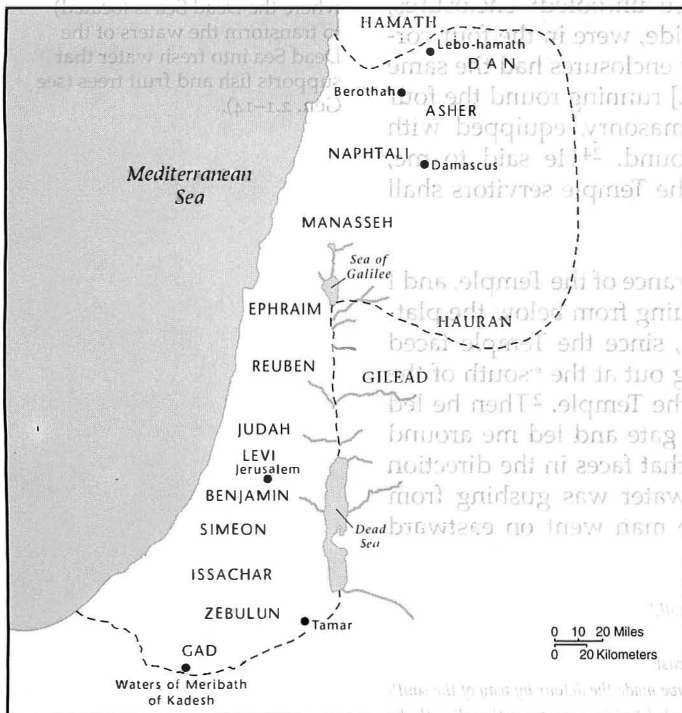

e-e Connection unclear. Emendation yields "southeast."

f The end of the verse explains why he could not have made the detour by way of the south gate. For the reasons why he could not have proceeded to his present position directly by way of the east gate, see 43.1-2; 44.1-2.

with a measuring line in his hand, he measured off a thousand cubits and led me across the water; the water was ankle deep. ⁴Then he measured off another thousand and led me across the water; the water was knee deep. He measured off a further thousand and led me across the water; the water was up to the waist. ⁵When he measured yet another thousand, it was a stream I could not cross; for the water had swollen into a stream that could not be crossed except by swimming. ⁶“Do you see, O mortal?” he said to me; and he led me back to the bank of the stream.

⁷As I came back, I saw trees in great profusion on both banks of the stream. ⁸“This water,” he told me, “runs out to the eastern region, and flows into the Arabah; and when it comes into the sea, into ^athe sea of foul waters;” the water will become wholesome. ⁹Every living creature that swarms will be able to live wherever this stream goes; the fish will be very abundant once these waters have reached there. It will be wholesome, and everything will a-a I.e., the Dead Sea.

Tribal territories in the restored Israel live wherever this stream goes. ¹⁰Fishermen shall stand beside it all the way from En-gedi to En-eglaim; it shall be a place for drying nets; and the fish will be of various kinds [and] most plentiful, like the fish of the Great Sea.

¹¹But its swamps and marshes shall not become wholesome; they will serve to [supply] salt. ¹²All kinds of trees for food will grow up on both banks of the stream. Their leaves will not wither nor their fruit fail; they will yield new fruit every month, because the water for them flows from the Temple. Their fruit will serve for food and their leaves for healing."

¹³Thus said the Lord God: These shall be the boundaries of the land that you shall allot to the twelve tribes of Israel. Joseph shall receive two portions, ¹⁴and you shall share the rest equally. As I swore to give it to your fathers, so shall this land fall to you as your heritage. ¹⁵These are the boundaries of the land:

As the northern limit: From the Great Sea by way of Hethlon, Lebo-^ahamath,^a Zedad, ¹⁶Berathah, Sibram—which lies between the border of Damascus and the border of Hamath—[down to] Hazer-hatticon, which is on the border of Hauran. ¹⁷Thus the boundary shall run from the Sea to ^bHazar-enon,^b to the north of the territory of Damascus, with the territory of Hamath to the north of it. That shall be the northern limit.

¹⁸As the eastern limit: A line between Hauran and Damascus, and between Gilead and the land of Israel: with the Jordan as a boundary, you shall measure down to the ^cEastern Sea.^c That shall be the eastern limit.

¹⁹The southern limit shall run: A line from Tamar to the waters of Meriboth-kadesh, along the Wadi [of Egypt and] the Great Sea. That is the southern limit.

²⁰And as the western limit: The Great Sea shall be the boundary up to a point opposite Lebo-hamath. That shall be the western limit.

²¹This land you shall divide for yourselves among the tribes of Israel. ²²You shall allot it as a heritage for yourselves and for the strangers who reside among you, who have begotten children among you. You shall treat them as Israelite citizens; they shall receive allotments along with you among the tribes of Israel. ²³You shall give the stranger an allotment within the tribe where he resides—declares the Lord God.

47.13-48.35: The reestablishment of the land and people of Israel.

The reconstruction of the Temple and the resulting renewal of creation provide the basis for the reestablishment of the land and people of Israel. 47.13-23: The boundaries of the land are an idealized portrayal of the greatest extent of the Davidic kingdom and that of Jeroboam II (2 Sam. 8.5-12; 2 Kings 14.25; cf. Num. 34). 15-17: The northern border runs from the Mediterranean east to Hazar-enon, between Hamath (modern Hama) to the north and Damascus to the south (Num. 34.7-9). 19: The eastern border runs south through the Jordan Valley to Tamar just south of the Dead Sea (Num. 34.10-12). The southern border runs through the Negev to the Wadi [of Egypt] (modern Wadi el-Arish in the northeastern Sinai peninsula; see Num. 34.3-5) 20: The western border runs along the Mediterranean coast (Num. 34.6). 22: The strangers who reside among you (Heb "gerim," "sojourners") are those who joined the Jewish community during the exile. They live according to the same laws as Israelites (Lev. 19.34; Num. 15.29).

a-a Brought up from v. 16 for clarity.

b-b Apparently identical with Hazer-hatticon in v. 16.

c-c I.e., the Dead Sea.

48 These are the names of the tribes: At the northern end, along the Hethlon road, [from] Lebo-hamath to Hazar-enan—which is the border of Damascus, with Hamath to the north—from the eastern border to the Sea: Dan—one [tribe].

² Adjoining the territory of Dan, from the eastern border to the western border: Asher—one.

³ Adjoining the territory of Asher, from the eastern border to the western border: Naphtali—one.

⁴ Adjoining the territory of Naphtali, from the eastern border to the western border: Manasseh—one.

⁵ Adjoining the territory of Manasseh, from the eastern border to the western border: Ephraim—one.

⁶ Adjoining the territory of Ephraim, from the eastern border to the western border: Reuben—one.

⁷ Adjoining the territory of Reuben, from the eastern border to the western border: Judah—one.

⁸ Adjoining the territory of Judah, from the eastern border to the western border, shall be the reserve that you set aside: 25,000 [cubits] in breadth and in length equal to one of the portions from the eastern border to the western border; the Sanctuary shall be in the middle of it. ⁹The reserve that you set aside for the LORD shall be 25,000 long and 10,000^a wide. ¹⁰It shall be apportioned to the following: The sacred reserve for the priests shall measure 25,000 [cubits] on the north, ^b10,000 on the west, 10,000 on the east, and 25,000 on the south,^b with the LORD's Sanctuary in the middle of it. ¹¹This consecrated area shall be for the priests of the line of Zadok, who kept My charge and did not go astray, as the Levites did when the people of Israel went astray. ¹²It shall be a special reserve for them out of the [total] reserve from the land, most holy, adjoining the territory of the Levites. ¹³Alongside the territory of the priests, the Levites shall have [an area] 25,000 long by 10,000 wide; the total length shall be 25,000 and the breadth 10,000.^c ¹⁴None of it—the choicest of the land—may be sold, exchanged, or transferred; it is sacred to the LORD.

¹⁵The remaining 5,000 in breadth by 25,000 shall be for common use—serving the city for dwellings and pasture. The city itself shall be in the middle of it; ¹⁶and these shall be its measurements: On the north side 4,500 cubits, on the south side 4,500, on the east side 4,500, and on the 48.1-35: The tribes are assigned equal portions of land and are arrayed along the length of the land from north to south. 1-7: The northern tribes are listed from north to south as Dan, Asher, Naphtali, Manasseh, Ephraim, Reuben, Judah. 8-22: The sacred reserve, or Levitical allotment (45.1-9), is defined in detail. The priests are placed in the north, and the sanctuary is assigned to their portion; the Levites are placed to the south of the priests; and the portion reserved for Israel, which contains the city (Jerusalem), is to the south of the Levites. The portion allotted to the prince is on either side of the sacred reserve.

a Emendation yields "25,000"; cf. 45:3-6.

b-b Lit. "10,000 in breadth on the west; 10,000 in breadth on the east; and 25,000 in length on the south."

c Septuagint reads "20,000"; cf. note a.

west side 4,500. ¹⁷The pasture shall extend 250 cubits to the north of the city, 250 to the south, 250 to the east, and 250 to the west. ¹⁸As for the remaining 10,000 to the east and 10,000 to the west, adjoining the long side^a of the sacred reserve, the produce of these areas adjoining the sacred reserve shall serve as food for the workers in the city; ¹⁹the workers in the city from all the tribes of Israel shall cultivate it. ²⁰The entire reserve, 25,000 square, you shall set aside as the sacred reserve plus the city property. ²¹What remains on either side of the sacred reserve and the city property shall belong to the prince. The prince shall own [the land] from the border of the 25,000 ^bof the reserve^b up to the eastern boundary, and from the border of the 25,000 on the west up to the western boundary, corresponding to the [tribal] portions. The sacred reserve, with the Temple Sanctuary in the middle of it ²²and the property of the Levites and the city property as well, shall be in the middle of the [area belonging] to the prince; [the rest of the land] between the territory of Judah and the territory of Benjamin shall belong to the prince.

²³As for the remaining tribes:^c From the eastern border to the western border: Benjamin—one.

²⁴Adjoining the territory of Benjamin, from the eastern border to the western border: Simeon—one.

²⁵Adjoining the territory of Simeon, from the eastern border to the western border: Issachar—one.

²⁶Adjoining the territory of Issachar, from the eastern border to the western border: Zebulun—one.

²⁷Adjoining the territory of Zebulun, from the eastern border to the western border: Gad—one.

²⁸The other border of Gad shall be the southern boundary. This boundary shall run from Tamar to the waters of Meribath-kadesh, to the Wadi [of Egypt], and to the Great Sea.

²⁹That is the land which you shall allot as a heritage to the tribes of Israel, and those are their portions—declares the Lord God.

³⁰And these are the exits from the city: On its northern side, measuring 4,500 cubits, ³¹the gates of the city shall be—three gates on the north—named for the tribes of Israel: the Reuben Gate: one; the Judah Gate: one; the Levi Gate: one. ³²On the eastern side, [measuring] 4,500 cubits—there shall be three gates: the Joseph Gate: one; the Benjamin Gate: one; and the Dan Gate: one. ³³On the southern side, measuring 4,500 cubits, there shall be three

23-29: The southern tribes are listed from north to south as Benjamin, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulun, and Gad. 30-35: There are three gates allotted to the tribes on each side of the square city. The northern gates include Reuben, Judah, and Levi; the eastern gates include Joseph, Benjamin, and Dan; the southern gates include Simeon, Issachar, and Zebulun; and the western gates include Gad, Asher, and Naphtali. The name of the city is The LORD Is There to signify the return of God's Presence (see Isa. 60.14; Jer. 23.6), reversing the divine abandonment that was the theme of the prophecies of retribution in the bulk of the book.

^a I.e., the south side. ^{b-b} Emendation yields "on the east."

^c The tribes not provided for in vv. 1-7, and lying south of the sacred gift.

gates: the Simeon Gate: one; the Issachar Gate: one; and the Zebulun Gate: one. ³⁴And on the western side, [measuring] 4,500 cubits—there shall be three gates: the Gad Gate: one; the Asher Gate: one; the Naphtali Gate: one.

³⁵Its circumference [shall be] 18,000 [cubits]; and the name of the city from that day on shall be "The LORD Is There."

The Twelve

THE TWELVE IS A COLLECTION of twelve prophetic books. A prophetic book is a biblical book that claims association with a prophetic personage of the past (e.g., Isaiah, Micah, Haggai) and presents itself as the LORD's word or communication. Thus all of these books claim to communicate authoritative knowledge about the LORD. Some of these prophetic books are explicitly set in a particular time period in Israel's past, somewhere between what we call the 8th and the 5th centuries BCE. According to the Talmud, "the Men of the Great Assembly [who they believed lived in the Persian period] wrote the Twelve" (b. B. Bat. 15a). Today, many modern scholars think that all or most of the prophetic books in the Twelve—at least in their present form—were either composed or edited after the fall of the monarchy (586 BCE) and probably during the Persian period (539–332). Many scholars argue also that forerunners (or earlier editions) of some of the present books may date to monarchic times, or that the scribes who composed or edited the prophetic books as we know them had access to textual sources and traditions from periods earlier than their own.

There were substantial differences between the monarchic and the postmonarchic periods. Judah was a relatively prosperous kingdom even during the late monarchic period (the last decades before the destruction of the Temple in 586). Jerusalem was at the time an important city whose population (about 25,000 people) was about a third of that of the kingdom as a whole (about 75,000). Postmonarchic Judah was much smaller and poorer. For instance, the population of Jerusalem in the second half of the Persian period (450–332) was likely around 1,500 inhabitants; the highest estimate in historical circles today is 4,500. Likewise, the province of Yehud (Persian Judah) after "the restoration" reached a population peak of probably only 17,000. An analysis of the material culture shows similar differences between late monarchic Judah and Yehud. The once independent Davidic kingdom has become a relatively small and peripheral province in a large empire. Moreover, the fall of Jerusalem and Judah in 586 had more than just political, demographic, and economic impact. From an insider's religious perspective, when the monarchic period came to a close, Jerusalem (= the LORD's city), the Temple (= the LORD's house), and the Davidic dynasty (= the LORD's chosen dynasty) all fell. There is no doubt that the events of 586 represent a watershed in the history of Judah and ancient Israel, and were understood as such by those who lived after these events. Postmonarchic Judahites tried to understand them in terms of divine justice and tried to understand themselves within a world in which their community, from their perspective the LORD's people, was so powerless compared to other nations and compared to the memory of monarchic Judah. These issues loomed large in the postmonarchic communities within which the prophetic books were written or reached their present form, and certainly were of great concern to the people for whom they were written. Reflections on these issues are abundant in many of the prophetic books, often taking one or the other of two forms: either condemnations of monarchic Judah for sins so great that they justified the LORD's destruction of Jerusalem, or messages of hope and restoration that reassured the postmonarchic community that their present situation was not the "end of the road" but only a minor stop in a journey that led to an ideal and glorious future for Israel—and at times, for the nations too.

Prophetic books were written texts meant to be read, or more properly, to be re-read and studied. Texts written to be read many times tend to show more than passing instances of ambiguity or multiple meanings. Such multiple meanings abound in the prophetic books, as the annotations will show. Traditional Jewish interpreters maintained that the prophetic books were given to Israel to call for its repentance and to provide guidance, that is, to affect, not merely to inform, their readers. We know that already in the late biblical period prophetic works were read, re-read, and studied in order to find such guidance.

There are fifteen prophetic books in the Bible: the collection called "the Twelve," plus Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. (Unlike Christian Bibles, the Jewish Bible does not include Daniel as one of the prophets, but rather treats it as one of the Kethuvim, or Writings.) Each of the fifteen prophetic books is associated with a single prophetic personage. In the Twelve, each book displays distinctive language and themes that set it apart from the other books. Thus the human speaker in each book has his own voice. There are no prophetic books associated with women prophets, although there were female prophets in ancient Israel (see, e.g., 2 Kings 2.14, Neh. 6.14). Even the divine speaker, God, is distinctive in each book, with a voice that is similar to (and at times blends with) that of the particular human speaker.

The lengths of the books in this collection range from one chapter to fourteen. Even the longest, however, is short compared to the lengths of the three major prophets, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. Therefore, while each of the major prophets was most likely written on one scroll, the smaller books in the book of the Twelve were at some point collected and copied together on one scroll so no single prophetic work would be lost, since the total length of the Twelve approximates the length of one of the major prophetic books. Nevertheless, they have been read as separate books rather than as chapters of a single book. Rabbinic tradition also tends to treat each prophet separately rather than approaching the twelve as a group.

We do not know when the twelve prophetic books were first collected onto one scroll. The practice is probably implied in Sirach 49.10 (early second century BCE): "May the bones of the Twelve Prophets / send forth new life from where they lie, / for they comforted the people of Jacob / and delivered them with confident hope."

The oldest extant manuscript of the Twelve is among the Dead Sea Scrolls (4QXII^a) and dates from the middle of the 2nd century BCE, therefore indicating that by that time these books were seen as a collection. Significantly, in this manuscript the book of Jonah follows that of Malachi. In fact, the individual and separate character of each book in the collection allowed the order in which the twelve books appear in the scroll to remain fluid for a relatively long period (as was also the case with the later collection called the Kethuvim/Writings; see pp. 1275–79). Eventually the Septuagint (LXX), the ancient Greek translation of the Hebrew Bible, and the Hebrew text tradition itself finalized the order of these books, though in slightly different ways. To be sure, once a collection of books is set in a particular order, the latter cannot but convey a certain meaning. For the book of the Twelve, it is clear that to some extent a chronological principle governs the present order in the Masoretic Text (and in the LXX). For instance, Hosea is the first because he was probably considered the first of four prophets who prophesied at one particular, early period, the others being Isaiah, Amos, and Micah (see b. B. Bat. 14a). The books of Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi, who "came at the end of the prophets," close the collection. It is also clear that chronological concerns were not the only consideration. It seems that an emphatic focus on Jerusalem and Judah was either a main concern for those who ordered the books in the Masoretic tradition or was a background belief that became reflected in the way in which the order of the books was finalized in this tradition.

A significant clue for an understanding of these and the other three prophetic books within their historical setting stands at the conclusion of Hosea. The final verse, 14.10, may be translated as follows: "Those who are wise understand these things [i.e., the prophetic readings included in the book]; those who are discerning know them. For the ways of the LORD are right, and the upright walk in them, but transgressors stumble in them."

Beyond the evaluative, theological language used here, the passage reflects social reality. Since the prophetic books were written texts, only those able to read could approach them directly and thus the literate minority served as brokers of divine knowledge to the vast majority who could not read. These scholars studied the texts, and read and interpreted them to others. Since the texts were considered to communicate (authoritative) knowledge about the LORD, early interpretations of what they meant had to be consistent with what was known about the LORD from other sources. This put certain limitations on the kinds of interpretations that were acceptable. It is likely that the earliest extant summary of the book's message in Sirach 49.10 reflects a predominant way in which they were read in antiquity. The very basic message that they conveyed to their ancient readership is well summarized in that passage: "They [these Twelve Prophets] comforted the people of Jacob and delivered them with confident hope." This is quite remarkable, since divine punishment rather than consolation predominates in these books. (See also the specific introductions to the individual prophetic books.)

The last book of the Twelve and, accordingly the entire section of Nevi'im/Prophets in the Tanakh concludes—whether by design or, more likely, fortuitously—with a passage that includes a verse that may be translated as follows: “Remember the Torah of Moses, my servant, which I commanded him at Horeb for all of Israel—its decrees and statutes” (Mal. 3.22). Such a conclusion communicates a clear sense that this section is subordinate in importance to the Torah of Moses. Maimonides in the Mishneh Torah quoted this verse as a proof that prophets are not supposed to bring a new Torah, but to warn people not to trespass the Torah. This position, of course, is central to traditional Judaism. Critical biblical scholarship, however, has seen the Torah and the prophets as separate corpora originating in the same time period, with differing sets of norms and beliefs.

This very end of the prophetic collection reads: “Lo, I will send the prophet Elijah to you before the coming of the awesome, fearful day of the LORD” (Mal. 3.23–24). In other words, it keeps a tension and balance between the activities of the scholars and of all Israel in their present circumstances and their hopes for a most positive change in the future, a change that was later understood in messianic terms (see the Mishneh Torah of Maimonides). Significantly, the entire Christian Old Testament concludes with Malachi 3.23–24 and calls as it were for the realization of that messianic time. The Tanakh, however, moves from these verses directly to the Writings, to either Psalm 1, whose spirit may be understood as consonant with Hosea 14.10 and Malachi 3.22 or in the Leningrad Codex, for instance, to Chronicles, which recounts and reinterprets the history of Israel in a way that is deeply informed by the Torah.

[EHUD BEN ZVI]

Hosea

AS ITS TITLE SAYS (1.1), the book of Hosea presents itself as the record of the LORD's word to a prophet from the past, Hosea. The book's main themes are Israel's abandoning of the LORD, the LORD's punishment of Israel for that abandonment, calls for Israel's repentance, and hope for an ideal future of reconciliation between the LORD and Israel.

Israel's abandoning of the LORD is expressed in terms of cultic, religious, social, sexual, and political offenses. Horrifying imagery, along with references to Israel's destruction in the land and its exile from it, as well as of the fall of the northern monarchy, express the theme of the LORD's punishment of Israel. To be sure, no prophetic book concerns itself only with condemnation and punishment. All of them convey hope for the future. Hosea does so in highly poetic language. Yet hope for the future, for a restoration of the ideal relation between the LORD and Israel, demands that Israel turn from its ways and return to the LORD, so the call for repentance is an important theme in the book.

It is precisely the element of hope—hope against a background of apparent hopelessness—that has led to the book's wide use in Jewish liturgy. Thus Hosea 14.2–10 is read in the afternoon service of Tish'ah be'av (Sephardic and Yemenite traditions; others read Isa. 55.6–56.8) and on Shabbat Shuvah, the Sabbath between Rosh Ha-Shanah (the New Year) and Yom Kippur (the Day of Atonement). Hosea 2.1–22 is read as the haftarah for the parashah of Be-midbar (Num. 1.1–4.20). Hosea 2.21–22 are recited as part of the ritual for donning tefillin (phylacteries).

Like other prophetic books, Hosea often employs sexual and family metaphors to express the relationship between God and Israel. Within the metaphorical world of the book of Hosea, God takes the role of an angry husband who condemns, severely punishes, and publicly dishonors his unfaithful wife, who fails to recognize how good he had been to her. After his violent and shaming punishment is carried out, he will be willing to accept her back. The basic imagery present here is quite common in the society within which the prophetic books were written (see also Ezek. chs 16, 23), and in the ancient Near East as a whole. To be sure, the text was not written to glorify or justify family violence or violence against women in general, but rather to explain the reasons for the disasters that befell Israel, to persuade the readers to live their lives in a way consistent with the will of the LORD, and to give them hope for the future. Nevertheless, this imagery carries connotations that are very troublesome for many contemporary readers, and especially painful for those who cannot but associate their reading of the text with their, or their acquaintances', personal experiences (see chs 1–3, and particularly 2.3–15). The book is set in the last period of political strength of the Northern Kingdom of Israel—from our perspective, middle 8th century BCE—and the time of its destruction by Assyria in 722 (see 1.1 n.). While the threat of Assyrian invasion hovers in the background, the book focuses on the behavior of Israel, which it evaluates and condemns in very sharp terms. It is a period of apostasy, of social disintegration, of wrongful leadership, of failed alliances, in sum a period in which knowledge of (and reverence for) the LORD are lacking.

The setting of the book of Hosea is one of the earliest among the book of the Twelve, and this may be one of the reasons for its place at the beginning of the collection (for a traditional Jewish text on the matter, see b. B. Bat. 14b).

The book contains an introduction (1.1), and a very significant conclusion that provides a key for its interpretation (14.10; see intro. to The Twelve). The rest of the book consists of two main sections: 1.2–3.5, in which narrative and imageries of whoredom are prominent, and 4.1–14.9, which consists of a set of readings that report prophetic announcements associated with Hosea. An alternative subdivision of 1.2–14.9 is: (a) chs 1–3; (b) chs 4–11; and (c) chs 12–14.

[EHUD BEN ZVI]

1 The word of the LORD that came to Hosea son of Beeri, in the reigns of Kings Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah of Judah, and in the reign of King Jeroboam son of Joash of Israel.

²When the LORD first spoke to Hosea, the LORD said to Hosea, “Go, get yourself ^aa wife of whoredom and children of whoredom; for the land will stray^b from following the LORD.”^a ³So he went and married Gomer daughter of a-a Force of Heb. uncertain. b Lit. “whore away.”

1.1: Superscription. The verse characterizes the book as a particular instance of the LORD’s word (that is, as a prophetic book), set in a particular time and associated with a prophetic character from the past, Hosea. Although the setting for the book is the Northern Kingdom of Israel, its intended readers are the Judeans who may constructively reflect upon the demise of the Northern Kingdom in 722 BCE. References to the kings of Judah precede, and are more elaborate than, the reference to the Israelite king. Further, since Jeroboam (II) died during the reign of Uzziah (2 Kings 15.8), the temporal references do not match. From the Israelite perspective, the book is anchored in the last period of strength of the Northern Kingdom; from the Judahite perspective it is anchored in a period in which Israel moves from a political position of strength to the beginning of its demise in the days of Hezekiah. This double perspective is no mistake, but a rhetorical clue for the reading of the book.

1.2–3.5: Between “proper marriage” and “whoredom.” A set of readings that develops a sharp contrast between Israel’s reported abandonment of the LORD and the future reconciliation between the two. Punishment, however, is presented as a kind of bridge that leads from one situation to another. These passages are built around images of “whoredom” and “(proper) marriage.” 2–8: Was Hosea’s marriage meant to be taken literally or as a figurative symbol of a prophetic message? Among traditional Jewish commentators, some opted for a literal reading (e.g., b. Pes. 87a; Rashi, Abraham) while others maintained that the text is an account of a prophetic vision (Ibn Ezra, Radak, Maimonides). The Targum’s understanding that these verses are figurative becomes clear in its rendition of 2.2–4: “The beginning of the word of the LORD with Hosea: The LORD said to Hosea: Go (and) speak a prophecy against the inhabitants of the idolatrous city, who continue to sin.

Diblain. She conceived and bore him a son,⁴ and the LORD instructed him, “Name him Jezreel; for, I will soon punish the House of Jehu^a for the ^bbloody deeds at Jezreel^b and put an end to the monarchy of the House of Israel.⁵ In that day, I will break the bow of Israel in the Valley of Jezreel.”

⁶She conceived again and bore a daughter; and He said to him, “Name her Lo-ruhamah;^c for I will no longer accept the House of Israel ^dor pardon them.^d (7 But I will accept the House of Judah. And I will give them victory through the LORD their God; I will not give them victory with bow and sword and battle, by horses and riders.)”

⁸After weaning Lo-ruhamah, she conceived and bore a son. ⁹Then He said, “Name him Lo-ammi;^e for you^f are not My people, and ^gI will not be your [God].”^g

2^hThe number of the people of Israel shall be like that of the sands of the sea, which cannot be measured or a Emendation yields “Israel”; cf. next note.

b-b See 1 Kings 21.1–24; 2 Kings 9.21–35. Emendation yields “the Baal days”; cf. 2.15.

c I.e., “Not-accepted”; cf. 2.3, 6, and 25.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields “but will disown them”; cf. 9.15 and elsewhere.

e I.e., “Not-My-People.” f I.e., you and your fellow countrymen.

g-g Cf. 2.25. h Vv. 1–3 anticipate the conclusion of the chapter.

For the inhabitants of the land surely go astray from the worship of the LORD. So he went and prophesied concerning them that, if they repented, they would be forgiven; but, if not, they would fall as the leaves of a fig-tree fall. But they continued to do wicked deeds. And the LORD said to him, “Call their name “scattered ones” [pun on Jezreel, see below] for in a little while I will avenge the blood. . . .” As for the text itself, the main concern (see the final clause of v. 2) is not the reported sexual sins and marital life of Gomer (or of the unnamed woman in ch 3), but rather what they symbolize. These descriptions point to the “harlotry of the land and its inhabitants,” that is, the worship of gods other than the LORD. (The image of God married to Israel predominates in this reading, but occurs elsewhere, e.g., in the books of Jeremiah and Ezekiel.) Moreover, within their larger context in chs 1–3, or even 1–14, these references point toward the possibility of repentance and return to the proper relation between the LORD and Israel (see 2.20–25 for one expression of that proper relation; 3.5 for another). The Targum (quoted above), although clearly departing from the literal meaning, captures the book’s theological message. 2: A more literal translation is “Go take for yourself a wife of whoredom and children of whoredom, for the land whores, whores away from following the LORD.” The emphasis on the motif of “whoredom” and “committing whoredom” is clearly expressed by the quadruple repetition at the center of the verse. Around the center are the references to the woman and the land, i.e., to those who commit whoredom, and at the beginning of the verse, are the “wronged husbands,” namely the LORD and Hosea. The imagery also suggests that the people of Israel are metaphorically the children of the land of Israel and of her husband (the LORD). According to the text even if the father clearly acknowledges that the children are his, he can justifiably reject them because of the behavior of the mother (cf. 2.6). 4: Jezreel is a plain in central Israel and a city on its perimeter. The allusion is likely to the events described in 1 Kings 21.1–24; 2 Kings 9.21–35, involving the murder of Naboth at the instance of Ahab and Jezebel in order to seize his property, and the consequent assassination of their son at the same location. The name Jezreel means “El/God sows,” and has numerous positive connotations; still, “sowing” means “scattering seed.” More important, ancient Heb poets played with the similarly sounding “zr” (sow seed) and “zrh” (scatter)—see Ps. 106.27; Mal. 2.3, and the Targum (see above). The House of Jehu was the last stable dynasty of Israel (ca. 842–747 BCE). After the lengthy rule of Jeroboam II (ca. 788–747), his son Zechariah reigned only six months. He was murdered, and so were almost all the kings who followed him in rapid succession (2 Kings 15.8–25). The reference in this v. to the future punishment of the House of Jehu explains why only Jeroboam is mentioned among the kings of Israel in v. 1.

6–8: Lo-ruhamah may also be translated “Unpitied” and Lo-ammi means “not my people” (see translators’ note e); these are symbolic names that signify the rejection of Israel, but they carry a very suggestive potential for reversal; see 2.1–3. 7: The mention of Judah reflects the Judahite readership of the book of Hosea in its final form.

2.1–25: Denunciations and promises. Condemnations and judgments are interspersed with announcements of future restoration and hope (e.g., Mic. 2.12–13). Readers are made aware of seeds and promises of hope and contemplate their eventual blooming even as they read the most difficult texts about their past sinful deeds. These deeds are “their” deeds, because they identify—at least in part—with the Israel of the book. 1: A reversal of the name and fate given in 1.9. The language here counted; and instead of being told, "You are Not-My-People,"^a they shall be called Children-of-the-Living-God. ²The people of Judah and the people of Israel shall assemble together and appoint one head over them; and they shall rise from the ground^b—for marvelous shall be "the day of Jezreel!"^c

³ Oh, call^d your brothers "My People,"
And your sisters "Lovingly Accepted!"

⁴ Rebuke^d your mother, rebuke her—
For she is not My wife
And I am not her husband—
And let her put away her harlotry from her face
And her adultery from between her breasts.

⁵ Else will I strip her naked
And leave her as on the day she was born:
And I will make her like a wilderness,
Render her like desert land,
And let her die of thirst.

⁶ I will also disown her children;
For they are now a harlot's brood,
⁷ In that their mother has played the harlot,
She that conceived them has acted shamelessly—
Because she thought,
"I will go after my lovers,
Who supply my bread and my water,
My wool and my linen,
My oil and my drink."

⁸ Assuredly,
I will hedge up her^e roads with thorns
And raise walls against her,
And she shall not find her paths.

⁹ Pursue her lovers as she will,
She shall not overtake them;
And seek them as she may,
She shall never find them.
Then she will say,
"I will go and return
To my first husband,
For then I fared better than now."

^a See 1.9.

^b Meaning, perhaps, "from their wretched condition," or "to ascendancy over the land."
^{c-c} I.e., the day when the name Jezreel will convey a promise (2.23-25) instead of a threat (1.4-5).

^d The LORD addresses Hosea and his fellow North Israelites; see 1.9. The mother is the nation; her children the individual North Israelites.

^e Heb. "your." Vv. 8-9 would read well after v. 15.

and that present in the promises to the patriarchs (Gen. 22.17; 32.13) echo each other. 2-3: The motif of a future reunification of (northern) Israel and Judah appears elsewhere in prophetic literature (cf. Ezek. 37.15-28), though it was never fulfilled. Jezreel (see 1.4 n.), a place of bloody deeds and divine punishment, here becomes a place of future redemption. Similarly, the names of the other two children will have their meaning reversed, turning separation from the LORD into future closeness to Him. 4: Rebuke, or "remonstrate." The word carries a legal connotation of arguing against someone in a court of law, while at the same time it means "reprove" in the hope of correcting the behavior of someone (cf. Radak and Targum). This "someone" is metaphorically both the community of Israel and the land. For she is not My wife may be the legal language used in a declaration of divorce. 5: As in Ezek. ch 16, the punishment for the reported sexual promiscuity is sexual shaming. The image of the woman then becomes the image of the land, punished by drying up, losing its fertility. 6: The land/woman will lose her children, the population of the land. Disown (Heb "will not pity") is another play on the name Lo-ruhamah. (Cf. 1.2, 6.) 7: Lovers, male providers whom she loved; a reference to rulers of other nations and particularly to their gods. 8: Heb reads, "your roads . . ." (see translators' note e). The second person conveys direct face-to-face address meant to have an affective impact. 9-15: The other male providers are no good. The wife (Israel) sought material benefits from other males, all the while ignorant of the fact that it was her husband (the LORD) who provided for her. But now her husband (the LORD) will remove His provisions, including food and clothing. Without the clothing, she (Israel) will be naked and shamed. Her joy will disappear and none of her lovers will be able to help her against her angry husband (the LORD).

10 And she did not consider this:
 It was I who bestowed on her
 The new grain and wine and oil;
 I who lavished silver on her
 And gold—which they used for Baal.
 11 Assuredly,
 I will take back My new grain in its time
 And My new wine in its season,
 And I will snatch away My wool and My linen
 That serve to cover her nakedness.
 12 Now will I uncover her shame
 In the very sight of her lovers,
 And none shall save her from Me.
 13 And I will end all her rejoicing:
 Her festivals, new moons, and sabbaths—
 All her festive seasons.
 14 I will lay waste her vines and her fig trees,
 Which she thinks are a fee
 She received from her lovers;
 I will turn them into brushwood,
 And beasts of the field shall devour them.
 15 Thus will I punish her
 For the days of the Baalim,
 On which she brought them offerings;
 When, decked with earrings and jewels,
 She would go after her lovers,
 Forgetting Me —declares the LORD.

16 Assuredly,
 I will speak coaxingly to her
 And lead her through the wilderness^a
 And speak to her tenderly.
 17 I will give her her vineyards from there,
 And the Valley of Achor^b as a ^cplowland of hope.^c
 There she shall respond as in the days of her youth,
 When she came up from the land of Egypt.
 18 And in that day —declares the LORD—
 You will call [Me] Ishi,^d
 And no more will you call Me Baali.^d 19 For I will remove the names of the Baalim from her mouth,
 And they shall nevermore be mentioned by name.

15: Days of the Baalim, festivals and other occasions in which offerings were sacrificed to different Baals (Baalim is the plural of the deity Baal). "Baal" means "lord" or "owner" and in the Bible often refers to a Phoenician or Canaanite god of the same name. The term was also used as a title for the LORD (see 2 Sam. 5.20; 1 Chron. 14.11), though the book of Hosea does not support that practice (2.18). "Baal" can also mean "husband" and, as a verb, "marry" or "take a woman as a sexual partner." Baals stand for the unidentified "lovers" mentioned before, and all the connotations that the term carries suit well the general atmosphere permeating the text. 16–25: Marital reconciliation. The husband will bring the wife (Israel) back. The wife will be faithful forever, and the husband (the LORD) will provide, i.e., the fertility of the land will return. All of nature participates in the renewal of the marital covenant. 17: Valley of Achor, see Josh. 7.24–26; 15.7; Isa. 65.10. The name may be translated as "Valley of Trouble." Significantly, this valley will be transformed into a "Door of Hope" (see translators' note c-c), Heb "Petach Tikwah," the name of a city in modern Israel. 18: "You will call Me 'my Man' (or husband), and no more will you call Me 'my Baal' (or husband)." Although the two terms can both mean "husband," their connotations are very different. The text uses the wordplay to project an image of a future rejection of the cult of Baal (i.e., a Phoenician and Canaanite god) and Israel's acceptance of the LORD as her "Man."

a I.e., her ravaged land (see vv. 5, 10–11, 14); so Ibn Ezra.

b A desolate region; cf. Isa. 65.10; see further Josh. 7.25–26.

c-c Connecting pethalḥ with pitalḥ "to plow" (see Isa. 28.24). Meaning of Heb. uncertain; others "door of hope."

d Both Ishi and Baali mean "my husband," but the latter also means "my Baal."

²⁰In that day, I will make a covenant for them with the beasts of the field, the birds of the air, and the creeping things of the ground; I will also banish^a bow, sword, and war from the land. Thus I will let them lie down in safety.

- 21 And I will espouse you forever:
I will espouse you ^bwith righteousness and justice,
And with goodness and mercy,
22 And I will espouse you with faithfulness;^b
Then you shall be devoted to the LORD.
23 In that day,
I will respond —declares the LORD—
I will respond to the sky,
And it shall respond to the earth;
24 And the earth shall respond
With new grain and wine and oil,
And they shall respond to Jezreel.^c
25 I will sow her in the land as My own;
And take Lo-ruhamah back in favor;
And I will say to Lo-ammi, “You are My people,”
And he will respond, “[You are] my God.”

3 The LORD said to me further, “Go, ^dbefriend a woman who, while befriended by a companion, consorts with others, just as the LORD befriends the Israelites,^d but they turn ^eto other gods and love the cups of the grape.”^e

²Then I hired her for fifteen [shekels of] silver, a homer of barley, and ^fa lethech of barley;^f ³and I stipulated with her, ^g“In return,^g you are to go a long time without either fornicating or marrying; even I [shall not cohabit] with you.”

⁴For the Israelites shall go a long time without king and without officials, without sacrifice^b and without cult pillars, and without ephod and teraphim. ⁵Afterward, the Israelites will turn back and will seek the LORD their God and David their king—and they will thrill over the LORD and over His bounty in the days to come.

a Lit. “break.”

b-b As the bride-price which the bridegroom will pay, He will confer these qualities on her, so that she will never offend again.

c I.e., “God sows.” The names of Hosea’s children (1.3–8) are applied here to Israel.

d-d For “befriend,” see Deut. 10.19. For God’s befriending Israel, see Hos. 2.10.

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields “to other gods.” And so I befriended a woman of lust.”

f-f Septuagint reads “a jar of wine.”

g-g Lit. “for me.”

h Emendation yields “altar.”

21–22: These verses are well known from Jewish liturgy. They are usually translated more literally, “And I will betroth you [i.e., Israel] to Me for ever; I will betroth you to Me in righteousness and in justice, in kindness and in mercy. I will betroth you to Me in faithfulness; and you shall know the LORD.” Traditional Jews say these verses when winding the straps of the tefillin [phylacteries] three times round the middle finger.

23–25: These verses emphasize that the Israelites were wrong to assume that Baal was the fertility god—the LORD controls fertility.

3.1–5: Another passage dealing with a marriage metaphor. 1: An alternative translation would be: “Go again, love a woman who has a lover and is an adulteress. [This is just] as the love of LORD for the Children of Israel, who turn to other gods.” Scholars disagree on whether it refers to Gomer (1.3) or to another woman. The text leaves her unnamed and by doing so leaves both options open.

Clearly, though, Hosea’s relationship to this woman symbolizes again God’s relationship to Israel.

2: A homer is probably about 6.5 bushels (230 liters), and a lethech is half a homer. 5: References to God and (human) kings are not rare in the Tanakh. Still it is important to note that the book in its final form tells its readers of a northern (Israelite) prophet who, even though the Israelite monarchy is at its political zenith, not only perceives that its end is near, but also that the Israelites will turn back to David their king, the dynasty of the Southern Kingdom. (See similarly the final version of the conclusion of Amos.)

4 Hear the word of the LORD,
 O people of Israel!
 For the LORD has a case
 Against the inhabitants of this land,
 Because there is no honesty and no goodness
 And no obedience to God in the land.
2 [False] swearing, dishonesty, and murder,
 And theft and adultery are rife;
 Crime follows upon crime!
3 For that, the earth is withered:
 Everything that dwells on it languishes—
 Beasts of the field and birds of the sky—
 Even the fish of the sea perish.
4 "Let no man rebuke, let no man protest!"
 *For this your people has a grievance against [you],
 O priest!^a
5 So you shall stumble by day,
 And by night ^ba prophet^b shall stumble as well,
 And I will destroy your kindred.^c 6 My people is destroyed because of [your] disobedience!
 Because you have rejected obedience,
 I reject you as My priest;
 Because you have spurned the teaching of your God,
 I, in turn, will spurn your children.
7 The more they increased, the more they sinned against Me:
 I will change their dignity to dishonor.
8 They feed on My people's sin offerings,
 And so they desire its iniquity.
9 Therefore, the people shall fare like the priests:
 I will punish it for its conduct,
 I will requite it for its deeds.
10 Truly, they shall eat, but not be sated;
 They shall swill,^d but not be satisfied,
 Because they have forsaken the LORD

a-a For failing to reprove; but meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Emendation yields "your children"; cf. v. 6 end.

c Lit. "mother." d For this meaning of hiznah cf. v. 18.

4.1-14.9: Reports of prophetic announcements associated with Hosea. The remainder of the book consists of a collection of prophetic speeches that accuse monarchic Israel and Judah of unfaithfulness, announce the judgment that will be passed on the people, but also foreshadow the hope of restoration and return. Most of this material (4.1-12.1; 12.7-14.9) deals with Israel; 12.3-7 focuses on Judah.

4.1-19: On Israel's corruption, rejection of divine teaching and worship, harlotry, and divine punishment. 1: Hear the word of the LORD: This phrase or variants of it conveys the legitimacy and importance of what follows. In addition, it often serves to mark the beginning of a new section (cf. 5.1). In the world of the book, people are supposed to hear "this word," but in the actual world the readers of the book are asked to read and study "the word of the LORD" and to convey it to those who cannot read it by themselves. 2: The center of the Decalogue may be paraphrased here. 5: The v. ends with "I will destroy your mother" (see translators' note c), which may refer to the mother of the priest (possibly all priests?), and the land (Gomer) as the mother of Israel; see the opening of v. 6. The former would point to the punishment of the mother for the sin of her children. The text carries both meanings, which are complementary. 6: Teaching translates Heb "torah." Many later Jewish readers and commentators understood the term "torah" as "the Torah," i.e., a reference to the traditional Jewish Torah. This understanding of Torah is much later than the time of the composition of the book of Hosea, and for that matter, of the first five books of the Bible, which was later understood as the "written Torah." The association of teaching and priests here is quite common in prophetic literature (Jer. 18.18; Ezek. 7.26; 22.26; Zeph. 3.4; Hag. 2.11; Mal. 2.7). Within this context, "torah" or teaching points at the divine instructions that the priests were responsible for keeping and transmitting. 10: The text imparts, at least by connotation, the following meaning: ". . . but not be sated; they shall play the whore, but not multiply." The image of sexual promiscuity is linked to the idea that since these sexual relations were illicit, they would "bear no fruit." (The text implies that the desired fruit of all sexual relations, even "illicit relations," is to have children.) 11: A rendering of the first

- To practice^a ¹¹lechery.
 Wine^b and new wine destroy
 The mind of ¹²My people:
 It consults its stick,^c
 Its rod^c directs it!
 A lecherous impulse has made them go wrong,
 And they have strayed^d from submission to their God.
- ¹³ They sacrifice on the mountaintops
 And offer on the hills,
 Under oaks, poplars, and terebinths
 Whose shade is so pleasant.
 That is why their^e daughters fornicate
 And their daughters-in-law commit adultery!
- ¹⁴ I will not punish their daughters for fornicating
 Nor their daughters-in-law for committing adultery;
 For they themselves 'turn aside'^f with whores
 And sacrifice with prostitutes,
 And a people that is without sense^g must stumble.
- ¹⁵ If you are a lecher, Israel—
 Let not Judah incur guilt—
 Do not come to Gilgal,^h
 Do not make pilgrimages to Beth-aven,ⁱ
 And do not swear by the LORD!^j
- ¹⁶ Ah, Israel has balked
 Like a stubborn cow;
 Therefore,
 The LORD will graze him
 On the range, like a sheep.^k
- ¹⁷ Ephraim is addicted to images—
 Let him be.
- ¹⁸ They drink to excess—
 Their liquor turns against them.
 They "love" beyond measure—
 Disgrace is the "gift"
 Which the wind ^mis bringing;^m
- ¹⁹ They shall garner shame from their sacrifices.

word as "whoredom" instead of lechery better reflects the emphatic repetition of terms and the images they evoke that characterizes the Heb here, and that closely links it to chs 1–3. 12: The same holds true for "spirit of whoredom" instead of lecherous impulse. The conclusion may also be translated more literally: "they have played the whore, forsaking their God," again hammering away at the root for "whore." 14: Similarly, "I will not punish your daughters when they play the whore, nor your daughters-in-law when they commit adultery; for the men themselves go aside with whores, and sacrifice with prostitutes." 15: Bethel and Gilgal were two main cultic centers in the Northern Kingdom of Israel (cf. Amos 4.4). Beth-aven (namely, "House of Iniquity" or "Delusion"; see translators' note h) is a sarcastic way of referring to Bethel. See also 12.12 ("if Gilgal is iniquity"—NJPS, "as for Gilead, it is worthless") and cf. 9.15. 16: On the range, i.e., in a "broad pasture." The image of God as a shepherd is a common biblical and ancient Near Eastern image. It is very open-ended, and may refer to the munificent care of the ideal shepherd (Ps. 23), or the punishment of the straying sheep by the harsh shepherd (Ezek. ch 34). 17: Ephraim: An alternative name for the Northern Kingdom that is widely used in the book of Hosea. The first king and founder of the kingdom came from Ephraim, and the territory of Ephraim remained at the heart of the kingdom until its very end. 18: The second half of the v. connotes, "they surely fornicate (or commit acts of whoredom)."

a Cf. 12.7. b Emendation yields "New grain"; cf. 7.14; 9.1–2.

c I.e., its phallus, meaning "its lust."

d See note b at 1.2. e Heb. "your," here and through v. 14.

f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain. g Cf. vv. 11–12.

h One who participates in the debaucheries of the open-air shrines is not fit to visit a temple building. i Lit. "House of Delusion," substituted for Bethel (cf. Amos 4.4).

j I.e., you are not fit to profess His religion; see Jer. 12.16.

k Instead of giving them fodder in return for their work; cf. Isa. 30.23–24.

l Meaning of vv. 17–19 uncertain in part.

m-m Lit. "has bound up in the corners of its garment"; see note at Mal. 3.20.

5 Hear this, O priests, Attend, O House^a of Israel,
 And give ear, O royal house;
 For right conduct is your responsibility!
 But you have been a snare to Mizpah
 And a net spread out over Tabor;
2 ^bFor when trappers dug deep pitfalls,
 I was the only reprover of them all.^b
3 Yes, I have watched Ephraim,
 Israel has not escaped my notice:
 Behold, you have fornicated, O Ephraim;
 Israel has defiled himself!
4 Their habits do not let them
 Turn back to their God;
 Because of the lecherous impulse within them,
 They pay no heed to the LORD.
5 ^cIsrael's pride shall be humbled before his very eyes,
 As Israel and Ephraim fall because of their sin
 (And Judah falls with them).
6 Then they will go with their sheep and cattle
 To seek the LORD, but they will not find Him.^c

^bHe has cast them off:^b
7 [Because] they have broken faith with the LORD, Because ^dthey have ^dbegotten Alien children.
 Therefore, ^bthe new moon
 Shall devour their portion.^b 8 Sound a ram's horn in Gibeah,
 A trumpet in Ramah;
 Give the alarm in Beth-aven;^e ^f'After you,^f Benjamin!
9 Ephraim is stricken with horror
 On a day of chastisement.

 Against the tribes^g of Israel
 I proclaim certainties:
10 The officers of Judah have acted Like shifters of field boundaries;

5.1-15: Further denunciations of monarchic Israel and Judah and announcements of their punishment. 4: Lecherous impulse, see 4.12 n. 5: References to Judah are not minor parenthetical remarks, but major markers of where the interest of the present book lies (see, among others, 1.7; 3.5; 4.15; 5.5, 10, 12, 14; 6.11; 12.3). 6: This echoes a common prophetic motif: Sacrifices alone are not sufficient to assure divine presence (see esp. Isa. 1.10-17). 7: They have broken faith . . . children: Another translation, "They have been unfaithful to the LORD, for they have brought bastards to birth." The new moon shall devour their portion: The second half of the verse probably means that a "new time [namely, a new period] will destroy them with their lands." 8-14: Some scholars argue that the passage may reflect the circumstances of the Syro-Ephraimitic war in 734-733 BCE, when Israel (Ephraim) and Aram (Syria) were allied in trying to force Judah to join them in a revolt against Assyria, but this runs counter to the gist of the text, since at that time Israel stood against Assyria, rather than as her ally. 8: The ram's horn (shofar) was used to call troops to war or to sound an alarm. Beth-aven (i.e., Bethel; see 4.15 n.), Gibeah, and Ramah are all close to each other in the territory of Benjamin. 10: Shifters of field boundaries: Moving the boundary marker of a field, which was equivalent to stealing property, was a severe violation of proper behavior (see Deut. 19.14, 27.17; Prov. 22.28; admonitions against moving boundary markers occur elsewhere in the ancient Near East).

a Emendation yields "prophets." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c This passage would read well after 5.15; cf. 5.6 with 6.6.

d-d Emendation yields "He has."

e The three towns named, in the territory of Benjamin, are now being wrested from Israel by Judah; see v. 10.

f-f Emendation yields "Stir up."

g I.e., the kingdoms of Judah and Israel (Ephraim).

On them I will pour out
 My wrath like water.
 11 Ephraim is defrauded,
 Robbed of redress,
 Because he has witlessly
 Gone after futility.^a 12 For it is I who am like rot to Ephraim,
 Like decay to the House of Judah;ⁱ 13 Yet when Ephraim became aware of his sickness,
 Judah^b of his sores,
 Ephraim repaired to Assyria—
 He sent envoys to a patron^c king!
 He will never be able to cure you,
 Will not heal you of your sores.
 14 No, I will be like a lion to Ephraim,
 Like a great beast to the House of Judah;^b
 I, I will attack and stride away,
 Carrying the prey that no one can rescue;
 15 And I will return to My abode—
 Till they realize their guilt.
 In their distress, they will seek Me^d
 And beg for My favor.

6 ^d“Come, let us turn back to the LORD:
 He attacked, and He can heal us;
 He wounded, and He can bind us up.
 2 In two days He will make us whole again;
 On the third day He will raise us up,
 And we shall be whole by His favor.
 3 Let us pursue obedience to the LORD,
 And we shall become obedient.
 His appearance is as sure as daybreak,
 And He will come to us like rain,
 Like latter rain that refreshes^e the earth.”

4 What can I do for you, Ephraim,
 What can I do for you, Judah,^f
 When your goodness is like morning clouds,
 Like dew so early gone?

a Cf. Targum and Septuagint; but meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Emendation yields “Israel.”

c Compare the verb ryb in the sense of “to champion, uphold the cause of,” in Isa. 1.17; 3.13; 19.20 end; 51.22.

d As anticipated at the end of chapter 5, Israel seeks the LORD’s favor; His answer begins with v. 4.

e Taking yoreh as equivalent of yarweh.

f Emendation yields “Israel”; cf. “Ephraim . . . Israel” in v. 10.

15: The idea of seeking God in their distress is found in Deut. 4.29–30 as well. In general, there are many vocabulary links between Hosea and Deuteronomy. Some scholars attribute these links to the fact that Deuteronomy was originally a northern work, and thus shares the vocabulary of the northern Hosea. Others think the final form of Hosea was particularly influenced by Deuteronomy.

6.1–7.16: The LORD is reluctant to hear the people’s appeal. Further condemnations of monarchic Israel and Judah. 6.1–3: The book quotes a human voice urging repentance, saying that just as God wounded, He will heal. The appearance of God is as assured as the daybreak, as refreshing as rain. 4: The text here presents a divine response to the earlier speech. Here and in the following vv. the images of daybreak and rain are turned on their head as they apply to monarchic Israel. The LORD is probably presented here in the image of a father who laments his inability to help a wayward son: what can I do for you? or, as others read, “what can I do with you?” The implied answer is “nothing.” Morning clouds . . . dew, both of which evaporate at the first warmth of day. Israel’s good intentions do not last.

5 That is why I have hewn down ^athe prophets,^a
 Have slain them with the words of My mouth:
^bAnd the day that dawned [brought on] your punishment.^b
 6 For I desire goodness, not sacrifice;
 Obedience to God, rather than burnt offerings.
 7^c But they, to a man, have transgressed the Covenant.
 This is where they have been false to Me:
 8 Gilead is a city of evildoers,
 Tracked up with blood.
 9 The gang of priests is Like the ambushade of bandits
 Who murder on the road to Shechem,
 For they have encouraged^d depravity.
 10 In ^ethe House of Israel^e I have seen
 A horrible thing;
 Ephraim has fornicated there,
 Israel has defiled himself.
 11 ^f(Even Judah has reaped a harvest of you!)^f

7 When I would restore My people's fortunes,
¹ When I would heal Israel,
 The guilt of Ephraim reveals itself
 And the wickedness of Samaria.
 For they have acted treacherously,
 With thieves breaking in
 And bands raiding outside.
 2 And they do not consider
 That I remembered all their wickedness.
 Why, their misdeeds have been all around them,^g
 They have been ever before Me.
 3^h In malice they make a king merry,
 And officials in treachery.
 4 They ⁱcommit adultery,ⁱ all of them,
 Like an oven fired by a baker,
 Who desists from stoking only From the kneading of the dough to its leavening.
 5 The day they made our king sick

6: Not a condemnation of sacrifice but rather a statement about the primacy of morality over sacrifices. Needless to say, sacrifices offered by those unworthy of bringing an offering to the deity are not efficacious (cf. 5.6; 8.13).
 7.1: Samaria, the capital of the Northern Kingdom, and therefore another synonym for it (like Ephraim; see 4.17 n.). 5-6: These verses are difficult. An alternative translation would be: "On the day of our king the officials/ became sick with the heat of wine;/ he stretched out his hand with mockers./ For they are kindled like an oven, their heart burns within them;/ all night their anger smolders;/ in the morning it blazes like a flaming fire" (NRSV).

a-a Emendation yields "your children"; cf. 9.13.

b-b Cf. v. 3; but meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Meaning of vv. 7-11 unclear in part.

d Heb. "done"; cf. 5.1-3. e-e Emendation yields "Beth-shean."

f-f Cf. 5.9-10; but meaning of clause uncertain. g Emendation yields "Me."

h Vv. 3-6 would read well in the order 4, 6, 3, 5. i-i Emendation yields "rage."

[And] officials with the poison of wine, aHe gave his hand to traitors.^a 6 bFor they approach their ambush
 With their hearts like an oven:^b
 Through the night
 Their baker^c has slept;
 In the morning, it flares up
 Like a blazing fire.
 7 They all get heated like an oven
 And devour their rulers—
 None of them calls to Me.
 All their kings have fallen [by their hand].
 8 bEphraim is among the peoples;
 He is rotting away.
 Ephraim is like a cake—
 Incapable of turning.^b
 9 Strangers have consumed his strength,
 But he has taken no notice;
 Also, mold^d is scattered over him,
 But he has taken no notice.
 10 Though Israel's pride has been humbled
 Before his very eyes,
 They have not turned back To their God the LORD;
 They have not sought Him
 In spite of everything.
 11 Instead, Ephraim has acted Like a silly dove with no mind:
 They have appealed to Egypt!
 They have gone to Assyria!
 12 When they go, I will spread
 My net over them,
 I will bring them down
 Like birds of the sky;
 bI will chastise them
 When I hear their bargaining.^b 13 Woe to them
 For straying from Me;
 Destruction to them
 For rebelling against Me!
 For I was their Redeemer;
 Yet they have plotted treason against Me.

11: Relying on other nations is viewed as tantamount to rebelling against God, a view governing other biblical texts, especially Isaiah and Chronicles (e.g., Isa. 31.1; 2 Chron 16.7–9). Egypt and Assyria (cf. 11.5; 12.2) were the main powers of the period in which the book is set, and particularly toward the end of that period. They remained the two main powers until Babylonia replaced Assyria as the main northern power in the late 7th century BCE. Reliance on Egypt vs. Assyria (later Babylonia) is a common theme in prophetic literature. Historically, however, the debacle of the Northern Kingdom followed its disastrous alliance with Aram, the main regional power that opposed Assyria at the time. Egypt's intervention in these events was quite marginal. But references to the Aram vs. Assyria conflict that predominated in the time period noted in the superscription of the book (1.1) is found nowhere in Hosea.

a-a I.e., he trusted traitors; but meaning of verse uncertain.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Emendation yields "rage."

d Like Akkadian shību; others "gray hairs."

14^a But they did not cry out to Me sincerely
As they ^blay wailing.^b
They debauch^c over new grain and new wine,
They are faithless^d to Me.

15 I braced, I strengthened their arms,
And they plot evil against Me!

16 They come back;
They have been of no use,^e
Like a slack bow.
Their officers shall fall by the sword,
Because of the stammering^f of their tongues.
Such shall be [the results of] their jabbering^g
In the land of Egypt.

8 [Put] a ram's horn to your mouth—
^hLike an eagle^h over the House of ⁱthe LORD;ⁱ
Because they have transgressed My covenant
And been faithless to My teaching.

2 Israel cries out to Me,
"O my God, we are devoted to You."^j

3 Israel rejects what is good;
^kAn enemy shall pursue him.^k

4 They have made kings,
But not with My sanction;
They have made officers,
But not of My choice.
Of their silver and gold
They have made themselves images,
To their own undoing.

5 ^lHe rejects^l your calf, Samaria!
I am furious with them!
Will they never be capable of ^mpurity?

6 For it was Israel's doing;^m
It was only made by a joiner,
It is not a god.
No, the calf of Samaria shall be Reduced to splinters!

8.1–14: On Israel's unfaithfulness to the LORD. 1: Traditional Jewish interpreters associated the eagle with Nebuchadnezzar (cf. Ezek. 17) who destroyed the Temple in 586; this association implies an identification of the house of the LORD with the Temple in Jerusalem. The House of the LORD: The reference to the legitimate house of the LORD was most likely understood as pointing at the Temple in Jerusalem by the Judahite readership of the book of Hosea. For them, therefore, Israel in v. 3 must carry two meanings: Israel in the sense of the Northern Kingdom and Israel as the people in a covenantal relationship with the LORD, which includes both the Northern and Southern Kingdoms, as well as the intended readership of the book (later Jews). My teaching (Heb "torah") here and in 8.12 was later understood by many Jewish readers as "My Torah" (i.e., a reference to the traditional Jewish Torah). 4–6: The mention of illegitimate kings may point to the rapid succession of kings in the last twenty-five years of the Northern Kingdom (see 1.4 n.), but in the light of 3.5 may well point to all northern kings, from Jeroboam I on, who from a Judahite perspective were illegitimate. The reference to the images (i.e., idols) and the calf (a young bull, usual representation of strength and fertility) seem to reinforce the latter interpretation (see 1 Kings 12.25–33).

a This verse would read well after 8.2. b-b I.e., in penitence; cf. Isa. 58.5.

c Cf. Aramaic gar/yegur "to commit adultery"; for the thought, cf. 4.11.

d Taking yasuru as equivalent to yasoru, from sarar; cf. 9.15 end.

e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. f Cf. Arabic zaghūm and zughmūm "a stammerer."

g I.e., the negotiations conducted in the Egyptian language.

h-h Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

i-i Emendation yields "Israel." j See note g at 7.14.

k-k Emendation yields "They pursue delusion." l-l Emendation yields "I reject."

m-m Emendation yields "understanding. / That House of Israel?"

7 They sow wind,
 And they shall reap whirlwind—
 Standing stalks devoid of ears
 And yielding no flour.
 If they do yield any,
 Strangers shall devour it.
 8 Israel is bewildered;^a
 They have now become among the nations
 Like an unwanted vessel,
 9 [Like] a lonely wild ass.
 For they have gone up to Assyria, ^bEphraim has^b courted friendship.
 10 And while they are courting among the nations, ^cThere I will hold them fast;^c ^dAnd they shall begin to diminish in number
 From the burden of king [and] officers.^d

11 For Ephraim has multiplied altars—for guilt;
 His altars have redounded to his guilt:
 12 The many teachings I wrote for him
 Have been treated as something alien.
 13 ^dWhen they present sacrifices to Me,^d
 It is but flesh for them to eat:
 The LORD has not accepted them.
 Behold, He remembers their iniquity,
 He will punish their sins:
 Back to Egypt with them!
 14 Israel has ignored his Maker
 And built temples
 (And Judah has fortified many cities).
 So I will set fire to his cities,
 And it shall consume their fortresses.

9 Rejoice not, O Israel,
 As other peoples exult;
 For you have strayed
 Away from your God:
^eYou have loved a harlot's fee
 By every threshing floor of new grain.
 2 Threshing floor and winepress
 Shall not join them,
 And the new wine shall betray her.^e a A play on words: The Heb. root bala', which means "bewildered" here (cf. Isa. 28.7), means "devour" in the preceding verse.

b-b Emendation yields "In Egypt they have."

c-c Cf. 9.6; but meaning of Heb. uncertain. d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e-e Emendation and rearrangement yield: "You have loved fornication / By every threshing floor and press; / The new grain shall not join them, / And the new wine shall fail them."

8: The beginning of the verse may be translated as "Israel is devoured"; cf. the last line of the previous verse and translators' note n. 12: Note that the "teaching" (singular in Heb) of the LORD is conceived as a written document, just as "the word of the LORD that came to Hosea" (1.1) is the book of Hosea, a written text too. See also 8.1 n. 13: Back to Egypt, or more literally, "they shall go back to Egypt." Is this a reference to exile to Egypt or a reversal of the exodus? The text may have carried more than one meaning. Cf. Deut. 28.68, and see also 9.3. 14: Judah's sin is not the setting up of multiple religious centers or the calf statues, as Israel had done; but Judah had also sinned, perhaps by not relying sufficiently on God to defend them (see 7.11 n).).

9.1-17: On the results of divine punishment. 1: You have strayed away, lit. "For you [male] have committed deeds of whoredom" (cf. 1.2; 2.7; 3.3; 4.10, 12, 13, 14, 15, 18; 5.3; and see previous notes). 1-2: The threshing floor and the winepress, along with the references to joy, create an image of agricultural festivals (e.g., the harvest festival). The mention of the threshing floor under these circumstances (cf. Ruth ch 3) and the explicit reference to a harlot's fee and the statement "you committed deeds of whoredom" all contribute to the text's construction of an atmosphere of illicit sexual activity. In the book of Hosea these images are associated with the theme of Israel's abandoning the LORD. The precise metaphor here was already a matter of debate among traditional Jewish interpreters. Is the male worshipping other gods, as other peoples do, and so presented as abandoning the LORD, a husband figure, and therefore compared to a female prostitute (a common image in the book; cf. Radak)? Or is the male happy to receive his grain as a present from his gods—not the LORD, and therefore compared to a prostitute coming to pick up her fees (Rashi)? Or are these two readings comple-

3 They shall not be able to remain
 In the land of the LORD.
 But Ephraim shall return to Egypt
 And shall eat unclean food in Assyria.^a 4 It shall be for them like the food of mourners,

 All who partake of which are defiled.
 They will offer no libations of wine to the LORD,
 And no sacrifices of theirs will be pleasing to Him;
 But their food will be only for their hunger,
 It shall not come into the House of the LORD.

5 What will you do about feast days,
 About the festivals of the LORD?

6 Behold, they have gone ^bfrom destruction^b
 [With] the silver they treasure.
 Egypt shall ^chold them fast,^c
 Moph^d shall receive them in burial.
 Weeds are their heirs;
 Prickly shrubs occupy their [old] homes.

7 The days of punishment have come
 For your heavy guilt;
 The days of requital have come—
 Let Israel know it!

The prophet was distraught,
 The inspired man driven mad
 By constant harassment.

8 Ephraim watches for ^emy God.
 As for the prophet,^e
 Fowlers' snares are on all his paths,
 Harassment in the House of his God.

9 They have been as grievously corrupt
 As in the days of Gibeah;^f
 He will remember their iniquity,
 He will punish their sins.

10 I found Israel [as pleasing]
 As grapes in the wilderness;
 Your fathers seemed to Me
^gLike the first fig to ripen on a fig tree:^g
 But when they came to Baal-peor,
 They turned aside to shamefulnes;^h

mentary rather than alternative? In any case, whereas the peoples may rejoice, Israel will have no reason for joy since the threshing floor and the winepress will not join them, i.e., they will not provide them with food or drink. Even the new wine will disappoint them. In sum, the text plays again with the motif of God as the provider, who ceases to provide for his sinful, whoring wife. Whereas Israel is first represented as a male (v. 1), the image shifts to a female character (her) when the theme of the provider who ceases to provide is fully developed (v. 2). For proposed emendations of the text see translators' note e-e on p. 1156. 6: Moph, Memphis, one of the most important cities in Egypt. 9: The days of Gibeah, see Judg. chs 19–20; Hos. 10.9. 10: Although there are idyllic elements in the depiction of Israel's past (cf. Jer. 2.2; 31.2), it is viewed as fundamentally problematic, as in Ps. 106. The idyllic elements serve here to enhance the negative description of Israel's past. Baal Peor, see Num. ch 25; Deut. 4.3–4. In the stories alluded to, sinful sexual behavior is associated with the two places.

a The lands of the heathen and the food there are unclean; cf. Ezek. 4.13; Amos 7.17.

b-b Emendation yields "to Assyria." c-c Cf. 8.10.

d Believed to be Memphis, elsewhere called Noph.

e-e Emendation yields "the prophet of my God."

f See Judg. 19–20.

g-g Emendation yields "like a ripe fig in a waterless waste"; cf. 13.5.

h Cf. Num. 25.1–3.

- *Then they became as detested
 As they had been loved.^a 11 From birth, from the womb, from conception Ephraim's glory shall be Like birds that fly away.^b 12 Even if they rear their infants,
 I will bereave them of men.
 *Woe to them indeed
 When I turn away from them!^c
 13 *It shall go with Ephraim
 As I have seen it go with Tyre,
 Which was planted in a meadow;^d
 Ephraim too must bring out
 His children to slayers.
 14 Give them, O LORD—give them what?
 Give them a womb that miscarries,
 And shriveled breasts!
 15 All their misfortune [began] at Gilgal,
 For there I disowned them.^e
 For their evil deeds
 I will drive them out of My House.
 I will accept them no more;
 *All their officials are^e disloyal.
- 16^b Ephraim^f is stricken,
 Their stock is withered;
 They can produce no fruit.
 Even if they do bear children,
 I will slay their cherished offspring.
- 17 My God rejects them
 Because they have not obeyed Him,
 And they shall go wandering
 Among the nations.

10 Israel is a ravaged vine
 And its fruit is like it.
 When his fruit was plentiful,
 He made altars aplenty;
 When his land was bountiful,
 Cult pillars abounded.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b V. 16 would read well after v. 11.

c-c Emendation yields: "Even if they wean their babes, / They shall be dismayed because of them."

d The specific allusion is uncertain.

e-e Emendation yields "They are all."

f Targum reads "Their crown," i.e., of a tree.

11–12: Illicit sexual relations do not provide offspring (cf. 4.10 n.).
13: Tyre, a major Phoenician city-port and an important regional power. The area under its control bordered on Israel. It was often, but not always, an ally of Israel.
15: My House, see 8.1 n.

10.1–15: The vine and the heifer: Agricultural images show Israel's failure and consequent ruin.

1: Cult pillars: Pillars and altars were part of a cultic site (cf. Exod. 24.4–5). During the monarchic period pillars were also involved in the worship of the LORD. Several biblical texts command the destruction of altars and pillars used in the worship of gods other than the LORD (e.g., Exod. 34.13; Deut. 7.5; 12.3); others condemn the making and use of pillars in general (Lev. 26.1). 5: Priestlings, a derogatory term for the priests of Samaria, who were condemned before (see ch 4). Beth-aven, see 4.15 n. 9: Gibeah: See 9.9 n.

- 2 Now that his boughs^a are broken up,
He feels his guilt;
He himself pulls apart his altars,
Smashes his pillars.
- 3 Truly, now they say,
"We have no king;
For, since we do not fear the LORD,
What can a king do to us?"
- 4 So they conclude agreements and make covenants
With false oaths,
And justice ^bdegenerates into poison weeds,
Breaking out^b on the furrows of the fields.
- 5 The inhabitants of Samaria fear
For the calf of Beth-aven;^c
Indeed, its people and priestlings, ^dWhose joy it once was,^d
Mourn over it for the glory
That is departed from it.
- 6 It too shall be brought to Assyria
As tribute to a patron^e king;
Ephraim shall be chagrined,
Israel shall be dismayed
Because of his plans.^f
- 7 Samaria's monarchy^g is vanishing
Like foam upon water,
8 Ruined shall be the shrines of [Beth]-aven,^c
That sin of Israel.
Thorns and thistles
Shall grow on their altars.
They shall call to the mountains, "Bury us!"
To the hills, "Fall on us!"
- 9 You have sinned more, O Israel,
Than in the days of Gibeah.^h ^dThere they stand [as] at Gibeah!
Shall they not be overtaken
By a war upon scoundrels
10 As peoples gather against them?^d

When I chose [them], I broke them in, Harnessing them for two furrows.

a Cf. 2 Sam. 18.14, where the word is rendered "thick growth."

b-b Cf. Amos 6.12; lit. "breaks out like poison weeds."

c See note i at 4.15. d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. e See note c at 5.13.

f Emendation yields "image," referring to the calf.

g The Heb. verb agrees with this word, not with "Samaria." h See note at 9.9.

- 11 Ephraim became a trained heifer,
But preferred to thresh;
I ^aplaced a yoke
Upon her sleek neck.^a
I will make Ephraim ^bdo advance plowing;^b
Judah^c shall do [main] plowing!
Jacob shall do final plowing!
- 12 “Sow righteousness for yourselves;
Reap ^dthe fruits of^d goodness;
Break for yourselves betimes fresh ground
Of seeking the LORD,
So that you may obtain ^ea teacher^e of righteousness.”
- 13 You have plowed wickedness,
You have reaped iniquity—
[And] you shall eat the fruits of treachery—
Because you relied on your way,^f
On your host of warriors.
- 14 But the din of war shall arise in your own people,
And all your fortresses shall be ravaged
As Beth-arbel was ravaged by Shalman^g
On a day of battle,
When mothers and babes were dashed to death together.
- 15 This ^his what Bethel has done to you^h
For your horrible wickedness:
ⁱAt dawnⁱ shall Israel's monarchy Utterly perish.

- 11 I fell in love with Israel
When he was still a child;
And I have called [him] My son Ever since Egypt.
- 2^j Thus were they called,
But they went their own way;
They sacrifice to Baalim^k
And offer to carved images.

a-a Lit. “passed over the comeliness of its neck.”

b-b Taking rkb in the sense of the Arabic krb.

c Emendation yields “Israel.”

d-d Lit. “according to.”

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain; Septuagint reads “the fruits.”

f Septuagint reads “chariots.”

g Perhaps identical with the Shallum of 2 Kings 15.10 ff.; cf. the atrocities of Shallum's rival, ibid., v. 16.

h-h Emendation yields “will I do to you, O House of Israel.”

i-i Meaning, perhaps, “swiftly as the dawn”; cf. v. 7 above, “like foam upon water.”

j Meaning of parts of vv. 2–7 uncertain. k Emendation yields “calves”; cf. 8.4–6; 13.2.

11–15: Instead of plowing correctly, Israel, the trained heifer, plows wickedness. 11: Ephraim . . . Judah . . . Jacob, together, the totality of Israel. The three kinds of plowing suggest the initial breaking up of the ground, then plowing to cover the seed, then plowing (or “harrowing” [cf. NRSV]) to clear the ground for the next cycle. 12: Cf. 8.7. The text is difficult, and can also be translated as: “Sow righteousness for yourselves; reap according to [divine] kindness; break up for yourselves fallow ground; for it is time to seek the LORD till He comes and teaches you righteousness” (or perhaps, “rains righteousness upon you” [cf. NRSV]). 14: Shalman is probably a reference to Shalmaneser V, king of Assyria, who attacked and defeated Israel. The imagery regarding the fate of women and children is relatively common; see 2 Kings 8.12; Isa. 13.16; Nah. 3.10; Ps. 137.9; Hos. 14.1.

11.1–11: On consistent paternal love for a rebellious son. 1–4: The father-child relationship is used often in prophetic books as a metaphor for the relation between God and Israel. The child is often stubborn and rebellious and is chastised by the father, but the father nonetheless loves the child. As in the case of the husband-wife metaphor, many of today's readers may find the image of a father severely punishing his son troublesome, even if the father is presented as loving. The paternal metaphor, however, was commonly used in the ancient Near East to express the relation between ruler and ruled, sovereign and subject. It is not incongruous for prophets to mix metaphors, such as Israel as God's wife and as God's child.

3 I have pampered Ephraim,
 Taking them in My^a arms;
 But they have ignored
 My healing care.

4 I drew them with human ties,
 With cords of love;
 But I seemed to them as one
 Who imposed a yoke on their jaws,
 Though I was offering them food.

5 No!
 They return to the land of Egypt,
 And Assyria is their king.
 Because they refuse to repent,

6 A sword shall descend upon their towns^b
 And consume their limbs
 And devour ^c[them] because of their designs.^c

7 ^cFor My people persists
 In its defection from Me;
 When it is summoned upward,
 It does not rise at all.^d

8 How can I give you up, O Ephraim?
 How surrender you, O Israel?
 How can I make you like Admah, Render you like Zeboiim?^e
 I have had a change of heart,
 All My tenderness is stirred.

9 I will not act on My wrath,
 Will not turn to destroy Ephraim.
 For I am God, not man, ^cThe Holy One in your midst:
 I will not come in fury.^d

10 The LORD will roar like a lion,
 And they shall march behind Him;
 When He roars, His children shall come Fluttering out of the west.

11 They shall flutter from Egypt like sparrows,
 From the land of Assyria like doves;
 And I will settle them in their homes
 —declares the LORD.

8: Admah and Zeboiim, examples of cities that were utterly destroyed (see, among others, Deut. 29.22).
9: God's change of heart and the decision not to obliterate Ephraim (cf. Jonah ch 3) are associated with the phrase "I am God, not a human being." The very same language is used to convey the opposite meaning in Num. 23.19.

^a Heb. "his."

^b Emendation yields "bodies," lit. "skins"; cf. Job 18.13.

^{c-c} Emendation yields "their bones."

^{d-d} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^e Admah and Zeboiim were destroyed with neighboring Sodom and Gomorrah; cf. Gen. 10.19; 14.2, 8; Deut. 29.22.

12 Ephraim surrounds Me with deceit,
 The House of Israel with guile.^a ^b-(But Judah stands firm with God And is faithful to the Holy One.)^b
 2 Ephraim tends the wind
 And pursues the gale;
 He is forever adding Illusion to calamity.^c
 Now they make a covenant with Assyria,
 Now oil is carried to Egypt.^d
 3 The LORD once indicted Judah,^e
 And punished Jacob for his conduct,
 Requited him for his deeds.
 4 In the womb he tried to supplant his brother;
 Grown to manhood, he strove with a divine being,^f
 5 He strove with an angel and prevailed—
 The other had to weep and implore him.
 At Bethel [Jacob] would meet him,
 There to commune with him.^g
 6 Yet the LORD, the God of Hosts,
 Must be invoked as "LORD."^h
 7 You must return to your God!
 Practice goodness and justice,
 And constantly trust in your God.
 8 A trader who uses false balances,
 Who loves to overreach, 9 Ephraim thinks,
 "Ah, I have become rich;
 I have gotten power!
^bAll my gains do not amount
 To an offense which is real guilt."^b 10 I the LORD have been your God
 Ever since the land of Egypt.
 I will let you dwell in your tentsⁱ again
 As in the days of old,^j 11 When I spoke to the prophets;
 For I granted many visions,

12.1–14.1: Further condemnation of Israel and its consequences.

12.3: Here Judah is singled out, rather than being the poetic parallel of Israel. 4–5: See Gen. 25.26; 27.36; 32.23–33. Such recollections of ancestral traditions (see also v. 13) are relatively rare in prophetic discourse. 11: The reference to the LORD speaking in parables to the prophets helps us to understand the way in which prophetic words were understood in antiquity. 13: An allusion to Gen. ch 29, the story of Jacob's flight to Laban and his marriage to Leah and Rachel. Sections of Hosea that retell these ancestral stories are used as the haftarah for the corresponding portions of Genesis. 14: The prophet is Moses, who is considered to be the greatest prophet (see, e.g., Deut. 34.10; Exod. 23.20; Num. 20.16).

a I.e., the deceit and guile they practice on each other (below vv. 8–9) is constantly noted by the LORD.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Septuagint reads "futility."

d I.e., they foolishly depend on alliances instead of on the LORD; cf. 5.13; 7.10–11.

e Presumably the patriarch Judah. Emendation would yield "Israel"; cf. next note.

f Cf. Gen. 25.26 and 32.29. g Heb. "us."

h I.e., one should not invoke any of the angelic hosts.

i I.e., securely; see 2 Kings 13.5. j Lit. "fixed season."

^aAnd spoke parables through the prophets.
 12 As for Gilead, it is worthless;
 And to no purpose^a have they Been sacrificing oxen in Gilgal:
 The altars of these are also Like stone heaps upon a plowed field.^b
 13 Then Jacob had to flee^c to the land of Aram;
 There Israel served for a wife,
 For a wife he had to guard [sheep].
 14 But when the LORD
 Brought Israel up from Egypt,
 It was through a prophet;^d
 Through a prophet^d they were guarded.
 15^e Ephraim gave bitter offense,
 And his Lord cast his crimes upon him
 And requited him for his mockery.

13 When Ephraim spoke piety,
 He was exalted in Israel;
 But he incurred guilt through Baal,^f
 And so he died.
 2 And now they go on sinning;
 They have made them molten images,
 Idols, by their skill, from their silver,
 Wholly the work of craftsmen.
^aYet for these they appoint men to sacrifice;^a
 They are wont to kiss calves!
 3 Assuredly,
 They shall be like morning clouds,
 Like dew so early gone;
 Like chaff whirled away from the threshing floor.
 And like smoke from a lattice.
 4 Only I the LORD have been your God
 Ever since the land of Egypt;
 You have never known a [true] God but Me,
 You have never had a helper other than Me.
 5 I looked after you in the desert,
 In a thirsty land.
 6 When they grazed, they were sated;
 When they were sated, they grew haughty;
 And so they forgot Me.
 7 So I am become like a lion to them,
 Like a leopard I lurk on the way;

13.2–4: As elsewhere in the Bible, the book is assuming that the calves are not alternate ways of depicting the LORD, as many northern Israelites likely believed, but represent foreign deities.

3: Morning clouds . . . dew, see 6.4 n. Chaff . . . smoke, further images of evanescence. 7: The image of the LORD as a lion is common in the prophetic books (cf. Amos 3.8). In Hosea it is clearly a double-edged image. It may point to restoration and hope (11.10–11) or horrifying punishment (5.14; 13.7–8). God is powerful to punish and to restore. A reader who understands the described punishment as a past event and sees the restoration as still standing in the future can find much solace in this imagery.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b I.e., the cults of Gilead and Gilgal are as worthless as that of Bethel.

c This is the punishment mentioned in 12.3. d I.e., not through an angel.

e Meaning of 12.15–13.1 uncertain. f I.e., Baal-peor; cf. 9.10.

8 Like a bear robbed of her young I attack them
And rip open the casing of their hearts;
^aI will devour them there like a lion,^a
The beasts of the field shall mangle them.

9 ^bYou are undone, O Israel!
You had no help but Me.^b
10 Where now is your king?
Let him save you!
Where are the chieftains in all your towns
From whom you demanded:
"Give me a king and officers"?"
11 I give you kings in my ire,
And take them away in My wrath.

12 Ephraim's guilt is bound up,
His sin is stored away.^c
13 Pangs of childbirth assail him, ^bAnd the babe is not wise—
For this is no time to survive
At the birthstool of babes.^b

14^d From Sheol itself I will save them,
Redeem them from very Death.
Where, O Death, are your plagues?
Your pestilence where, O Sheol?
^eRevenge shall be far from My thoughts.^e

15 For though he flourish among reeds,
A blast, a wind of the LORD,
Shall come blowing up from the wilderness;
His fountain shall be parched,
His spring dried up.
That [wind] shall plunder treasures,
Every lovely object.

14 Samaria must bear her guilt,
For she has defied her God.
They shall fall by the sword,
Their infants shall be dashed to death,
And their women with child ripped open.

2 Return, O Israel, to the LORD your God,
For you have fallen because of your sin.
3 Take words with you a-a Emendation yields "There dogs shall devour them"; cf. Septuagint.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c i.e., for future retribution.

d This verse would read well before 14.5.

e-e Lit. "Satisfaction (for this meaning of נְחָם see Deut. 32.36; Isa. 1.24) shall be hidden from My eyes."

10: The institution of human kingship is viewed negatively here, as a rejection of God's kingship, as in some of the narratives concerning the origins of the monarchy (see, e.g., 1 Sam. 10.17–19).

13: The babe is not wise . . . birthstool of babes, a metaphor in which the son is partially compared to a woman in labor. The son will suffer the pains associated with childbirth. This child is so unwise that "at the right time he does not come to the birthstool," i.e., he resists birth, endangering himself and the one who gives birth and prolonging her (and here, his) pain. The birth here symbolizes the turning of the heart necessary for a new beginning. In other words, if Ephraim repents soon it will end its suffering and begin a new era of divine blessing, but Ephraim, a foolish son, does not do so. 14: Sheol, the netherworld, the land of the dead. The LORD will save Israel even from Sheol, if Israel repents. 15: Though he flourish among reeds, a double word-play: Ephraim and "flourish" sound similar in Heb, but more importantly so do reeds or "marshes" and "brothers" (Rashi favors the first meaning, Radak, the second). Reeds might be an allusion to Egypt; "brothers," a reference to the place of Ephraim at the head of his brothers (the other northern tribes; cf. Gen. 48.19). A blast, a wind, Heb "an east wind." The east wind is a dry, scorching wind and is often associated with disaster and/or God's power (Exod. 14.21; Isa. 27.8; Jer. 18.17; cf. Gen. 41.6). If the reference to reeds is an allusion to Egypt, then this wind may be reminiscent of the east wind at the Reed Sea (Exod. 14.21; 15.8). 14.1: Cf. 10.14. 2–9: Return, O Israel: Because of the powerful call for repentance and hope it conveys and the high poetic languages it uses, 14.1–10 eventually became a "classical" text in Jewish tradition and liturgy. As mentioned in the intro., it is read on Shabbat Shuvah (the Shabbat that precedes Yom Kippur) and in the afternoon service of Tish'ah be'av (Sephardic and

And return to the LORD.

Say to Him:

^a“Forgive all guilt

And accept what is good;

Instead of bulls we will pay

[The offering of] our lips.^a

4 Assyria shall not save us,

No more will we ride on steeds;^b

Nor ever again will we call

Our handiwork our god,

Since in You alone orphans find pity!^c

5 I will heal their affliction,^c

Generously will I take them back in love;

For My anger has turned away from them.^d

6 I will be to Israel like dew;

He shall blossom like the lily,

He shall strike root like a ^eLebanon tree.^e

7 His boughs shall spread out far,

His beauty shall be like the olive tree's,

His fragrance like that of Lebanon.

8 They who sit in his shade shall be revived:

They shall bring to life new grain,

They shall blossom like the vine;

His scent shall be like the wine of Lebanon.^f

9 Ephraim [shall say]:

“What more have I to do with idols?

When I respond and look to Him,

I become like a verdant cypress.”

^aYour fruit is provided by Me.^a

10 He who is wise will consider these words,

He who is prudent will take note of them.

For the paths of the LORD are smooth;

The righteous can walk on them,

While sinners stumble on them.

Yemenite traditions). As in Deut. ch 30, once Israel returns, God returns to take them back. 4: Find pity recalls “Lo-ruhamah” of 1.8 and its reversal in 2.3. The verse as a whole is a rejection by Israel of its past behavior, rejecting improper political alliances and foreign deities. 8: Contrast with 9.1-2. 10: The prophetic word should not merely be heard once, but must be carefully studied (see intro. to The Twelve).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b I.e., we will no longer depend on an alliance with Egypt; cf. 2 Kings 18.24 (Isa. 36.9); Isa. 30.16.

c For this meaning of meshubah see Jer. 2.19; 3.22. d Heb. “Him.”

e-e Emendation yields “poplar.” f Emendation yields “Helbon”; cf. Ezek. 27.18.

Joel

THE BOOK OF JOEL is an unusual prophetic book. Although it contains readings in the form of oracles, announcements of judgment against the nations, and promises of an ideal future, it does not follow the usual structure of most prophetic books. The readers of the book of Joel are asked to imagine a terrifying plague of locusts and its horrifying impact on society and the natural environment created by the human society. Then the locusts become a mighty army sent by the LORD against Judah. As the text leads the readers to sense that human society and culture in Judah are at the brink of obliteration, it asks them to identify with a prophetic voice that calls on them to return to the LORD, to fast and lament. Then the book moves to Judah's salvation and to a range of passages dealing with the ideal future, in which the fate of the nations figures prominently.

Unlike other prophetic books (for instance, Hosea, Amos, Micah, Zechariah) the book is not set in a particular era of Israel's past. There is no temporal note in Joel 1.1 mentioning any particular king or any datable event. Although there are references to an invasion by an enemy, none is specified. The lack of references to specific events in Israel's past (locust plagues were not uncommon) and the overall imagery of the book encourage its readers to understand it against the background of Israel's past in general.

In the view of most scholars, the book of Joel dates to the Persian period (539–332 BCE), and most likely the period around 400–350. The reference to Ionians (Greek inhabitants from Ionia, a region in western Asia Minor, today's Turkey) in 4.6 is often mentioned among the grounds for this dating. More important, the book of Joel has an "anthological quality." In a relatively large number of cases, the book seems to be quoting, commenting on, or elaborating on other biblical, mainly prophetic, texts. This adds prestige to the human speaker of the book, who is depicted as a learned individual.

The book shows apocalyptic concerns. Some scholars think that it represents some form of transitional or hybrid work that stands between prophetic and apocalyptic texts; given its likely date of composition, this is quite possible. Certainly, the book conveys images and reassurances of "once and for all" actions of the LORD on behalf of Judah and Jerusalem, and against those who persecuted them. Moreover, it presents the message that this future is already known to those able to read the book of Joel (i.e., the scribes of Yehud) and to those to whom they may read the book (i.e., the vast majority of the people of Yehud who did not know how to read).

There are several possible ways to understand the structure of Joel. Each points to a particular but partial reading that emphasizes certain aspects of the book and de-emphasizes others. These partial readings inform each other, and all together create a much richer meaning. The following is one of these possible outlines:

1. Superscription (1.1).
2. A set of prophetic readings that concerns mostly divine judgment against Judah and its response (1.2–2.17).
3. A set of prophetic readings that concerns mostly divine forgiveness and future restoration for Judah along with judgment and calamity for its enemies (2.18–4.21).

Standard Christian translations divide the book into three chapters: 1.1–20 (as here); 2.1–32 (including the current text's 2.1–27, plus 3.1–5); and 3.1–21 (corresponding to the current text's 4.1–21). The division of biblical books into chapters dates to medieval times and originated within Christianity. The first rabbinic Bible (1517) shows the then popular division of the text of Joel in three chapters, but the second rabbinic Bible and all subsequent Hebrew Bibles, including the NJPS divide the book in four chapters.

Joel 2.15–27 is included in the haftarah for Shabbat Shuvah (the Shabbat that precedes Yom Kippur) in several Jewish traditions (e.g., Ashkenazi, Conservative) because of its theme of repentance, lamentation, divine forgiveness, and restoration. The theme is certainly appropriate for the 'Aseret Yemei Teshuvah ("Ten Days of Repentance" from Rosh Ha-Shanah to Yom Kippur). Note especially the conclusion of the reading, 2.27.

[EHUD BEN ZVI]

1 The word of the LORD that came to Joel son of Pethuel.

- 2 Listen to this, O elders,
Give ear, all inhabitants of the land.
Has the like of this happened in your days
Or in the days of your fathers?
- 3 Tell your children about it,
And let your children tell theirs,
And their children the next generation!
- 4 What the cutter^a has left, the locust has devoured;

a The Heb. terms translated "cutter, locust, grub, and hopper" are of uncertain meaning; they probably designate stages in the development of the locust.

1.1: Superscription. The superscription introduces the book and characterizes it as the LORD's word, a prophetic book. As mentioned above, Joel is not set in any particular period. Readers, beginning in ancient times, have suggested various settings. In Jewish tradition, Joel is associated with at least three different periods: (a) the days of Jehoram, the son of Ahab (b. Ta'an. 5a), (b) the time of Samuel (Joel is the son of Samuel, who eventually repented and turned into a prophet, according to Rashi and others), and (c) the time of Manasseh (Seder Olam Rabbah). Joel, like its inverted form Elijah, probably means "the LORD is God."

1.2–2.17: On divine judgment against Judah and its response.
1.2–3: A call to read the text. This call emphasizes the link between generations, and thus the everlasting truth and relevance of what follows. 1.4–2.17: On the plague of locusts and the corresponding communal cry (or lamentation) to the LORD. 4: Cutter . . . locust . . . grub . . . hopper: There are many references to locusts in ancient Near Eastern texts. Some of these references associate the imagery of swarms of locusts with that of large invading armies or troops. The use of these four terms may

What the locust has left, the grub has devoured;
And what the grub has left, the hopper has devoured.

5 Wake up, you drunkards, and weep,
Wail, all you swillers of wine—
For the new wine that is ^adenied you!^a 6 For a nation has invaded my land,
Vast beyond counting,
With teeth like the teeth of a lion,
With the fangs of a lion's breed.
7 They have laid my vines waste
And splintered my fig trees:
They have stripped off their bark and thrown [it]
away;
Their runners have turned white.

8 Lament—like a maiden girl with sackcloth
For the husband of her youth!
9 Offering and libation have ceased
From the House of the LORD;
The priests must mourn
Who minister to the LORD.
10 The country is ravaged,
The ground must mourn;
For the new grain is ravaged,
The new wine is dried up,
The new oil has failed.
11 Farmers are dismayed
And vine dressers wail
Over wheat and barley;
For the crops of the field are lost.
12 The vine has dried up,
The fig tree withers,
Pomegranate, palm, and apple—
All the trees of the field are sear.
And joy has dried up Among men.

13 Gird yourselves and lament, O priests,
Wail, O ministers of the altar;
Come, spend the night in sackcloth,
O ministers of my God.
For offering and libation are withheld
From the House of your God.
14 Solemnize a fast,
Proclaim an assembly;

represent an attempt to convey a sense of completeness, rather than express a biological, detailed focus. Abравanel understands the text as metaphorical: The four kinds of locusts refer to four nations that will rule over Israel—Babylonia, Persia, Greece, and Rome. 7: Vines . . . fig trees: a reversal of a traditional image of agrarian peace (cf. Mic. 4.4; Zech. 3.10). The speaker is presented as one who owns vines and fig trees.

8: Maiden, Heb “betulah,” means a young woman of marriageable age; here, a newly married woman. Husband of her youth, an emotive counterpart to the expression “wife of his youth” (cf. Prov. 1.5; Isa. 54.6; Mal. 2.14–15). The association of Judah in distress with a powerless, lamenting (young) woman is common in the Bible, and parallels exist in other ancient Near Eastern literature. Such imagery suggests, or creates an expectation for, a redemptive action by a caring (male) patron, who in this case would be the LORD. Usually such references to women point directly at or seem to suggest some negatively valued behavior on the part of the woman, here Judah, which within the world of the text justifies her present situation. The last part of the verse appears in a well-known poetic lament (qinah) recited on the 9th of Av, the traditional day of fasting and mourning for the destruction of the Temple. 9: The text shifts from the young woman in one verse to an indirect reference to the LORD in the next, and to the (male) priests who are (partially) responsible for keeping an effective and positive interaction between the people and God.

12: Among men (Heb “min-bnei 'adam”), “among the people.” 13: The priests and many others believed that the daily offerings were a prerequisite to divine beneficence; the plague would thus be viewed as an extreme disaster. 14: Fast . . . cry out: Cf. 2.15. The actions are a typical response to an upcoming disaster (cf. Jonah 3.6–8). This verse serves in b. Ta' an. 12b to explain why one is not to a-a Lit. “cut off from your mouth.”

Gather the elders—all the inhabitants of the land—
In the House of the LORD your God,
And cry out to the LORD.

15 Alas for the day!
For the day of the LORD is near;
It shall come like havoc from Shaddai.^a 16 For food is cut off
Before our very eyes,
And joy and gladness
From the House of our God.
17 ^bThe seeds have shriveled
Under their clods.^b
The granaries are desolate,
Barns are in ruins,
For the new grain has failed.
18 How the beasts groan!
The herds of cattle are bewildered
Because they have no pasture,
And the flocks of sheep are dazed.^c

19 To You, O LORD, I call.
For fire^d has consumed
The pastures in the wilderness,
And flame^d has devoured
All the trees of the countryside.
20 The very beasts of the field
Cry out to You;
For the watercourses are dried up,
And fire has consumed
The pastures in the wilderness.

2 Blow a horn in Zion,
Sound an alarm on My holy mount!
Let all dwellers on earth tremble,
For the day of the LORD has come!
It is close—
2 A day of darkness and gloom,
A day of densest cloud
Spread like soot over the hills.
A vast, enormous horde—
Nothing like it has ever happened,
And it shall never happen again
Through the years and ages.

work on a day of fast: because such a day is to be treated as a day of a solemn assembly.

1.15–20: The cry. 15: Day of the LORD (cf. Isa. 13.6; Ezek. 30.2, 3; Obad. 15; Zeph. 1.14–15, among others), a relatively common term in prophetic literature. It points to a day in which the LORD dramatically alters the regular order of things. In many places it refers to an extraordinary day of judgment for the wicked (e.g., Isa. 13.9), and it is often associated with images of darkness and cosmic upheaval (e.g., 2.1–2; Amos 5.18–20; Zeph. 1.14–15). Here the images stress the absence and lack of what is necessary for life. 20: If God is not to pity the (sinful) people, He should at least pity the blameless animals (similarly Jonah 4.11).

2.1–11: On the mighty army of the LORD. Military imagery is pervasive in this section; in this context, the army is a personification of the locusts (see Prov. 6.6–7); this is made explicit in 2.25. 1: Cf. 1.15 and 2.15; Hos. 5.8. Sound an alarm, usually the task of the guards on the wall. 2: Cf. Zeph. 1.14–15; Zech. 8.22.

a Traditionally “the Almighty”; see Gen. 17.1. b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.
c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d I.e., scorching heat.

3 Their vanguard is a consuming fire,
 Their rear guard a devouring flame.
 Before them the land was like the Garden of Eden,
 Behind them, a desolate waste:
 Nothing has escaped them.

4 They have the appearance of horses,
 They gallop just like steeds.

5 With a clatter as of chariots
 They bound on the hilltops,
 With a noise like a blazing fire Consuming straw;
 Like an enormous horde
 Arrayed for battle.

6 Peoples tremble before them,
 All faces ^aturn ashen.^a

7 They rush like warriors,
 They scale a wall like fighters.
 And each keeps to his own track.
 Their paths never cross;^b

8 No one jostles another,
 Each keeps to his own course.
^cAnd should they fall through a loophole,
 They do not get hurt.^c

9 They rush up the wall,
 They dash about in the city;
 They climb into the houses,
 They enter like thieves
 By way of the windows.

10 Before them earth trembles,
 Heaven shakes,
 Sun and moon are darkened,
 And stars withdraw their brightness.

11 And the LORD roars aloud
 At the head of His army;
 For vast indeed is His host,
 Numberless are those that do His bidding.
 For great is the day of the LORD,
 Most terrible—who can endure it?

12 “Yet even now”—says the LORD—
 “Turn back to Me with all your hearts,
 And with fasting, weeping, and lamenting.”

13 Rend your hearts
 Rather than your garments,
 And turn back to the LORD your God.
 For He is gracious and compassionate,

3: Cf. Isa. 51.3; Ezek. 36.35. 6: Cf. Nah. 2.11.

2.12–17: On the need to turn back to the LORD, and for a communal lamentation. This must be done before the arrival of the Day of the LORD, which is near or close (1.15; 2.1), otherwise Israel too will be the victim of God's power. 13: Cf. Exod. 34.6; Num. 14.18; Jonah 4.2; Nah. 1.3; Pss. 86.15; 103.8; 145.8; Neh. 9.17, 31; 2 Chron. 30.9. Some of these have a more complete list of God's attributes, which include intergenerational punishment. As in Jonah 4.2, this is lacking here. Also cf. m. 'Avot 2.13.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; cf. Nah. 2.11.

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Slow to anger, abounding in kindness,
 And renouncing punishment.
 14 Who knows but He may turn and relent,
 And leave a blessing behind
 For meal offering and drink offering To the LORD your God?^a

15 Blow a horn in Zion,
 Solemnize a fast,
 Proclaim an assembly!
 16 Gather the people,
 Bid the congregation purify themselves.^b
 Bring together the old,
 Gather the babes
 And the sucklings at the breast;
 Let the bridegroom come out of his chamber,
 The bride from her canopied couch.
 17 Between the portico and the altar,
 Let the priests, the LORD's ministers, weep
 And say:
 "Oh, spare Your people, LORD!
 Let not Your possession become a mockery,
 To be taunted by nations!
 Let not the peoples say,
 'Where is their God?' "

18 Then the LORD was roused
 On behalf of His land
 And had compassion
 Upon His people.
 19 In response to His people
 The LORD declared:
 "I will grant you the new grain,
 The new wine, and the new oil,
 And you shall have them in abundance.
 Nevermore will I let you be
 A mockery among the nations.
 20 I will drive the northerner^c far from you,
 I will thrust it into a parched and desolate land—
 Its van to the Eastern Sea^d
 And its rear to the Western Sea;^e
 And the stench of it shall go up,
 And the foul smell rise."
 For [the LORD] shall work great deeds.

14: Cf. Jonah 3.9. The verse implies uncertainty about divine response to human repentance; this idea was disturbing to many classical readers of the text, who filled it in to read "He [who] knows [that he has sins], he should return and repent" (so Targum and Rashi, but not Ibn Ezra). 15: Blow a horn: The same phrase used to give the alarm of war in v. 1 is here used to call the people for a communal lamentation. The latter here, and elsewhere, includes calls to repentance and requires their repentance to be effective (cf. Jonah 3.5–10). 16: The entire community must assemble. 17: Cf. Ps. 79.10. Similar arguments are made in the Torah, e.g., Exod. 32.12. The emphasis is on God's concern for His image rather than Israel's guiltlessness.

2.18–4.21: Forgiveness and restoration for Judah, divine judgment against their enemies.
2.19: Cf. 1.10; Deut. 7.13; 11.14; 14.23; 33.28; Jer. 31.12; Hos. 2.10.
20: Parched and desolate: The description of the land to which the northerner will be driven may be compared to that in Zeph. 2.13 (there "arid," Heb "parched"). The reference points on the surface to the locust, but also to a mighty invading army sent by the LORD, evoking the common imagery of a powerful and at times mythic enemy coming from the north (see, among others, Jer. 1.13–15; 4.6; Ezek. 38.6, 15; 39.2; cf. Isa. 5.26–30). The Targum reads: "I will remove the people who come from the north far from you, . . . for they have done much evil." The first portion of the quoted text points to the Targum's understanding of the "northerners" as referring to an enemy army. The second portion reflects one of the two possible understandings of the Heb text. The text does not specify the subject of the verb work or "do." The most likely subject is the northerner, in which case the Targum adds the obvious, that the northerner has done great evil, perhaps overstepped its bounds by inflicting too great a punishment (see Isa.

^a When the locusts depart, there will again be yield enough for offerings; see 1.9.

^b Cf. Exod. 19.10; Zeph. 1.7.

^c I.e., the locusts. Emendation yields "My multitude"; cf. "nation" (1.6), "horde," "army," and "host" (2.2, 5, 11, and 25). ^d The Dead Sea. ^e The Mediterranean Sea.

21 Fear not, O soil, rejoice and be glad;
 For the LORD has wrought great deeds.
 22 Fear not, O beasts of the field,
 For the pastures in the wilderness
 Are clothed with grass.
 The trees have borne their fruit;
 Fig tree and vine
 Have yielded their strength.
 23 O children of Zion, be glad,
 Rejoice in the LORD your God.
 For He has given you the early rain in [His] kindness,
 Now He makes the rain fall [as] formerly—
 The early rain and the late—24 And threshing floors shall be piled with grain,
 And vats shall overflow with new wine and oil.
 25 "I will repay you ^afor the years^a Consumed by swarms and hoppers,
 By grubs and locusts,
 The great army I let loose against you.
 26 And you shall eat your fill
 And praise the name of the LORD your God
 Who dealt so wondrously with you—
 My people shall be shamed no more.
 27 And you shall know
 That I am in the midst of Israel:
 That I the LORD am your God
 And there is no other.
 And My people shall be shamed no more."

3 After that,
 I will pour out My spirit on all flesh;
 Your sons and daughters shall prophesy;
 Your old men shall dream dreams,
 And your young men shall see visions.
 2 I will even pour out My spirit
 Upon male and female slaves in those days.

3 ^bBefore the great and terrible day of the LORD comes,^b

a-a Emendation yields "double what was."

b-b Brought up from v. 4 for clarity.

10.5-11). But, particularly in the light of v. 21, it is possible to understand a secondary connoted meaning in this phrase, "the LORD has done great deeds," namely that God has restored the land's vegetation. This "turning point" verse in Joel carries two instances of multiple meanings conveyed by a careful choice of words or their omission at critical places in the text. A later, talmudic interpretation is based on a slight revocalization of the term for northerner and sets the verse in a different sphere. According to b. Sukkah 52a, the relevant section of the verse reads "but I will remove far off from you the hidden one" (i.e., instead of "northerner") and then it goes on and explains that this hidden one is "yetzer ha-ra," that is, "the evil inclination" which is constantly hidden in the heart of humans. The verse is thus understood as stating that in an ideal future, God will drive this inclination away from humanity into a land barren and desolate. 21: Cf. Ps. 126.3. 23: For He has given you the early rain in [His] kindness: Other possibilities for the meaning of this sentence include: "For He has given you the early rain in its season"; "For He has given you the early rain for your vindication"; "For He has given you back your teacher in righteousness"; "For He has given you a teacher for righteousness"; "For He has given you a righteous teacher." The word translated "rain" ("moreh," the same as in Ps. 84.7) is usually "yoreh," and "moreh" can mean "teacher." If the word is understood as "teacher," then who is the teacher? The LORD? Furthermore, it is possible that this is another case of a main denoted meaning (probably "the early rain in its season") along with a connoted meaning ("teacher"). The Qumran community seems to have derived their conception of the teacher of righteousness, an early leader of the group, from this v. 27: Cf. Isa. 45-5, 6, 18.

3.1-5: A glorious future for the faithful. Men and women, male and female slaves, all are included. 1: Cf. Ezek. 39.29. Prophecy, dreams, and visions were the three recognized ways in which human beings received communications from God. God will once again reveal himself to people. 3-4: Before the great and terrible . . . comes, in the Heb at the conclusion of v. 4. Portents . . . blood . . . fire . . . pillars of smoke: The language evokes the plagues preceding the exodus

I will set portents in the sky and on earth:

Blood and fire and pillars of smoke;

⁴ The sun shall turn into darkness

And the moon into blood.

⁵ But everyone who invokes the name of the LORD shall escape; for there shall be a remnant on Mount Zion and in Jerusalem, as the LORD promised. ^a Anyone who invokes the LORD will be among the survivors. ^a

4 For lo! in those days

And in that time,

When I restore the fortunes

Of Judah and Jerusalem,

² I will gather all the nations

And bring them down to the Valley of Jehoshaphat.^b

There I will contend with them

Over My very own people, Israel,

Which they scattered among the nations.

For they divided My land among themselves

³ And cast lots over My people;

And they bartered a boy for a whore,

And sold a girl for wine, which they drank.

⁴ What is this you are doing to Me, O Tyre, Sidon, and all the districts of Philistia? Are you requiting Me for something I have done, or are you doing something for My benefit? Quick as a flash, I will pay you back; ⁵ for you have taken My gold and My silver, and have carried off My precious treasures to your palaces; ⁶ and you have sold the people of Judah and the people of Jerusalem to the Ionians, so that you have removed them far away from their homeland. ⁷ Behold, I will rouse them to leave the place you have sold them to, and I will pay you back: ⁸ I will deliver your sons and daughters into the hands of the people of Judah, and they will sell them into captivity to a distant nation—for the LORD has spoken.

⁹ Proclaim this among the nations:

Prepare for battle!

Arouse the warriors,

Let all the fighters come and draw near!

¹⁰ Beat your plowshares^c into swords,

And your pruning hooks into spears.

(Exod. chs 7–11) and the presence of the LORD during the exodus (Exod. 13.21). For this reason the expression “I will set portents in the sky and on the earth; blood, fire and pillars of smoke” is included in the Passover Haggadah. 5: For the first section of the v., cf. Obad. 17. The conclusion of the v. is often translated “and among survivors whom the LORD calls.”

4.1–21: Judgment and calamity for the nations; restoration for Israel. The text reflects the motif of the enemy gathering massive forces against Jerusalem but being finally destroyed. Cf. Ezek. chs 32, 38, 39; Zech. ch 14. Towards the end, the ch presents a view of the restoration of Israel in terms of agricultural plenty and peace.

1: Cf. Jer. 33.15; 50.4, 20. As is typical, the time period when this will transpire is not specified. 2: Cf. Isa. 66.18; Zech. 14.2. Here and in v. 12 there is wordplay on the name of the valley, based on whether the meaning of the Heb word is “contend” or “judge” (see translators’ notes b on p. 1173 and b on p. 1174). 3: Note the relation between the two “sale prices.” 6: Ionians: See intro. to Joel. 8: The nations are punished measure for measure, a typical prophetic punishment. 10: A reversal of the well-known image of Isa. 2.4 and Mic. 4.3.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Here understood as “The LORD contends”; contrast v. 12.

c See note at Isa. 2.4.

11 Let even the weakling say, "I am strong."
 "Rouse yourselves"^a and come,
 All you nations;
 Come together
 From roundabout.
 There "bring down"^a
 Your warriors, O LORD!

12 Let the nations rouse themselves and march up
 To the Valley of Jehoshaphat;^b
 For there I will sit in judgment
 Over all the nations roundabout.

13 Swing the sickle,
 For the crop is ripe;
 Come and tread,
 For the winepress is full,
 The vats are overflowing!
 For great is their wickedness.

14 Multitudes upon multitudes
 In the Valley of Decision!
 For the day of the LORD is at hand
 In the Valley of Decision.

15 Sun and moon are darkened,
 And stars withdraw their brightness.

16 And the LORD will roar from Zion,
 And shout aloud from Jerusalem,
 So that heaven and earth tremble.
 But the LORD will be a shelter to His people,
 A refuge to the children of Israel.

17 And you shall know that I the LORD your God
 Dwell in Zion, My holy mount.
 And Jerusalem shall be holy;
 Nevermore shall strangers pass through it.

18 And in that day,
 The mountains shall drip with wine,
 The hills shall flow with milk,
 And all the watercourses of Judah shall flow with water;
 A spring shall issue from the House of the
 LORD
 And shall water the Wadi of the Acacias.

19 Egypt shall be a desolation,
 And Edom a desolate waste,

16: See Amos 1.2. The book of Amos follows Joel in the Masoretic order of the prophetic books within the Twelve, though not in that of the Septuagint (LXX). It is possible that, among other considerations, the presence of a phrase at the ending of Joel and the beginning of Amos influenced the position of Joel in the Masoretic order of the Twelve. 17: Cf. Ezek. 39.28 and passim; also cf. Joel 2.27. Other prophetic texts suggest that the Temple would be open to certain foreigners (Isa. 56.6-7). 18: Cf. Amos 9.13. 19: Edom is elsewhere condemned for joining in with the Babylonians at the destruction of the First Temple (see Obad. 10-11). There is a tradition of late antiquity and medieval Jewish interpretation that associated Edom first with the Roman empire and later with Christendom. 21: The first section of this v. may be understood as (a) "I will avenge their blood, yet unavenged," (b) "I will avenge their blood, and I will not clear the guilty," or (c) "though I cleanse their blood(shed), I will not cleanse." The final words of the book are a fitting conclusion given the centrality of Zion, which is mentioned seven times in this short book.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Here understood as "The LORD judges"; contrast v. 2.

Because of the outrage to the people of Judah,
In whose land they shed the blood of the innocent.

20 But Judah shall be inhabited forever,
And Jerusalem throughout the ages.
21 Thus ^aI will treat as innocent their blood
Which I have not treated as innocent;^a
And the LORD shall dwell in Zion.

a-a Emendation yields "their unavenged blood shall be avenged."

Amos

THE FIRST VERSE OF THE BOOK sets the text in the days of Uzziah, king of Judah, and Jeroboam, king of Israel—from our perspective, the 8th century BCE. The book is set in the monarchic period, in a world in which the sanctuary at Bethel served as a central cultic place of the Northern Kingdom. Some scholars propose that the book of Amos was written (wholly or in the main) in the 8th century; others that it is the result of a lengthy process of redaction that spanned centuries; still others focus on the present text of Amos and date it to the postmonarchic period, since it implies the fall of the monarchy (9.11–15).

Even a cursory reading of the book shows that it deals mainly with the malady of Israel, its condemnation, and the future restoration and glory of Israel within a friendly, renewed physical world. When it condemns Israel, it repeatedly stresses social and political ills. (Contrast Hosea, which largely concerns religious ills.) As expected in a prophetic book meant to be read again and again, and meditated upon—as all prophetic books are—these social and political ills are described in relatively general terms. Thus, the critique becomes applicable to different historical and social circumstances. It is thus not surprising that a substantial number of readers in the 20th century considered either the book or the prophet it describes an inspiring source for their endeavors in social reform. For instance, Labor parties in the first decades of the State of Israel and its leaders (e.g., David Ben Gurion) considered Amos a source of inspiration. Currently, some advocates of “liberation theology” in Latin America see the book as a source of support for their theological and social positions.

The book also makes an unequivocal but somewhat implicit claim about the absolute primacy of Jerusalem/Zion, linked to a strong condemnation of the sanctuary of Bethel. The theme of repentance is important in the book, and so is the distinctive relation between the LORD and Israel along with its limitations; for example, not only that the LORD executes judgment against Israel like all other nations (2.6–3.2), but also explicitly states, “To Me, O Israelites, you are just like the Ethiopians” (9.7) and yet says “You [Israel] alone have I singled out of all the families of the earth” (3.2). The book also restates the common prophetic position about the primacy of morality over sacrifices.

The basic structure of the book is unambiguous. It includes a superscription or title that serves as an introduction (1.1), a clear motto that communicates one of the most significant messages of the book (1.2), and a series of prophetic readings of which the last two encapsulate much of the book: The LORD announces a severe, future punishment for the condemned nation, then an ideal and plentiful future to follow the deserved punishment (9.7–15). The series of prophetic readings begins with announcements of judgment against the nations, including Judah and Israel (1.3–2.16) and continues with reports of prophetic speeches and visions of the fate of Israel, along with a biographical vignette in 7.10–17.

Amos 2.6–3.8 is read as the haftarah for the parashah of Va-yeshev (Gen. 37.1–40.23), and in the Ashkenazi tradition 9.7–15 as the haftarah for the parashah of 'Aḥarei Mot (Lev. 16.1–18.30).

[EHUD BEN ZVI]

1 The words of Amos, a sheepbreeder from Tekoa, who prophesied concerning Israel in the reigns of Kings Uzziah of Judah and Jeroboam son of Joash of Israel, two years before the earthquake.^a

² He proclaimed:

The LORD roars from Zion,
Shouts aloud from Jerusalem;
And the pastures of the shepherds shall languish,
And the summit of Carmel shall wither.

³ Thus said the LORD:
For three transgressions of Damascus,
For four, I will not revoke it:^b
Because they threshed Gilead
With threshing boards of iron.

^a See Zech. 14.5. ^b I.e., the decree of punishment.

1.1: Superscription. The superscription introduces the book and characterizes it as a prophetic book. It associates the book with Amos, sets its world in the monarchic period, specifically in the days of Uzziah and Jeroboam of the 8th century BCE, and provides additional information about Amos. The v. tells the readers that Amos was a herdsman, a sheep and cattle breeder (see also 7.14). As such, Amos was a relatively wealthy man (cf. Meshah, 2 Kings 3.4). He was not a poor shepherd, as is at times erroneously claimed. He was from Tekoa, a Judahite town about 8 km (5 mi) south of Bethlehem. He prophesied concerning Israel: The meaning is ambiguous; it certainly points to the Northern Kingdom to the exclusion of Judah, but particularly from the perspective of a postmonarchic readership, it points to “the LORD’s people” (e.g., 9.14) who stand in a covenantal relationship with the LORD, and as such to both the former kingdoms, northern and southern, as well as to the much later intended readership of the book. The temporal reference to two years before the earthquake (cf. Zech. 14.5) enhances the verisimilitude, that is, the quality of appearing to be true or real, of the temporal frame and the reliability of the authorial voice in the book, since the imagery in 9.1–6 may be understood as earthquake imagery. Further, since earthquakes were seen as acts of God, it suggests an additional divine validation of the message of the book.

1.2: Motto and theophany. The book is unique in opening with a motto, a short, general thematic statement that is meant to (re)focus how the book should be understood. Its general imagery follows that of many theophanic reports. It is common in these reports to depict a manifestation of the deity’s power as leading to an upheaval in the natural world. Further, the LORD is likened to a lion (cf. Hos. 5.14; 11.10; 13.7), a relatively common motif in the ancient Near East. But one detail in the text is of utmost importance: The lion roars from Zion. The Jerusalem-centric message is abundantly clear, and the book presents itself as a work that conveys the message of that roaring lion from Zion, namely Jerusalem. Carmel is a fertile, mountainous area in the Northern Kingdom (southeast of modern Haifa), but the Heb word “carmel” refers also to farmland (cf. Isa. 32.15) or an orchard (and particularly to a vineyard). The general character of the pastures of the shepherd supports and plays on the broader meaning. The geographical reference is not meant to restrict the horizon of the text to particular region of the Northern Kingdom.

1.3–2.16: Reports of announcements of judgment against the nations. The unit is kept together not only by its unifying theme, but

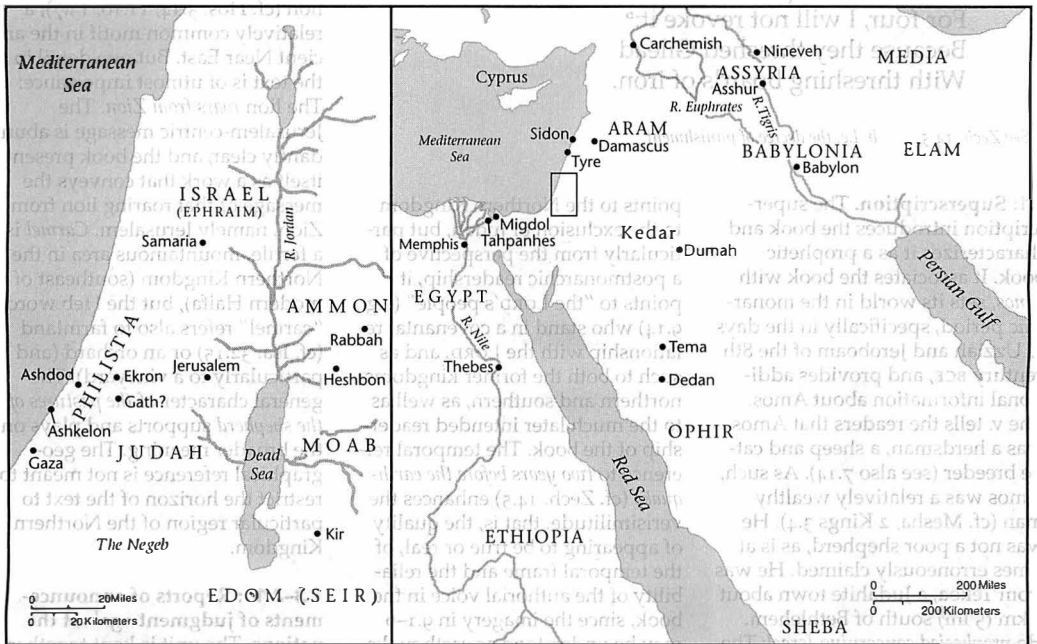

4 I will send down^a fire upon the palace of Hazael,
 And it shall devour the fortresses of Ben-hadad.^b
 5 I will break the gate bars of Damascus,
 And wipe out the inhabitants from the Vale of Aven
 And the sceptered ruler of Beth-eden;
 And the people of Aram shall be exiled to Kir
 —said the LORD.
 6 Thus said the LORD:
 For three transgressions of Gaza,
 For four, I will not revoke it:
 Because they exiled^c an entire population,
 Which they delivered to Edom.^d

a Cf. Lam. 1.13. b Cf. 2 Kings 13.22-25. c I.e., they cooperated in the annexation of Israelite territory; cf. Jer. 13.19 with note. d Emendation yields "Aram"; cf. Isa. 9.11.

also by a careful balance between repetition and differentiation among the different subunits. Nations other than Israel and Judah are condemned for transgressions against other nations; Judah for the rejection of God's teaching and Israel for actions against God's teaching. (The nations mentioned here are neighbors of Israel/Judah. Assyria, for instance, is not mentioned.) Rhetorically, the readers are sucked into this passage, eagerly anticipating the punishment of their neighbors, until the prophecy is turned against them as well. While Judah and Israel are condemned for covenant infractions, their neighbors are condemned for violating basic norms of decency. 1.3: The "it" in I will not revoke it is anticipatory, i.e., it points to the following decree of punishment. 4-5: Hazael and Ben-hadad are the names of two kings of Aram Damascus (see 2 Kings 8.7-15; 13.22-25). The territory of the kingdom of Aram Damascus (or simply Aram, as often in the Bible) partially overlaps that of Syria today. Vale of Aven and Beth-eden: Although Beth-eden points to an area near the Euphrates River, the wordplay is clear; the first name means "valley of disaster, nothingness" (or valley of delusion; cf. 5.5), the second "house of bliss." Within the book of Amos, Kir is the place of origin for the Arameans (see 9.7). Its whereabouts are unknown, but 2 Kings 16.9 reports that the Assyrians deported the Arameans to Kir, after they put an end to the kingdom of Aram. 6: Gaza here represents all the Philistine cities. Three others are men-

Places mentioned in the oracles against the nations

7 I will send down fire upon the wall of Gaza,
And it shall devour its fortresses;
8 And I will wipe out the inhabitants of Ashdod
And the sceptered ruler of Ashkelon;
And I will turn My hand against Ekron,
And the Philistines shall perish to the last man —said the Lord God.

9 Thus said the LORD:
For three transgressions of Tyre,
For four, I will not revoke it:
Because they handed over
An entire population to Edom,^a Ignoring the covenant of brotherhood.^b
10 I will send down fire upon the wall of Tyre,
And it shall devour its fortresses.

11 Thus said the LORD:
For three transgressions of Edom,
For four, I will not revoke it:
Because he pursued his brother with the sword
And repressed all pity,
Because his anger raged unceasing
And his fury stormed^c unchecked.
12 I will send down fire upon Teman,
And it shall devour the fortresses of Bozrah.

13 Thus said the LORD:
For three transgressions of the Ammonites,
For four, I will not revoke it:
Because they ripped open the pregnant women of Gilead
In order to enlarge their own territory.
14 I will set fire to the wall of Rabbah,
And it shall devour its fortresses,
Amid shouting on a day of battle,
On a day of violent tempest.
15 Their king and his officers shall go Into exile together —said the LORD.

2 Thus said the LORD:
For three transgressions of Moab,
For four, I will not revoke it:
Because he burned the bones
Of the king of Edom to lime.

tioned by name, Ashdod, Ashkelon, and Ekron. The same four cities are mentioned in the same order in Zeph. 2.4. 9: Tyre, situated in Lebanon of today, along with Sidon, two of the most important Phoenician cities for many centuries. 11: Cf. Obad. 10-14. Edom was situated in the area south of the Dead Sea. The last lines of the v. translated, "and destroyed his womenfolk, because his anger raged unceasing and he kept his wrath forever." 12: Teman and Bozrah are elsewhere situated in Edomite territory (cf. Isa. 34.6; 63.1; Jer. 49.7; Obad. 9). 13-14: Gilead was a region north of Ammon. It was a disputed area that changed hands several times in the monarchic period. From the perspective of the Bible it was Israelite territory, though not always under Israelite control. Rabbah, the capital of Ammon, is situated within the area of today's Amman. On the imagery, cf. 2 Kings 8.12; Isa. 13.16; Hos. 10.14; 14.1; Nah. 3.10; Ps. 137.9. 2.1-2: The kingdom of Moab was east of the Dead Sea, within the territory of present-day Jordan. Ruth, for instance, was a Moabite woman (see book of Ruth).

^a Emendation yields "Aram." ^b Cf. 1 Kings 5.26; 9.12-13.
^c Cf. Akkadian shamaru and Jer. 3.5.

2 I will send down fire upon Moab,
 And it shall devour the fortresses of Kerioth.
 And Moab shall die in tumult,
 Amid shouting and the blare of horns;
 3 I will wipe out the ruler from within her
 And slay all her officials along with him
 —said the LORD.
 4 Thus said the LORD:
 For three transgressions of Judah,
 For four, I will not revoke it:
 Because they have spurned the Teaching of the
 LORD
 And have not observed His laws;
 They are beguiled by the delusions
 After which their fathers walked.
 5 I will send down fire upon Judah,
 And it shall devour the fortresses of Jerusalem.
 6 Thus said the LORD:
 For three transgressions of Israel,
 For four, I will not revoke it:
 Because they have sold for silver
 Those whose cause was just,
 And the needy for a pair of sandals.
 7 [Ah,] you ^awho trample the heads of the poor
 Into the dust of the ground,
 And make the humble walk a twisted course!^a Father and son go to the same girl,
 And thereby profane My holy name.
 8 They recline by every altar
 On garments taken in pledge,
 And drink in the House of their God
 Wine bought with fines they imposed.
 9 Yet I
 Destroyed the Amorite before them,
 Whose stature was like the cedar's
 And who was stout as the oak, Destroying his boughs above
 And his trunk below!
 10 And I Brought you up from the land of Egypt
 And led you through the wilderness forty years,
 To possess the land of the Amorite!
 11 And I raised up prophets from among your sons

4: Many Jewish readers understood the Teaching [Heb “torah”] of the LORD as a reference to the Torah (see Hos. 4.6 n.). The same holds true for, among others, Hos. 8.1, 12. For the pair “teaching” (Torah, “torah”) and “decrees” or “statutes” (“hukim”) see, for instance, Deut. 17.19; Isa. 24.5; Mal. 3.22; Ezra 7.10; Neh. 9.13; 2 Chron. 19.10; 33.8; and cf. Exod. 18.16, 20; Lev. 26.46; Deut. 4.8. 6–16: Who is Israel here? Does Israel mean only the Northern Kingdom? On the surface, the answer seems positive; for Israel is set as a nation other than Judah, see vv. 5–6. V. 10, however, which refers to the exodus, suggests a broad understanding of Israel. The text plays with the ambiguity of the term Israel and allows and even encourages the readership of the book—which lives in the post-monarchic period (that is, the Jews, the “remnant of Judah”)—to identify with the Israel of the book; they are their ancestors and their fate is important to them. The main transgressions are of a social nature and involve the oppression of the powerless. Sexual and cultic behaviors are also explicitly mentioned. 6: This begins the haftarah (prophetic reading) for the Torah portion concerned with the sale of Joseph, most likely reflecting an interpretive tradition that Joseph was the just person sold for [the price of] a pair of sandals. 8: On garments taken in pledge, cf. Deut. 4.17; Job 22.6; 24.3–4, 9 and contrast this element and the entire description of the sinners here with the one of the pious son in Ezek. 18.15–17. 9–11: The summary of the LORD’s dealings with Israel is meant to contrast the faithfulness of the patron of Israel (i.e., the LORD) with the long history of unfaithfulness of the patron’s client (i.e., Israel). The readers of the book know that such a pattern of behavior calls for the punishment of the client (Israel) and provides just grounds for punishment of the latter. But is the LORD going to revoke the status of Israel? The answer of the book of Amos is a clear no.

a-a Understanding sho’afim as equivalent to shafim. Emendation yields: “Who crush on the ground / The heads of the poor, / And push off the road / The humble of the land”; cf. Job 24.4.

And nazirites from among your young men.
Is that not so, O people of Israel?

—says the LORD.

12 But you made the nazirites drink wine
And ordered the prophets not to prophesy.

13 ^aAh, I will slow your movements
As a wagon is slowed

When it is full of cut grain.^a 14 Flight shall fail the swift,

The strong shall find no strength,
And the warrior shall not save his life.

15 The Bowman shall not hold his ground,
And the fleet-footed shall not escape,
Nor the horseman save his life.

16 Even the most stouthearted warrior Shall run away unarmed^b that day

—declares the LORD.

3 Hear this word, O people of Israel,
That the LORD has spoken concerning you, Concerning the whole family that I brought up
from the land of Egypt:

2 You alone have I singled out
Of all the families of the earth—
That is why I will call you to account
For all your iniquities.

3 Can two walk together Without having met?

a-a Meaning of verse uncertain; alternatively: "I will slow your movements / As a threshing sledge (cf. Isa. 28.27-28) is slowed / When clogged by cut grain."

b Lit. "naked."

12: Nazirites drink wine: The Nazirite vow forbade the consumption of wine or any derivation of grapes (Num. 6.3; Judg. 13.7). 14-16: The description of the warrior men points at an upside-down order caused by divine intervention. It parallels the one caused by human intervention (i.e., prophets who do not talk, Nazirites who drink). The term translated as unarmed means lit. "naked" (see translators' note b).

3.1-6.14 Three readings about judgment. The readers are presented with a set of three units, each beginning with the phrase

Hear this word. Thus the phrase serves also to mark the book into subunits, just as the phrase ending the previous chapter, declares the LORD, typically expresses the end of a subunit. Each of these units shows internal subdivisions that are marked at times by the repetition of another phrase, such as "Assuredly" (or "therefore") units (5.13, 16) and "Ah" (or "Woe") units (see 5.18; 6.1). In ancient times there were no paragraph markers, but the repetition of an important word, particularly at the beginning of a section, served approximately the same purpose. But ancient writers and readers often weakened the boundaries between literary subunits. For instance, they created links that cut across different units within the book (e.g., there is a fourth "Hear" unit in 8.4-14, which is linked to the surrounding text in the book and to these three units at the same time). Moreover, particularly in prophetic books, texts were written to allow multiple ways of subdividing them. In these cases, each of these different subdivisions points to a particular, but partial reading. These partial readings inform each other, and all together create a meaning much richer than any of them separately. In the world of the book, people are supposed to hear "this word," but in the actual world the readers of the book are asked to read and study "this word" and to read it to those who cannot read by themselves. Each of these units (3.1-15; 4.1-13; 5.1-6.14) deals with judgment (see below), and each of them is presented as a reliable report of "this word," that is, of a "prophetic word" (Heb "davar") from the monarchic past. But they do not repeat themselves. Far from it, each of them addresses the matter in a different way, and all together provide the reader with a multifaceted image of Israel and of its impending judgment.

3.1-15: First report of a prophetic word in the monarchic period announcing judgment against Israel. 1: The whole family: This inclusive reference to Israel allows and encourages the identification of the readership with Israel, though, as expected, vv. 9, 12 point to Israel as the Northern Kingdom. The text shifts its references to the LORD from the third to the first person, and accordingly human and divine speech become interwoven and their respective limits blurred. This is common in prophetic books. 2: The LORD states that this unique relationship carries obligations, and punishment will result if the obligations are not fulfilled (see 1.9-11 n.). 3-8: A series of rhetorical questions, invoking cause-and-effect situations,

4 Does a lion roar in the forest
 When he has no prey?
 Does a great beast let out a cry from its den
 Without having made a capture?

5 Does a bird drop on the ground—in a trap—
 With no snare there?
 Does a trap spring up from the ground
 Unless it has caught something?

6 When a ram's horn is sounded in a town,
 Do the people not take alarm?
 Can misfortune come to a town
 If the LORD has not caused it?

7 Indeed, my Lord GOD does nothing Without having revealed His purpose
 To His servants the prophets.

8 A lion has roared,
 Who can but fear?
 My Lord GOD has spoken,
 Who can but prophesy?

9 Proclaim in the fortresses of Ashdod^a
 And in the fortresses of the land of Egypt!
 Say:
 Gather on the hill^b of Samaria
 And witness the great outrages within her
 And the oppression in her midst.

10 They are incapable of doing right
 —declares the LORD;
 They store up lawlessness and rapine
 In their fortresses.

11 Assuredly,
 Thus said my Lord GOD:
 An enemy, all about the land!
 He shall strip you of your splendor,
 And your fortresses shall be plundered.

12 Thus said the LORD:
 As a shepherd rescues from the lion's jaws
 Two shank bones or the tip of an ear,
 So shall the Israelites escape
 Who dwell in Samaria—
 With the leg^c of a bed or the head^c of a couch.

13 Hear [this], and warn the House of Jacob —says my Lord GOD, the God of Hosts—

14 That when I punish Israel for its transgressions,
 I will wreak judgment on the altar^d of Bethel, serves didactic purposes. The questions lead up to the implicit question: How is it that the prophet warns of the impending doom to be caused by God, but the people do not pay any attention?

12: The lion imagery emerges again (cf. 1.2; 3.4, 8), this time with sarcasm. Just as two bones or the tip of an ear are useless remnants of an attack, so the small material remains of the Northern Kingdom will be useless, serving only as tokens and reminders of what had been before. Yet, following a theme that would be developed later in this book, and is developed in other prophetic books, there would be some kind of remnant.

14: Bethel, a city and one of the main centers of worship in the Northern Kingdom. It plays an important role in the book of Amos; see 4.4; 5.5; 7.10, and is important in numerous biblical traditions (e.g., Gen. 12.8; Judg. 21.2; 1 Kings 12.29; Hos. 10.15; 12.5).

^a Septuagint reads "Assyria."

^b Heb. plural; but cf. 4.1; 6.1.

^c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^d Heb. plural, but cf. "altar" in next line.

And the horns of the altar shall be cut off
And shall fall to the ground.

15 I will wreck the winter palace
Together with the summer palace;
The ivory palaces shall be demolished,
And the great houses shall be destroyed
—declares the LORD.

4 Hear this word, you cows of Bashan
On the hill of Samaria—
Who defraud the poor,
Who rob the needy;
Who say to your^a husbands,
“Bring, and let’s carouse!”
2 My Lord GOD swears by His holiness:
Behold, days are coming upon you ^bWhen you will be carried off in baskets,
And, to the last one, in fish baskets,
3 And taken out [of the city]—
Each one through a breach straight ahead—
And flung on the refuse heap^b
—declares the LORD.

4 Come to Bethel and transgress;
To Gilgal, and transgress even more:
Present your sacrifices the next morning
And your tithes on the third day;
5 And burn a thank offering of leavened bread;^c
And proclaim freewill offerings loudly.
For you love that sort of thing, O Israelites —declares my Lord GOD.

6 I, on My part, have given you
Cleanness of teeth in all your towns,
And lack of food in all your settlements.
Yet you did not turn back to Me
—declares the LORD.

7 I therefore withheld the rain from you
Three months before harvesttime:
I would make it rain on one town
And not on another;
One field would be rained upon
While another on which it did not rain
Would wither.

8 So two or three towns would wander
To a single town to drink water,
But their thirst would not be slaked.

15: Winter palace . . . summer palace, perhaps a reference to the wealthy who can afford two houses, but also a merism, i.e., a reference to extremes (e.g., “young and old”) to convey totality (“all your houses”). Ivory palaces, ornamented with, not made of, ivory. Since ivory was costly, this is an extravagantly luxurious house. Pieces of well-crafted ivory inlay have been excavated from Samaria.

4.1-13: Second report of a prophetic word in the monarchic period announcing judgment against Israel. Israel is here given many warnings and chances; the phrase Yet you did not turn back to Me—declares the LORD repeats as a litany, justifying the punishment of Israel, but also emphasizing that repenting or returning is efficacious. 1: Cows of Bashan, “well-fed, plump cows,” in this context, elite women. According to the text these women oppressed the poor and encouraged their husbands to do so for their benefit. Although today it is clearly offensive to call a woman “a plump cow,” it is uncertain if this was the case at the time of the composition of the book. 2-3: The precise meaning of the verses is uncertain, but they surely point to deportation. The identity of the enemy that will exile the people is not mentioned, nor is it anywhere in the book, though exile is announced repeatedly (e.g., 5.5, 27; 6.7; 7.11, 17; cf. 9.4). 4-5: The sarcasm is striking. 4: Gilgal, a main center of worship in the Northern Kingdom (cf. Josh. 4.20-22; Hos. 4.15; 9.15; 12.2). 6: Cleanness of teeth, a euphemism for famine. Since there will be nothing to eat, the teeth will be

^a Heb. “their.” ^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^c Cf. Lev. 7.12-14; where, however, the bread is not to be burned.

Yet you did not turn back to Me
—declares the LORD.

9 I scourged you with blight and mildew;
Repeatedly^a your gardens and vineyards,
Your fig trees and olive trees
Were devoured by locusts.
Yet you did not turn back to Me
—declares the LORD.

10 I sent against you pestilence
In the manner of Egypt;^b
I slew your young men with the sword,
Together with your captured horses,
And I made the stench of your armies
Rise in your very nostrils.
Yet you did not turn back to Me
—declares the LORD.

11 I have wrought destruction among you
As when God destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah;
You have become like a brand plucked from burning.
Yet you have not turned back to Me
—declares the LORD.

12 Assuredly,
“Because I am doing that to you,”^c
Even so will I act toward you, O Israel—
Prepare to meet your God, O Israel!

13 Behold,
He who formed the mountains,
And created the wind,
And has told man what His wish^a is,
Who turns blackness^d into daybreak,
And treads upon the high places of the earth—
His name is the LORD, the God of Hosts.

5 Hear this word which I intone
As a dirge over you, O House of Israel:
2 Fallen, not to rise again,
Is Maiden Israel;
Abandoned on her soil
With none to lift her up.
3 For thus said my Lord God
About the House of Israel:

very clean. 10: In the manner of Egypt, an allusion to the plagues (Exod. chs 7–12). 11–12: The list of ever-increasing calamities seems to reach its peak with the reference to Sodom and Gomorrah, which were traditional, conventional examples of cities destroyed because of immorality, but there is even more. V. 12 may be translated, “Therefore, thus I am about to do to you (sing.), O Israel: because this is what I will do to you—Prepare to meet your God, O Israel.” The exact punishment, narrated to Israel in the second-person singular, in contrast to the previous second-person plurals, is meant to increase its affective appeal, though the exact punishment is left to the reader’s imagination.

5.1–6.14: Third report of a prophetic word in the monarchic period announcing judgment against Israel. This section concludes with two expanded “Ah” (or “Woe”) units (see 5.18–27; 6.1–14). 1–2: Amos uses the funeral qinah or dirge (used to lament the death of individuals) metaphorically to show that the nation is “dead.” 3: Again, the idea of a remnant (see 3.12 n.).

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Alluding to the plagues at the time of the Exodus.

c-c Emendation yields “Because you are acting thus toward Me.”

d Cf. Joel 2.2. Emendation yields “darkness”; cf. 5.8.

The town that marches out a thousand strong
 Shall have a hundred left,
 And the one that marches out a hundred strong
 Shall have but ten left.

4 Thus said the LORD
 To the House of Israel:
 Seek Me, and you will live.

5 Do not seek Bethel,
 Nor go to Gilgal,
 Nor cross over^a to Beer-sheba;
 For Gilgal shall go into exile,
 And Bethel shall become a delusion.

6 Seek the LORD, and you will live, ^bElse He will rush like fire upon^b the House of Joseph
 And consume Bethel^c with none to quench it.

7 [Ah,] you who turn justice into wormwood
 And hurl righteousness to the ground!
 [Seek the LORD,]

8 Who made the Pleiades and Orion,
 Who turns deep darkness into dawn
 And darkens day into night,
 Who summons the waters of the sea
 And pours them out upon the earth—
 His name is the LORD!

9 ^bIt is He who hurls destruction upon strongholds,
 So that ruin comes upon fortresses!^b

10 They hate the arbiter in the gate,
 And detest him whose plea is just.
 11 Assuredly,
 Because you ^bimpose a tax^b on the poor
 And exact from him a levy of grain,
 You have built houses of hewn stone,
 But you shall not live in them;
 You have planted delightful vineyards,
 But shall not drink their wine.

12 For I have noted how many are your crimes,
 And how countless your sins—
 You enemies of the righteous,
 You takers of bribes,
 You who subvert in the gate
 The cause of the needy!

4-6: The emphasis must be on seeking God, which cannot be accomplished by seeking out the traditional sites where He is worshipped. 5: The Heb is punning: For Gilgal shall go into exile (“galoh yigleh”). 6: House of Joseph, the Northern Kingdom. 7: Wormwood, an aromatic plant that yields a bitter extract and tastes bitter (cf. Deut. 29.7; Jer. 9.14; 23.15; Prov. 5.4; Lam. 3.15, 19). Justice is supposed to be sweet, but they turn it bitter and by doing so they embitter the life of the poor; cf. 6.12.

8: Allusions to creation are often invoked to show God's power. 11: The image of building houses and establishing vines but being denied the ability to enjoy them points to the futility of human activities in the face of divine judgment (cf. Deut. 28.39; Mic. 6.15; Zeph. 1.13). Later (9.4) the image is turned around to exemplify the bliss that results from human activity under divine blessing. 12: In the gate, where justice was dispensed (cf. Deut. 16.18; 17.8; Zech. 8.10, among others). Again, the infractions are ethical rather than cultic.

a I.e., into Judah; cf. 1 Kings 19.3.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Septuagint reads “the House of Israel.”

13 Assuredly,
At such a time the prudent man keeps silent,
For it is an evil time.

14 Seek good and not evil,
That you may live,
And that the LORD, the God of Hosts,
May truly be with you,
As you think.

15 Hate evil and love good,
And establish justice in the gate;
Perhaps the LORD, the God of Hosts,
Will be gracious to the remnant of Joseph.

16 Assuredly,
Thus said the LORD,
My Lord, the God of Hosts:
In every square there shall be lamenting,
In every street cries of "Ah, woe!"
And the farm hand shall be Called to mourn,
And those skilled in wailing
To lament;

17 For there shall be lamenting
In every vineyard, too,
When I pass through your midst
—said the LORD.

18 Ah, you who wish
For the day of the LORD!
Why should you want
The day of the LORD?
It shall be darkness, not light!—

19 As if a man should run from a lion
And be attacked by a bear;
Or if he got indoors,
Should lean his hand on the wall
And be bitten by a snake!
Surely the day of the LORD shall be
Not light, but darkness,
Blackest night without a glimmer.

21 I loathe, I spurn your festivals,
I am not appeased by your solemn assemblies.

22 If you offer Me burnt offerings—or your meal offerings—
I will not accept them;
I will pay no heed

14–15: This picks up on the theme of seeking, developed in vv. 4–6. The emphasis on ethical behavior here and in similar verses (e.g., Mic. 6.8) contributed much to an understanding of the prophets as bearers of ethical monotheism. These vv. are much cherished for this reason in modern liberal streams in Judaism. Within its ancient context, the v. claims that a sharp turn toward ethical behavior may influence God to revoke the divine decree against Israel. Still, whereas repentance is necessary for the annulment of the decree, the book claims that repentance by itself is not sufficient. God decides whether to revoke or not. On this understanding of ethical monotheism, see also 5.21–25. 18–20: On the day of the LORD here and elsewhere see Joel 1.15 n. As the context suggests, the popular understanding of this Day was a day in which Israel would be saved through God's great power, while the prophetic suggestion is that God will use His power against His enemies, here Israel. If this v. is authentic to the prophet Amos, it is the earliest reference to the Day of the LORD. 21–25: The text does not state that sacrifices—or any other cultic rituals—are wrong per se, but rather that those brought by people who behave in a manner offensive to God are unacceptable to God. From the perspective of the intended readers of the book, the time in the wilderness is comparable to the time between the destruction of the First and the building of the Second Temple, since there was no Temple at either time.

23 To your gifts of fatlings.
 Spare Me the sound of your hymns,
 And let Me not hear the music of your lutes.
 24 But let justice well up like water,
 Righteousness like an unfailing stream.
 25 Did you offer sacrifice and oblation to Me
 Those forty years in the wilderness,
 O House of Israel?
 26^a And you shall carry off your "king"—
 Sikkuth^b and Kiyyun,^b
 The images you have made for yourselves
 Of your astral deity—
 27 As I drive you into exile beyond Damascus
 —Said the LORD,
 whose name is God of Hosts.^c

6 Ah, you who are at ease in Zion^d
 And confident on the hill of Samaria,
 You notables of the leading nation
 On whom the House of Israel ^epin their hopes:^e
 2 Cross over to Calneh and see,
 Go from there to Great Hamath,
 And go down to Gath of the Philistines:
 Are [you] better than those kingdoms,
^fOr is their territory larger than yours?^f
 3 ^gYet you ward off [the thought of] a day of woe
 And convene a session of lawlessness.^g 4 They lie on ivory beds,
 Lolling on their couches,
 Feasting on lambs from the flock
 And on calves from the stalls.
 5 ^gThey hum snatches of song
 To the tune of the lute—
 They account themselves musicians^g like David.
 6 They drink [straight] from the wine bowls
 And anoint themselves with the choicest oils—
 But they are not concerned about the ruin of Joseph.
 7 Assuredly, right soon

25: This contradicts the Priestly tradition reflected in the Torah, which suggests that offerings were a crucial part of the wilderness experience. 26: The passage has a strong satiric tone. Their "king"—Shikutz, is a Mesopotamian, astral deity. Kiyyun refers to Saturn, your astral deity. The god Sikkuth is mentioned here because of the aural pun created by his name and "shikutz" (detestable things). The people are satirically depicted carrying their images as in a (ritual) procession, but they walk into exile! 6.2: Calneh . . . Great Hamath . . . Gath, cities and territories that were conquered by the Assyrians. The author or authors and the intended readers of the book were either unaware or thought it irrelevant that these cities and territories were actually conquered years after the period in which the book is set (see 1.1). 5: The tradition of David as the archetypal musician is reflected in later Jewish tradition, which attributes the entire book of Psalms to him.

a Vv. 26-27 would read well after 6.14.

b Two Akkadian names applied to Saturn, here deliberately pointed with the vowels of Heb. shiqqus, "detestable thing."

c I.e., who is Lord of all the astral bodies.

d Emendation yields "Joseph," cf. v. 6, and 5.6, 15, where "Joseph" denotes the northern kingdom. e-e Taking ba' l- as synonymous with ba' 'ad; see Isa. 45.24 and note b-b.

f-f Emendation yields "Or is your territory larger than theirs?"

g-g Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

They shall head the column of exiles;
They shall loll no more at festive meals.

8 My Lord God swears by Himself:
I loathe ^athe Pride of Jacob,^a
And I detest his fortresses.
I will declare forfeit city and inhabitants alike
—declares the LORD, the God of Hosts.

⁹If ten people are left in one house, they shall die.
¹⁰^bAnd if someone's kinsman—who is to burn incense for him—comes to carry the remains out of a house,^b and he calls to the one at the rear of the house, "Are there any alive besides you?" he will answer, "No, none." And he will say, "Hush!"—so that no one may utter the name of the LORD.

11 For the LORD will command,
And the great house shall be smashed to bits,
And the little house to splinters.

12 Can horses gallop on a rock?
^cCan it be plowed with oxen?^c
Yet you have turned justice into poison weed
And the fruit of righteousness to wormwood.
13 [Ah,] those who are so happy about Lo-dabar,^d Who exult, "By our might
We have captured Karnaim!"^d
14 But I, O House of Israel,
Will raise up a nation against you
—declares the LORD, the God of Hosts—
Who will harass you from Lebo-Hamath
To the Wadi Arabah.

7 This is what my Lord God showed me: He was creating [a plague of] locusts at the time when the late-sown crops were beginning to sprout—^ethe late-sown crops after the king's reaping.^e ²When it had finished devouring the herbage in the land, I said, "O Lord God, pray forgive. How will Jacob survive? He is so small." ³The LORD relented concerning this. "It shall not come to pass," said the LORD.

8: The reference to the Pride of Jacob points to the arrogance of the people. It also ridicules one of the most positive self-descriptions of Israel (see Ps. 47.5). Note the strong contrast between the text there and this v. Ironically, in 8.7, God swears by this pride which He here condemns. 13: The reference to Lo-dabar points to a city east of the Jordan (and so does Karnaim). At the same time, it conveys a pun on the basic meaning of "lo-davar," that is, "not a thing," nothing. Similarly, Karnaim suggests to the readers a pun on "keren," horn, a symbol of strength. Wordplays are common in prophetic books.

7.1-9: Three reports of prophetic visions of judgment. These are the first three of five reports about prophetic visions (7.1-3; 4-6, 7-9; 8.1-3; 9.1-6). The series leads up to the vision of the destruction in 9.1-6. In the first two of the present three cases, the LORD relents. 1-3: Judgment by locusts (cf. Joel).

a-a A poetic designation of the northern kingdom.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "Can one plow the sea with oxen?"

d Two towns east of the Jordan recovered for Israel by Jeroboam II (see 2 Kings 14.25). For Lo-dabar, cf. 2 Sam. 9.4, 5; 17.27; for Karnaim, cf. Gen. 14.5.

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. The king's reaping of fodder apparently occurred near the end of the rainy season, and whatever the locust destroyed after that could not be replaced for another year.

⁴This is what the Lord God showed me: Lo, my Lord GOD was summoning ^ato contend by^a fire which consumed the Great Deep and was consuming the fields. ⁵I said, "Oh, Lord GOD, refrain! How will Jacob survive? He is so small." ⁶The LORD relented concerning this. "That shall not come to pass, either," said my Lord God.

⁷This is what He showed me: He was standing on a wall ^bchecked with a plumb line^b and He was holding a plumb line.^c ⁸And the LORD asked me, "What do you see, Amos?" "A plumb line,"^c I replied. And my Lord declared, "I am going to apply a plumb line^c to My people Israel; I will pardon them no more. ⁹The shrines of Isaac shall be laid waste, and the sanctuaries of Israel reduced to ruins; and I will turn upon the House of Jeroboam with the sword."

¹⁰Amaziah, the priest of Bethel, sent this message to King Jeroboam of Israel: "Amos is conspiring against you within the House of Israel. The country cannot endure the things he is saying. ¹¹For Amos has said, 'Jeroboam shall die by the sword, and Israel shall be exiled from its soil.' "

¹²Amaziah also said to Amos, "Seer, off with you to the land of Judah! ^dEarn your living^d there, and do your prophesying there. ¹³But don't ever prophesy again at Bethel; for it is a king's sanctuary and a royal palace." ¹⁴Amos answered Amaziah: "I am not a prophet,^e and I am not a prophet's disciple. I am a cattle breeder^f and a tender of sycamore figs. ¹⁵But the LORD took me away from following the flock, and the LORD said to me, 'Go, prophesy to My people Israel.' ¹⁶And so, hear the word of the LORD. You say I must not prophesy about the House of Israel or preach about the House of Isaac; ¹⁷but this, I swear, is what the LORD said: Your wife shall ^gplay the harlot^g in the town, your sons and daughters shall fall by the sword, and your land shall be divided up with a measuring line. And you yourself shall die on unclean soil;^h for Israel shall be exiled from its soil."

8 This is what my Lord GOD showed me: There was a basket of figs.ⁱ ²He said, "What do you see, Amos?" "A basket of figs," I replied. And the LORD said to me:

4-6: Judgment by fire. 7-9: The House of Jeroboam refers to Jeroboam II or better, the "House of Jehu," the last stable dynasty of the Northern Kingdom. The term refers also—at least by connotation—to the Northern Kingdom as a whole.

7.10-17: Narrative about Amos and the priest Amaziah. In some cases the term "Israel" here points only to the Northern Kingdom, but in others it may evoke a more inclusive idea of Israel to the post-monarchic readers of the book and accordingly allow them to identify with that Israel. Although this section disrupts the narrative of "This is what my Lord GOD showed me," it is placed here, where it is contextually appropriate, immediately following the oracle against Jeroboam in v. 9. 11: Amos's prophecy was considered treasonous because it would demoralize the people. 12: The prophet is a Judahite, and so Amaziah sends him back to Judah. 14: Amos maintains that he is not a professional prophet, who may be hired for his services (see 1 Sam. 9.7) and thus "bought"; rather, God took him away from his job to perform a particular task (cf. 2 Sam. 7.8). This being so, he has no alternative but to prophesy. Amos's reply enhances the authority associated with his message.

8.1-3: Fourth report of a prophetic vision of judgment: the basket of summer fruit. Figs, lit. "summer basket" or "basket of summer fruit," plays on the words "kayitz" and "the end" ("ketz"). V. 2 may be translated "The end has come upon My people Israel."

a-a Emendation yields "flaming."

b-b Or "destined for the pickaxe"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Or "pickaxe"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Lit. "eat bread." e I.e., by profession.

f Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "sheep breeder"; cf. the next verse and 1.1.

g-g Emendation yields "be ravished"; cf. Lam. 5.11. h Cf. Hos. 9.3 and note.

i Heb. qayis, lit. "summer fruit."

"The ^ahour of doom^a has come for My people Israel; I will not pardon them again. ³And the singing women of the palace shall howl on that day—declares my Lord GOD:

So many corpses
Left lying everywhere!
Hush!"

⁴Listen to this, you ^bwho devour the needy, annihilating the poor of the land,^b ⁵saying, "If only the new moon were over, so that we could sell grain; the sabbath, so that we could offer wheat for sale, ^cusing an ephah that is too small, and a shekel that is too big,^c tilting a dishonest scale, ⁶and selling grain refuse as grain! We will buy the poor for silver, the needy for a pair of sandals." ⁷The LORD swears by^d the Pride of Jacob: "I will never forget any of their doings."

⁸ Shall not the earth shake for this
And all that dwell on it mourn?
Shall it not all rise like the Nile
And surge and subside like the Nile of Egypt?
⁹ And in that day —declares my Lord GOD—
I will make the sun set at noon,
I will darken the earth on a sunny day.
¹⁰ I will turn your festivals into mourning
And all your songs into dirges;
I will put sackcloth on all loins
And tonsures on every head.
I will make it^e mourn as for an only child,
All^f of it as on a bitter day.

¹¹A time is coming—declares my Lord GOD—when I will send a famine upon the land: not a hunger for bread or a thirst for water, but for hearing the words of the LORD. ¹²Men shall wander from ^gsea to sea^g and from north to east to seek the word of the LORD, but they shall not find it.

¹³In that day, the beautiful maidens and the young men shall faint with thirst—

¹⁴ Those who swear by the guilt of Samaria, Saying, "As your god lives, Dan,"^h a-a Heb. qes.

b-b Emendation yields "who on every new moon devour the needy, and on every sabbath the humble of the land"; cf. v. 5.

c-c Giving short measures of grain, but using oversize weights for the silver received in payment.

d Or "concerning"; cf. 6.8 with note. e I.e., the earth; cf. vv. 8 and 9d.

f Lit. "the end." g-g Emendation yields "south to west." h See 1 Kings 12.28–29.

8.4–14: Report of a prophetic word in the monarchic period.

Another "Hear" unit (cf. 3.1–6.14).

4–5: New moon, the beginning of a month, traditionally observed as a holiday. The text clearly implies that days of religious observance (Shabbath, new moon) are supposed to be kept, though observance of the new moon by ceasing from work is nowhere recorded in Torah legislation. The book of Amos is certainly not against cultic observance. The problem here is that people are eager for the holiday to be over so they can get on with making money through dishonest means. The text associates lack of reverence for these religious observances and dishonest trade (see Lev. 19.35–37); cf. Amos 5.21–25 n. Ephah . . . small . . . shekel . . . big: The measure with which the corrupt merchants sell grain is smaller than it should be, allowing them to sell less than an ephah (a unit of dry measure of perhaps 23 liters) for the full price; on the other hand, the weight with which they buy grain is larger than it should be, allowing them to get more for the shekel (about 11.4 gm) than they should.

9: A solar eclipse is a portent of doom and a reversal of the natural order. Compare the description of the Day of the LORD in 5.18–20.

10: The idea of reversal continues. The festivals, which the people do not respect, will be turned into times of mourning. 11–14: Famine, which is one of the ways God punishes the people's sins, and which often accompanies destruction, is here used metaphorically.

11–12: The people will be hungry and thirsty for God's word. Rabbinic sources understand this text as pointing to a time in which the Torah (the words of the LORD) will be forgotten: "Our Rabbis taught: When our Masters entered the vineyard at Yabneh, they said, The Torah is destined to be forgotten in Israel, as it is said, Behold, the days come, saith the LORD God, that I will send a famine in the land . . ." b. Shab. 138b [Soncino ET]; and see also t. 'Ed. 1.1.).

And "As the way to Beer-sheba lives"^a—
They shall fall to rise no more.

9 I saw my LORD standing by the altar, and He said:
^bStrike the capitals so that the thresholds quake, and make an end of the first of them all.^b And I will slay the last of them with the sword; not one of them shall escape, and not one of them shall survive.

² If they burrow down to Sheol,
From there My hand shall take them;
And if they ascend to heaven,
From there I will bring them down.
³ If they hide on the top of Carmel,
There I will search them out and seize them;
And if they conceal themselves from My sight
At the bottom of the sea,
There I will command
The serpent to bite them.
⁴ And if they go into captivity
Before their enemies,
There I will command
The sword to slay them.
I will fix My eye on them for evil
And not for good.

⁵ It is my Lord the GOD of Hosts
At whose touch the earth trembles
And all who dwell on it mourn,
And all of it swells like the Nile
And subsides like the Nile of Egypt;
⁶ Who built His chambers in heaven
And founded His vault on the earth,
Who summons the waters of the sea
And pours them over the land—
His name is the LORD.

⁷ To Me, O Israelites, you are Just like the Ethiopians —declares the LORD.
True, I brought Israel up
From the land of Egypt,
But also the Philistines from Caphtor
And the Arameans from Kir.
⁸ Behold, the Lord GOD has His eye
Upon the sinful kingdom:
I will wipe it off
The face of the earth!

9.1-6: Fifth report of a prophetic vision of judgment: the LORD at the altar. Which altar? The text carefully avoids an explicit reference to the altar at Bethel, which would have constrained the intended readers of the book.
2: Sheol, the place of the dead. The nadir of the earth; the opposite of heaven.
3: Carmel, a peak in northern Israel. Here it serves as both a reference to the highest point on earth that an Israelite may think of reaching and as a symbol of the highest point on earth in cosmic terms (cf. 1.2); the opposite of the bottom of the sea. Serpent, here a mythical sea-creature. 5-6: Theophanic (cf. 1.2) and creation imagery is used to emphasize God's power. Such descriptions, called doxologies (praises of God) are interspersed throughout Amos, and characterize this prophetic book.

9.7-10: The final account of judgment provides also a glimmer of hope. 7: Israel is not granted special privileges by the LORD, even if God took them out of Egypt.
8-9: The severe condemnation and punishment of Israel in the past (from the viewpoint of the readership) shifts now to a promise of restoration and ideal conditions for Israel in the future.

^a See 5.5 with note. ^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

But, I will not wholly wipe out
 The House of Jacob —declares the LORD.
 9 For I will give the order
 And shake the House of Israel—
 Through all the nations—
 As one shakes [sand] in a sieve,^a
 And not a pebble falls to the ground.
 10 All the sinners of My people Shall perish by the sword,
 Who boast,
 “Never shall the evil Overtake us or come near us.”
 11 In that day,
 I will set up again the fallen booth of David:
 I will mend its breaches and set up its ruins anew.
 I will build it firm as in the days of old,
 12 ^bSo that they shall possess the rest of Edom
 And all the nations once attached to My name^b
 —declares the LORD
 who will bring this to pass.
 13 A time is coming —declares the LORD—
 When the plowman shall meet the reaper,^c
 And the treader of grapes
 Him who holds the [bag of] seed;
 When the mountains shall drip wine
 And all the hills shall wave [with grain].
 14 I will restore My people Israel.
 They shall rebuild ruined cities and inhabit them;
 They shall plant vineyards and drink their wine;
 They shall till gardens and eat their fruits.
 15 And I will plant them upon their soil,
 Nevermore to be uprooted
 From the soil I have given them
 —said the LORD your God.

9.11–15: Hope: restoration and an ideal future are promised.

11: Rabbinic sources understood the reference to setting up the fallen booth of David as pointing to the messianic era (e.g., b. Sanh. 96b–97a). Some Jewish medieval commentators understood the booth as a reference to the Temple, but the majority to the Davidic kingdom. Most modern scholars associate the image of the fallen booth of David with the fall of monarchic Judah and the exile. Ibn Ezra associates the verse with Hezekiah’s successful stand against Sennacherib (see 2 Kings 18.13–19.37; Isa. 36.1–37.38; 2 Chron. 32.1–23). (The majority of contemporary historians agree that Hezekiah was not successful against Sennacherib, either militarily or politically [see 2 Kings chs 18–20]. But the image of Hezekiah’s success had already in biblical times become central to the way Israel understood its past.) As for the particular reference to Edom, see Obadiah and n. there. 13: Cf. Lev. 26.5. The produce will be so abundant that the harvesting will continue through the time for planting new seeds. 15: The book concludes with a highly optimistic, unconditional promise: Nevermore will the disaster foretold, which actually transpired to the post-monarchic community, be repeated.

a A coarse sieve used for cleansing grain of straw and stones, or sand of pebbles and shells.

b-b I.e., the House of David shall reestablish its authority over the nations that were ruled by David.

c Cf. Lev. 26.5.

Obadiah

OBADIAH IS THE SHORTEST BOOK in the Bible, containing only 291 Heb words. Nonetheless, like all prophetic books, it is meant to be read, read again, and studied. The book's main topic is the destruction of Jerusalem in 586 BCE, and the putative actions of Edom against Judah at the time. The Edomites, the central characters of the book, were regarded as kin to the Israelites, since they were supposedly descended from Esau, Jacob's brother (see Gen. 25.30; 36.8; Num. 20.14; Deut. 2.4, 8, passim). In Obadiah, Edom serves both as a reference to the nation of that name that was considered to be Israel's brother—a motif explicitly mentioned in Obadiah 10—and also to the nations in general. Subsequently, Jews identified Edom with Rome and later with Christendom. For them, the book of Obadiah referred at least in part to the events associated with the destruction of the Second Temple (cf. Radak), or to future events associated with the coming of the messianic era (e.g., Abrahanel). Of course, ancient and medieval Christian readers were convinced that they were (the true) Israel, not Edom (cf. Rom. 9.6–13).

According to the book, the Edomites did not behave as brothers to the people of Judah in their worst hour but rather joined the enemy forces (cf. Ps. 137.7; Lam. 4.21–22). The book of Obadiah presents therefore a major confrontation between the LORD and Edom (and the nations it represents) that is in sharp contrast to God's relation with Judah/Israel, which will enjoy an eventual utopian future that will be consistent with God's kingdom on earth.

Some scholars differentiate between an original book of Obadiah and the present book, which they view as an expansion around an earlier core. Others emphasize the coherence of the text as it stands. The present book was composed in the postmonarchic period, as the references to the fall of Jerusalem, the exile, and the exilic community in Sardis (a city in modern Turkey that was the capital of the ancient kingdom of Lydia) demonstrate.

There are clear similarities between Obadiah 1–7 and Jer. 49.7–22 (or more precisely Jer. 49.7a, 14–16, 9–10). According to some, the author of the book of Obadiah borrowed from Jeremiah; according to others the opposite happened. More likely, however, the author of both texts borrowed from a common text whose full length and precise wording are unrecoverable.

The book of Obadiah is read as the haftarah for the parashah of Va-yishlah (Gen. 32.4– 36.43) in the Sephardic and Yemenite traditions; the Ashkenazic traditions read Hos. 11.7–12.12 instead of, or in addition to, Obadiah. Gen. chs 32–33 tells of the meeting between Jacob and Esau after Jacob's sojourn with Laban.

The book begins with an introduction (v. 1), then moves to a set of passages each of which deals with Edom's condemnation and judgment (vv. 2–4, 5–7, 8–15). By the end it becomes clear that Edom also stands for all the nations other than Israel. The theme of the judgment of the nations, and of Edom as a paradigm for the nations, is intertwined with that of Zion's glorious future in vv. 15b–18. The book concludes (vv. 19–21) with an image of an ideal future in which Israel is restored and the dominion is the LORD's (v. 21).

[EHUD BEN ZVI]

1 The prophecy of Obadiah.

We have received tidings from the LORD,
And an envoy has been sent out among the nations:
"Up! Let us rise up against her for battle."

Thus said my Lord God concerning Edom:
2 I will make you least among nations,
You shall be most despised.
3 Your arrogant heart has seduced you,
You who dwell in clefts of the rock,
In your lofty abode.
You think in your heart,
"Who can pull me down to earth?"
4 Should you nest as high as the eagle,
Should your eyrie be lodged 'mong the stars,
Even from there I will pull you down
—declares the LORD.

5 If thieves were to come to you,
Marauders by night,

1: Introduction to the book.

1a: NJPS follows the Targum and translates the title of the book as The prophecy of Obadiah. This translation is preferable to the usual, more etymological "The vision of Obadiah" (e.g., NRSV), because visual elements do not figure prominently in the book (the same holds true for Isa. 1.1). The title, however, should be not understood as meaning that the ensuing text contains only a report of God's words to Obadiah. God is surely not the only speaker in the book. It is unusual to introduce a biblical character by one name only, without a patronymic or name of a father (contrast Isa. 1.1; Jer. 1.1; Hos. 1.1; etc.). The lack of a more precise reference to Obadiah allowed the readers of the book to wonder whether the Obadiah of this book was the same Obadiah who figures prominently in 1 Kings ch 18. 1b: Thus said my Lord God concerning Edom: The Heb reads, "Thus said the LORD God concerning Edom." More importantly, the four lines of the translation that follow the title of the book (1a) are rearranged. The Heb text places "Thus said the LORD God concerning Edom" before We have received tidings from the LORD. Those who favor rearrangement of the text adopted in NJPS maintain that it makes more contextual sense to have thus said . . . just before v. 2. But others claim that the presence of the expression at the beginning of the book points to an important theological claim, namely that the entire prophetic book—including words uttered by God but also by a human prophetic speaker—is to be considered the LORD's word, and as such shares divine origin and authority.

2–4: First condemnation of Edom: its foolishness and self-deluding reliance on its own terrain. These vv. use well-known rhetorical techniques to characterize Edom as foolish while it claims to be wise. They represent Edom as one who inanely claims that the LORD is unable to reach it because of its mountainous territory, and at the same time considers scaling into the celestial realm. This type of characterization of the "enemy" is common in the ancient Near East. Edom was associated with wisdom in the Bible (v. 8; Jer. 49.7). 3: Rock (Heb "sela") is a pun on the name "Sela," one of the important cities of Edom (perhaps near the ancient city of Petra).

They would steal no more than they needed.

If vintagers came to you,
They would surely leave some gleanings.

How utterly you are destroyed!

6 How thoroughly rifled is Esau,
How ransacked his hoards!

7 All your allies turned you back
At the frontier;

Your own confederates
Have duped and overcome you;
[Those who ate] your bread
Have planted snares under you.

He is bereft of understanding.

8 In that day —declares the LORD—

I will make the wise vanish from Edom, Understanding from Esau's mount.

9 Your warriors shall lose heart, O Teman,
And not a man on Esau's mount Shall survive the slaughter.

10 For the outrage to your brother Jacob,
Disgrace shall engulf you,
And you shall perish forever.

11 On that day when you stood aloof,
When aliens carried off his goods,
When foreigners entered his gates
And cast lots for Jerusalem,
You were as one of them.

12 ^aHow could you^a gaze with glee
On your brother that day,
On his day of calamity!
How could you gloat
Over the people of Judah
On that day of ruin!
How could you loudly jeer
On a day of anguish!

13 How could you enter the gate of My people
On its day of disaster,
Gaze in glee with the others
On its misfortune
On its day of disaster,
And lay hands on its wealth
On its day of disaster!

14 How could you stand at the passes^b

5–7: Second condemnation of Edom: its foolishness and self-deluding reliance on human allies. These verses represent Edom as one who inanely trusts unreliable allies, who will turn against it and utterly destroy it. The section leads up to the obvious conclusion: He [Edom] is bereft of understanding. This type of characterization of the “enemy” is also common in the ancient Near East. 5: Vintagers (Heb “botzrim”) clearly evokes the name of another main Edomite city, “Botzrah” (Bozrah). 7: Another possible, and perhaps more likely, understanding of the first part of the v. is: “All your allies have deceived you, they have driven you to the border” (e.g., NRSV). In any case, it is clear that the trusted allies of Edom contributed to its downfall. Eating bread together was a sign of close relationship.

8–15: Judgment over Edom: the two days of destruction. Edom and the nations (other than Israel). The last passage in the set focuses on the actions of Edom against his brother on the day of Jerusalem's destruction and directly relates it to the future day of Edom's destruction (notice the repetition of “on the day”). The motto of this section is to a large extent as you did so shall it be done to you (v. 15, and contrast with Prov. 24.29). But as the unit concludes, the object of the divine wrath shifts from Edom to all nations (that is, nations other than Israel), suggesting to the readers that Edom also functions as a symbol for all the nations. Edom's actions, behavior, and future judgment are not an aberration, but rather paradigmatic for those of the nations. 8: In that day, Heb “on that day,” just as all other “on . . . day” in this unit. 9: Teman, a grandson of Esau (Edom, Gen. 36.11), here, as often in prophetic literature, a synonym for Edom (e.g., Jer. 49.7, 20; Ezek. 25.13). The name itself means “South.” Edom was south of Judah. 10: Your brother Jacob, i.e., Israel. Jacob and Esau were brothers (Gen. 25.20–34).

^{a-a} Lit. “Do not,” and so through v. 14. ^b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

To cut down its fugitives!
How could you betray those who fled
On that day of anguish!

15 As you did, so shall it be done to you;
Your conduct shall be requited.

Yea, against all nations
The day of the LORD is at hand.

16 That same cup that you^a drank on My Holy Mount

Shall all nations drink evermore,^b
Drink till their speech grows thick,
And they become as though they had never been.

17 But on Zion's mount a remnant shall survive,
And it shall be holy.^c

The House of Jacob shall dispossess
Those who dispossessed them.

18 The House of Jacob shall be fire,
And the House of Joseph flame,
And the House of Esau shall be straw;
They shall burn it and devour it,
And no survivor shall be left of the House of Esau
—for the LORD has spoken.

19^d Thus they shall possess the Negeb and Mount Esau as well, the Shephelah and Philistia. They shall possess the Ephraimite country and the district of Samaria,^e and Benjamin^f along with Gilead. ²⁰ And that exiled force of Israelites [shall possess] what belongs to the Phoenicians a I.e., the Israelites.

b Emendation yields "at My hand," cf. Isa. 51.17; Jer. 25.15; Ps. 75.9.

c I.e., inviolate; cf. Jer. 2.3.

d Meaning of parts of vv. 19–21 uncertain.

e After the exile of the northern tribes, the city and district of Samaria were occupied mainly by non-Israelites.

f Emendation yields "the land of the Ammonites."

15b–18: On salvation for post-monarchic Israel/Zion and judgment over Edom/the nations.

15b: This line is shared by the previous unit and this one. Sharing of expressions or lines between two neighboring units within a literary text is not uncommon. This feature brings the two units together, makes the book more cohesive, and contributes to the flow of the reading. 16–17: The text creates both a temporal differentiation between Israel that already drank the cup (see Jer. 25.15–29), and the nations that shall drink it, and a spatial one between holy Mt. Zion and the rest of the world. 17: The Heb clearly states that it is Zion's mount that shall be holy, not the remnant. 18: And no survivor shall be left of the House of Esau: This claim has later been understood as pointing to the world to come and to the place of "those whose evil deeds are like to those of Esau" rather than specifically to Romans (or non-Jews in general). See b. A. Z. 10b.

19–21: The concluding note of the book: a particular image of, and a divine promise for, the ideal future. As the translators' note in NJPS suggests, the text is somewhat difficult. V. 19 is probably better understood as follows: "Those of the Negev (South) will and should inherit/possess [the whole of] Mt. Esau [the mountain of Esau]; those of the Shephelah will and should inherit/possess the [whole of (the land of) the] Philistines; they (i.e., those of the Shephelah) will and should inherit/possess [all of] the land/highland of Ephraim and [all of] the land/highland of Samaria; and the Benjaminites, [all of the Gilead]"; cf. the Targum. A number of alternative readings and understandings of v. 20 have been advanced. Among them, "The exiles (/exilic community) of this territory who are (/consist of) the Israelites who are among the Canaanites (i.e., Phoenicians) will and should inherit/possess [what belongs to the Canaanites/Phoenicians] as far as Zarephath, while the Jerusalemite exiles (/exilic community) who are in Sepharad will and should inherit/possess the towns of the Negev/South." Although all agree that the text communicates that Israel will repossess the land, the question at stake is which social and geographical structure is envisioned for that Israel. There is much more agreement concerning v. 21, but see below. Sepharad was identified in the Targum as Spain. (It is more likely to be Sardis, a main city in Asia Minor.) The equation Sepharad = Spain, however, became a cornerstone in Jewish self-identification for centuries. The Jews of Spain and their descendants are called, and call themselves, Sepharadim (or Sefaradim). Some scholars would prefer to translate "saviors" instead of liberators and "to judge" rather than to wreak judgment on Mount Esau. The conclusion of the book originally as far as Zarephath,^a while the Jerusalemite exile community of Sepharad^b shall possess the towns of the Negeb.

²¹For c-liberators shall march up^c on Mount Zion to wreak judgment on Mount Esau; and dominion shall be the LORD's.

evoked the language associated with the time of the Judges, who are sometimes called deliverers or liberators (see, e.g., Judg. 3:9). In later Jewish tradition, some understood the text as pointing to a messianic time. Such an understanding raises questions about the identity of the mentioned saviors (see Radak on Mic. 5:4; Ibn Ezra; Abравanel). The final sentence may be translated as "the kingdom will be the LORD's" or even better, "the kingship (i.e., the office of the king) will be the LORD's." In other words, at that time the LORD will be manifest (in Israel and in the entire world) as the king. In this case, Obadiah, like Deutero-Isaiah, is imagining an ideal future in which a Davidic messiah plays no role.

a A town in southern Phoenicia; see 1 Kings 17:9.

b Probably Asia Minor, called Saparda in Persian cuneiform inscriptions.

c-c Several ancient versions read, "they [the exiles from Jerusalem named in the preceding verse] shall march up victorious."

Jonah

THE BOOK OF JONAH was included in “the Twelve,” among the other prophetic books, because it was accepted as a prophetic book. Yet it is unlike all the other prophetic books in many and diverse ways. For one thing, the book of Jonah is a narrative, whereas the others are not, though they may include some narrative sections. Prophetic books tend to allocate a large share of their text to reports of divine announcements (or “oracles”) and of prophetic addresses to a public other than the LORD or the prophet alone. This is clearly not the case in Jonah. Further, none of the other eleven prophets rebels against God and takes practical steps to preempt the fulfillment of the explicit divine will as communicated to the prophet. The motif of Jonah’s active opposition to the LORD’s command and will, and accordingly his reluctance to show honor and reverence to his Master, is overtly emphasized in the text through contrast with the inhabitants of Nineveh and with other non-Israelites. Despite the typically negative view of Assyria in the Bible, the book characterizes the entire population of Nineveh (the capital of Assyria), including its elite, the sailors, and even all creation, as clearly responsive to the LORD. Finally, according to this book, this extremely atypical prophet is the most successful in the Bible (see the annotations).

The book itself has been characterized in different ways, among them: as a satire, a story that presents an implicit ideal by means of an exaggerated portrait of its opposite; as a parable, which makes its theological, spiritual, or moral point implicitly through narrative; and as didactic fiction, perhaps a narrative philosophical tractate. It is perhaps better to understand it as a meta-prophetic book, that is, a book that probes the role of the prophet, and as a book that is to be studied as the LORD’s word or teaching (see below). As such it uses humor and elements of satire and parody and it carries a strong didactic message.

Some have argued that the principal theme of the book of Jonah concerns the power of repentance; others that its main focus and message contrast a doctrine of retributive justice to one of divine grace. Still others maintain that the main issue in Jonah is a conflict between God’s universalist approach and Jonah’s nationalistic tendencies. Another group of scholars is convinced that the focus of the book is the contrast or conflict between an understanding of God as constrained by particular rules known to human beings and another that stresses the radical independence of such a being. All of these and similar approaches to the book have failed to command overwhelming assent for the simple reason that the book cannot be reduced to one main theme.

At one level, the basic narrative is quite simple, but at another, it shows much sophistication and polyvalence (that is, multiple meanings). For instance, in the basic story Nineveh is saved from destruction because, as the LORD states, "Should not I care about Nineveh, that great city, in which there are more than a hundred and twenty thousand persons who do not yet know their right hand from their left, and many beasts as well!" (4.11). But if so, what are the readers of the book supposed to make of the well-known fact in their time that historical Nineveh had long been totally destroyed and never rebuilt? Surely, they thought, such destruction must have been a manifestation of God's will. But if so, are some of God's words, as recorded in the prophetic books, valid at one time but not another, even if God's explicit argument seems universal? Are prophetic words contingent on a set of particular historical circumstances and therefore of no absolute value and general scope? Is it possible to distinguish between the contingent and the noncontingent words, and if so how? Or are all of them contingent? The book raises many other issues concerning the role of prophets, the question of if and when prophecies will be fulfilled, and the limitations of human knowledge based on reading Scripture. It bears noting that Jonah is described as one who knows Scripture well; nevertheless, his understanding of the role of prophecy and of God's will is presented as defective.

Although there is some debate on the matter, the usual date for the composition of Jonah is the Persian period. No critical scholar today advocates the historicity of the prophet and his fantastic misadventures.

The book is read in the afternoon service of Yom Kippur, the Day of Atonement (see b. Meg. 31a) because of the theme of repentance. On that day Jews are supposed to identify with the Ninevites and their plea (certainly not with Jonah; and cf. already m. Ta'an. 2.1; on the completeness and truthfulness of the Ninevites' repentance see, for instance, b. Ta'an. 16a, cf. Rambam, Mishneh Torah, b. Ta'an. 4.2; the Jerusalem Talmud, however, shows other voices, e.g., R. Yohanan in y. Ta'an. 9a; perek b, halakhah a).

The basic structure of the book of Jonah is clear and quite symmetrical. There are two divine calls to Jonah, both worded in a similar manner. In the first case, Jonah disobeys the divine command; in the second, he obeys (cf. 1.1–3 and 3.1–3). In both cases he interacts with non-Israelites who show fear of the LORD, and in both he stands in sharp contrast to them (cf. 1.4–15 and 3.5–10). Both interactions lead Jonah to address the LORD in distress (2.2–10 and 4.1–3). The main difference is that in the concluding case, the LORD responds in words and enters into a didactic dialogue with Jonah (4.4–11). [EHUD BEN ZVI]

1 The word of the LORD came to Jonah^a son of Amittai: ²Go at once to Nineveh, that great city, and proclaim judgment upon it; for their wickedness has come before Me.

³Jonah, however, started out to flee to Tarshish from the LORD's service. He went down to Joppa and found a ship going to Tarshish. He paid the fare and went aboard to sail with the others to Tarshish, away from the service of the LORD.

⁴But the LORD cast a mighty wind upon the sea, and such a great tempest came upon the sea that the ship was in danger of breaking up. ⁵In their fright, the sailors cried out, each to his own god; and they flung the ship's cargo overboard to make it lighter for them. Jonah, meanwhile, had gone down into the hold of the vessel where he lay down and fell asleep. ⁶The captain went over to him and cried out, "How can you be sleeping so soundly! Up, call upon your god! Perhaps the god will be kind to us and we will not perish."

⁷The men said to one another, "Let us cast lots and find out on whose account this misfortune has come upon us." They cast lots and the lot fell on Jonah. ⁸They said to him, "Tell us, you who have brought this misfortune upon us, what is your business? Where have you come from? What is your country, and of what people are you?" ⁹"I am a Hebrew," he replied. "I worship the LORD, the God of Heaven, who made both sea and land." ¹⁰The men were greatly terrified, and they asked him, "What have you done?" And when the men learned that he was fleeing from the service of the LORD—for so he told them—¹¹they said to him, "What must we do to you to make the sea calm around us?" For the sea was growing more and more a Mentioned in 2 Kings 14.25.

1.1–16: Jonah's first call from God and his response. Contrast between Jonah and the sailors.

1: The opening of the book, the word of the LORD came to Jonah, is a common one for a prophetic narrative that is embedded in a book, but it does not occur elsewhere as the opening of a book, so from the start, Jonah is different. This opening suggests to the readers that the book begins, as it were, "in the middle," and that much of the background of the story is not told in the book. It is up to them to fill the gap. Jonah son of Amittai: The name of the prophet is identical with that of a prophet mentioned in 2 Kings 14.25, who prophesied in the days of Jeroboam II, king of Israel. It seems possible and even likely that the text here serves to encourage its readers to identify the two, or at least to fill the mentioned gap with their knowledge about the prophet in Kings, who is depicted as one who prophesied territorial conquests for Israel. 2: Nineveh was the capital of Assyria, the conqueror of Samaria in 722 BCE; it was itself destroyed by the Babylonians and their allies in 612. Numerous prophetic texts characterize the Assyrians as extremely cruel and savage. Although this unflattering characterization pervaded much of biblical literature, the book of Jonah, which calls them Ninevites, never Assyrians, describes them as sinners who fully repented. The choice of words for this (first) call of Jonah reverberates in the second divine call (3.1–2). 3: To flee to Tarshish, from the perspective of the readers a faraway place (cf. Isa. 66.19) in the opposite direction from Nineveh. Tarshish may have been in the Tarsus region on the southern coast of Turkey, but many other places have been suggested including Tartessus in Spain. Joppa was just outside Israelite territory, on the Mediterranean at the northern border of Philistia. Its modern name is Jaffa/Yafa (near Tel Aviv in modern Israel), and it is still a port. Jonah found a ship "coming from Tarshish" rather than going to Tarshish, as usually translated. Many scholars accept the translation he paid the fare but there is good reason to prefer "he paid its hire" (that is, he hired the ship and its sailors; cf. already b. Ned. 38a). In other words, he was "lucky" to find a ship just coming to port and hastened so much that he hired everyone so as to leave for the sea, on the spot. 3: Jonah first went down to the port, and then went aboard (lit. "down to") the ship. 5: Once in the ship he went down into the hold of the vessel. Eventually he will go down into the deep of the sea. Jonah fell asleep, but his was a "deep sleep," perhaps akin to a trance. 7: Cast lots, a way to determine the divine will. 9: Jonah speaks to the sailors in terms they can relate to. He tells them he is a Hebrew, a term sometimes used when speaking to non-Israelites, and he identifies God as the creator of the sea and land, putting the sea first, since that is the important element to the sailors. 10–16: The sailors' reverence for and fear of the LORD is explicitly emphasized by the expanded repetition of v. 10 in v. 16, and by the stormy. ¹²He answered, "Heave me overboard, and the sea will calm down for you; for I know that this terrible storm came upon you on my account." ¹³Nevertheless, the men rowed hard to regain the shore, but they could not, for the sea was growing more and more stormy about them. ¹⁴Then they cried out to the LORD: "Oh, please, LORD, do not let us perish on account of this man's life. Do not hold us guilty of killing an innocent person! For You, O LORD, by Your will, have brought this about." ¹⁵And they heaved Jonah overboard, and the sea stopped raging.

¹⁶The men feared the LORD greatly; they offered a sacrifice to the LORD and they made vows.

2 The LORD provided a huge fish to swallow Jonah; and Jonah remained in the fish's belly three days and three nights. ²Jonah prayed to the LORD his God from the belly of the fish. ³He said:

In my trouble I called to the LORD,
 And He answered me;
 From the belly of Sheol I cried out,
 And You heard my voice.
⁴ You cast me into the depths,
 Into the heart of the sea,
 The floods engulfed me;
 All Your breakers and billows Swept over me.
⁵ I thought I was driven away
 Out of Your sight:
 Would I ever gaze again
 Upon Your holy Temple?
⁶ The waters closed in over me,
 The deep engulfed me.
 Weeds twined around my head.
⁷ I sank to the base of the mountains;
 The bars of the earth closed upon me
 forever.
 Yet You brought my life up from the pit,
 O LORD my God!
⁸ When my life was ebbing away,
 I called the LORD to mind;

description of their actions. They seem convinced that the storm was due to Jonah's presence, but they are more than reluctant to "murder" a prophet even if he is a fugitive servant of the LORD. In fact, the LORD has to force them to heave Jonah overboard, a point that is emphasized and embellished in Midrash Tanhuma and Pirkei Rabbi Eliezer. Even then they are afraid of being held responsible for the death of the prophet. To be sure, God knows that their action will not lead to Jonah's death, but rather serves as a necessary step for the completion of Jonah's mission and of God's overall intention. But the sailors do not know that. As for Jonah, he probably thought that death was the best available way out of his mission. Had he died, he would have successfully escaped from God's call. Of course, the readers know that God will not let this happen. As soon as Jonah is thrown overboard, they expect a divine action aimed at saving Jonah from death. Their expectations are fulfilled.

2.1-11: Jonah in the big fish. The fish (never called a whale) rescues Jonah from the sea. Most of this section of the book consists of Jonah's prayer. 3-10: The prayer of Jonah is a pastiche of different verses taken from Psalms (see v. 3 and cf. Pss. 18.7; 30.3; 118.5; 120.1; 130.1, 2; v. 4 and cf. Ps. 42.8; v. 5 and cf. Ps. 31.23; v. 6 and cf. Pss. 18.5-6 and 69.2; v. 7 and cf. Pss. 30.4 and 71.20; v. 8a and cf. Pss. 142.4 and 143.4; v. 8b and cf. Pss. 5.8; 18.7 and 88.3; v. 9 and cf. Ps. 31.7; v. 10a and cf. Pss. 42.5; 50.14, 23 and 66.13; v. 10b and cf. Ps. 3.9). Jonah is thereby presented as a person well versed in the language of Psalms and able to compose a sophisticated prayer on their basis (cf. David or Solomon as described in Chronicles). In contrast to the rest of the book, which is a prose narrative, the text here is poetry. The verbs translated here in the past tense are probably better translated in the present. They point to events that are either happening or will happen (thus, "In my trouble I call to the LORD" rather than In my trouble I called to the LORD). 3: Sheol, the Pit or the netherworld. It is the utter bottom of the world (in this case the depths of the sea) and also the land of the dead. 5: Would I ever gaze again reflects a minor emendation, and may be understood as "Nevertheless I shall gaze again" (cf. Targum).

And my prayer came before You,
 Into Your holy Temple.
 9 They who cling to empty folly
 Forsake their own welfare,^a 10 But I, with loud thanksgiving,
 Will sacrifice to You;
 What I have vowed I will perform.
 Deliverance is the LORD's!

¹¹The LORD commanded the fish, and it spewed Jonah out upon dry land.

3 The word of the LORD came to Jonah a second time: ²"Go at once to Nineveh, that great city, and proclaim to it what I tell you." ³Jonah went at once to Nineveh in accordance with the LORD's command.

Nineveh was ^ban enormously large city^b a three days' walk across. ⁴Jonah started out and made his way into the city the distance of one day's walk, and proclaimed: "Forty days more, and Nineveh shall be overthrown!"

⁵The people of Nineveh believed God. They proclaimed a fast, and great and small alike put on sackcloth. ⁶When the news reached the king of Nineveh, he rose from his throne, took off his robe, put on sackcloth, and sat in ashes. ⁷And he had the word cried through Nineveh: "By decree of the king and his nobles: No man or beast—of flock or herd—shall taste anything! They shall not graze, and they shall not drink water! ⁸They shall be covered with sackcloth—man and beast—and shall cry mightily to God. Let everyone turn back from his evil ways and from the injustice of which he is guilty. ⁹Who knows but that God may turn and relent? He may turn back from His wrath, so that we do not perish."

¹⁰God saw what they did, how they were turning back

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Lit. "a large city of God."

9: The final line of the verse conveys more than one meaning. Forsake their own welfare, "forsake their (true) loyalty," "forsake their bounty" are all possible understandings. Further, since empty folly can be understood as a reference to idols, and since cling to connotes worshipping, then the final line may be understood also as "forsake their idols," as some medieval Jewish commentators interpreted it.

3.1–10: Jonah's second call and the repentance of the Ninevites.

1–2: Jonah's call to prophesy from ch 1 is replayed, but this time Jonah accepts his commission.

3: An enormously large city, another case of double meaning. The text also means "a large city that belongs to God" (cf. translators' note b-b). According to NJPS, and many scholars, the text states that the city was a three-day walk across, an impossibly large distance for an ancient city. The text may be stating that the city was at a distance of three days' walk from Jonah's place. 4: What Jonah means and what he is saying are not exactly the same. Jonah means to say, "Forty days more, and Nineveh is undone" but the readers notice that he is actually saying, "Forty days more, and Nineveh is overturned." Jonah chooses language that is reminiscent of God's destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah in Gen. ch 19. But the careful readers of the book notice the irony of the situation: Jonah's words potentially carry two, opposite meanings: (a) "Nineveh is undone," and (b) "Nineveh turns over (i.e., reforms itself)." One feature of his proclamation is unambiguous: Jonah's proclamation is extremely short and includes no call to repentance, unlike many other prophetic proclamations. 5–9: Still it is the most effective, since the entire city immediately turns from its ways and repents. (Sackcloth, ashes, and fasting are typical signs of repentance.) Jonah does not wish to be a prophetic voice calling for repentance, and does not ask for the divine judgment to be turned into mercy (contrast Abraham in the case of Sodom and Gomorrah, Gen. 18.16–32), but he is still the most successful prophet in the Bible who achieves both in an unparalleled, complete, and immediate way—even the animals repent! The message is that the success of the prophet is not dependent on his attributes or rhetorical power, but on the will of God. And yet, there is a second reading. Jonah's message "Nineveh is undone" was fulfilled in history, as the readers of the book know well. If so, Jonah's understanding of his prophecy was fulfilled too. The problem was then that Jonah erred by believing that his prophecy must be fulfilled in his own days. The latter may well be an important message for readers of prophetic books in the Persian period. Prophetic words, especially those concerning the ideal status of the restored Israel, will be fulfilled, from their evil ways. And God renounced the punishment He had planned to bring upon them, and did not carry it out.

4 This displeased Jonah greatly, and he was grieved. ²He prayed to the LORD, saying, "O LORD! Isn't this just what I said when I was still in my own country? That is why I fled beforehand to Tarshish. For I know that You are a compassionate and gracious God, slow to anger, abounding in kindness, renouncing punishment. ³Please, LORD, take my life, for I would rather die than live." ⁴The LORD replied, "Are you that deeply grieved?"

⁵Now Jonah had left the city and found a place east of the city. He made a booth there and sat under it in the shade, until he should see what happened to the city. ⁶The LORD God provided a ricinus plant,^a which grew up over Jonah, to provide shade for his head and save him from discomfort. Jonah was very happy about the plant. ⁷But the next day at dawn God provided a worm, which attacked the plant so that it withered. ⁸And when the sun rose, God provided a sultry^b east wind; the sun beat down on Jonah's head, and he became faint. He begged for death, saying, "I would rather die than live." ⁹Then God said to Jonah, "Are you so deeply grieved about the plant?" "Yes," he replied, "so deeply that I want to die."

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; others "gourd."

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

but even prophets do not know when.

4.1–11: Jonah and the LORD discuss the matter. Jonah is upset, but why? Because his proclamation did not come true, from his perspective (see Deut. 18.21–22). He associates this lack of fulfillment with God's attributes (in v. 3 he is using Joel 2.13; Pss. 86.15; 103.8; 145.8 as key interpretative texts for Exod. 34.6–7 and Num. 14.18), and by doing so he is raising a theological confrontation between himself and God. One has to infer that Jonah thought that God should behave according to the paradigm advanced in another set of biblical texts (see Num. 23.19, 1 Sam. 15.29), but he was sure that God's behavior would not follow this paradigm. So God was in the wrong, from his perspective. Some Jewish and non-Jewish interpreters have supported a different understanding. According to them, Jonah was upset that God relented from punishment only because those who were to be punished were not Israelites. A variant of this interpretation posits that the issue was not that they were not Israelites per se, but that they were Ninevites, i.e., the same people who will later oppress Israel and Judah. Those for whom Jonah is a stern chauvinist text—and there are still some contemporaneous readers who think so—tend to maintain that the book was a theological attack against those who may identify with this jingoist Jonah and his positions. The problem with this approach is that Jonah never says that he wants the Ninevites destroyed because they are not Israelites. Furthermore, there is not even a hint of the tension between Israel and the nations in the book of Jonah.

6–8: This scene may be based on Elijah in 1 Kings 19.4. If so, Jonah is being parodied as an anti-Elijah figure. 6: The LORD God provided: The repetition of this language links the fish (2.1), the plant here, the successful worm in v. 7, and the extremely scorching wind in v. 8. All of them are provided or appointed by God. Ricinus plant (see translators' note a): Scholars have tried to identify the type of plant, but there is no general agreement. More important, the particular plant described here belongs to the realm of the fantastic that is provided only by God, just as was the "great fish" in whose belly a man can be accommodated. This plant suddenly grows to provide shade over Jonah's head and just as suddenly it withers. 7: The east wind is a dry, scorching wind and is often associated with disaster and/or God's power (Exod. 14.21; Isa. 27.8; Jer. 18.17; cf. Gen. 41.6). 10: There is an additional underlying dissymmetry in the comparison advanced in 4.6–11 that makes Jonah's position even more difficult. God cared about the fate of God's creation, but Jonah did not really care for the plant, but rather for himself, for the shade that the plant provided him. 11: Midrash Yonah adds the following: "At this moment he (Jonah) fell upon his face and said: Guide Your world by the attribute of mercy, as it is written: 'To the LORD our God belong mercy and forgiveness. . . .' [Dan. 9.9]" The biblical book of Jonah, however, does not end with Jonah's acceptance of God's position. It rather leaves the question open, asking the reader to fill the gap. Some modern readers who imagine Jonah as a prophet who knew too well what Assyria will do (later) to Israel think that Jonah remained unconvinced, and praise him for that, in the light of holocaust theology. Many other readers point out that the future actions of Assyria are not mentioned in the text at all, and are introduced into the text by the readers themselves.

¹⁰Then the LORD said: "You cared about the plant, which you did not work for and which you did not grow, which appeared overnight and perished overnight. ¹¹And should not I care about Nineveh, that great city, in which there are more than a hundred and twenty thousand persons who do not yet know their right hand from their left, and many beasts as well!"^a

The translation "yet" in who do not yet know is an interpretation of the verse rather than a reflection of any necessity of the Heb. It is not present in most English translations.

^a Infants and beasts are not held responsible for their actions.

Micah

THE FIRST VERSE OF THE BOOK sets the text in the days of Kings Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah of Judah—in modern chronology the latter half of the 8th and the early years of the 7th century BCE (1.1), approximately the same chronological setting as for Isaiah 1–39. The book is associated in 1.1 with the figure of the prophet Micah, who is characterized as a Morashtite prophet, from a town in Judah. (The same characterization appears in the reference to Mic. 3.12 in Jer. 26.18.) The intended readers of the book were, however, Jerusalemites.

Many scholars attribute much, but not all of the book of Micah either to the historical prophet or to someone close to the time mentioned in 1.1. Other scholars note that the text includes, among other references, an explicit reference to the Babylonian exile (4.10), and therefore they date it to the postmonarchic period (cf. 7.11–13), at least in its final form.

The book begins with an introduction or superscription and then moves to sets of prophecies. The first one (1.2–2.13) concerns mostly divine judgment, exile, and social ethics, but—as expected—also provides hope for the future (2.5, 12–13). The second one (3.1–12) explains the fall of Jerusalem in terms of wrongful leadership. The third one (4.1–5.14) raises diverse images of a utopian future and touches on aspects of the relations between Israel and the nations at that time. The book concludes with a didactic prophecy (6.1–8), another explanation for the judgment that fell upon monarchic Jerusalem (6.9–16), an expression of trust in the LORD in spite of and as a response to social disintegration (7.1–7), and finally a confirmation of the LORD's distinct relationship with Zion and Judah (7.7–20) that leads to an upbeat conclusion of the entire book (7.18–20).

Micah 5.6–6.8 is the haftarah (prophetic reading) for the parashah of Balak (Num. 22.2–25.9), since 6.5 explicitly mentions Balak and Balaam. Micah 7.18–20 has been incorporated into the supplication that follows the reading of the story of Abraham's sacrifice (Gen. 22.1–19) in the morning service. The reference to "hurl" (Heb "tashlikh") in v. 19 has been associated with tashlikh (a ritual on the first day of Rosh Ha-Shanah symbolizing a desire to get rid of sins, to "hurl them away," and be forgiven by God). In the Sephardic and Yemenite traditions, Micah 7.18–20 is read after Hosea 14.2–10 on Shabbat Shuvah (the Shabbat preceding Yom Kippur), following Jonah in the Minḥah service of Yom Kippur, and also in the Minḥah service of Tish'ah be'av (commemorating the destruction of the Temple). Conservative Judaism reads Hosea 14.2–10; Micah 7.18–20; Joel 2.15–27 on Shabbat Shuvah. [EHUD BEN ZVI]

1 The word of the LORD that came to Micah the Morashtite, who prophesied concerning Samaria and Jerusalem in the reigns of Kings Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah of Judah.

- 2 Listen, all you peoples,
Give heed, O earth, and all it holds;
And let my Lord GOD be your accuser—
My Lord from His holy abode.
- 3 For lo! the LORD
Is coming forth from His dwelling-place,
He will come down and stride
Upon the heights of the earth.
- 4 The mountains shall melt under Him
And the valleys burst open—
Like wax before fire,
Like water cascading down a slope.
- 5 All this is for the transgression of Jacob,
And for the sins of the House of Israel.
What is the transgression of Jacob
But Samaria,
And what the shrines^a of Judah
But Jerusalem?
- 6 So I will turn Samaria
Into a ruin in open country,
Into ground for planting vineyards;
For I will tumble her stones into the valley
And lay her foundations bare.
- 7 All her sculptured images shall be smashed,
And all her harlot's wealth be burned,
And I will make a waste heap of all her idols,
For they were amassed from fees for harlotry,
And they shall become harlots' fees again.

^a Emendation yields "sins."

1.1: Superscription. The verse characterizes the book as a particular instance of the LORD's word (that is, as a prophetic book), sets it in a particular time, and associates it with a prophetic character from the past, Micah (see introduction). The word of the LORD concerned both Samaria and Jerusalem, the capitals of the Northern and Southern Kingdoms respectively. But most of this "word" (i.e., the book of Micah) deals with the fate of Jerusalem and Judah. In this book references to Samaria serve only to preface and sharpen the message concerning Judah.

1.2–2.13: A set of readings about divine judgment, exile, social ethics, and divine hope. The set consists of four main sections: 1.2–16; 2.1–5; 2.6–11; 2.12–13.

1.2–16: About divine judgment and exile. The punishment moves from Israel to Judah, a reflection of the exile of Israel which was followed by that of Judah. 2: On literary units in prophetic books that begin with "hear" or listen (Heb "shim'u") see Amos 3.1–6.14 n. Listen, all you peoples: The Heb is more emphatic: "Hear, O peoples, all of them." My Lord God: Heb "Adonai YHVH" vocalized (MT) as "Adonai Elohim" as in Amos 1.8, Obad. 1, and many other places. In most instances where YHVH appears in the Heb, it is vocalized "Adonai." Where it appears alongside "Adonai," as here, this is not possible, so YHVH is vocalized "Elohim," and the translation indicates this by printing "God." Although be your accuser is a possible reading—it is based on an interpretation of the phrase as "be a witness against you"—so is "be a witness among you." The text encourages this ambiguity. 3, 5: A wordplay: Heights is echoed in shrines (same word in the Heb). The latter could also be translated "high places." 7: Harlot's wealth (or hire) . . . idols . . . harlotry: The metaphorical association of sinful worship with prostitution is common in the prophetic books; see esp. Hos. chs 1–3. Many readers today raise the question of the problematic ways in which this metaphorical association may have colored the way in which gender roles are viewed in society (e.g., "the worshipper" is male and he is at risk of going astray because of enticing females whose job is to snare him). See

- 8 Because of this I will lament and wail;
I will go stripped and naked!
I will lament as sadly as the jackals,
As mournfully as the ostriches.
- 9 For her^a wound is incurable,
It has reached Judah,
It has spread to the gate of my people,
To Jerusalem.
- 10^b Tell it not in Gath,
Refrain from weeping;^c
In Beth-leaphrah,
Strew dust^d over your [head].
- 11 Pass on, inhabitants of Shaphir!
Did not the inhabitants of Zaanan
Have to go forth naked in shame?
There is lamentation in Beth-ezel—
It will withdraw its support from you.
- 12 Though the inhabitants of Maroth Hoped for good,
Yet disaster from the LORD descended Upon the gate of Jerusalem.
- 13 Hitch the steeds to the chariot,
Inhabitant of Lachish!
It is the beginning
Of Fair Zion's guilt;
Israel's transgressions
Can be traced to you!
- 14 Truly, you must give a farewell gift
To Moresheth-gath.
^eThe houses of Achzib are^e
To the kings of Israel
Like a spring that fails.

a I.e., the nation's.

b Meaning of much of vv. 10-13 uncertain. They may refer to the transfer of part of western Judah to Philistine rule by Sennacherib of Assyria in the year 701 B.C.E.

c So that enemies may not gloat; cf. 2 Sam. 1.20.

d Heb. 'aphar, a play on Beth-leaphrah; vv. 10-15 contain several similar puns.

e-e Emendation yields "Fair Achzib is."

notes on the book of Hosea.

8: I will lament: The speaker in v. 7 is the LORD, as it is in v. 9, but most readers think that here it must be a human character, most likely the prophet (see Radak, Ibn Ezra). The Targum has "they" instead of "I" and represents an understanding of the speaker as the people of Israel. The subject of these actions in the Heb is, however, ambiguous. The image of the LORD lamenting and grieving, and even metaphorically going stripped and naked because of the fate of His people, may have been unthinkable to the Targum and medieval commentators, but not necessarily so to biblical writers, who stressed the divine pathos (e.g., Isa. 63.10; Hos. 11.8-9), a point often emphasized by the American rabbi and philosopher, Abraham Joshua Heschel. 10-16: In some places it is difficult to understand the Heb. All agree however that the most salient feature of this text is its concentration of wordplays on the names of towns, each of which substantially contribute to the meaning of the unit. (Note that towns and their inhabitants are represented by female imagery.) English renderings of some of these wordplays and the connoted message they communicate would be as follows: 10: "In Dust-house I will roll myself in dust." 11: "Pass on your way, girl of Pretty-town, in shameful nakedness." 12: "The girl of Bitterness-town aches for good, yet evil has come down from the LORD to the gate of Jerusalem." 14: "The houses of Deception-ville shall be a deception to the kings of Israel." Whereas in all these instances the name of the town is constructed as an omen about its future, no such claim is made for Jerusalem. Jerusalem stands in a category of its own, no nomen-omen for it. Some scholars maintain that the list may reflect the results of military campaigns in the area either in 734-732, 722, 712, or for the most part, 701 BCE, i.e., the victorious campaign against Judah by Sennacherib, the Assyrian king. The text itself does not ask its readers to identify the disaster described in these vv. with any particular military campaign. The name Sennacherib does not occur anywhere, the disaster is not particularly associated with the name of any Judahite king, nor is the world of the text directly associated with chronological information (contrast Isa. 7.1; 20.1; Jer. 32.1; 46.1-2; Hag. 1.1). These features are not the result of chance. The book of Micah does not set any of its literary units in a narrowly marked historical period. The result is a literary work that may be read in general terms because it downplays particular historical situa-

15 A dispossessor will I bring to you
 Who dwell in Mareshah;
 At Adullam the glory
 Of Israel shall set.
 16 *Shear off your hair and make yourself bald
 For the children you once delighted in;
 Make yourself as bald as a vulture,
 For they have been banished from you.

2 Ah, those who plan iniquity
 And design evil on their beds;
 When morning dawns, they do it,
 For they have the power.
 2 They covet fields, and seize them;
 Houses, and take them away.
 They defraud men of their homes,
 And people of their land.
 3 Assuredly, thus said the LORD: I am planning such a misfortune against this clan that you will not be able to free your necks from it. You will not be able to walk erect;
 it will be such a time of disaster.

4 In that day,
 One shall recite a poem about you,
 And utter a bitter lament,
 And shall say:
^b“My people’s portion changes hands;
 How it slips away from me!
 Our field is allotted to a rebel.^c
 We are utterly ravaged.”^b

5 Truly, none of you Shall cast a lot cord^d
 In the assembly of the LORD!

6 “Stop preaching!” they preach.
 “That’s no way to preach;
^bShame shall not overtake [us].
 7 Is the House of Jacob condemned?^b
 Is the LORD’s patience short?
 Is such His practice?”

To be sure, My words are friendly
 To those who walk in rectitude;
 8 But an enemy arises against My people.

a A common rite of mourning; cf. Jer. 7.29.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Emendation yields “ravager.”

d On a piece of land, thus acquiring title to it; cf. Josh. 18.6 and Ps. 16.6.

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields “you arise as enemies against.”

tions. 15: The text is equivocal: Dispossessor may also be understood as (rightful) inheritor; the glory (or honor) of Israel may refer to Israel’s wealth, might, or army, or to the LORD; the name of the town Adullam evokes a possible association with Heb “‘olam,” “forever.” 16: For they have been banished from you may be translated also as “for they have gone from you into exile.” The readers of the book who were aware of the exile to Babylonia (see 4.10, and intro.) identified such exile with the Babylonian exile.

2.1–5: On social ethics, divine judgment, and hope. 1–3: Another wordplay with a strong message. Elite people within society design (or, “work”) evil; the LORD plans (Heb) “evil” (misfortune) against them. Moreover, members of this group are able to do so because they have the power; the LORD certainly has the power to carry “evil” (misfortune), and God’s might is infinitely superior to that of these people (cf. Prov. 22.23; 17.5). 5: The descendants of the transgressors will not be part of the assembly of the LORD. This verse suggests a transgenerational aspect in the divine punishment.

2.6–11: On social ethics, divine character, mistaken positions, and judgment. 7: The speaker is the LORD. Thus the first three lines point at the LORD’s representation of the theological thought of the evildoers described above. Given their actions, the LORD will not refrain from acting against them. 8: It is possible to understand the v. as stating, “but yesterday My people rose as an enemy (i.e., of the LORD).” If so, the text maintains that the evildoers, despite their deeds, remain Jacob, the LORD’s people. To be sure, these evildoers attack and dispossess Israelites too—who, of course, are also God’s people (cf. v. 9). The continued reference to the evildoers in the second person following this phrase stresses the affective element of the condemnation. Several scholars have advanced pro-

- You strip the mantle ^awith the cloak^a Off such as pass unsuspecting, ^bWho are turned away from war.^b
- 9 You drive the women of My people away
 From their pleasant homes;
 You deprive their infants
 Of My glory forever.
- 10 Up and depart!
 This is no resting place
^bBecause of [your] defilement.
 Terrible destruction shall befall.^b
- 11 If a man were to go about uttering Windy, baseless falsehoods:
 "I'll preach to you in favor of wine and liquor"—
 He would be a preacher [acceptable] to that people.
- 12^c I will assemble Jacob, all of you;
 I will bring together the remnant of Israel;
 I will make them all like sheep ^dof Bozrah,^d
 Like a flock inside its pen^e—
 They will be noisy with people.
- 13 One who makes a breach Goes before them;
 They enlarge it to a gate
 And leave by it.
 Their king marches before them,
 The LORD at their head.

- 3 I said:
 Listen, you rulers of Jacob,
 You chiefs of the House of Israel!
 For you ought to know what is right,
^{2f} But you hate good and love evil.
³ You have devoured My people's flesh;
 You have flayed the skin off them, a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "off peaceful folk."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Vv. 12-13 may be an example of such "acceptable" preaching.

d-d Emendation yields "in a fold [Arabic sīrah]." e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

f Syntax of vv. 2-3 uncertain.

posals for emending this line to mean, "But you rise against my people as an enemy."

2.12-13: A promise of hope following judgment. The set of readings has dealt mainly with judgment; they end with a reassuring statement of hope. These vv. interweave the related images of shepherd and king. The image of God as shepherd, however, is ambiguous in the Bible: The shepherd may lead his flock gently (Ps. 23), or may punish those who are out of step (Ezek. ch 34). Most interpreters (including the Targum) understand these vv. as an announcement of future well-being, of Jacob's return from exile. A minority considers them as one of punishment (e.g., Radak who thinks that the king referred to is Zedekiah). Ibn Ezra (and a few modern scholars) relate these vv. to the false prophets (cf. translators' note c). According to Pesikta de Rav Kahana 2.4.14, the reference in v. 13 to "their king" is a reference to the Shekhinah (a Jewish concept that might be translated as "the divine presence"), and the entire v. points at the return of the exiles of Israel. 12: "Sheep" ("flock") of Bozrah: Wordplays and multiple, complementary meanings; the Heb carries two basic meanings: "flock in a fenced place," and sheep of Bozrah (an Edomite city; see Amos 1.12). Sheep of Bozrah, evoking the quality or quantity of the flock, connotes a sense of plenty. "Flock in a fenced place" completes the metaphor of the good shepherd (the LORD) who leads the flock to safety. 13: It is unclear if a human king is meant, or whether the LORD here is the King.

3.1-12: The failures of leadership that led to the fall of Jerusalem.

The destruction of Jerusalem is explained as due to the failures of its leaders. The high value attached to the loss of Jerusalem demands a highly negative description of the leadership (cf. b. Yoma 9b). The structure of the unit is ABA: The rulers and chiefs are condemned in the first and third sections (A: 1-4, 9-12), and the prophets in the middle section (B: 5-8). The issue of wrong, "hopeful" theology is also revisited (3.11; cf. 2.6-7). 2-3: The translation reflects some rearrangement of the Heb, but this does not affect the main picture: the incredible violence perpetrated by the rulers of Jacob against Jacob, or in the theological term advanced in the book, "My people."

And their flesh off their bones.

^aAnd after tearing their skins off them,

And their flesh off their bones;^a

And breaking their bones to bits,

You have cut it up ^bas into^b a pot,

Like meat in a caldron.

4 Someday they shall cry out to the LORD,

But He will not answer them;

At that time He will hide His face from them,

In accordance with the wrongs they have done.

5 Thus said the LORD to the prophets

Who lead My people astray,

Who cry "Peace!"

When they have something to chew,

But launch a war on him

Who fails to fill their mouths:

6 Assuredly,

It shall be night for you

So that you cannot prophesy,

And it shall be dark for you

So that you cannot divine;

The sun shall set on the prophets,

And the day shall be darkened for them.

7 The seers shall be shamed

And the diviners confounded;

They shall cover their upper lips;^c

Because no response comes from God.

8 But I,

I am filled with strength by the spirit of the LORD,

And with judgment and courage,

To declare to Jacob his transgressions

And to Israel his sin.

9 Hear this, you rulers of the House of Jacob,

You chiefs of the House of Israel,

Who detest justice

And make crooked all that is straight,

10 Who build Zion with crime,

Jerusalem with iniquity!

11 Her rulers judge for gifts,

Her priests give rulings for a fee,

And her prophets divine for pay;

Yet they rely upon the LORD, saying,

4: The Targum understands He will hide His face from them as "He will remove His Shekhinah from them." On the concept of the LORD's hiding the divine face, see Deut. 31.17. The concept, common in biblical texts, was developed later in Judaism and served to bridge the tension between divine goodness and acute suffering.

5: When they have something to chew, or more literally, "when they have something to bite with their teeth." The point is not so much that prophets received gifts from their "clients." This behavior seems to have been widely accepted (see 1 Sam. 9.8; 1 Kings 14.3; 2 Kings 4.42; 8.8-9; Amos 7.12), and the prophets needed their bread too. Rather, these prophets shaped or announced their prophecies to please their clients, so as to increase the gifts they received from them. By doing so they perverted their office (and the LORD's trust) for material gain. The precise choice of words in the Heb implies additional powerful connotations. The choice of expression "bite with their teeth" allows not only the wordplay between teeth and mouths, but also a description of the behavior of the prophets that evokes the animal behavior of other leaders (v. 3). The verb "nashakh," "to bite," has a sound reminiscent to that of "naḥash," "snake." The same verb "nashakh" means in other contexts "to charge interest" and carries negative connotations (cf. Hab. 2.7; Deut.

23.20). To some extent, the text suggests that they are like beastly creditors or snakes that bite the flesh of Israel with their teeth (cf. v. 3). 8: The beginning of the v. offers an emphatic contrast between the true and the false prophet. Heb has no term for a false prophet; thus, in v. 5 they are called "nevi'im," the same term that would be used of true prophets. In many such cases, the ancient Septuagint translation clarifies the meaning of the text by inserting the word "false" ("pseudo").

12: Cf. Jer. 26.18. This is a rare instance of a quotation of prophetic character by another prophetic a-a Brought down from v. 2 for clarity.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; Septuagint and Syriac read "like flesh in."

c As a sign of mourning; cf. Ezek. 24.17, 22; Lev. 13.45.

"The LORD is in our midst;
No calamity shall overtake us."

12 Assuredly, because of you
Zion shall be plowed as a field,
And Jerusalem shall become heaps of ruins,
And the Temple Mount
A shrine in the woods.

4 ^aIn the days to come,
The Mount of the LORD's House shall stand Firm above the mountains;
And it shall tower above the hills.
The peoples shall gaze on it with joy,
2 And the many nations shall go and shall say:
"Come,
Let us go up to the Mount of the LORD,
To the House of the God of Jacob;
That He may instruct us in His ways,
And that we may walk in His paths."
For instruction shall come forth^b from Zion,
The word of the LORD from Jerusalem.
3 Thus He will judge among the many peoples,
And arbitrate for the multitude of nations,
However distant;
And they shall beat their swords into plowshares^c
And their spears into pruning hooks.
Nation shall not take up Sword against nation;
They shall never again know^d war;
4 But every man shall sit Under his grapevine or fig tree
With no one to disturb him.
For it was the LORD of Hosts who spoke.
5 Though all the peoples walk
Each in the names of its gods,
We will walk
In the name of the LORD our God
Forever and ever.

a For vv. 1-3 cf. Isa. 2.2-4. b I.e., oracles will be obtainable.

c More exactly, the iron points with which wooden plows were tipped. d Cf. Judg. 3.2.

character in a different book, and it indicates that prophetic books were studied in antiquity. Some scholars slightly emend the last phrase of this v. so as to read, "the Temple mountain shall belong to the wild animals." The motif of wild animals taking control of destroyed cities is relatively common in ancient Near Eastern literature, including the Bible.

4.1-5.14: A series of texts about the future. This section consists of six different subunits (4.1-5; 4.6-8; 4.8-5.1; 5.1-5; 5.6-8; 5.9-15). Each of these literary subunits presents a portrait of a future. These images of the future are widely different from one another, allowing each one to inform and balance the other. One of the most significant differences among these images of an ideal future concerns the fate of the nations other than Israel. Are they going to flow to Jerusalem to learn divine teachings coming from Jerusalem and its religious elite (4.2), or are they going to be crushed (5.14)? Despite these significant differences, this section should be viewed as a collection of oracles of consolation. 4.1-5: In this portrait of the future, Jerusalem and the Temple Mount are the center of the world. Vv. 1-3 are nearly identical with Isa. 2.2-4; the exact literary relationship between these two units is debated. 2: Instruction, Heb "torah." The text clearly associates "torah" with "the word of the LORD." In Jewish liturgy this portion of the verse, For instruction shall come forth from Zion./The word of the LORD from Jerusalem, is read when the Torah scroll is taken out of the Ark to be read. 3: He will judge: The one who will judge is the LORD. Some medieval commentators, however, identified the judge with the Messiah (Ibn Ezra, Radak) and thus reformulated to some extent the image of the ideal period. In its biblical context, however, this passage depicts a messianic age without a personal messiah. They shall beat their swords into plowshares . . . they shall never again know [others translate, "train for"] war is one of the most popular, condensed descriptions of an ideal future. (Contrast it with Joel 4.10.) 5: This v. has been considered "narrowly particularistic" or "nationalistic" (as opposed to "universalistic") and has certainly been read in such a fashion (cf. Targum, Rashi, Exod. Rab. 15.15). In its context in Micah, however, the v. rejects the "imperial" model of everyone becoming Israel. Instead, it supports the concept that non-Israelites may accept the word of the LORD from Jerusalem and still maintain their non-Israelite identity and

6 In that day —declares the LORD—
 I will assemble the lame [sheep]
 And will gather the outcast
 And those I have treated harshly;
 7 And I will turn the lame into a remnant
 And the expelled^a into a populous nation.
 And the LORD will reign over them on Mount Zion
 Now and for evermore.

8 And you, O Migdal-eder,^b ^cOutpost of Fair Zion,
 It shall come to you:^c
 The former monarchy shall return—
 The kingship of ^dFair Jerusalem.^d

9 Now why do you utter such cries?
 Is there no king in you,
 Have your advisors perished,
 That you have been seized by writhing
 Like a woman in travail?
 10 Writhe and scream,^e Fair Zion,
 Like a woman in travail!
 For now you must leave the city
 And dwell in the country—
 And you will reach Babylon.
 There you shall be saved,
 There the LORD will redeem you
 From the hands of your foes.

11 Indeed, many nations
 Have assembled against you Who think, “Let our eye ^cObscenely gaze^c on Zion.”

12 But they do not know
 The design of the LORD,
 They do not divine His intent:
 He has gathered them
 Like cut grain to the threshing floor.

13 Up and thresh, Fair Zion!
 For I will give you horns of iron
 And provide you with hoofs of bronze,
 And you will crush the many peoples.
 You^f will devote their riches to the LORD,
 Their wealth to the Lord of all the earth.

worship (cf. the sailors in Jonah ch 1). 8: Migdal-eder, “tower of the flock,” reinforces the previous image of Israel as “flock” whose shepherd is the LORD. Outpost of Fair Zion may be translated as “Ophel (or stronghold) of the daughter of Zion.” 10: The explicit reference to the Babylonian exile of Judah shows the authorship’s awareness of both the historical event and its importance for post-monarchic Israel. The actual writer cannot be identified with Micah, because the latter lived—according to the book—more than a century before the destruction of Jerusalem and the exile to Babylonia. Quite remarkably, this v. views the Babylonian exile as a positive experience, and along with other vv. helps to explain why those who returned to Yehud (Judah) after the exile felt superior to those who remained behind, a major theme of Ezra-Nehemiah.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields “weaklings”; cf. Ezek. 34.4.

b Apparently near Bethlehem; see Gen. 35.19–21. c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Emendation yields “the House of Israel”; cf. 5.1–2. e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

f Heb. -ti serves here as the ending of the second-person singular feminine; cf. Judg. 5.7 and note; Jer. 2.20; etc.

14 Now you gash yourself ^ain grief:^a
They have laid siege to us;
They strike the ruler of Israel
On the cheek with a staff.

5 And you, O Bethlehem of Ephrath,^b
Least among the clans of Judah,
From you one shall come forth
To rule Israel for Me—
One whose origin is from of old,
From ancient times.
2 ^aTruly, He will leave them [helpless]
Until she who is to bear has borne;^c
Then the rest of his countrymen Shall return to the children of Israel.^a 3 He shall stand and shepherd
By the might of the LORD,
By the power of the name
Of the LORD his God,
And they shall dwell [secure].
For lo, he shall wax great
To the ends of the earth;
4 And that shall afford safety.
Should Assyria invade our land
And tread upon our fortresses,^d
We will set up over it^e seven shepherds,
Eight princes of men,
5 Who will shepherd Assyria's land with swords,
The land of Nimrod ^f'in its gates.^f
Thus he will deliver [us]
From Assyria, should it invade our land,
And should it trample our country.

6 The remnant of Jacob shall be,
In the midst of the many peoples,
Like dew from the LORD,
Like droplets on grass—
Which do not look to any man
Nor place their hope in mortals.

7 The remnant of Jacob Shall be among the nations,
In the midst of the many peoples,

5.1: The reference is to David, from Bethlehem in Judah. 2: Until she who is to bear has borne: Traditional Jewish interpretations of this v. tend to focus on comparisons between the birth pangs of a woman and the hardship of Israel prior to the coming of the Messiah. See the following text: "Rab said: The son of David will not come until the [Roman] power enfolds Israel for nine months, as it is written, Therefore will he give them up, until the time that she which travaileth hath brought forth: then the remnant of his brethren shall return unto the children of Israel. 'Ulla said: Let him [The Messiah] come, but let me not see him. Rabbah said likewise: Let him come, but let me not see him . . . Abaye enquired of Rabbah: 'What is your reason [for not wishing to see him]? Shall we say, because of the birth pangs [preceding the advent] of the Messiah?' But it has been taught, R. Eleazar's disciples asked him: 'What must a man do to be spared the pangs of the Messiah?' [He answered,] 'Let him engage in study and benevolence; and you Master do both.' " (b. Sanh. 98b [Soncino ET]). 5: The land of Nimrod, Assyria (cf. Gen. 10.8-12). Nimrod is chosen because might was associated with him (Gen. 10.8), but this image is turned against him.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b The clan to which the Bethlehemites belonged; see 1 Sam. 17.12; Ruth 1.2; 4.11.

c I.e., a ruler, shepherd (v. 3), to deliver Israel from the Assyrians (vv. 4-5).

d Septuagint and Syriac read "soil"; cf. v. 5. e I.e., Assyria.

f-f Emendation yields "with drawn blades"; cf. Ps. 37.14; 55.22.

Like a lion among beasts of the wild,
Like a fierce lion among flocks of sheep,
Which tramples wherever it goes
And rends, with none to deliver.

8 Your hand shall prevail over your foes,
And all your enemies shall be cut down!

9 In that day —declares the LORD—

I will destroy the horses in your midst
And wreck your chariots.

10 I will destroy the cities of your land
And demolish all your fortresses.

11 I will destroy the sorcery you practice,
And you shall have no more soothsayers.

12 I will destroy your idols
And the sacred pillars in your midst;
And no more shall you bow down
To the work of your hands.

13 I will tear down the sacred posts in your midst
And destroy your cities.^a 14 In anger and wrath

Will I wreak retribution
On the nations^b that have not obeyed.

6 Hear what the LORD is saying:
Come, present [My] case before the mountains,
And let the hills hear you pleading.

2 Hear, you mountains, the case of the LORD—
“You firm^c foundations of the earth!
For the LORD has a case against His people,
He has a suit against Israel.

3 “My people!
What wrong have I done you?
What hardship have I caused you?
Testify against Me.

4 In fact,
I brought you up from the land of Egypt,
I redeemed you from the house of bondage,
And I sent before you Moses, Aaron, and Miriam.

5 “My people,
Remember what Balak king of Moab
Plotted against you,

9–14: A divine purge of Israel and the nations that serves to emphasize the importance of obedience to the LORD. Note the rhetorically powerful repetitions of “you/your” and “I will” that serve to stress the main point of the text, namely the relation between the LORD and Israel in the future envisioned in these vv., as the destruction of sinful elements of Judah is transformed at the last moment to retribution on the nations.

6.1–8: A didactic section about divinely ordained behavior. The text advances the legal metaphor of a lawsuit so as to address the relationship between God and Israel. Of course, this is not a usual lawsuit. Mountains, hills, and the very foundations of the earth are summoned. The Heb of vv. 1–2 abounds in multiple (possible) meanings, but the message of vv. 3–5 is unequivocal: Israel had no reason to abandon God, for God has done no wrong, but rather many gracious acts for Israel. The acts explicitly mentioned relate to the exodus from Egypt, the period of wandering in the desert, including the Balak-Balaam story (see Num. chs 22–24), and the crossing of the Jordan (see Josh. chs 3–4). 4: Miriam here plays a role equal to her brothers, in contrast to the Torah narrative.

^a Emendation yields “idols.” ^b Emendation yields “arrogant.”
^{c-c} Emendation yields “Give ear, you.”

And how Balaam son of Beor Responded to him.
[Recall your passage]
From Shittim to Gilgal^a—
And you will recognize
The gracious acts of the LORD.”

6 With what shall I approach the LORD,
Do homage to God on high?
Shall I approach Him with burnt offerings,
With calves a year old?
7 Would the LORD be pleased with thousands of rams,
With myriads of streams of oil?
Shall I give my first-born for my transgression,
The fruit of my body for my sins?

8 “He has told you, O man, what is good,
And what the LORD requires of you:
Only to do justice
And to love goodness,
And ^bto walk modestly with your God;^b
9 ^cThen will your name achieve wisdom.”^c

Hark! The LORD
Summons the city:
^dHear, O scepter;
For who can direct her ¹⁰but you?^d
Will I overlook,^e in the wicked man's house,
The granaries of wickedness
And the accursed short ephah?^f 11 Shall he^g be acquitted despite wicked balances
And a bag of fraudulent weights?—
12^h Whose rich men are full of lawlessness,
And whose inhabitants speak treachery,
With tongues of deceit in their mouths.

13 I, in turn, have beaten you sore,
Have stunned [you] for your sins:

6-8: The text here should not be interpreted as a rejection of Temple offerings; rather it expresses the common biblical and ancient Near Eastern concept of the primacy of morality over sacrifices (e.g., 1 Sam. 15.22; Prov. 21.3).

7: This v. seems to assume that human sacrifice, at least in extreme circumstances, was thought to have been acceptable and efficacious (see Gen. ch 22; 2 Kings 3.27). 8: This didactic saying is one of the most influential and often quoted sayings in prophetic literature. It was considered as a possible compendium of all the Mitzvot. “R. Simlai when preaching said: Six hundred and thirteen precepts were communicated to Moses, three hundred and sixty-five negative precepts . . . Micah came and reduced them to three [principles], as it is written, He has told you, O human, what is good, and what the LORD requires of you: only to do justice, and to love goodness, and to walk humbly with your God. ‘To do justice,’ this concerns justice; ‘and to love goodness,’ this concerns “gemilut hasadim” (acts of kindness); ‘and to walk humbly with your God,’ this concerns walking in funeral and bridal processions” (b. Mak. 23b-24a; cf. b. Sukkah 49b and Radak). To walk modestly with your God (cf. Targum) is usually translated as “to walk humbly with your God,” but its original meaning is likely to be “to walk wisely with your God” (and cf. v. 9).

6.9-16: Another explanation for the fall of Jerusalem. 9: The text is difficult and some emendations have been suggested. The rendition of this v. reflects an emendation of the MT. The latter may be translated as: “The voice of the LORD cries out to the city— it is sound wisdom to fear Your name—‘Hear, O tribe and city assembly!’” If so, the expression within dashes serves as a comment made by the narrator that is easily understood by the readership of the book.

a I.e., the crossing of the Jordan; see Josh. 3.1, 14-4.19.

b-b Or “It is prudent to serve your God.”

c-c Emendation yields “And it is worthwhile to revere His name.”

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e Taking ish as from nashah “to forget”; cf. Deut. 32.18.

f Cf. Amos 8.4-5.

g Heb. “l”; change of vocalization yields “Will I acquit him.”

h This verse would read well after “city” in v. 9.

14 You have been eating without getting your fill,
 *And there is a gnawing at your vitals;
 You have been conceiving without bearing young,^a
 And what you bore I would deliver to the sword.
 15 You have been sowing, but have nothing to reap;
 You have trod olives, but have no oil for rubbing,
 And grapes^b but have no wine to drink.
 16 Yet ^cyou have kept^c the laws of Omri,
 And all the practices of the House of Ahab,
 And have followed what they devised.
 Therefore I will make you an object of horror
 And ^dher inhabitants^d an object of hissing;^e
 And you shall bear the mockery of peoples.^f

7 Woe is me!^g
 I am become like leavings of a fig harvest,
 Like gleanings when the vintage is over,
 There is not a cluster to eat,
 Not a ripe fig I could desire.
 2 The pious are vanished from the land,
 None upright are left among men;
 All lie in wait to commit crimes,
 One traps the other in his net.
 3 ^aThey are eager to do evil:
 The magistrate makes demands,
 And the judge [judges] for a fee;
 The rich man makes his crooked plea,
 And they grant it.^a 4 The best of them is like a prickly shrub;
 The [most] upright, worse than a barrier of thorns.
^aOn the day you waited for,^a your doom has come—
 Now their confusion shall come to pass.
 5 Trust no friend,
 Rely on no intimate;
 Be guarded in speech
 With her who lies in your bosom.
 6 For son spurns father,
 Daughter rises up against mother,
 Daughter-in-law against mother-in-law—
 A man's own household
 Are his enemies.

16: Omri . . . Ahab, the most notorious kings of the dynasty of Omri/Ahab. The text reflects the common characterization of the House of Ahab as the primary example of a sinful royal house of northern Israel; see 2 Kings 8.18; 21.3, 13; 2 Chron. 21.13; 22.4; 1 Kings 16.23–22.40; 2 Kings chs 10–28. Likewise, 2 Kings 17.19, 22, and other texts condemn Judah for following the ways of Israel.

7.1–7: A text about trust in the LORD despite and in response to social disintegration. The book teaches the readers that the response to social disintegration must be trust in the LORD (see v. 7 to which the text leads up). 6: The situation envisioned here is reversed in the eschatological image of Mal. 3.24. 7: Yet I will look to the LORD may be translated "As for me, I will look to the LORD." The "me" is, of course, the pious speaker in the text with whom the readers are supposed to identify.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Lit. "new wine."

c-c Heb. "is kept." d-d I.e., those of the city of v. 9, apparently Samaria.

e See note at Jer. 18.16. f Heb. "My people."

g The speaker is feminine (cf. 'elohayikh, v. 10), probably Samaria personified; cf. note d-d at 6.16.

- 7 Yet I will look to the LORD,
I will wait for the God who saves me,
My God will hear me.
- 8 Do not rejoice over me,
O my enemy!^a
Though I have fallen, I rise again;
Though I sit in darkness, the LORD is my light.
- 9 I must bear the anger of the LORD,
Since I have sinned against Him,
Until He champions my cause
And upholds my claim.
He will let me out into the light;
I will enjoy vindication by Him.
- 10 When my enemy^a sees it,
She shall be covered with shame,
She who taunts me with "Where is He,
The LORD your God?"
My eyes shall behold her [downfall];
Lo, she shall be for trampling
Like mud in the streets.
- 11 A day for mending your walls^b—
That is a far-off day.
- 12 This is rather a day when to you [Trampers] will come streaming
From Assyria and the towns of Egypt—
From [every land from] Egypt to the Euphrates,
From sea to sea and from mountain to mountain—
- 13 And your^c land shall become a desolation—
Because of those who dwell in it—
As the fruit of their misdeeds.
- 14 Oh, shepherd Your people with Your staff,
Your very own flock.
May they who dwell isolated ^dIn a woodland surrounded by farmland^d
Graze^e Bashan and Gilead
As in olden days.
- 15 'I will show him^f wondrous deeds
As in the days when You sallied forth from the land of Egypt.

7.8-20: A concluding note of hope. A confirmation that the relationship between the LORD and Judah and Jerusalem is maintained, that the LORD forgives and Israel will be restored.

14: Bashan and Gilead, fertile lands in Transjordan. 15: As elsewhere in prophetic literature, particularly in Deutero-Isaiah (Isa. chs 40ff.), the exodus is paradigmatic for restoration and salvation.

a Heb. feminine, apparently referring to Damascus.

b To keep out trampers (end of preceding verse); cf. Isa. 5.5; Ps. 80.13-14.

c Heb. "the."

d-d I.e., the land west of the Jordan, which is represented as far less fertile than adjacent regions.

e Emendation yields "possess."

f-f Emendation yields "Show us."

- 16 Let nations behold and be ashamed
 Despite all their might;
 Let them put hand to mouth;
 Let their ears be deafened!
- 17 Let them lick dust like snakes,
 Like crawling things on the ground!
^aLet them come trembling out of their strongholds^a
 To the LORD our God;
 Let them fear and dread You!
- 18 Who is a God like You, Forgiving iniquity
 And remitting transgression;
 Who has not maintained His wrath forever
 Against the remnant of His own people, Because He loves graciousness!
- 19 He will take us back in love;
 He will cover up our iniquities,
 You will hurl all our^b sins
 Into the depths of the sea.
- 20 You will keep faith with Jacob,
 Loyalty to Abraham,
 As You promised on oath to our fathers
 In days gone by.

18–20: These vv. provide an upbeat, extremely hopeful conclusion of the book. Such conclusions are expected in prophetic books (see intro. to The Twelve). Because of their assurance of God's forgiveness, these vv. are used in the liturgy for Rosh Ha-Shanah and Yom Kippur (see intro. to Micah).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Heb. "their."

Nahum

THE DOUBLE TITLE OF THE BOOK of Nahum (1.1) points to its main characteristics. It is a written prophetic book associated with Nahum. It is also, in the main, a pronouncement against Nineveh. From the readers' viewpoint Nineveh was both a historical city, the capital of the Assyrian empire, and a symbol of a sinful, overbearing, exceedingly oppressive political structure which was totally destroyed and never rebuilt. From the perspective of a readership well aware of the fall of Nineveh, such a fall from the pinnacle of glory and might becomes a paradigmatic example of the fate of worldly, powerful oppressors and, above all, of the even greater power of the LORD who brings them down. As such, the book served as a message of hope and trust in the LORD to those who saw themselves as oppressed by their own "Nineveh."

The text does not set the book in any particular period in monarchic Judah. From the perspective of the intended readership, the only restriction was that Nahum must have lived before the destruction of the city, because prophetic characters in a prophetic book are supposed to prophesy about what will be, not what has already happened. The date of the composition of the book is another matter. Some scholars argue that the vivid description of the destruction of Nineveh (612 BCE) indicates that the author of the book must have written it (or a portion of it) soon after the events; others disagree. The reference to the conquest and sack of the Egyptian capital of Thebes (No-amon) as a past event in 3.8 indicates that the book was composed later than this event (663). The question of how much later remains open. Seder Olam Rabbah and other Jewish traditional sources claim that Nahum prophesied in the days of Manasseh, that is, sometime in the first half of the 7th century BCE.

The book as it stands may be subdivided in different ways. One possibility is that there are three main sections or readings. After the superscription (1.1), the first section (1.2–14) deals mainly with the LORD's character and responses to opponents (symbolized by Assyria) and to Israel's plight. The second section (2.1–14) first links the actions of the LORD to Judah's joy, restoration, and freedom from oppressive scoundrels and marauders (vv. 1–3). The reference to the end of the latter flows into a vivid description of the fall of Nineveh (2.4–14). The last passage (3.1–19) dwells on Nineveh's hubris—which is understood as a challenge to the LORD—and the fall of the city. Indirectly, it deals again with the matter of God's character and attributes. Other divisions of the text are possible; for instance, a hymn of theophany (ch 1) is followed by a taunt song against Nineveh (chs 2–3). Another possibility: 1.2–11 "The LORD is mighty and avenges evil"; 1.12–2.14 "The judgment of Nineveh"; 3.1–9 " 'Ah, Nineveh.' " Or possibly 1.2–2.11 "A prophetic challenge to opponents of the LORD"; 2.12–3.19, "A challenge to Nineveh's hubris." As in many other prophetic books this multiplicity of possible outlines contributes to the ability of the community to read, re-read, and continually study the prophetic book, and to emphasize one aspect of the book in one reading and another in a different reading. All in all, this multiplicity creates a situation in which different readings based on particular outlines inform and balance each other and all together communicate a meaning much richer than any of them separately.

[EHUD BEN ZVI]

1 A pronouncement on Nineveh: The Book of the Prophecy of Nahum the Elkoshite.

- 2 The LORD is a passionate, avenging God;
The LORD is vengeful and fierce in wrath.
The LORD takes vengeance on His enemies,
He rages against His foes.
- 3 The LORD is slow to anger and of great forbearance,
But the LORD does not remit all punishment.
He travels in whirlwind and storm,
And clouds are the dust on His feet.
- 4 He rebukes the sea and dries it up,
And He makes all rivers fail;
Bashan and Carmel languish,
And the blossoms^a of Lebanon wither.
- 5 The mountains quake because of Him,
And the hills melt.
The earth heaves^b before Him,
The world and all that dwell therein.
- 6 Who can stand before His wrath?
Who can resist His fury?
His anger pours out like fire,
And rocks are shattered because of Him.
- 7 The LORD is good to [those who hope in Him],
A haven on a day of distress;
He is mindful of those who seek refuge in Him.
- 8 And with a sweeping flood
He makes an end of ^cher place,^c
And chases His enemies into darkness.

1.1: Superscription. As mentioned in the introduction, this is an unusual double title, thereby emphasizing the central theme of the book, the fall of Nineveh. Elkoshite: There is no known location that may correspond to this town. Some scholars doubt that the reference is to a town at all and others (cf. Targum) have suggested that the writer may have invented it as a wordplay (Heb "God is harsh"; cf. Isa. 19.4).

1.2–14: The LORD responds to Assyria and to Israel's plight. There are remnants of an acrostic in these vv., but this has been disrupted through the transmission of the passage, and can no longer be reconstructed. These initial vv. are extremely traditional, quoting common themes and phrases.

2–3: These vv. offer an interpretation and elaboration of Exod. 34.6–7 (cf. Num. 14.18; Jonah 4.2; Ps. 145.8); also cf. Josh. 24.19; Jer. 3.5, 12. 4: The sea, often considered a mythological place of chaos (cf. Isa. 27.1). Dries it up, as during the exodus (Exod. 14.21; Ps. 106.9).

5: For similar theophanic imagery, see Mic. 1.5; Isa. 13.13; Jer. 4.24; 2 Sam. 22.8 || Ps 18.8, among many others. 7: As the community reads about the LORD's power and the ridiculousness of any attempt to withstand God's fury, this v. serves to reassure them that not all need be afraid of such fury and power. 8: If her place is correct, it

^a Lit. "bud." ^b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^{c-c} Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "those who oppose Him."

- 9 Why will you plot against the LORD?
He wreaks utter destruction:
No adversary^a opposes Him twice!
- 10 ^bFor like men besotted with drink,
They are burned up like tangled thorns,
Like straw that is thoroughly dried.^b
- 11^c The base plotter
Who designed evil against the LORD Has left you.
- 12 Thus said the LORD:
^b“Even as they^d were full and many,
Even so are they over and gone;
As surely as I afflicted you,
I will afflict you no more.”^b
- 13 And now
I will break off his yoke bar from you
And burst your cords apart.
- 14 The LORD has commanded concerning him:^e ^bNo posterity shall continue your name.^b
I will do away with
The carved and graven images
In the temples of your gods;
I will make your grave
^bAccord with your worthlessness.^b

2 Behold on the hills
The footsteps of a herald
Announcing good fortune!
“Celebrate your festivals, O Judah, Fulfill your vows.
Never again shall scoundrels invade you,
They have totally vanished.”

- 2^f A shatterer has come up against you.
Man the guard posts,
Watch the road;
Steady your loins,
Brace all your strength!

- 3 For the LORD has restored ^gthe Pride^h of Jacob
As well as the Pride^h of Israel,^g refers to Nineveh. The same consonantal text may be read “His opposition” (see translators’ note c-c on p. 1220). 11: The verse may be translated as follows: “From you has come forth a plotter of evil against the LORD, a lawless counselor.” This counselor is identified as an Assyrian king, or as an “archetypal Assyrian king,” and in the Jewish tradition in particular, as Sennacherib (see 2 Kings 18.13–19.37). Readers would associate the figure of this counselor with that of the leader of whatever group they are opposing.

2.1–14: The two poles: Judah’s joy and peace and the conquest and destruction of Nineveh.

1: Cf. Isa. 52.7. 3: The pride of Jacob as well as the pride of Israel; or “the pride of Jacob, yea, the pride of Israel.” Here Jacob and Israel are likely to be synonyms that stand for all Israel or, given that the passage as a whole focuses on Judah, on Judah as its legitimate representative.

a Cf. Ugaritic šrt. b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Vv. 11–14 would read well after 2.1. d I.e., the days of your affliction.

e Heb. “you.” f This verse would read well after v. 3.

g-g “Jacob” refers to the northern kingdom (cf. Amos 6.8; 8.7); Israel refers to the southern kingdom, regarded as the remnant of Israel after the fall of the northern kingdom (cf. Mic. 1.13–15).

h Emendation yields “vine.”

Though marauders have laid them waste
And ravaged their branches.

- 4 His warriors' shields are painted red,
And the soldiers are clothed in crimson;
The chariots are like flaming torches,^a
On the day they are made ready.
^bThe [arrows of] cypress wood are poisoned,^b
5 The chariots dash about frenzied in the fields,
They rush through the meadows.
They appear like torches,
They race like streaks of lightning.
6 ^cHe commands his burly men;
They stumble as they advance,
They hasten up to her wall,
Where ^dwheeled shelters^d are set up.^c
7 ^eThe floodgates are opened,
And the palace is deluged.^e
8 ^fAnd Huzzab is exiled and carried away,^f
While her handmaidens ^gescort [her]^g
As with the voices of doves, Beating their breasts.
9 Nineveh has been like a [placid] pool of water
^cFrom earliest times;^c
Now they flee.
"Stop! Stop!" —
But none can turn them back.
10 "Plunder silver! Plunder gold!"
There is no limit to the treasure;
It is a hoard of all precious objects.
11 Desolation, devastation, and destruction!
Spirits sink,
Knees buckle,
All loins tremble,
All faces ^hturn ashen.^h
12 What has become of that lions' den,
That pastureⁱ of great beasts,
Where lion and lion's breed walked,

4–10: A narrative account of the destruction of Nineveh begins with siege and defense and concludes with the plunder of the city, and the confused and terrified response of those who survived. The precise wording of the narrative sets a tempo that conveys a sense of the intensity, chaos, and confusion of the battle scene; much of this is lost in translation. 4: His warriors' shields, the shields of those attacking Nineveh. Note that the beginning of the narrative has no clear antecedent. 6: The v. may be translated: "He calls (or assigns) his mighty men (or commanders); they stumble as they go; they hurry to her wall [Nineveh's wall], and the siege shelters [to protect the troops from the weaponry of the besieged] are set up." The language of the v. stresses the speed of the actions. 7: The floodgates refer to the gates of the canals and dams. This is both a reflection on the physical environment of Nineveh and a metaphorical reference to the conquering flood of the enemy. The fall of the palace is the beginning of the end of Nineveh. 8: The reference to Huzzab is unclear. Given the reference to her maidservants, one may assume that the v. contains a reference to an Assyrian woman of high status, either metaphorically or not. The Targum, Rashi, and other medieval interpreters understood the term as "queen." 11: The English reflects the striking alliteration of the Heb: "bukah umevukah umevulakah." 12: The language resembles a lament. This sharpens the message by heightening the irony and prepares the reader for the next passage (3.1–19). The repetition of lion may play on the common motif of lions in Assyrian palace reliefs; here the lion imagery is ironically turned against the Assyrians.

a Understanding peladoth as equivalent to lappidoth.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "The horsemen charge"; cf. 3.3.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d To protect the crews that swung the battering rams.

e-e I.e., the walls are breached and the palace is overrun.

f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "And its mistress is led out and exiled."

g-g Emendation yields "moan."

h-h Meaning of Heb. uncertain; cf. note at Joel 2.6.

i Emendation yields "cave."

13 And lion's cub—with none to disturb them?
 [Where is] the lion that tore victims for his cubs
 And strangled for his lionesses,
 And filled his lairs with prey
 And his dens with mangled flesh?
 14 I am going to deal with you
 —declares the LORD of Hosts:
 I will burn down ^aher chariots in smoke,^a
 And the sword shall devour your great beasts;
 I will stamp out your killings from the earth,
 And the sound of your messengers^b
 Shall be heard no more.

3 Ah, city of crime,
 Utterly treacherous,
 Full of violence,
 Where killing never stops!

2 Crack of whip
 And rattle of wheel,
 Galloping steed
 And bounding chariot!
 3 Charging horsemen,
 Flashing swords,
 And glittering spears!
 Hosts of slain
 And heaps of corpses,
 Dead bodies without number—
 They stumble over bodies.
 4 Because of the countless harlotries of the harlot,
 The winsome mistress of sorcery,
 Who ensnared^c nations with her harlotries
 And peoples with her sorcery,
 5 I am going to deal with you
 —declares the LORD of Hosts.
 I will lift up your skirts over your face
 And display your nakedness to the nations
 And your shame to kingdoms.
 6 I will throw loathsome things over you
 And disfigure you
 And make a spectacle of you.
 7 All who see you will recoil from you
 And will say,
 "Nineveh has been ravaged!"
 Who will console her?

3.1-19: On Nineveh's pride and its fall. The passage begins Ah (v. 1) and concludes with the clapping of hands (v. 19), from an ironic imitation of a lament to universal joy. The entire section explains the fall of the city in terms of its behavior. 1: This is an instance of the typical "Ah" (Heb "hoy") formula. Usually "ah" is followed by a noun phrase (or a participle) that not only identifies for whom the exclamation is due, but also explains their fate in terms of just punishment (e.g., Zeph. 3.1). City of crime (more lit. "city of blood[shed]") follows this pattern. The NJPS translation of the v. is not fully literal. 4-7: On the general imagery, cf. Lam. ch 1. 4: The association of a female metaphor for the city with the negative, female imagery of harlotries and sorcery is obvious. Such metaphors were common in the societies in which biblical texts were written and first read, though problematic to many readers today.

a-a Emendation yields "your thicket in fire."

b Emendation yields "devouring."

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Where shall I look for Anyone to comfort you?
 8 Were you any better than No-amon,^a
 Which sat by the Nile, Surrounded by water—
 Its rampart a river,^b
 Its wall ^cconsisting of sea?^c
 9 Populous Nubia
 And teeming Egypt,
 Put and the Libyans—
 They were her^d helpers.
 10 Yet even she was exiled,
 She went into captivity.
 Her babes, too, were dashed in pieces
 At every street corner.
 Lots were cast for her honored men,
 And all her nobles were bound in chains.
 11 You too shall be drunk
 And utterly overcome;^e
 You too shall seek
 A refuge from the enemy.
 12 All your forts are fig trees
 With^f ripe fruit;
 If shaken they will fall
 Into the mouths of devourers.
 13 Truly, the troops within you are women;
 The gates of your land have opened themselves
 To your enemies;
 Fire has consumed your gate bars.
 14 Draw water for the siege,
 Strengthen your forts;
 Tread the clay,
 Trample the mud,
 Grasp the brick mold!
 15 There fire will devour you,
 The sword will put an end to you;
 It will devour you like the grub.
^gMultiply like grubs,
 Multiply like locusts!^g
 16 You had more traders
 Than the sky has stars—

8: No-amon, Thebes, the Egyptian capital, one of the most impressive and wealthy cities of the ancient Near East. It was conquered by Assyria in the days of Ashurbanipal (663 BCE). The main enemy of the Assyrians was an Ethiopian dynasty that ruled over Egypt. The pun on words and historical background is clear. 10: On the image of smashed babies, cf. 2 Kings 8.12; Isa. 13.16; Hos. 10.14; 14.1; Ps. 137.9. 11: The you (fem.) refers back to Nineveh. The metaphor is one of a drunken woman; see v. 12. 13: The language of the text reflects a worldview in which women are seen as weak and defenseless. The relevant section of the verse may be understood not only as the troops within you are women but also as "Behold! Your people: women in your midst!" Cf. Isa. 19.16; Jer. 30.57; 51.30. 15, 17: The text plays on two common associations of the locust, with troops and with being a multitude (cf. Joel). Some translations have "locust" or "chewing locust" instead of grub in v. 15. The point is that the locust (enemy) will devour Assyria whereas its multitude (locust) of troops, merchants, scribes, and the like will not be able to save Assyria. The word translated marshals may also be translated "scribes." 19: On clapping hands for joy, cf. Ps. 47.2. Everyone has suffered because of Assyria and now rejoices in its permanent fall.

a Amon was the tutelary deity of No (Thebes; cf. Jer. 46.25), which the Assyrians had sacked in 663 B.C.E.

b Heb. "sea." c-c Change of vocalization yields "water."

d Heb. "your." e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

f Emendation yields "Your troops are"; cf. next verse. g-g Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

The grubs cast their skins and fly away.
17 Your guards were like locusts,
Your marshals like piles of hoppers
Which settle on the stone fences
On a chilly day;
When the sun comes out, they fly away,
And where they are nobody knows.
18 Your shepherds are slumbering,
O king of Assyria;
Your sheepmasters are ^alying inert;^a
Your people are scattered^b over the hills,
And there is none to gather them.
19 There is no healing^c for your injury;
Your wound is grievous.
All who hear the news about you
Clap their hands over you.
For who has not suffered From your constant malice?

a-a Lit. "dwelling"; emendation yields "asleep."

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Heb. kehah, a variant of gehah; see Prov. 17.22.

Habakkuk

THE BOOK OF HABAKKUK consists of a report of a dialogue between the prophet and the LORD (chs 1–2) and a prayer or psalm (ch 3). It is most significant that a book that contains mainly human speech is considered to be “the (prophetic) pronouncement that Habakkuk, the prophet, saw (i.e., perceived in a revelation/vision).” In other words, the written report of the words of a prophet to God becomes a revelation or divinely originated vision. (The same process may have led to the consideration of the book of Psalms, for instance, as Scripture.)

From the perspective of the intended readers, it would be absurd for the text to maintain that a true prophet of the LORD prophesied about events that have already happened; therefore, the text presents Habakkuk’s vision as preceding the fall of Babylon. Needless to say, nothing about the date of composition of the book or a historical Habakkuk can be learned from this observation. The most that can be said is that the book presumes the situation that began with the rise of Babylonian power around 612 BCE, and therefore is not earlier than that date. The text assumes a readership (and authorship) that was aware that Babylonia was the main power in the area at some point. For readerships that were also aware of the fall of the Babylonian (or Chaldean) empire—as any Persian period readership would be—the book is not so much about why justice does not emerge, but is rather about living under injustice. How do readers relate the known attributes of the LORD to an international system in which the dominant imperial power “slays nations without pity,” or “seizes homes not their own” and which surely does not place its trust in the LORD? How is a pious person supposed to deal with this situation? From the perspective of such readers the fact that Babylonia has already fallen makes a prominent contribution to the persuasive power of the book and its message.

As mentioned above, following the superscription, the book contains a report of a dialogue between the prophet and the LORD. It is possible to divide this dialogue into four parts: (a) Habakkuk’s first complaint (1.2–4), (b) The LORD’s response (1.5–11), (c) Habakkuk’s second complaint (1.12–17), and (d) Habakkuk’s report of the LORD’s response (ch 2). The book concludes with the prayer or psalm of Habakkuk (ch 3). This section has its own title or subtitle (see 3.1) and contains a short, human petition to God to manifest God’s power (3.2), a lengthy report about an appearance of the LORD in the world (a theophany) (vv. 3–15), and above all concludes with an expression of human confidence in the LORD (vv. 16–19).

Many scholars maintain that some sections of the text (especially the prayer) existed prior to the book. The book as it stands, however, presents all three chapters as “the (prophetic) pronouncement that Habakkuk, the prophet, saw (i.e., perceived in a revelation/vision).”

A long commentary on the first two chapters of Habakkuk has been preserved among the Dead Sea Scrolls. This commentary, called by scholars Pesher Habakkuk, understands this prophetic work as being actualized in its author’s own day, centuries after Habakkuk was written. Specifically, it identifies Habakkuk’s Chaldeans, a name for the Babylonians, with the Kittim, almost certainly the Romans. This offers clear proof of how prophetic works were read and studied within a Jewish group that lived in the late Maccabean period as works that contain information about the life of their community of readers rather than arcane reports of past historical periods. [EHUD BEN ZVI]

1 The pronouncement made by the prophet Habakkuk.

2 How long, O LORD, shall I cry out
And You not listen,
Shall I shout to You, “Violence!”
And You not save?
3 Why do You make me see iniquity
“[Why] do You look^a upon wrong?—
Raiding and violence are before me, Strife continues and contention^b goes on.”
4 That is why decision fails
And justice never emerges;
For the villain hedges in the just man—
Therefore judgment emerges deformed.
5 “Look among the nations,
Observe well and be utterly astounded;
For a work is being wrought in your days
Which you would not believe if it were told.
6 For lo, I am raising up the Chaldeans,
That fierce, impetuous nation,

a-a Targum and Syriac “So that I look.”

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

1.1: Superscription. A more literal translation of the verse would be “the (prophetic) pronouncement that Habakkuk, the prophet, saw (i.e., perceived in a revelation/vision).” Some scholars consider this title to refer only to chs 1 and 2, because ch 3 has its own title. It is more likely, however, that 3.1 served as a subtitle, whereas 1.1 performs the usual role of title and introduction to the entire book.

1.2–2.20: A dialogue between Habakkuk and the LORD. 1.2–4: This is the beginning of the dialogue between the LORD and a prophetic voice (Habakkuk). The human speaker initiates the dialogue with a series of pointed, rhetorical questions. The issue at stake is not simply theodicy but the very order and possibility of existence of the world (see below). Nothing in the text directly anchors the questions to a particular historical situation. The speaker implicitly identifies himself with the righteous, but not much about them is told. The text is written in general terms so readers may identify with the speaker and the speaker’s questions.

4: That is why decision fails, probably better, “therefore torah slacks.” The word “torah” here points to the divine teaching that maintains the order of the world, and that was later understood by traditional Jewish commentators as “the Torah.” 5–11: These verses present the divine response to the human complaint. On the surface, it seems incongruous, since it announces that the LORD gives victory to the Babylonians, who are described by the same divine voice in the most terrifying terms. So not only will the wicked prosper and have dominion, but even the righteous in Judah will continue to suffer at the hands of a dread and fierce, wicked power. The divine response, in fact, strengthens

Who cross the earth's wide spaces
 To seize homes not their own.
 7 They are terrible, dreadful;
^aThey make their own laws and rules.^a
 8 Their horses are swifter than leopards, Fleeter than wolves of the steppe.^b
 Their steeds gallop—^ctheir steeds^c
 Come flying from afar.
 Like vultures rushing toward food,
 9 They all come, bent on rapine.
 The thrust^d of their van is forward,
 And they amass captives like sand.
 10 Kings they hold in derision,
 And princes are a joke to them;
 They laugh at every fortress,
 They pile up earth and capture it.
 11 ^eThen they pass on like the wind,
 They transgress and incur guilt,
 For they ascribe their might to their god."^e 12 You, O LORD, are from everlasting;
 My holy God, You' never die.
 O LORD, You have made them a subject of contention;
 O Rock, You have made them a cause for complaint.
 13 You whose eyes are too pure to look upon evil,
 Who cannot countenance wrongdoing,
 Why do You countenance treachery,
 And stand by idle
 While the one in the wrong devours
 The one in the right?
 14 You have made mankind like the fish of the sea,
 Like creeping things ^gthat have no ruler.^g
 15 He has fished them all up with a line,
 Pulled them up in his trawl,
 And gathered them in his net.
 That is why he rejoices and is glad.
 16 That is why he sacrifices to his trawl
 And makes offerings to his net;
 For through them his portion^h is rich rather than weakens the case advanced in the human complaint.

7: They make their own laws and rules, they take upon themselves a role that is the LORD's (see translators' note a-n). Still, despite their arrogance, the LORD raises them up. 11: There is an ongoing debate on how to translate this v. Although several substantially different proposals have been advanced, the general gist of the text is clear: The Babylonians do not think that their power is established and maintained by the LORD.
12–17: The reaction of the prophetic voice to such a reply is—as one may expect—a second complaint, one that takes into account the divine response and the aggravating circumstances that it describes. 12: The Heb actually says something akin to "we shall not die" or "let us not die." There is a tradition that the original text read, "You [i.e., the LORD] never die," and that scribes changed it because of its embarrassing content. (These emendations are called "Tiqqunei Soferim.") There is a considerable debate on how to evaluate this tradition concerning v. 12, and accordingly, about the wording of the original text of the v. It seems more likely that the v. read, "let us not die" or the like. 13: The meaning of the last two lines in the v. is something like "[why do you] remain silent when the wicked swallow those more righteous than they?" The question is not why one who is absolutely righteous would suffer, but why the hierarchy of people in the spectrum of righteousness-wickedness runs opposite to that of power in the "real world."
14: This is a reversal of people's role as described in Gen. 1.26, 28.

a-a Lit. "Their law and majesty proceed from themselves."

b Understanding ^eereb as synonymous with 'arabah; cf. Jer. 5.6.

c-c The Qumran Habakkuk commentary (hereafter 1QpHab) reads "and spread [twings]."

d Meaning of Heb. uncertain. e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

f Heb. "we," a change made by a pious scribe.

g-g 1QpHab "[for him] to rule over"; cf. Gen. 1.28; Ps. 8.7–9.

h Emendation yields "bread"; cf. Gen. 49.20.

And his nourishment fat.
 17 Shall he then keep ^aemptying his trawl,^a
 And slaying nations without pity?

2 I will stand on my watch,
 Take up my station at the^b post,
 And wait to see what He will say to me,
 What He^c will reply to my complaint.

2 The LORD answered me and said:
 Write the prophecy down,
 Inscribe it clearly on tablets,
 So that it can be read easily.
 3 For ^dthere is yet a prophecy^d for a set term,
 A truthful witness for a time that will come.
 Even if it tarries, wait for it still;
 For it will surely come, without delay:

4 ^eLo, his spirit within him is puffed up, not upright,
 But^e the righteous man is rewarded with life
 For his fidelity.
 5 How much less then shall the defiant^f go unpunished,
 The treacherous, arrogant man
 Who has made his maw as wide as Sheol,
 Who is as insatiable as Death,
 Who has harvested all the nations
 And gathered in all the peoples!
 6 Surely all these shall pronounce a satire against him,
 A pointed epigram concerning him.
 They shall say:
 Ah, you who pile up what is not yours—
 How much longer?—
 And make ever heavier your load of indebtedness!
 7 Right suddenly will your creditors^g arise,

4: But the righteous man is rewarded with life for his fidelity, often translated "the righteous one lives (or shall live) by his faith" or "the righteous one shall live through (or is sustained by) his faith." According to one of the Rabbis in b. Mak. 23b, this saying encapsulates all the commandments. The saying also had an important influence in Christianity, and in particular in the doctrine of justification through faith (see Rom. 1.17; Gal. 3.11; Heb. 10.38-39). In its original context the saying is clearly interwoven with the first part of the v. The saying there focuses on a person whose life is swollen and crooked. Then the v. moves to the opposite pole, a pious person who keeps his or her trust in the LORD under the dire circumstances described in the book, i.e., when the righteous are asked to wait while those who do not deserve worldly power wield it over them. The text does not identify such persons with any particular characters, thereby facilitating different identifications and accordingly, diverse readings of the text. Given the general focus in the book on Babylonia and its wickedness, readers may have understood the negative character in the first line as pointing at the king of Babylonia, as an archetypal representative of both the Babylonian empire and any proud people who rely on their own power. 5: Sheol, the Pit or the netherworld, where all people descend upon death, it is the utter bottom of the world. Human attributes are associated with Sheol here. It has a "maw" and, of course, the "maw of Sheol" is surely insatiable, like that of Death (see also Isa. 5.14, cf. Ps. 141.7). 6a: A pointed epigram concerning him. They shall say: . . . , or "Shall not all these take up a parable about him and a metaphor, and riddles regarding him? One will say: . . ." 6b-20: What this "one" will say is presented as a series of five Ah or "woe" passages marked by the formula, Ah, you (vv. 6, 9, 12, 15, 19). The enemy is now denounced as a spoiler, greedy, unjust, lawless, and idolatrous. (On a-a 1QpHab "drawing his sword." b 1QpHab reads "my."

c Taking 'ashib as equivalent to yashib.

d-d Emendation yields "the prophecy is a witness."

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "Lo, there is a reward for the upright—/ the life breath within him—/ And . . ."

f Connecting hynn (1QpHab hwn) with the root hwn, Deut. 1.41; for the thought cf. Prov. 11.31. Meaning of rest of line uncertain. g Lit. "usurers."

2.1-20: At this point, the reader waits to see how the LORD will respond. The response comes in the form of the speaker's report of a revelation. 3: This verse is associated in Jewish tradition with the coming of the Messiah and is reflected in the language of the twelfth principle of the thirteen principles of faith of Maimonides.

- And those who remind^a you will awake,
 And you will be despoiled by them.
 8 Because you plundered many nations,
 All surviving peoples shall plunder you—
 For crimes against men and wrongs against lands,
 Against cities and all their inhabitants.
- 9 Ah, you who have acquired gains
 To the detriment of your own house, ^bWho have destroyed many peoples^b
 In order to set your nest on high
 To escape disaster!
 10 You have plotted shame for your own house,
 And guilt for yourself;
 11 For a stone shall cry out from the wall,
 And a rafter shall answer it from the woodwork.
- 12 Ah, you who have built a town with crime,
 And established a city with infamy,
 13 So that peoples have had to toil for the fire,^c
 And nations to weary themselves for naught!
^dBehold, it is from the LORD of Hosts:
 14 ^eFor the earth shall be filled
 With awe for the glory of the LORD
 As water covers the sea.^e
- 15 Ah, you who make others drink to intoxication ^fAs you pour out^f your wrath,
 In order to gaze upon their nakedness!^g
 16 You shall be sated with shame
 Rather than glory:
 Drink in your turn and stagger!^h
 The cup in the right hand of the LORD
 Shall come around to you,
 And ⁱdisgrace toⁱ your glory.
 17 ^jFor the lawlessness against Lebanon shall cover
 you,
 The destruction of beasts shall overwhelm youⁱ—
 For crimes against men and wrongs against lands,
 Against cities and all their inhabitants.

the structure of these Ah oracles, see Nah. 3.1 n.). 14: This is nearly identical with the second half of Isa. 11.9. A more literal translation would be, "for the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the LORD, as water covers the sea." In other words, just as there is no place in the sea without water, there will be no place on the earth that will not be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the LORD. Some traditional commentators have suggested that the text is elliptical and means "... shall be filled by the will to know the glory." The Targum seems to assume that people cannot really know the glory of the LORD, so it translates and reinterprets the text to mean, "... to know the fear of the LORD." 20: When the LORD is present in the Temple, silence is required (cf. Zeph. 1.7; Zech. 2.17). Some scholars argue that the sacrificial service was conducted in silence.

a Lit. "shake"; the same verb means "to call to mind" in Samaritan Aramaic.

b-b Brought up from v. 10 for clarity. c I.e., without profit.

d Connection with the next four lines uncertain; they might read better after v. 20.

e-e Cf. Isa. 11.9.

f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "from the bowl of."

g Cf. Gen. 9.21–22. h Emendation yields "uncover yourself"; cf. Lam. 4.21.

i-i Or "vomit of disgrace upon." j-j Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

- 18^a What has the carved image availed,
That he who fashioned it has carved it
For an image and a false oracle—
That he who fashioned his product has trusted in it,
Making dumb idols?
19 Ah, you who say, "Wake up" to wood,
"Awaken," to inert stone!
Can that give an oracle?
Why, it is encased in gold and silver,
But there is no breath inside it.
20 But the LORD in His holy Abode—
Be silent before Him all the earth!

3 A prayer of the prophet Habakkuk. In the mode of Shigionoth.^b

- 2 O LORD! I have learned of Your renown;
I am awed, O LORD, by Your deeds.
Renew them in these years,
Oh, make them known in these years!
Though angry, may You remember compassion.
- 3 God is coming from Teman,
The Holy One from Mount Paran. Selah.^c
His majesty covers the skies,
His splendor fills the earth:
4 ^dIt is a brilliant light
Which gives off rays on every side—
And therein His glory is enveloped.^d
5 Pestilence marches before Him,
And plague comes forth at His heels.
6 When He stands, He makes the earth shake;^e
When He glances, He makes nations tremble.
The age-old mountains are shattered,
The primeval hills sink low.
^dHis are the ancient routes:
7 As a scene of havoc I behold^d a This verse would read well after v. 19.

b Meaning uncertain; perhaps "psalms of supplication"; cf. Ps. 7.1.

c A musical direction of uncertain meaning. d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e Cf. Targum and Septuagint.

3.1-19: The psalm of Habakkuk. The prayer/psalm contains a title (v. 1), a petition to God to manifest His power (v. 2), a lengthy report about a theophany (vv. 3-15), an expression of confidence by the human speaker (vv. 16-19), and musical instructions (v. 19). There are several instructions for performance in ch 3. They include three occurrences of Selah (vv. 3, 9, 13) and the concluding phrase (v. 19);

these are otherwise only attested in the book of Psalms, and for this reason many consider this to be a psalm that became part of Habakkuk. It is abundantly clear that ch 3 asks its intended readers to envision it not only as a prophetic reading, but also as a composition to be performed. At points, the language of this ch is difficult, and perhaps archaic. 1: The exact meaning of Shigionoth is unclear, but it has something to do with a musical aspect of the performance of the psalm (cf. Ps. 7.1; Radak). According to a certain traditional Jewish interpretation, this phrase is not a musicalological note, but should be translated, "... for erroneous speech/utterances." This reading reflects a particular understanding of the claims made by the human speaker in these dialogues (contrast with Job 42.8). The Targum reflects a different interpretation of the title of the prayer: "The prayer which Habakkuk the prophet prayed when it was revealed to him concerning the extension of time which he gives to the wicked, that if they return to the law with a perfect heart they shall be forgiven and all their sins ... shall be as sins of ignorance." 3-15: The theophanic description serves to emphasize the awesome power of God and to reassure the readers that the LORD will vanquish their enemies, in judgment. Mythological references (vv. 5, 8), images of shaking in the natural and human world (vv. 6-7, 10), and of destruction of enemies (vv. 12-15) are common in theophanic reports. 3: In this theophany, the LORD is coming from the south: Both Teman and Mount Paran (v. 3) are in the south from a Judahite perspective (cf. Deut. 33.2; Judg. 5.4). 5: Pestilence, some translate "plague" or "Plague" since it is personified. The personification contributes to the mythological atmosphere of this passage. The Targum identifies "Plague" with the angel of death. Plague, some translate "Fever" (Heb "reshet"), a West-Semitic mythological figure. 7: Cushan ... Midian, two tent-dwellers, "nomadic" groups south,

The tents of Cushan;
Shaken are the pavilions
Of the land of Midian!

- 8 Are You wroth, O LORD, with Neharim?
Is Your anger against Neharim,
Your rage against Yam^a—
That You are driving Your steeds,
Your victorious chariot?
9 All bared and ready is Your bow.
^bSworn are the rods of the word.^b Selah.
You make the earth burst into streams,
10 The mountains rock at the sight of You,
A torrent of rain comes down;
Loud roars the deep,
^bThe sky returns the echo.^b
11 Sun [and] moon stand still on high
As Your arrows fly in brightness,
Your flashing spear in brilliance.
12 You tread the earth in rage,
You trample nations in fury.
13 You have come forth to deliver Your people,
To deliver Your anointed.^c ^dYou will smash the roof of the villain's house, Raze it from foundation to top. Selah.
14 You will crack [his] skull with Your^e bludgeon;
Blown away shall be his warriors,
Whose delight is to crush me suddenly,
To devour a poor man in an ambush.^d
15 ^fYou will make Your steeds tread the sea,
Stirring the mighty waters.
16 I heard and my bowels quaked,
My lips quivered at the sound;
Rot entered into my bone, or southeast, of Judah. As mentioned above, the LORD is presented as coming from the south in this theophany (see v. 3).

8: Neharim, or "River" or "Floods" or "rivers." Neharim is another West-Semitic mythological figure (cf. Reshef in v. 6) and so is Yam, "Sea" or "sea." See translators' note a. 16-19: The text here advances the normative position that the readers of the book should take to heart, namely that despite all worldly circumstances (v. 17), the righteous rejoice and exult in a God that delivers them, who is their strength (v. 19).

a Neharim (lit. "Floods") and Yam (lit. "Sea") were marine monsters vanquished by the LORD in hoary antiquity. On Yam see Ps. 74.13; Job 7.12. A being called both Yam and Nahar figures in early Canaanite literature.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c I.e., the king of Judah.

d-d Emendation yields: You will strike the heads of men of evil, / Smash the pates of Your adversaries. Selah. / You will crack their skulls with Your bludgeon; / Dispersed, blown like chaff shall be they / Who lie in wait to swallow the innocent, / To devour the poor in an ambush.

e Heb. "His."

f-f Or: ¹⁵You will make Your steeds tread the sea, / Stirring the mighty waters, / ¹⁶That I may have rest on a day of distress, / When a people come up to attack us. / But this report made my bowels quake, / These tidings made my lips quiver; / Rot entered into my bone, / I trembled where I stood: / ¹⁷That the fig tree does not bud, / And no yield is on the vine; / The olive crop has failed, / And the fields produce no grain; / The sheep have vanished from the fold, / And no cattle are in the pen.

I trembled where I stood.
Yet I wait calmly for the day of distress,
For a people to come to attack us.
17 Though the fig tree does not bud
And no yield is on the vine,
Though the olive crop has failed
And the fields produce no grain,
Though sheep have vanished from the fold
And no cattle are in the pen,^f
18 Yet will I rejoice in the LORD,
Exult in the God who delivers me.
19 My Lord GOD is my strength:
He makes my feet like the deer's
And lets me stride upon the heights.

^aFor the leader; with instrumental music.^a

Zephaniah

THE BOOK OF ZEPHANIAH claims to be a particular instance of the LORD's word, namely that associated with Zephaniah, the son of Cushi (see 1.1 and n.). The book is set in the time of Josiah (late 7th century BCE), the last great king of Judah according to the books of Kings and Chronicles. Judah as described in Zephaniah is quite an ungodly place, however. This is to be expected: Prophetic books that include divine announcements of judgment and destruction against Judah tend for obvious reasons to describe the social and religious situation in monarchic Judah in harsh, negative terms.

Some scholars attempted to harmonize the godly image of Josianic times in the historical books and its negative characterization here by assigning the circumstances described in the book to a time when Josiah was still a minor and consequently did not actually rule over the land, or to a time after his death. But this is not the claim of the book of Zephaniah. To be sure, the king is not explicitly criticized when all the leadership of Judah is condemned, but the same can be said of other prophetic books (e.g., Micah) and it is difficult to reach historical conclusions on this basis. Some scholars associate the oracles against the nations in chapter 2 with a presumed plan for territorial expansion that was advanced by King Josiah, but either never materialized or did so to only a very small extent, but this is speculative.

Many scholars attribute much of the book of Zephaniah to the monarchic period, but they agree that some portion of the book dates to the postmonarchic period. It is worth stressing that the division of the text of the book between words that go back to Zephaniah or monarchic times and words that come from a later time is nowhere made in the book. Moreover, the usual association between supposedly earlier sections and increased authoritative status (and supposedly later and less authoritative status) is contrary to the basic claim of the book, namely that it is in its entirety the LORD's word, all equal in value.

The book uses wordplay and potential or actual ambiguities that channel the attention of the readers and contribute to the possibility of multiple readings. These features are typical in prophetic books because they facilitate the continuous reading and study of these texts.

The book begins like most prophetic books with an introduction or superscription and then moves to sets of prophetic pronouncements. The book announces severe judgment against Judah and nations other than Israel, and, as do all other prophetic books, Zephaniah includes reports of prophecies of hope. Even the announcements of doom against Judah serve, in part, to emphasize hope from the perspective of the postmonarchic readers of the book of Zephaniah, because for them the fact that the announcements of doom were fulfilled in the past, as written, reassured them that those of hope will also be fulfilled in the future.

There are several possible ways to outline the book of Zephaniah, each pointing to a particular but partial reading that emphasizes certain aspects of the book and de-emphasizes others. These partial readings inform each other, and all together create a meaning much richer than any of them separately. This is a common situation in prophetic books. The following is one of these possible outlines:

1. Announcement of doom (1.2–9)
2. Description of doom (1.10–18)
3. The last chance to repent (2.1–4)
4. Against the nations and their gods (2.5–15)
5. Against the overbearing city (3.1–13)
6. Joy to Jerusalem (3.14–20)

[EHUD BEN ZVI]

1 The word of the LORD that came to Zephaniah son of Cushi son of Gedaliah son of Amariah son of Hezekiah, during the reign of King Josiah son of Amon of Judah.

2 I will sweep everything away
From the face of the earth
—declares the LORD.

3 I will sweep away man and beast;
I will sweep away the birds of the sky
And the fish of the sea.
^aI will make the wicked stumble,^a
And I will destroy mankind
From the face of the earth
—declares the LORD.

4 I will stretch out My arm against Judah
And against all who dwell in Jerusalem;
And I will wipe out from this place
Every vestige of Baal,
And the name of the priestlings^b along with the priests;

1.1: Superscription. Cushi, in principle, may also mean “Cushite” (i.e., Ethiopian). Because of the context in which it appears, however, it can only be a personal name. The last of the ancestors mentioned in the list is Hezekiah. Some interpreters maintained that this Hezekiah was the famous king of Judah (Ibn Ezra, but contrast with Radak). Again, such a claim is not advanced in the text. (The Sages understood the list as pointing at Zephaniah as a righteous man who is himself a son of a righteous man; see b. Meg. 15a.) On the reference to the reign of Josiah, see introduction.

1.2–9: Announcement of doom. 2–3: The translation suggests a universal scenario of destruction. The Heb is more ambiguous. It can certainly be understood in such a way, but also as pointing to the total destruction of a particular area. 3: I will make the wicked stumble reflects an emendation of the Masoretic Text. The latter may be translated as “[I will sweep away] the stumbling blocks along with

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Heb. kemarim, a term used only of priests of heathen gods.

5 And those who bow down on the roofs
To the host of heaven;
And those who bow down and swear to the LORD
But also swear by Malcam;^a

6 And those who have forsaken the LORD,
And those who have not sought the LORD
And have not turned to Him.

7 Be silent before my Lord God,
For the day of the LORD is approaching;
For the LORD has prepared a ^bsacrificial feast,^b
Has bidden His guests purify themselves.

8 And on the day of the LORD's sacrifice
I will punish the officials
And the king's sons,^c ^dAnd all who don a foreign vestment.

9 I will also punish on that day
Everyone who steps over the threshold,^d
Who fill their master's^e palace
With lawlessness and fraud.

10 In that day there shall be
—declares the LORD—

A loud outcry from the Fish Gate,
And howling from the Mishneh,^f
And a sound of great anguish from the hills.

11 The dwellers of the Machtesh^g howl;
For all the tradesmen have perished,
All who weigh silver are wiped out.

12 At that time,
I will search Jerusalem with lamps;

a Apparently identical with "Milcom the abomination of the Ammonites"; cf. 1 Kings 11.5.

b-b I.e., a slaughter of sinners.

c Apparently brothers of King Amon, who exercised influence during the minority of King Josiah (2 Kings 22.1).

d-d Apparently references to two customs of heathen worship; cf. 2 Kings 10.22 and 1 Sam. 5.5.

e I.e., King Josiah's. f A quarter of Jerusalem; cf. 2 Kings 22.14.

g Another quarter of Jerusalem.

the wicked" or "[I will sweep away] the stumbling blocks of the wicked" or "[I will sweep away] what makes the wicked stumble." The text does not identify these stumbling blocks, but readers throughout generations filled this information gap, and by doing so they expressed their worldview and particular circumstances. For instance, many associated them with the animals previously mentioned in the text. But if so, why do the animals make people stumble? According to Gen. Rabbah, because they provide abundance, and abundance may lead to sin. According to many others, because they may lead to idolatrous worship (b. A. Z. 55a). 5: Malcam, or "their king." Medieval Jewish interpretation tends to follow the Targum and to associate "their king" with "false deities" (Rashi, Radak), a rendering supported by the poetic parallelism of the v. Similarly, some modern interpreters see here Milcom, the head of the pantheon of Ammon (1 Kings 11.5; 33; 2 Kings 23.13); or Molech, a deity to whom children were sacrificed or passed through fire (see Lev. 18.21; 20.2; 2 Kings 23.10; cf. 1 Kings 11.7). Other modern scholars maintain that "their king" means just "their king" (cf. Exod. 22.27; 1 Kings 21.10; Isa. 8.21). It has also been suggested that "their king" points to the LORD, wrongly worshipped. 7: The last two lines in the v. can be translated as "the LORD has prepared a sacrifice; he has consecrated those he has invited." This translation communicates better the double entendre of the Heb. Are the guests consecrated so they can take part in the sacrificial meal? Or, are they consecrated because they are about to be slaughtered for the meal? Are they going to be at the meal, or be the "meal"? The Heb is likely intentionally ambiguous. 8: King's sons refers to the royal family in general, and perhaps even to royal officers; in other words, to the elite of the kingdom, which was understood as the "king's house(hold)" over which the king rules as a "father." 9: There are two main interpretations to everyone who steps over the threshold. According to the first, this is a reference to an imitation of the ways of idolaters in general or Philistines (see 1 Sam. 5.4–5) in particular (e.g., Targum, and most of recent scholarship); according to the second it points to social injustice, oppression, and thievery (e.g., Radak; Ibn Ezra). The reference to their master's palace is ambiguous: It may refer to the Temple of the LORD or to the palace of the king, or to both.

1.10–18: Description of doom.

10: The Mishneh or "Second Quarter" probably refers to the Upper City of Jerusalem, the Western Hill, where the upper social strata of Jerusalem dwelled. 12: It is God

And I will punish the men
 Who rest untroubled on their lees,
 Who say to themselves,
 "The LORD will do nothing, good or bad."
 13 Their wealth shall be plundered
 And their homes laid waste.
 They shall build houses and not dwell in them,
 Plant vineyards and not drink their wine.
 14 The great day of the LORD is approaching, Approaching most swiftly.
^aHark, the day of the LORD!
 It is bitter:
 There a warrior shrieks!^a 15 That day shall be a day of wrath,
 A day of trouble and distress,
 A day of calamity and desolation,
 A day of darkness and deep gloom,
 A day of densest clouds,
 16 A day of horn blasts and alarms—
 Against the fortified towns
 And the lofty corner towers.
 17 I will bring distress on the people,
 And they shall walk like blind men,
 Because they sinned against the LORD;
 Their blood shall be spilled like dust,
 And their fat^b like dung.
 18 Moreover, their silver and gold
 Shall not avail to save them.
 On the day of the LORD's wrath,
 In the fire of His passion,
 The whole land shall be consumed;
 For He will make a terrible end
 Of all who dwell in the land.

2 Gather together, gather,
^cO nation without shame,
 2 Before the day the decree is born—
 The day flies by like chaff^c—
 Before the fierce anger
 Of the LORD overtakes you,
 Before the day of anger
 Of the LORD overtakes you.
 3 Seek the LORD,

who will be searching Jerusalem with lamps. The Targum, and some later interpreters, reinterpreted the v. to avoid the anthro-pomorphism that this image involves. 13: The text sounds as a reverberation of the curse in Deut.
 28.30, and it points to the futility of human actions contrary to divine will. 14-18: The traditional prophetic Day of the Lord imagery is employed to reflect the great disaster (see Joel 1.15 n.).

2.1-4: The last chance to repent.

1: The Heb term translated as without shame may be understood as "not desiring [God]" or as "not desired [by God]."
 The context indicates that this nation is (Josianic) Judah.

a-a Emendation yields: "The day of the LORD is faster than a runner, / Fleeter than a warrior"; cf. Ps. 19.6.

b Or "marrow"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields: "O straw [Aramaic gel] not gathered in, / Before you are driven like flying chaff"; cf. Ps. 35.5.

All you humble of the land
 Who have fulfilled His law;
 Seek righteousness,
 Seek humility.
 Perhaps you will find shelter
 On the day of the LORD's anger.

4 Indeed, Gaza shall be deserted
 And Ashkelon desolate; Ashdod's people shall be expelled in broad daylight,

5 And Ekron shall be uprooted.
 Ah, nation of Cherethites
 Who inhabit the seacoast!
 There is a word of the LORD against you,
 O Canaan,^a land of the Philistines:
 I will lay you waste
 Without inhabitants.

6 The seacoast Cheroth^b shall become An abode for shepherds and folds for flocks, 7 And shall be a portion for the remnant of the House of Judah;
 On these [pastures] they shall graze [their flocks],
 They shall 'lie down' at eventide
 In the houses of Ashkelon.
 For the LORD their God will take note of them
 And restore their fortunes.

8 I have heard the insults of Moab
 And the jeers of the Ammonites,
 Who have insulted My people
 And gloated over their country.

9 Assuredly, as I live
 —declares the LORD of Hosts,
 the God of Israel—

Moab shall become like Sodom
 And the Ammonites like Gomorrah:
 Clumps^b of weeds and patches^b of salt,
 And desolation evermore.
 The remnant of My people shall plunder them,
 The remainder of My nation shall possess them.
 10 That is what they'll get for their haughtiness,
 For insulting and jeering
 At the people of the LORD of Hosts.

a Or "Phoenicia," of which Philistia is regarded as an extension southward.

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Change of vocalization yields "rest [them]"; cf. Song of Songs 1.7.

4: English translations are unable to convey the puns on the terms Gaza and Ekron that feature prominently in the Heb text. Something like "Powertown shall be powdered" or "Gaza shall be ghastful," and "Rootville—or perhaps Uprootville—will be uprooted" may suggest the force of the pun to English readers. The towns mentioned, including Ashkelon and Ashdod, were Philistine cities.

2.5–15: Against the nations and their gods. Such oracles against the nations are typical of prophetic books, which emphasize that God is universal in His control. 5: Nation of Cherethites, people of Crete (an island in the eastern Mediterranean Sea). The Cherethites are associated with Philistines in Ezek. 25.16. Another word-play: The main three letters of Cherethites in Heb connote a sense of "cut off" (cf. v. 6).

- 11 The LORD will show Himself terrible against them, Causing all the gods on earth to shrivel;^a
 And all the coastlands of the nations Shall bow down to Him—
 Every man in his own home.
- 12 You Cushites too—^bThey shall be slain by My sword.^b
- 13 And He will stretch out His arm against the north And destroy Assyria;
 He will make Nineveh a desolation,
 Arid as the desert.
- 14 In it flocks shall lie down,

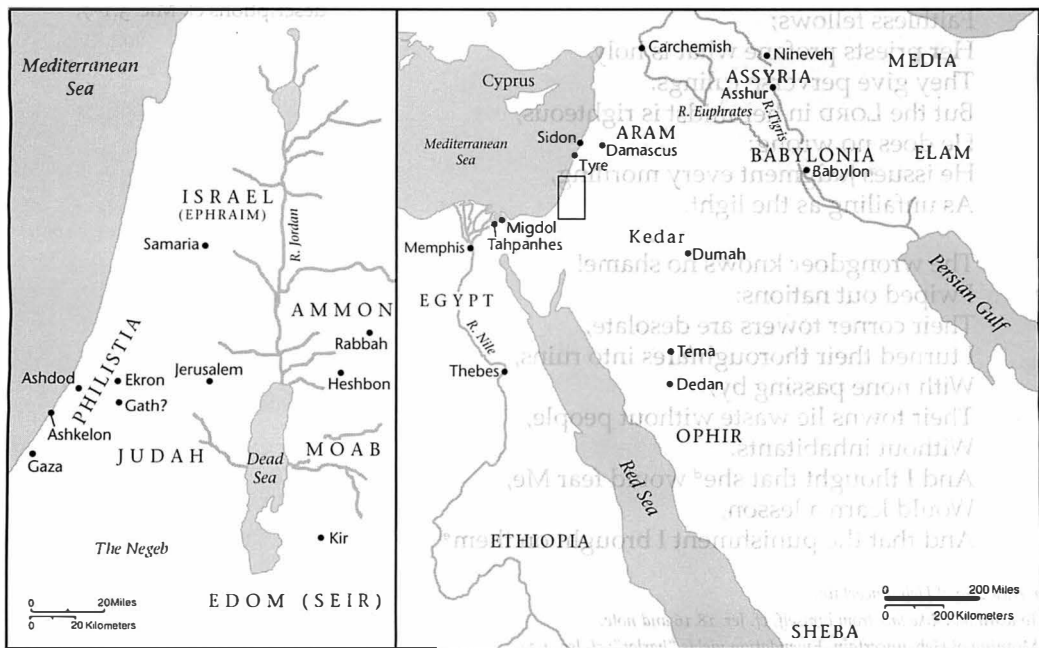

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Emendation yields "shall be slain by the sword of the LORD."

11: The v. may be translated "The LORD is awesome against them, for He shrivels [or weakens] all the gods of the earth." The text does not claim that the gods on earth do not exist (cf. Exod. 15.11), or that the LORD will or has destroyed them (cf. Ps 82.6-7). It claims, rather, that the LORD is superior to them and that this superiority will be manifested so that people from far away countries ("all the islands/coastlands of the nations") will bow down to the LORD, each in his or her place. This v. stands in the midst of an announcement of judgment against the nations. It is a central text and a theologically driven explanatory note on this type of announcement. It maintains that the purpose of the LORD is not to destroy nation after nation—as might be suggested by a plain reading of a sequence of announcements against nations—but to bring these nations to bow to the LORD (cf. Zeph. 3.9). The contents, and often the language, of this v. are reminiscent of those in many Psalms (e.g., Pss. 29.1; 82.2, 6; 95.3; 96.4-10; 97.6-9). 14-15: The language points to the image of a wilderness retaking a place of culture and city (cf. 2.6-7). The characterization of Nineveh in v. 15 is almost identical to that of Babylon in Isa. 47.8. The message is not so much that the historical Ninevites or Babylonians actually thought that way and thus deserve punishment—other reasons could have been adduced—but rather that such proud thinking is fully unacceptable and those who indulge in it will be punished by an active God who

Places mentioned in the oracles against the nations

Every ^aspecies of beast,
 While jackdaws and owls roost on its capitals,
 The great owl hoots in the window,
 And the raven [croaks] on the threshold.
 For he has stripped its cedarwork bare.^a 15 Is this the gay city

 That dwelt secure,
 That thought in her heart,
 "I am, and there is none but me"?
 Alas, she is become a waste,
 A lair of wild beasts!
 Everyone who passes by her Hisses and gestures with his hand.^b

3 Ah, sullied, polluted, Overbearing^c city!
 2 She has been disobedient,
 Has learned no lesson;
 She has not trusted in the LORD,
 Has not drawn near to her God.
 3 The officials within her
 Are roaring lions;
 Her judges are wolves ^aof the steppe,
 They leave no bone until morning.^a 4 Her prophets are reckless,
 Faithless fellows;
 Her priests profane what is holy,
 They give perverse rulings.
 5 But the LORD in her midst is righteous,
 He does no wrong;
 He issues judgment every morning,
 As unfailing as the light.

The wrongdoer knows no shame!
 6 I wiped out nations:
 Their corner towers are desolate;
 I turned their thoroughfares into ruins,
 With none passing by;
 Their towns lie waste without people,
 Without inhabitants.
 7 And I thought that she^d would fear Me,
 Would learn a lesson,
 And that the punishment I brought on them^e can bring good (or blessing) but also evil (or judgment);

 cf. 1.12.

3.1-13: Against the overbearing city. 1-2: The Heb exudes ambiguity. It is uncertain whether the city is Nineveh or Jerusalem. Sullied can be understood as "revered or feared"; polluted as "redeemed"; and overbearing (or "oppressing") as "the dove city" (i.e., a powerless city). In this particular case the ambiguities are unequivocally resolved within the context of the text. V. 2 clarifies that the city is not powerless and redeemed, but polluted and oppressing. The descriptions of wrongdoing in the following vv. show that the city is Jerusalem. This type of ambiguity shows the artistry of the book's composition and also points to the use of ambiguity as a rhetorical device to capture the readers' attention, and then lead them to a central issue: the identity and main characteristics of the city. It is the polluted, sinful, late monarchic (Josianic) Jerusalem. 3-4: Compare the language with Ezek. 22.25, 27, 26 and for similar descriptions cf. Mic. 3.1-7.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b To ward off a like fate from himself; cf. Jer. 18.16 and note.

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "harlot"; cf. Isa. 1.21.

d Heb. "you." e Heb. "her."

Would not be ^alost on her.^a Instead, all the more eagerly They have practiced corruption in all their deeds.

- 8 But wait for Me—says the LORD—
 For the day when I arise as an accuser;^b
 When I decide to gather nations,
 To bring kingdoms together,
 To pour out My indignation on them,
 All My blazing anger.
 Indeed, by the fire of My passion
 All the earth shall be consumed.
- 9 For then I will make the peoples pure of speech,
 So that they all invoke the LORD by name
 And serve Him with one accord.^c
- 10 From beyond the rivers of Cush, My suppliants^d Shall bring offerings to Me in Fair Puzai.^e
- 11 In that day,
 You will no longer be shamed for all the deeds
 By which you have defied Me.
 For then I will remove
 The proud and exultant within you,
 And you will be haughty no more
 On My sacred mount.^f
- 12 But I will leave within you
 A poor, humble folk,
 And they shall find refuge
 In the name of the LORD.
- 13 The remnant of Israel
 Shall do no wrong
 And speak no falsehood;
 A deceitful tongue
 Shall not be in their mouths.
 Only such as these shall graze and lie down,
 With none to trouble them.
- 14 Shout for joy, Fair Zion,
 Cry aloud, O Israel!
 Rejoice and be glad with all your heart,
 Fair Jerusalem!
- 15 The LORD has annulled the judgment against you,

10: There are three main understandings of this difficult v. They are represented by the following translations: (a) "from beyond the rivers of Cush (i.e., from far, far away) my suppliants, Fair scattered (i.e., Israel in exile), shall bring my offering"; (b) "from beyond the rivers of Cush (i.e., from far, far away) my suppliants, Fair Puzai (i.e., a faraway nation), shall bring my offering"; and (c) "from beyond the rivers of Cush (i.e., from far, far away) my suppliants, Fair scattered (i.e., Israel in exile), they (i.e., the nations) shall bring as my offering" (cf. Isa. 66.20). The text plays again with ambiguity, and this time one that is not resolved by its context. 13: The remnant is a central prophetic idea (see Isa. 6.13 n.).

3.14–20: Joy to Jerusalem. 15: As in some other prophetic texts, here God is king (Sovereign), obviating the need for an ideal human king a-a Lit. "cut off [from] her vision."

b Understanding 'ad as equivalent to 'ed, with Septuagint and Syriac.

c Lit. "back," i.e., like beasts of burden.

d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e Emendation yields "Zion." For the thought, cf. Isa. 18.1, 7.

f I.e., in My holy land; cf. Isa. 11.9; 57.13; 65.25.

He has swept away your foes.
 Israel's Sovereign the LORD is within you;
 You need fear misfortune no more.

- 16 In that day,
 This shall be said to Jerusalem:
 Have no fear, O Zion;
 Let not your hands droop!
- 17 Your God the LORD is in your midst,
 A warrior who brings triumph.
 He will rejoice over you and be glad,
 He will shout over you with jubilation.
 He will ^asoothe with His love
- 18 Those long disconsolate:^a
 I will take away from you ^bthe woe
 Over which you endured mockery:^b
- 19 At that time I will make [an end]
 Of all who afflicted you.
 And I will rescue the lame [sheep]
 And gather the strayed;
 And I will exchange their disgrace
 For fame and renown in all the earth.
- 20 At that time I will gather you,
 And at [that] time I will bring you [home];
 For I will make you renowned and famous Among all the peoples on earth,
 When I restore your fortunes
 Before their^c very eyes —said the LORD.

(a "messiah"). 18: The Heb is extremely difficult. Tentative, and at times quite divergent translations have been proposed. One possibility is: "Those who are afflicted because they are deprived of the festivals, I [i.e., the LORD] have gathered, they were from you, (they were) a sign on her, (they were) a (source of) mockery." 20: The book concludes with a strong announcement of hope for the readership of the book; such positive conclusions typify biblical books. The fortunes of Israel/Judah will be restored, and this restoration includes the gathering of the exiles (on this point, cf. Amos 9.14-15—though in Amos the image of restoration is agrarian). Because of its tone this v. has been included in Jewish liturgy.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "renew His love / As in the days of old."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Heb. "your."

Haggai

THE REBELLION OF JUDAH against the Babylonian empire led to the fall of Jerusalem (586 BCE), the destruction of the Temple, a severe decrease in population due to death and deportation, and the end of monarchy in Judah. The Babylonian empire fell at the hands of a Persian dynasty (the Achaemenid dynasty) in 539. As a result, the Babylonian province of Judah became the Persian or Achaemenid province of Yehud. According to 2 Chronicles 36.22–23, the Persian conqueror of Babylon, Cyrus II (reigned 559–530) issued a proclamation in his first year after the conquest of Babylon (538) that stated, “The LORD, God of Heaven, has given me all the kingdoms of the earth and He has commanded me to build Him a Temple in Jerusalem, which is in Judah. Whoever is among you of his entire people, may the LORD be with him, and let him go up [to Jerusalem, to build the Temple]” (cf. Ezra 1.1–4). The book of Haggai is set about eighteen years later, in the second year of the Persian king Darius I, that is, 520 BCE, and clearly implies that the Temple was still not rebuilt at that time. The book contains reports of theologically based exhortations to undertake the work of reconstruction and discusses the central role of the Temple in the life of the community. (Historians agree that the construction of the Jerusalem Temple was encouraged or even mandated by the Persian imperial center.)

The book of Haggai consists of four narrative reports about four particular divine communications and their circumstances. These communications are set in a precise historical timeframe: namely, the second year of Darius (520), and specifically, the first day of the sixth month, the twenty-first day of the seventh month, and the twenty-fourth day of the ninth month (this last date has two reports). Such specific dating, beyond what is found in other prophetic books (except for the beginning of the following book, Zechariah), creates an important temporal framework within the narrative, and, in addition, strengthens the rhetorical claim for the reliability of the account.

The four reports are integrated into a close literary unit. They are kept together by the figure of Haggai, with whom they are explicitly and repeatedly associated, by their common introduction, structure, and even choice of words. Each of the reports provides a kind of snapshot, and all together they address the restoration of the Temple, Judah, and Jerusalem in the Persian period. The main focus of the book as a whole is the Temple, or to be more precise, the necessary character, centrality, and legitimacy of the Second Temple.

The book of Haggai, in its present form, must have been written later than the last date mentioned in the text (24th of Kislev, 520 BCE), at some point within the Persian period. The matters mentioned above, however, remained central in the discourse of Judah throughout the Persian and Hellenistic period, and thereafter. Questions of leadership in the Second Temple polity are also addressed in this book.

In Jewish tradition, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi are the last prophets; after them, prophecy ceased. According to tradition, they were among the members of the “Great Assembly,” a group that was the precursor of the Sanhedrin, and after their death, the Holy Spirit departed from Israel, though “bat kol” (lit. the “daughter of the voice,” or echo) remained available to Israel (see b. Yoma 9b; b. Sot. 48b; b. Sanh. 11a). This “echo” of the voice of God is sometimes available to the Rabbis in their deliberations about legal interpretation (halakhah), but it is not on the same level as prophecy, and the “echo” cannot overrule legal decisions arrived at by the established methods (b. B. M. 59b). As the final representatives of the prophetic tradition, Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi represent the link in the transmission of the oral Torah between prophets and sages. Certain sages in the Talmud mention rulings and sayings by Haggai, or Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi (e.g., b. Yebam. 16a; b. Kid. 43a; b. Hul. 137b). Further, according to talmudic traditions, not only the books included in the Twelve were written by the members of the Great Assembly (b. B. Bat. 15a) but the Targum of the prophets was written under the guidance of these three prophets (b. Meg. 3a). The Haggai of the biblical book of Haggai, however, is not characterized in these terms.

[EHUD BEN ZVI]

1 In the second year of King Darius, on the first day of the sixth month, this word of the LORD came through the prophet Haggai to Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel, the governor of Judah, and to Joshua son of Jehozadak, the high priest:

² Thus said the LORD of Hosts: These people say, “The time has not yet come^a for rebuilding the House of the LORD.”

a-a Lit. “It is not time for the coming of the time.”

1.1–15a: A report of a divine announcement or exhortation and the people’s response to it. This is the first report. It includes an introduction of the divine announcement (v. 1), the divine announcement itself (vv. 2–11), and a report of the reception of the announcement (vv. 12–15a). 1: The beginning of the book serves as an introduction to the entire book. It deals with the word of the LORD that is associated with a particular prophet of the past, namely Haggai. In the second year of King Darius, on the first day of the sixth month: The year is 520 BCE, and the day is the 1st of ’Elul (= 29 August, 520 BCE). This date refers to the first divine message reported in the book. The month is the last before the seventh month—i.e., Tishri—with all its appointed festivals and sacred occasions (see Lev. ch 23, esp. vv. 23–36; Num. ch 29), the month associated with the building and dedication of the first Temple (see 1 Kings ch 8). This date may have connoted a sense of a new beginning to the readers. The second year of Darius, 520, is the one in which he consolidated his control over the empire, after a difficult civil war. This year is mentioned as the time of the renewed beginning of the building of the Second Temple in Ezra 4.24; according to Ezra 6.15, the house was completed in the sixth year of Darius. The second year of Darius is also associated with divine messages reported in the book of Zechariah. The divine message here is not directed to all the people, but to the two leaders, Zerubbabel, son of Shealtiel, the governor of Judah and the high priest, Joshua. Thus the book already conveys and legitimates a model of dual leadership. (This was the model of local government of Yehud during the Persian period. It replaced that of the monarchic period that came to an end when the Babylonian king Nebuchadnezzar abolished the

³And the word of the LORD through the prophet Haggai continued:

⁴Is it a time for you to dwell in your paneled houses, while this House is lying in ruins? ⁵Now thus said the LORD of Hosts: Consider how you have been faring! ⁶You have sowed much and brought in little; you eat without being satisfied; you drink without getting your fill; you clothe yourselves, but no one gets warm; and he who earns anything earns it for a leaky purse.

⁷Thus said the LORD of Hosts: Consider how you have fared: ⁸Go up to the hills and get timber, and rebuild the House; then I will look on it with favor and I will ^bbe glorified^b—said the LORD.

⁹You have been expecting much and getting little; and when you brought it home, I would blow on it!^c Because of what?—says the LORD of Hosts. Because of My House which lies in ruins, while you all hurry to your own houses! ¹⁰That is why the skies above you have withheld [their] moisture and the earth has withheld its yield, ¹¹and I have summoned fierce heat upon the land—upon the hills, upon the new grain and wine and oil, upon all that the ground produces, upon man and beast, and upon all the fruits of labor.

¹²Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel and the high priest Joshua son of Jehozadak and all the rest of the people gave heed to the summons of the LORD their God and to the words of the prophet Haggai, when the LORD their God sent him; the people feared the LORD. ¹³And Haggai, the LORD's messenger, fulfilling the LORD's mission, spoke to the people, "I am with you—declares the LORD."

¹⁴Then the LORD roused the spirit of Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel, the governor of Judah, and the spirit of the high a Vv. 7–8 would read well after v. 11.

b-b Emendation yields "glorify it"; see 2.7–9.

c Meaning, perhaps, cast a curse on.

kingdom of Judah, and in turn it was replaced by one in which the high priest became the local ruler by the early Hellenistic period.) The divine message reported here concerns building the Temple. Building temples is the prerogative and obligation of kings. The construction of a major temple had to be approved and supported by the king. The book recognizes that the king at the time was Darius (see Hag. 1.1, 15; 2.10). Still, the text does not relate the construction of the Temple to Darius, or to any Persian king for that matter (contrast Ezra 1.2; 5.13; 6.14 and see the tone of Ezra ch 6). In Haggai, the dual leadership of a high priest and a governor fulfills the expected role of a king. The claim in the text that the LORD encouraged them to build the Temple conveys necessary legitimacy to their leadership and their role as temple builders, as well as to the fruit of their work, the Second Temple. Conversely, the building of the Temple certainly conferred some kingly imagery on the two leaders. Still, the text here unequivocally refers to one as the high priest (see also 1.12, 14; 2.2, 4) and the other as the governor (see also 1.14; 2.2, 21). On the role of the personage Zerubbabel, see also Ezra chs 3–4; Zech. ch 4 and following notes. Some Jewish traditions claimed that the Darius mentioned here is the son of Esther and Ahasuerus (see Rashi; Ibn Ezra; cf. Lev. Rab. 13.4). From a historical perspective, this claim is certainly impossible, but the value of this interpretation does not rest in its historicity, but rather in the way it expresses beliefs and worldviews and responds to questions that the reading of the text may raise. Here this interpretation directly links the ruler who allowed and encouraged the building of the Temple with the Jewish people in general, and in particular their heroine, Esther (cf. Tamar, Ruth, Hannah). 2: The text implies that the people thought that there was a correct, prescribed time for rebuilding the Temple, and that such a time had not yet come (cf. 2 Chron. 36.20–23; Ezra 1.1–2). In the ancient Near East, temples were not supposed to be built by anyone except royal figures (see above), and they were not supposed to be built at any random time, but at the time favored by the gods. The people's attitude is facilitated by the success they felt in Babylonia, where God's presence was not expressed through the building of a temple. 4–10: The basic message is that the presence of the Temple is a necessary condition for the prosperity of the land and the people. Of course, the Temple, to be effective, must be a proper one from a divine perspective. The passages that follow in the book deal with that matter. 13: Cf. 2.5; Isa. 40.10; 43.5. 14: Cf. 2 Chron. 36.22; Hag 1.2 n.

priest Joshua son of Jehozadak, and the spirit of all the rest of the people: They came and set to work on the House of the LORD of Hosts, their God,¹⁵ on the twenty-fourth day of the sixth month. In the second year of King Darius,¹ on the twenty-first day of the seventh month, the word of the LORD came through the prophet Haggai:

²Speak to Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel, the governor of Judah, and to the high priest Joshua son of Jehozadak, and to the rest of the people: ³Who is there left among you who saw this House in its former splendor? How does it look to you now? It must seem like nothing to you. ⁴But be strong, O Zerubbabel—says the LORD—be strong, O high priest Joshua son of Jehozadak; be strong, all you people of the land—says the LORD—and act! For I am with you—says the LORD of Hosts. ⁵So I promised you when you came out of Egypt, and My spirit is still in your midst. Fear not!

⁶For thus said the LORD of Hosts: In just a little while longer I will shake the heavens and the earth, the sea and the dry land; ⁷I will shake all the nations. And the precious things of all the nations shall come [here], and I will fill this House with glory, said the LORD of Hosts. ⁸Silver is Mine and gold is Mine—says the LORD of Hosts. ⁹The glory of this latter House shall be greater than that of the former one, said the LORD of Hosts; and in this place I will grant prosperity—declares the LORD of Hosts.

¹⁰On the twenty-fourth day of the ninth [month], in the second year of Darius, the word of the LORD came to the prophet Haggai:

¹¹Thus said the LORD of Hosts: Seek a ruling from the 15: According to the text, the two leaders and the people set to work on the Temple on the 24th of ²Elul, just before the beginning of the seventh month. In a relatively unusual case, the v. includes both the final sentence of the first report and the introduction of the second one (In the second . . .).

1.15b–2.9: A report of a divine announcement: The new Temple will be an appropriate “house of the LORD.” The divine message here is addressed to both the two leaders and all the people. It is set on the 21st of Tishri, about a month since the leaders and the people took action, and in the last day of a festival, Sukkot. The text does not address the potential significance of this time of the year for the narrative, but leaves it for the book’s readers to discern. The divine message reported here does not deal with the construction of the Temple per se, but with the question of whether the new Temple is an appropriate Temple for the LORD. The underlying issue is the plain incongruity between the expected glory of the house of a king who is sovereign over all and the absolute lack of splendor of a relatively small temple of a minor, poor province (cf. Ezra 3.12–13).

Can this temple be appropriate? May they expect such a temple to be pleasing to the LORD, even if it has not received the type of legitimating sign seen at the completion of the first Temple (1 Kings 8.10–11)? Would the LORD be with them in such a case? The report serves to allay these concerns of both the people described in the book and, above all, the readers for whom the book was written, since the incongruity characterized their days too. Further, according to the book, it was the LORD who answered these questions and legitimized the readership’s Temple. Still the text recognizes the incongruity and maintains that in the future it will be rectified. At that time the wealth of the world would flow to the house of the LORD of all (vv. 7–8). Here the text assumes common, ancient Near Eastern concepts, namely that the wealth of a dominion should flow to the house of the ruler of the dominion, and that the manifestation of the glory of a king relates to the wealth flowing to him from the different nations and places under his dominion. 6: This v. is quite remarkable within the prophetic worldview. Usually consolation is predicted for some vague future time, rather than In just a little while longer. 8: The expression silver is Mine and gold is Mine was taken by the Rabbis as teaching that gaining silver or gold is not an appropriate goal for mortals. Instead they stressed that Torah and good deeds are such goals. See m. Avot 6.9. 9: The LXX adds at the end of the v. a sentence that may be translated as “and peace of soul as a possession for all who build, to erect this temple.”

2.10–19: Report of divine announcement: The Temple will be effective and the LORD will secure blessings on the people. The divine communication is set three months later than the day in which the two leaders and the people set to build the Temple (1.15). It seems to imply that some cultic facility, including an altar, has already been used and that it has its own priests, as follows: ¹²If a man is carrying sacrificial flesh in a fold of his garment, and with that fold touches bread, stew, wine, oil, or any other food, will the latter become holy? In reply, the priests said, "No." ¹³Haggai went on, "If someone defiled by a corpse touches any of these, will it be defiled?" And the priests responded, "Yes."

¹⁴Thereupon Haggai said: That is how this people and that is how this nation looks to Me—declares the LORD—and so, too, the work of their hands: Whatever they offer there is defiled. ¹⁵And now take thought, from this day backward:^a As long as no stone had been laid on another in the House of the LORD, ¹⁶if one came to a heap of twenty measures,^b it would yield only ten; and if one came to a wine vat to skim off fifty measures, the press would yield only twenty. ¹⁷I struck you—all the works of your hands—with blight and mildew and hail, but "you did not return"^c to Me—declares the LORD. ¹⁸Take note, from this day forward—from the twenty-fourth day of the ninth month, from the day when the foundation was laid for the LORD's Temple—take note ¹⁹while the seed is still in the granary, and the vine, fig tree, pomegranate, and olive tree have not yet borne fruit. For from this day on I will send blessings.

²⁰And the word of the LORD came to Haggai a second time on the twenty-fourth day of the month: ²¹Speak to Zerubbabel the governor of Judah: I am going to shake the heavens and the earth. ²²And I will overturn the thrones a Or "forward."

b I.e., of grain.

c-c Lit. "there was not with you to Me"; cf. Amos 4.9.

personnel. The text emphasizes again that an effective Temple is a precondition for the prosperity of people and land (cf. 1.2–11). Lack of defilement is an obvious precondition for an effective Temple, and for the divine presence. But it is a difficult precondition. To be sure, purity requires—within the discourse of the period—an appropriate cultic facility, which suggests that the people and their produce are impure in its absence. If the latter are impure, then they cannot come or be brought to a sacred place, lest they defile it. This logic leads to a breakdown of any hope of a new, untarnished beginning. This portion of the book of Haggai informs the readers that the LORD can overcome these circumstances and accordingly, a new beginning and the establishment of an effective cultic facility become a possible and actual reality (v. 19). This divine communication concerning the possibility of purification and of a new Temple that overcomes earlier defilement is dated to the 24th of Kislev (cf. the later festival of Hanukkah, which begins on 25 Kislev). 11: Purity and the avoidance of the defilement of the cultic facility is possible only if there are priests who know how to differentiate between holy and defiled, and teach and rule accordingly (cf. Lev. 10.10–11).

2.20–23: The coming of the ideal age. The last report is different from the others. It focuses on a future event, carries some apocalyptic tones, and a large geographical horizon. Moreover, it does not directly relate to the matter of building a legitimate, efficacious temple, or turning material lack into prosperity. The readers are invited, however, to associate the divine communication reported here with the preceding one because the text assigns them to the same date (a second time, v. 20). As mentioned above, since the two leaders of the project were involved in a kind of kingly role—i.e., the building of the Temple—one may expect the development of some form of royal imagery in their characterization in the texts of the community (cf. Zech. chs 3–4; see also 1 Chron. 3.19), though not an overtly explicit one. 21–22: The language of these vv. is as vivid as it is open-ended. If they point to the fall of the Persian empire, then they remained unfulfilled as far as the Persian period is concerned. If they refer to the revolts in the first two years of Darius, then the date associated with the message reflects a lack of awareness or interest in the precise chronology of the events. In any case, unlike other sections of the book of Haggai, the text here is very general (e.g., no nation, ruler, or particular time is mentioned), and accordingly it encourages multiple readings.

of kingdoms and destroy the might of the kingdoms of the nations. I will overturn chariots and their drivers. Horses and their riders shall fall, each by the sword of his fellow. ²³On that day—declares the LORD of Hosts—I will take you, O My servant Zerubbabel son of Shealtiel—declares the LORD—and make you as a signet;^a for I have chosen you—declares the LORD of Hosts.

23: The characterization of the present governor of Judah as a personage who will become a signet of the LORD at some point in the future evokes the royal imagery of Jer. 22.24 (see Maimonides, Mishneh Torah, Sefer ha-Mada 7.7; cf. Ezek. 28.12), suggesting that earlier prophetic books were studied in the Persian period, but it is overtly open-ended. Just as a signet represents the power of an earthly king, the signet here may represent the power of the divine King. But one may interpret the metaphor as playing on the idea that a person never leaves his (or her) signet. Similarly, the language I have chosen you (cf. 1 Chron. 28.6) or My servant may evoke Davidic, royal connotations, but not necessarily so (e.g., Num. 17.20; Isa. 44.1; Job 1.8; 2.3; 42.8). (Significantly, in Chronicles—but nowhere else in the Bible—Zerubbabel is explicitly associated with the Davidic line.) Had the language been more unequivocal, readers would have seen the concluding statement not only as unfulfilled, but unfulfillable after the death of Zerubbabel. Conversely, the fact that the Temple was built may have led the readers to accept that at least in some sense Zerubbabel actually served as a “signet of the LORD,” even if he was not crowned king of Judah.

^a I.e., bring you close to Me; contrast Jer. 22.24–30.

Zechariah

THE BOOK OF ZECHARIAH is set in the same period as the book of Haggai: the early years of Darius I (reigned 522–486 BCE). The book of Ezra associates Haggai and Zechariah (Ezra 5.1; 6.14) and the building of the Temple; rabbinic sources associate these two prophets with Malachi, and so they create the triad of last prophets (see introductions to Haggai and Malachi).

The book of Zechariah deals with issues similar to those in the book of Haggai: the restoration of the community in the Persian period. Like Haggai, it legitimizes the rebuilding of the Temple and the dual leadership under which it was built. It emphasizes repentance and exhorts the community directly addressed within the book, and above all, that of the readership to behave in accordance with the divine will, so as to avoid the fate of their ancestors (see, e.g., 1.2–6; 7.8–13; 8.13–17).

The book also addresses the dissonance between the actual status and power of the community and the Temple and what they should be according to the theological beliefs of the readership. This dissonance is solved in a way that conveys hope and reaffirms the beliefs of the community about its own place in the divine economy. The text communicates divine, unequivocal assertions about an ideal future in which the remnant of Israel will grow and prosper, Jerusalem will take its proper place, the Temple will become the focal point of worship for the entire world, and the kingship of the LORD will be recognized by all nations.

The book as a whole shows a strong orientation toward the future, particularly the ideal future. Not only does it communicate promises of a future glory for Zion, but it also provides some scenarios that would lead to its realization. These scenarios directly address the question of the relations between Zion (and Judah) and the nations in the future, ideal world. They also involve direct action by the LORD, much conflict and stern divine judgment. The book brings to the readers vivid images of the nations' final attack against Jerusalem and a cosmic upheaval that leads to the creation of a new landscape for Jerusalem and for the land as a whole (ch 14). The book has certain eschatological and even apocalyptic overtones.

Although there are clear temporal and thematic links between Zechariah and Haggai, the two books, as they stand today, are markedly different in style, structure, and tone. Zechariah opens with a superscription (1.1) that along with the following passage (1.2–6) serves as an introduction to the book as a whole. The rest of the book consists of a series of prophetic texts about divine communications associated with Zechariah. At the heart of the first set of texts (1.7–8.23) are eight visions mediated by an angelic figure (see 1.7–6.15) that have no parallel in Haggai, even if the issues they address are similar to those in Haggai. The next sets, 9.1–11.17 and 12.1–14.21, are obviously different from Haggai. Chapter 9 opens with “a pronouncement,” separating the chs that follow from those that precede.

Many scholars have argued that the book of Zechariah originally included only chs 1–8, and that only at a later stage were chs 9–14 attached to them. According to this position, the first eight chs were written before the rest—chs 9–14 are usually dated to either the late Persian or the Hellenistic period—and each part was written by a different author. This may well be the case, but the book of Zechariah in its present form does not ask its readers to approach it with this information in mind. To the contrary, the book associates all its texts with the prophet Zechariah mentioned in 1.1.

Many ancient readers found in Zechariah numerous references to messianic times. As expected, some early Christian readers understood them in christological terms (see, for instance, Mark 14.27 and Zech. 13.7; Matt. 27.9 and Zech. 11.12–13; John 19.37 and Zech. 12.10; John 12.15 and Zech. 9.9). Rabbinic Judaism interpreted many of these texts in relation to a messianic time still to come (e.g., Zech. 3.8; 6.12 in the Targum; in relation to Zech. 6.12 see Num. Rab. 18.21; for Zech. 9.9 see Gen. Rab. 56.2, 98.9; and for Zech. 12.10 as pointing to the Messiah from the House of Joseph, see b. Sukkah 52a).

Some vv. of Zechariah have been included in Jewish liturgy. The best-known example is 14.9, which concludes the Aleinu prayer. Zechariah 14.1–21 is the haftarah for the first day of Sukkot since that festival is mentioned there; Zechariah 2.14–4.7 for the first shabbat of Hanukkah and for the parashah of Be-ha'alotekha (Num. 8.1–12.16), since the lampstand (“menorah”) plays a central role in this passage.

[EHUD BEN ZVI]

1 In the eighth month of the second year of Darius, this word of the LORD came to the prophet Zechariah son of Berechiah son of Iddo:^a ²The LORD was very angry with your fathers. ³Say to them further:

Thus said the LORD of Hosts: Turn back to me—says the LORD of Hosts—and I will turn back to you—said the LORD of Hosts. ⁴Do not be like your fathers! For when the earlier prophets called to them, “Thus said the LORD of Hosts: Come, turn back from your evil ways and your evil deeds, they did not obey or give heed to Me—declares the LORD. ⁵Where are your fathers now? And did the proph-

1.1–6: Superscription, introduction, and call to repentance. The text assumes that the words of the earlier prophets are available and are being studied. 1: The month is Marḥeshvan, in fall 520 BCE. This divine communication is set slightly later than those reported in Hag. 1.1, 15; 2.1, but slightly earlier than those in Hag. 2.10, 20. This temporal note suggests to the readers of the book that they are supposed to read 1.2–6 in the light of the texts in Haggai and vice versa. 6: He purposed may also be understood as “He considered

^a A clause like “Say to the people” is here understood; cf. 7.5.

ets live forever? ⁶ But the warnings and the decrees with which I charged My servants the prophets overtook your fathers—did they not?—and in the end they had to admit, 'The LORD has dealt with us according to our ways and our deeds, just as He purposed.' "

⁷ On the twenty-fourth day of the eleventh month of the second year of Darius—the month of Shebat—this word of the LORD came to the prophet Zechariah son of Berechiah son of Iddo:

⁸ In the night, I had a vision. I saw a man, mounted on a bay horse, standing ^a among the myrtles^a in the Deep, and behind him were bay,^b sorrel,^c and white horses. ⁹ I asked, "What are those, my lord?" And the angel who talked with me answered, "I will let you know what they are." ¹⁰ Then the man who was standing ^a among the myrtles^a spoke up and said, "These were sent out by the LORD to roam the earth."

¹¹ And in fact, they reported to the angel of the LORD who was standing ^a among the myrtles,^a "We have roamed the earth, and have found all the earth dwelling in tranquility."^d ¹² Thereupon the angel of the LORD exclaimed, "O LORD of Hosts! How long will You withhold pardon from Jerusalem and the towns of Judah, which You placed under a curse seventy years ago?"

¹³ The LORD replied with kind, comforting words to the angel who talked with me.

¹⁴ Then the angel who talked with me said to me: "Proclaim! Thus said the LORD of Hosts: I am very jealous for Jerusalem—for Zion—¹⁵ and I am very angry with those nations that are at ease; for I was only angry a little, but they overdid the punishment. ¹⁶ Assuredly, thus said the LORD: I graciously return to Jerusalem. My House shall be built in her—declares the LORD of Hosts—the measuring line is being applied to Jerusalem. ¹⁷ Proclaim further: Thus said the LORD of Hosts: My towns shall yet overflow with bounty. For the LORD will again comfort Zion; He will choose Jerusalem again."

a-a Septuagint reads "between the mountains"; cf. 6.1.11 6.1 ff. four teams of horses leave the LORD's abode to roam the four quarters of the earth; in 1.8 ff. they are about to reenter His abode after such a reconnaissance.

b Septuagint adds "dappled"; cf. 6.3.

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "black"; cf. 6.2.

d Upheavals at the start of Darius' reign had encouraged hopes of an early restoration of the Davidic dynasty (cf. Hag. 2.21 ff.). Now these hopes were dashed.

[doing]," thereby conveying a conditional element from the outset in God's plans: If the (monarchic period) Israelites had heard their prophets, the punishment would not have come.

1.7–6.15: Reports of eight visions.

The visions are described in graphic, and highly symbolic, detail, as are most apocalyptic visions. The "tour" by an angelic being is also typical of apocalypse, as is the use of specific numbers. Unlike most later apocalyptic visions, however, the mediating angel is here anonymous.

1.7–17: The first vision: the horsemen. 7: Within the world of the present book, this date seems to apply to 1.7–6.15, i.e., the entire series of eight visions. The date is just two months after the divine communications in Hag. 2.10, 20. Given the closeness of the dates, and the similarity of the basic themes and of the formula itself, it seems that the readers of the book are supposed to read these two texts as informing each other; see also Ezra 5.1; 6.14. 9: The term angel here and elsewhere in the book (e.g., vv. 11, 12, 4.1, 5.10) may be translated as "messenger," in the sense of a divine messenger. Is this messenger the same man mentioned in these verses, as Ibn Ezra and others think? Or, are these two beings, one a "man" and the other a "messenger"? The text itself leaves the question open. 11: Tranquility carries here a negative connotation, because it is associated with a status quo in which Judah and Jerusalem have not been restored. The implicit connotation is that their (full) restoration necessitates much turmoil and probably judgment against the nations (see v. 15 and cf. ch 14). Some scholars associate this tranquility with the imperial peace achieved by Darius I in his second year, though the point is not made in the text. Darius plays no active role whatsoever in the book of Zechariah. 12: Seventy years is a clear reference to Jer. 25.11 (cf. 29.10), another clear indication that pro-

2 I looked up, and I saw four horns.^a 2 I asked the angel who talked with me, "What are those?" "Those," he replied, "are the horns that tossed Judah, Israel, and Jerusalem."^a 3 Then the LORD showed me four smiths. 4 "What are they coming to do?" I asked. He replied: "Those are the horns that tossed Judah, so that no man could raise his head; and these men have come ^bto throw them into a panic,^b to ^c'hew down' the horns of the nations that raise a horn against the land of Judah, to toss it."

5 I looked up, and I saw a man holding a measuring line. 6 "Where are you going?" I asked. "To measure Jerusalem," he replied, "to see how long and wide it is to be." 7 But the angel who talked with me came forward, and another angel came forward to meet him. 8 The former said to him, "Run to that young man and tell him:

"Jerusalem shall be peopled as a city without walls, so many shall be the men and cattle it contains. 9 And I Myself—declares the LORD—will be a wall of fire all around it, and I will be a glory inside it.

10 "Away, away! Flee from the land of the north—says the LORD—though I swept you [there] like the four winds of heaven—declares the LORD."

11 Away, escape, O Zion, you who dwell in Fair Babylon! 12 For thus said the LORD of Hosts—He ^dwho sent me after glory^d—concerning the nations that have taken you as spoil: "Whoever touches you touches the pupil of ^ehis own^e eye. 13 For I will lift My hand against them, and they shall be spoil for those they enslaved."—Then you shall know that I was sent by the LORD of Hosts.

14 Shout for joy, Fair Zion! For lo, I come; and I will dwell in your midst—declares the LORD. 15 In that day many nations will attach themselves to the LORD and become His^f people, and He^g will dwell in your midst. Then you will know that I was sent to you by the LORD of Hosts.

16 The LORD will ^htake Judah to Himself as His portion^h in the Holy Land, and He will choose Jerusalem once more.

17 Be silent, all flesh, before the LORD!
For He is roused from His holy habitation.

a The four horns correspond to the four winds of v. 10.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; emendation yields "to sharpen ax heads."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Emendation yields "whose Presence sent me."

e-e According to ancient Jewish tradition, a scribal change for "My."

f Heb. "My." g Heb. "I."

h-h Emendation yields "allot to Judah its portion"; cf. Num. 34.17.

phetic works were being studied at this period. That text also plays a crucial role in Dan. ch 9.

2.1–4: The second vision: the four horns. 2–3: Horns are symbols of power. Here they represent politico-military agents, nations. The number four connotes a sense of totality, because it points to the four points of the compass (a concept also attested in Mesopotamian literature); see also 2.10.

2.5–9: The third vision: the man with the measuring line. 5–6: Questions of the type "who are those?" (1.9; 2.2) are omitted now. The prophet is described as getting more and more acquainted with his (and God's) visionary world. Ezek. 48.15–20 describes the size of ideal Jerusalem also in terms of length and width (see also Ezek. 45.1–6). 7–9: There is no need to measure Jerusalem, for it will be or grow without any material limit, such as the one created by a city wall. Of course, a city without walls might evoke the image of a defenseless city, but the LORD will be its wall.

2.10–17: The establishment of ideal Zion, from the departure from Babylonia to an ideal future. 10: Away, away! Flee from the land of the north . . . four winds of heaven: The return from Zion is given some cataclysmic dimensions. The text does not say "return" or the like, but Away, away! Flee as if from a disaster about to happen. There is also the explicit comparison with the four winds, and Babylonia is referred to as the land of the north, a place often imagined as a source of chaos or chaotic forces (cf. Isa. 14.31; Jer. 1.14–15; 4.6; 10.22). 12: The v. may be translated "For thus said the LORD of Hosts (after [the/His] glory sent me) concerning. . ." According to Mekhilta, (Shirata 6.10), the original text read, "the pupil of My own eye," and was changed by the soferim (scribes) so as to avoid the obvious anthropomorphism. 15: The Heb reads "and become My people, and I will dwell in your midst."

3 He further showed me Joshua, the high priest, standing before the angel of the LORD, and the Accuser^a standing at his right to accuse him. ²But [the angel of] the LORD said to the Accuser, "The LORD rebuke you, O Accuser; may the LORD who has chosen Jerusalem rebuke you! For this is a brand plucked from the fire."^b ³Now Joshua was clothed in filthy garments when he stood before the angel. ⁴The latter spoke up and said to his attendants, "Take the filthy garments off him!" And he said to him, "See, I have removed your guilt from you, and you shall be clothed in [priestly] robes."^c ⁵Then he gave the order, "Let a pure^d diadem be placed on his head." And they placed the pure diadem on his head and clothed him in [priestly] garments,^e as the angel of the LORD stood by.

⁶And the angel of the LORD charged Joshua as follows: ⁷"Thus said the LORD of Hosts: If you walk in My paths and keep My charge, you in turn will rule My House and guard My courts, and I will permit you to move about among these attendants. ⁸Hearken well, O High Priest Joshua, you and your fellow priests sitting before you! For those men are a sign that I am going to bring My servant the Branch.^f ⁹For mark well this stone which I place before Joshua, a single stone with seven eyes.^g I will execute its engraving—declares the LORD of Hosts—and I will remove that country's guilt in a single day. ¹⁰In that day—declares the LORD of Hosts—you will be inviting each other to the shade of vines and fig trees."

4 The angel who talked with me came back and woke me as a man is wakened from sleep. ²He said to me, "What do you see?" And I answered, "I see a lampstand all of gold, with a bowl above it. The lamps on it are seven in number, and the ^hlamps above it have^h seven pipes; ³and by it are two olive trees, one on the right of the bowl and one on its left." ⁴I, in turn, asked the angel who talked with me, "What do those things mean, my lord?" ⁵"Do a Others "Satan."

b Joshua's father (Hag. 1.1; 1 Chron. 5.40-41) was exiled and his grandfather executed (2 Kings 25.18-21) by the Babylonians, but Joshua returned.

c Heb. "I."

d I.e., ritually pure.

e Joshua has now been rendered fit to associate with the heavenly beings (v. 7); cf. Isa. 6.6-8.

f I.e., the future king of David's line. See 6.12; Jer. 23.5-6; 33.15-16; cf. Isa. 11.1.

g Meaning of Heb. uncertain. The stone apparently symbolizes the God-given power of the future Davidic ruler; see below 4.6-7.

h-h Emendation yields "bowl above it has."

The shift to direct divine speech might have conveyed some emphasis on the part of the LORD. Note that the unique relation between Zion and the LORD is not diminished, but to the contrary re-emphasized by the vision of many nations becoming God's people.

3.1-10: The fourth vision: the high priest Joshua is purified.

1: NJPS correctly translates the Heb "ha-satan," as the Accuser instead of the common, but erroneous, "Satan." (On the development of this notion in the Persian period, see Job 1.6 n.) 5: Then he gave the order: The Heb reads, "Then I gave the order." See translators' note c. 8: The Branch (or "the Sprout") has been understood in terms of a Davidic, most often messianic figure based on Jer. 23.5-6; 33.15-16 (cf. Isa. 11.1—again, earlier prophetic material is being studied and interpreted). According to 6.12-13, the Sprout will build the Temple and assume majesty. Many medieval Jewish commentators (e.g., Rashi, Ibn Ezra) and many modern scholars maintain that the reference to the Branch was meant to be understood as pointing to Zerubbabel (see 4.8, and the reference to his partner in the leadership, the high priest Joshua in 6.11), whose name means "the seed of Babylon." Even if there is a lionization of Zerubbabel (see 4.6-7), the book of Zechariah does not explicitly state that he is the expected Sprout. Moreover, it is unlikely that the readership of the book as a whole—as opposed to that of readers of any possible source embedded somehow in the book—would have understood references to a messianic king (cf. Jer. 23.5-6; 33.15-16) as being actually fulfilled in the person of Zerubbabel or by the time he built the Temple.

4.1-14: The fifth vision: the lampstand and the olive trees.
2: Lampstand, Heb "menorah."

you not know what those things mean?" asked the angel who talked with me; and I said, "No, my lord." ⁶Then he explained to me as follows:^a

"This is the word of the LORD to Zerubbabel:^b Not by might, nor by power, but by My spirit^c—said the LORD of Hosts. ⁷Whoever you are, O great mountain in the path of Zerubbabel, turn into level ground! For he shall produce that excellent stone; it shall be greeted with shouts of 'Beautiful! Beautiful!' "

⁸And the word of the LORD came to me: ⁹"Zerubbabel's hands have founded this House and Zerubbabel's hands shall complete it. Then you shall know that it was the LORD of Hosts who sent me to you. ¹⁰Does anyone scorn a day of small beginnings? When they see ^d"the stone of distinction" in the hand of Zerubbabel, they shall rejoice.

"Those seven are the eyes of the LORD, ranging over the whole earth."

¹¹"And what," I asked him, "are those two olive trees, one on the right and one on the left of the lampstand?" ¹²And I further asked him, "What are the two tops^e of the olive trees that feed their gold^f through those two golden tubes?"^g ¹³He asked me, "Don't you know what they are?" And I replied, "No, my lord." ¹⁴Then he explained, "They are the two ^hanointed dignitaries^h who attend the Lord of all the earth."

5 I looked up again, and I saw a flying scroll. ²"What do you see?" he asked. And I replied, "A flying scroll, twenty cubits long and ten cubits wide." ³"That," he explained to me, "is the curse which goes out over the whole land. ⁴For everyone who has stolen, as is forbidden on one side [of the scroll], has gone unpunished; and everyone who has sworn [falsely], as is forbidden on the other side of it, has gone unpunished." ⁴[But] I have sent it forth—declares the LORD of Hosts—and [the curse] shall enter the house of the thief and the house of the one who swears falsely by My name, and it shall lodge inside their

6–7: See 3.8 n. 6: This v. has often played a significant role within Judaism, which has felt small and powerless, yet comforted by its reliance on God. It is inscribed on the front of the Synagogue of Cologne reconstructed after World War II. 10: The expression the stone of distinction may be translated as "the stone of the plumb" or "the plummet." The text implies and criticizes a sentiment akin to the one expressed in Hag. 2.3. Those seven are the eyes of the LORD, probably the answer to the question in v. 4 regarding the meaning of the seven lamps of the lampstand. Cf. 3.9. 14: The two anointed dignitaries, lit. "sons of oil." The term is different from the one translated as "anointed" in Lev. 4:3; 1 Sam. 2.10, 35; 26.9; Ps. 2.2, and passim. The two "sons of oil" represent Joshua, the high priest, and Zerubbabel, the nonpriestly ruler who shares some royal responsibilities. It is not by chance that the text coins a unique expression rather than using a very common one. Most likely, the point is to avoid depicting Zerubbabel as a significant royal or messianic figure. Unlike the situation in the book of Haggai, Zerubbabel is not called "governor" in Zechariah, but neither is he called "king," nor is it stated explicitly anywhere in the book that he is from David, nor can we assume that he was anointed. The openness of the text in this matter is remarkable, and hardly unintentional. (The high priest was presumably anointed—see Num. 3.3, 25—but his anointing did not carry any kingly attributes.)

5.1–4: The sixth vision: the flying scroll. 2: The scroll stands for the contents of the written text it contains—i.e., the curse against wrongdoers—and for the implementation of the curse. In other words, the curse (i.e., the written scroll) curses, or carries out the curse. Twenty cubits . . . ten cubits: approx. 10 m by 5 m (30 ft by 15 ft), the size of the portico of the Great Hall of Solomon's Temple (1 Kings 6.3). Over the whole land a The explanation is given in the last sentence of v. 10.

b A grandson of King Jehoiachin (1 Chron. 3.17–19) and the secular head of the repatriated community (Hag. 1.1; etc.).

c I.e., Zerubbabel will succeed by means of spiritual gifts conferred upon him by the LORD; cf. Isa. 11.2. ff.

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain; others "plumbet."

e Meaning of Heb. uncertain; literally "ears" (as of grain).

f Emendation yields "oil"; cf. v. 14.

g Or "funnels"; through them the oil runs from the olive trees into the bowl of vv. 2 and 3.

h-h I.e., the high priest and the king (cf. 3.8–9 with note); lit. "sons of oil."

i-i Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

houses and shall consume them to the last timber and stone.”

⁵Then the angel who talked with me came forward and said, “Now look up and note this other object that is approaching.” ⁶I asked, “What is it?” And he said, “This tub^a that is approaching—this,” said he, “is their eye^b in all the land.” ⁷And behold, a disk of lead was lifted, revealing a woman seated inside the tub. ⁸“That,” he said, “is Wickedness”; and, thrusting her down into the tub, he pressed the leaden weight into its mouth.

⁹I looked up again and saw two women come soaring with the wind in their wings—they had wings like those of a stork—and carry off the tub between earth and sky. ¹⁰“Where are they taking the tub?” I asked the angel who talked with me. ¹¹And he answered, “To build a shrine for it in the land of Shinar;^c [a stand] shall be erected for it, and it shall be set down there upon the stand.”

6 I looked up again, and I saw: Four chariots were coming out from between the two mountains; the mountains were of copper. ²The horses of the first chariot were bay, the horses of the second chariot were black; ³the horses of the third chariot were white, and the horses of the fourth chariot were spotted—dappled. ⁴And I spoke up and asked the angel who talked with me: “What are those, my lord?” ⁵In reply, the angel said to me, “Those are the four winds of heaven coming out after presenting themselves to the Lord of all the earth. ⁶The one with the black horses is going out to the region of the north; the white ones ^dhave gone out^d to ^ewhat is to the west of them;^e the spotted ones ^dhave gone out^d to the region of the south; ⁷and ^fthe dappled ones have gone out . . . ”^f They were ready to start out and range the earth, and he gave them the order, “Start out and range the earth!” And they ranged the earth. ⁸Then he alerted me, and said to me, “Take good note! Those that went out to the region of the north have ^gdone my pleasure^g in the region of the north.”^h

. . . who has stolen . . . who has sworn [falsely]: Over the whole land is a possible translation, but so is “over the whole earth” as the same Heb phrase has been translated in 1.11; 4.14; 6.5; 14.9 (but not in 14.10, and with good reason there). The flying scroll or curse creates an ideal society in which there will be no social transgressors such as those mentioned above. If one reads “over the whole earth,” this society is not restricted to Judah or Jerusalem, but will cover the entire world (cf. 14.9).

5.5–11: The seventh vision: the woman in the tub. 6: The tub (Heb “ephah”) suggests a container of that capacity, 23 liters (21 quarts), dimensions too small for what is inside it. 8: Wickedness is represented by a female figure, and her mouth is to be shut with the leaden weight. Further, female figures take Wickedness to the land of Shinar, namely Babylonia. The text reflects (and contributes to shape) gendered constructions.

6.1–8: The eighth vision: the four chariots. The horses, winds, etc., symbolize all directions and therefore cover the earth. It is unknown if the further details (e.g., the colors of the horses) are symbolic, or are given merely to add vividness to the description.

a Heb. ephah, a measure of capacity.

b Septuagint and Syriac read “guilt.”

c I.e., Babylonia; cf. Gen. 10.10; 11.2, 9.

d-d Change of vocalization yields “will go out.”

e-e Cf. ‘ahor, “west,” Isa. 9.11. Emendation yields “the region of the west.”

f-f Emendation yields “the bay ones will go out to the region of the east.”

g-g Cf. postbiblical nahath rualh, “gratification.” Emendation yields, “done the LORD’s pleasure.”

h I.e., Babylonia, whose communication with Judah was via North Mesopotamia and Syria; cf. 2.10–11.

⁹The word of the LORD came to me: ¹⁰Receive from^a the exiled community—from Heldai, Tobijah, and Jedaiah, who have come from Babylon—and you, in turn, proceed the same day to the house of Josiah son of Zephaniah. ¹¹Take silver and gold and make crowns. Place [one] on the head of High Priest Joshua son of Jehozadak, ¹²and say to him, “Thus said the LORD of Hosts: Behold, a man called the Branch^b shall branch out from the place where he is, and he shall build the Temple of the LORD. ¹³He shall build the Temple of the LORD and shall assume majesty, and he shall sit on his throne and rule. And there shall also be a priest ‘seated on his throne;’^c and harmonious understanding shall prevail between them.”

¹⁴The crowns shall remain in the Temple of the LORD as a memorial to Helem,^d Tobijah, Jedaiah, and Hen^e son of Zephaniah. ¹⁵Men from far away shall come and take part in the building of the Temple of the LORD, and you shall know that I have been sent to you by the LORD of Hosts—if only you will obey the LORD your God!

7 In the fourth year of King Darius, on the fourth day of the ninth month, Kislev, the word of the LORD came to Zechariah—²when Bethel-sharezer ‘and Regem-melech and his men sent’^f to entreat the favor of the LORD, ³[and] to address this inquiry to the priests of the House of the LORD and to the prophets: “Shall I weep and practice abstinence in the fifth month,^g as I have been doing all these years?”

⁴Thereupon the word of the LORD of Hosts came to me: ⁵Say to all the people of the land and to the priests: When you fasted and lamented in the fifth and seventh months all these seventy years, did you fast for my benefit? ⁶And when you eat and drink, who but you does the eating, and who but you does the drinking? ⁷Look, this is the message that the LORD proclaimed through the earlier prophets, when Jerusalem and the towns about her were peopled and tranquil, when the Negeb and the Shephelah were peopled.

⁸And the word of the LORD to Zechariah continued: ⁹Thus said the LORD of Hosts: Execute true justice; deal loyally and compassionately with one another. ¹⁰Do not a Emendation yields “the gift of.”

b See note at 3.8.

c-c Septuagint reads “on his right side.”

d The Syriac version reads “Heldai”; cf. v. 10.

e In v. 10, “Josiah.”

f-f Emendation yields “sent Regem-melech and his men.”

g Because of the destruction of the Temple and Jerusalem; cf. 2 Kings 25.8 ff.

6.9–15: The coronation of the high priest. 11–12: One would expect that the king would be crowned, but only the high priest Joshua is. Ibn Ezra, Radak, Rashi, and others consider Zerubbabel to be the Branch, and the person for whom the other crown was meant. The Targum, however, reflects a different understanding: “And you shall take silver and gold and make a large crown and set it upon the head of Joshua, son of Jehozadak, the high priest. And you shall speak to him, saying, ‘Thus speaks the LORD of hosts, saying, behold, the man whose name is Anointed will be revealed and he shall be raised up, and shall build the temple of the LORD.’” Significantly, it is likely that the text read “crown” in vv. 11 and 14 (see NRSV) rather than crowns. If this is the case, then there was only one crown in the world of the book, and it was Joshua’s. 14: In the ideal future, both the Branch and the priest will sit, each on his own throne. 15: The concluding words if only you will obey are an almost exact quotation of Deut. 28.1 and may allude to that ch, on the assumption that at this point in history, Deuteronomy was well known.

7.1–14: A passage about fasting and true obedience. 2–3: The fifth month is the month of Av. The events described in 2 Kings 25.8–12 are the reason for the weeping and abstinence. V. 2 may also be translated: “When the people of Bethel had sent Sharezer and Regem-melech and his (or their) men, to entreat. . . .” If this is the case, the text emphasizes that the people from Bethel, the place of the ancient sanctuary of northern Israel, recognize now the authority of Jerusalem and ask its priests and prophets for instructions. 5: The fifth month is Av and the seventh month is Tishri. The reference is to the commemoration of destruction of the First Temple. No dates of the month are given. Rabbinic literature and subsequent Jewish practice commemorate the destruction on 9 Av. The mention defraud the widow, the orphan, the stranger, and the poor; and do not plot evil against one another.—¹¹ But they refused to pay heed. They presented a balky back and turned a deaf ear. ¹² They hardened their hearts like adamant against heeding the instruction and admonition that the LORD of Hosts sent to them by His spirit through the earlier prophets; and a terrible wrath issued from the LORD of Hosts. ¹³ Even as He called and they would not listen, “So,” said the LORD of Hosts, “let them call and I will not listen.” ¹⁴ I dispersed them among all those nations which they had not known, and the land was left behind them desolate, without any who came and went. They caused a delightful land to be turned into a desolation.

8 The word of the LORD of Hosts came [to me]: ² Thus said the LORD of Hosts: I am very jealous for Zion, I am fiercely jealous for her. ³ Thus said the LORD: I have returned to Zion, and I will dwell in Jerusalem. Jerusalem will be called the City of Faithfulness, and the mount of the LORD of Hosts the Holy Mount.

⁴ Thus said the LORD of Hosts: There shall yet be old men and women in the squares of Jerusalem, each with staff in hand because of their great age. ⁵ And the squares of the city shall be crowded with boys and girls playing in the squares. ⁶ Thus said the LORD of Hosts: Though it will seem impossible to the remnant of this people in those days, shall it also be impossible to Me?—declares the LORD of Hosts. ⁷ Thus said the LORD of Hosts: I will rescue My people from the lands of the east and from the lands of the west, ⁸ and I will bring them home to dwell in Jerusalem. They shall be My people, and I will be their God—in truth and sincerity.

⁹ Thus said the LORD of Hosts: Take courage, you who now hear these words which the prophets spoke when the foundations were laid for the rebuilding of the Temple, the House of the LORD of Hosts.

^{10a} For before that time, the earnings of men were nil, and profits from beasts were nothing. It was not safe to go about one's business on account of enemies; and I set all men against one another. ¹¹ But now I will not treat the remnant of this people as before—declares the LORD of Hosts—¹² but what it sows shall prosper: The vine shall produce its fruit, the ground shall produce its yield, and the skies shall provide their moisture. I will bestow all these things upon the remnant of this people. ¹³ And just

of the seventh month could be an early reference to the Fast of Gedaliah (2 Kings 25:25; Jer. 41.1-3; the Fast of Gedaliah on 3 Tishri marks the end of the independence of Judah, and is still observed as a fast day). 10: The offenses include plotting evil in one's heart, not just the actual commission of evil against another.

8.1-23: A set of divine announcements of hope dealing with an ideal future for Jerusalem and Judah. 3: The ideal Jerusalem is also renamed in Isa. 1.26; 62.2; Ezek. 48.35. 4: According to a well-known story in b. Mak. 24b, the certainty that this announcement will be fulfilled was the reason of R. Akiva's joy at the sight of painful markers of the Roman destruction of Jerusalem. He thought that just as the announced judgment was fulfilled, so will be the announced future glory of the city. 13: Cf. Gen. 12.12.

a Cf. Hag. 1.6.

as you were a curse^a among the nations, O House of Judah and House of Israel, so, when I vindicate you, you shall become a blessing.^a Have no fear; take courage!

¹⁴For thus said the LORD of Hosts: Just as I planned to afflict you and did not relent when your fathers provoked Me to anger—said the LORD of Hosts—¹⁵so, at this time, I have turned and planned to do good to Jerusalem and to the House of Judah. Have no fear! ¹⁶These are the things you are to do: Speak the truth to one another, render true and perfect justice in your gates. ¹⁷And do not contrive evil against one another, and do not love perjury, because all those are things that I hate—declares the LORD.

¹⁸And the word of the LORD of Hosts came to me, saying, ¹⁹Thus said the LORD of Hosts: The fast of the fourth month, the fast of the fifth month, the fast of the seventh month, and the fast of the tenth month^b shall become occasions for joy and gladness, happy festivals for the House of Judah; but you must love honesty and integrity.

²⁰Thus said the LORD of Hosts: Peoples and the inhabitants of many cities shall yet come—²¹the inhabitants of one shall go to the other and say, “Let us go and entreat the favor of the LORD, let us seek the LORD of Hosts; I will go, too.” ²²The many peoples and the multitude of nations shall come to seek the LORD of Hosts in Jerusalem and to entreat the favor of the LORD. ²³Thus said the LORD of Hosts: In those days, ten men from nations of every tongue will take hold—they will take hold of every Jew by a corner of his cloak and say, “Let us go with you, for we have heard that God is with you.”

9 A pronouncement: The word of the LORD.

He will reside in the land of Hadrach and Damascus;

For all men's eyes will turn to the LORD—
Like all the tribes of Israel—

² Including Hamath, which borders on it,^c
And Tyre and Sidon, though they are very wise.

³ Tyre has built herself a fortress;
She has amassed silver like dust,
And gold like the mud in the streets.

⁴ But my Lord will impoverish her;

14: See 1.6 n. 16–17: Cf. 8.9–11.

19: This divine announcement returns to the question asked at the beginning of ch 7, but incorporates the intervening material, noting that only when the ideal restoration is completed will these fast days be transformed. It served as a basis for the traditional Jewish belief that present days of fast and lamentation will become days of joy in the messianic era; see, e.g., Maimonides, Mishneh Torah, T'ani. 5.19.

9.1–11.17: A divine pronouncement: another word of the LORD associated with Zechariah. See also 12.1. This section of the book of Zechariah has its own introduction (9.1a) that characterizes the entire text as a divine pronouncement (Heb “massa”); the precise meaning of the term in Heb is a matter of debate). A set of announcements of judgment against the nations and of a glorious restoration for Jerusalem and Judah follows the introduction. The section contains numerous descriptions of an ideal future, but also of the period that leads up to such an ideal future (see 11.4–17). The issue of leadership, good and bad, figures prominently in 9.1–11.17. 9.1: The land of Hadrach is in Aram (today, Syria), north of Damascus. The v. may be translated also as, “the word of the LORD is against Hadrach and its resting place, Damascus, for to the LORD belongs the spring of humanity/humankind [that is, all humanity], as do all the tribes of Israel.” 2: Hamath, an important city and kingdom in the territory of today's Syria. Tyre and Sidon, two of the most important eastern Mediterranean city ports and capital cities of two Phoenician kingdoms. The cities are located in today's Lebanon.

a I.e., a standard by which men curse or bless; cf. Gen. 12.2 and note.

b Commemorating, respectively, the events of 2 Kings 25.3 ff. (Jer. 52.6 ff.); 2 Kings 25.8 ff. (Jer. 52.12 ff.); 2 Kings 25.25 ff. (Jer. 41); 2 Kings 25.1 ff. (Jer. 52.4).

c I.e., on the land of Hadrach and Damascus.

He will defeat her forces at sea,
And she herself shall be consumed by fire.

5 Ashkelon shall see it and be frightened,
Gaza shall tremble violently,
And Ekron, at the collapse of her hopes.
Kingship shall vanish from Gaza,
Ashkelon shall be without inhabitants,
6 And ^a“a mongrel people^a” shall settle in Ashdod.
I will uproot the grandeur of Philistia.

7 But I will clean out the blood from its mouth,
And the detestable things from between its teeth.
Its survivors, too, shall belong to our God:
They shall become like a clan in Judah,
And Ekron shall be like the Jebusites.

8 And I will encamp in My House ^bagainst armies,^b
Against any that come and go,
And no oppressor shall ever overrun them again;
For I have now taken note ^cwith My own eyes.^c

9 Rejoice greatly, Fair Zion;
Raise a shout, Fair Jerusalem!
Lo, your king is coming to you.
He is victorious, triumphant,
Yet humble, riding on an ass,
On a donkey foaled by a she-ass.
10 He^d shall banish chariots from Ephraim
And horses from Jerusalem;
The warrior's bow shall be banished.
He shall call on the nations to surrender,^e
And his rule shall extend from sea to sea
And from ocean to land's end.

11^f You, for your part, have released^g
Your prisoners from the dry pit,^h
For the sake of the blood of your covenant,
12 [Saying], “Return to Bizzaron,ⁱ

5-6: Ashkelon . . . Gaza . . . Ekron . . . Ashdod, Philistine cities. 7: Jebusites, former inhabitants of Jerusalem (cf. Judg. 19.10; 2 Sam. 5.6, 8; 24.16, 18; 1 Kings 9.20; 1 Chron. 11.4). 9: This image of the ideal future king (Messiah) has been very influential in Jewish tradition, and has influenced the depiction of Jesus in the Gospels (see introduction). 10: The Heb has “I shall banish/cut off.” See 2.15 n. Cf. the conclusion of this verse with Ps. 72.8. The phrase is often translated in English by “his dominion” rather than “his rule.” The phrase inspired the Canadian “Fathers of the Confederation” to give the new country its official title, Dominion of Canada. 11: An alternative translation of the v. reads, “As for you [fem.] also, because of the blood of My covenant with you, I will set your [fem.] prisoners free from the waterless pit/dungeon.” The feminine “you” is most likely “Fair Zion” (see v. 9). 12: Bizzaron may mean “Fortress” or “a fortress.”

a-a Heb. mamzer; cf. note at Deut. 23.3.

b-b Change of vocalization yields “as a garrison.”

c-c Emendation yields “of their suffering”; cf. 1 Sam. 1.11.

d Heb. “I.” e Cf. Deut. 20.10-12 and note.

f Exact meaning and connection of vv. 11-12 uncertain.

g Taking shillaḥti as a second-person singular feminine form, with Septuagint; cf. Judg. 5.7 with note.

h I.e., a pit that serves as a dungeon rather than a cistern (both are called bor in Heb.).

i Perhaps a nickname (“fortress”) for Samaria (Heb. Shomeron).

- You prisoners of hope.”
 In return [I] announce this day:
 I will repay you double.
 13 For I have drawn Judah taut,
 And applied [My hand] to Ephraim as to a bow,
 And I will arouse your sons, O Zion,
 Against your sons, O Javan,
 And make you like a warrior's sword.
- 14 And the LORD will manifest Himself to them,^a
 And His arrows shall flash like lightning;
 My Lord GOD shall sound the ram's horn
 And advance in a stormy tempest.^b
- 15 The LORD of Hosts will protect them:
 “[His] slingstones shall devour and conquer;
 They shall ^cdrink, shall rage as with ^dwine,
 And be filled [with it] like a dashing bowl,
 Like the corners of an altar.
- 16 The LORD their God shall prosper them
 On that day;
 [He shall pasture] His people like sheep.
 [They shall be] like crown jewels glittering on His soil.
- 17 How lovely, how beautiful they shall be,
 Producing young men like new grain,
 Young women like new wine!

10 Ask the LORD for rain
 In the ^eseason of late rain.^e
 It is the LORD who causes storms;^f
 And He will provide rainstorms ^gfor them,
 Grass in the fields for everyone.^g

- 2 For the teraphim^h spoke delusion,
 The augurs predicted falsely;
 And dreamers speak lies
 And console with illusions.
 That is why My people have strayed^f like a flock,
 They suffer^f for lack of a shepherd.

a i.e., Judah.

b Lit. “tempests of wind”; for teman in the sense of wind, cf. Job 9.9; 39.26.

c The meaning of much of the rest of the chapter is uncertain.

d-d Some Septuagint mss. read “drink blood like.”

e-e Septuagint reads “in its season / The early rain and the late.” Cf. Deut. 11.14.

f Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

g-g Emendation yields “[producing] food for men, / Grass in the fields for cattle.” Cf. Deut. 11.14–15.

h Idols consulted for oracles; cf. 1 Sam. 15.23; Ezek. 21.26.

14: Another possible translation of the v. is, “and advance in the storm-winds of the south.”

17: There are a number of alternative translations of this verse: (a) “For what goodness and beauty are His! Grain shall make the young men flourish, and new wine the young women” (NRSV); (b) “For what is His goodness and His beauty? Grain that makes the young men flourish, and new wine that makes the young women flourish.” In any case, the cultural association of grain with males and new wine with females is noteworthy. 10.2: For teraphim see, among others, Gen. 31.19; Judg. 17.5; 1 Sam. 15.23; Ezek. 21.26. Here it points to images that were consulted for the purpose of divination. False prophets continued into the Persian period (Neh. 6.14). 3: There were shepherds (cf. v. 2), but they failed. These failed, oppressive leaders are also characterized as rams (cf. Jer. 50.8; Ezek. 39.18).

3 My anger is roused against the shepherds,
And I will punish the he-goats.^a

For the LORD of Hosts has taken thought
In behalf of His flock, the House of Judah;
He will make them like majestic chargers in battle.

4 From them shall come ^bcornerstones,
From them tent pegs,^b
From them bows of combat,
And every captain shall also arise from them.
5 And together they shall be like warriors in battle,
Tramping in the dirt of the streets;
They shall fight, for the LORD shall be with them,
And they shall put horsemen to shame.
6 I will give victory to the House of Judah,
And triumph to the House of Joseph.
I will restore them, for I have pardoned them,
And they shall be as though I had never disowned
them;

For I the LORD am their God,
And I will answer their prayers.

7 ^cEphraim shall be like a warrior,
And they^c shall exult as with wine;
Their children shall see it and rejoice,
They shall exult in the LORD.
8 I will whistle to them and gather them,
For I will redeem them;
They shall increase ^dand continue increasing.^d
9 For though I sowed them among the nations,
In the distant places they shall remember Me,
They shall escape with their children and shall return.

10 I will bring them back from the land of Egypt
And gather them from Assyria;
And I will bring them to the lands of Gilead and Lebanon,

And even they shall not suffice for them.

11 ^dA hemmed-in force shall pass over the sea
And shall stir up waves in the sea;^d
And all the deeps of the Nile shall dry up.
Down shall come the pride of Assyria,
And the scepter of Egypt shall pass away.

a I.e., oppressive leaders; cf. Ezek. 34.17 ff.

b-b Emendation yields "shields and bucklers."

c-c Emendation yields "And when Ephraim is victorious, / They . . ."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

12 But I will make them^a mighty through the LORD,
And they shall ^bmarch proudly^b in His name
—declares the LORD.

11 Throw open your gates, O Lebanon,
And let fire consume your cedars!
2 Howl, cypresses, for cedars have fallen!
How the mighty are ravaged!
Howl, you oaks of Bashan,
For the stately forest is laid low!
3 Hark, the wailing of the shepherds,
For their ^crich pastures^c are ravaged;
Hark, the roaring of the great beasts,
For the jungle of the Jordan is ravaged.

4 Thus said my God the LORD: Tend the sheep meant for slaughter, ⁵whose buyers will slaughter them with impunity, whose seller will say, "Praised be the LORD! I'll get rich," and whose shepherd will not pity them. ⁶For I will pity the inhabitants of the land no more—declares the LORD—but I will place every man at the mercy of every other man and at the mercy of his king; they shall break the country to bits, and I will not rescue it from their hands.

⁷So I tended the sheep meant for slaughter, ^dfor those poor men of the sheep.^d I got two staffs, one of which I named Favor and the other Unity, and I proceeded to tend the sheep. ⁸But I lost ^ethe three shepherds^e in one month; then my patience with them was at an end, and they in turn were disgusted with me. ⁹So I declared, "I am not going to tend you; let the one that is to die die and the one that is to get lost get lost; and let the rest devour each other's flesh!"

¹⁰Taking my staff Favor, I cleft it in two, so as to annul the covenant I had made with all the peoples;^f ¹¹and when it was annulled that day, ⁹the same poor men of the sheep⁹ who watched^h me realized that it was a message from the LORD. ¹²Then I said to them, "If you are satisfied, pay me my wages; if not, don't." So they weighed out my wages, thirty shekels of silver—¹³^cthe noble sum that I was worth in their estimation.^c The LORD said to me, "De-

11.1–17: The readers of this literary subunit learn much about the worthless shepherds and their fate. Building upon common ancient Near Eastern and biblical imagery, these shepherds are political leaders, but significantly their identity is never revealed, nor even hinted at, so as to allow and even encourage multiple interpretations. 13: See introduction.

a I.e., Judah and Ephraim.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. Emendation yields "have glory"; cf. Isa. 45.25.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Emendation yields "for the sheep dealers"; cf. the word rendered "trader" in 14.21.

e-e Emendation yields "a third of the flock."

f Perhaps alluding to the prediction of 14.1–3.

g-g Emendation yields "the sheep dealers." h Emendation yields "hired."

posit it in the treasury.”^a And I took the thirty shekels and deposited it in the treasury in the House of the LORD. ¹⁴Then I cleft in two my second staff, Unity, in order to annul the brotherhood between Judah and Israel.^b

¹⁵The LORD said to me further: Get yourself the gear of a foolish shepherd. ¹⁶For I am going to raise up in the land a shepherd who will neither miss the lost [sheep], nor seek the strayed,^a nor heal the injured, nor sustain the frail,^a but will feast on the flesh of the fat ones and ^ctear off their hoofs:^c

¹⁷ Oh, the worthless shepherd
Who abandons the flock!
Let a sword descend upon his arm
And upon his right eye!
His arm shall shrivel up;
His right eye shall go blind.

12 A pronouncement: The word of the LORD concerning Israel.

The utterance of the LORD,
Who stretched out the skies
And made firm the earth,
And created man's breath within him:

²Behold, I will make Jerusalem a bowl of reeling for the peoples all around. Judah shall be caught up in the siege upon Jerusalem, ³when all the nations of the earth gather against her. In that day, I will make Jerusalem a stone for all the peoples to lift; all who lift it shall injure themselves. ⁴In that day—declares the LORD—I will strike every horse with panic and its rider with madness. But I will ^dwatch over the House of Judah while I strike every horse of ^dthe peoples with blindness. ⁵And the clans of Judah will say to themselves, ^e“The dwellers of Jerusalem are a task set for us by ^etheir God, the LORD of Hosts.” ⁶In that day, I will make the clans of Judah like a flaming brazier among sticks and like a flaming torch among sheaves. They shall devour all the besieging peoples right and left; and Jerusalem shall continue on its site, in Jerusalem.^f

⁷The LORD will give victory to the tents of Judah first, so that the glory of the House of David and the glory of the 12.1–14.21: Another divine pronouncement associated with Zechariah: The word of the LORD concerning Israel. This section is set apart from the preceding one (9.1–11.17) by the presence of an unmistakable, composite subtitle that serves as an introduction to the unit in 12.1 (see 9.1). The repetition of the opening expression in that day provides much cohesion and structure to this literary unit within the book. The section as a whole is meant to bridge the gap between the actual world of the authorship and readership of the book and an expected future in which the kingship of the LORD over all the earth will be clearly manifested and acknowledged by all. Thus the unit reports a divine communication about the process that will lead to that future and about that future itself. Following earlier prophetic traditions, this process involves political and military turmoil, as well as astro-nomic or cosmic disturbances and the transformation of the landscape of Jerusalem. 12.1: The v. reaffirms the authority and legitimacy of the following text three times: (prophetic) pronouncement, the word of the LORD, and the utterance of the LORD. This v. asks the readers to interpret the ensuing text (12.2–14.21) as a divine pronouncement concerning Israel, even if the nations play a major role in it. 2: Bowl of reeling: The metaphor of a divinely induced, incapacitating drunkenness under judgment occurs elsewhere in the prophets. The classical examples are Jer. 25.15–29 and Isa. 51.17–23. In the present text, however, the nations, rather than Jerusalem, are incapacitated.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Two mss. of the Septuagint have “Jerusalem”; cf. 12.2–3; 14.14. c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d-d Emendation yields “open the eyes of Judah while I strike all.”

e-e Emendation yields “We will save the dwellers of Jerusalem with the help of.”

f Emendation yields “safety.”

inhabitants of Jerusalem may not be too great for Judah. ⁸In that day, the LORD will shield the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and the feeblest of them shall be in that day like David, and the House of David like a divine being—like an angel of the LORD—at their head.

⁹In that day I will ^aall but annihilate^a all the nations that came up against Jerusalem. ¹⁰But I will fill the House of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem with a spirit of pity and compassion; and they shall lament^b to Me about those who are slain, wailing over them as over a favorite son and showing bitter grief as over a first-born. ¹¹In that day, the wailing in Jerusalem shall be as great as the wailing at Hadad-rimmon in the plain of Megiddon. ^c¹²The land shall wail, each family by itself: The family of the House of David by themselves, and their womenfolk by themselves; the family of the House of Nathan by themselves, and their womenfolk by themselves; ¹³the family of the House of Levi by themselves, and their women-folk by themselves; the family of the Shimeites by themselves, and their womenfolk by themselves; ¹⁴and all the other families, every family by itself, with their womenfolk by themselves.^d

13 In that day a fountain shall be open to the House of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem for purging and cleansing.

²In that day, too—declares the LORD of Hosts—I will erase the very names of the idols from the land; they shall not be uttered any more. And I will also make the “prophets” and the “unclean spirit” vanish from the land. ³If anyone “prophesies” thereafter, his own father and mother, who brought him into the world, will say to him, “You shall die, for you have lied in the name of the LORD”; and his own father and mother, who brought him into the world, will put him to death when he “prophesies.” ⁴In that day, every “prophet” will be ashamed of the “visions” [he had] when he “prophesied.” In order to deceive, he^f will not wear a hairy mantle,^g ⁵and he will declare, “I am not a ‘prophet’; ^hI am a tiller of the soil; ⁱyou see, ⁱI was plied with the red stuffⁱ from my youth on.”

10: An alternative and more common type of translation, which is at home in christological interpretation, is represented by “And I will pour out a spirit of compassion and supplication on the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, so that, when they look on the one whom they have pierced, they shall mourn for him, as one mourns for an only child, and weep bitterly over him, as one weeps over a firstborn” (NRSV). The Heb is ambiguous, because it may refer to a person or a group whom they have pierced. Although the identity of the pierced one/ones is unclear, if the text is read as the continuation of v. 9—as the structure of the section set by the in that day openings suggests—it is more likely that it points to an individual or group from within the nations. For an understanding of the verse as pointing to the Messiah from the House of Joseph, see b. Sukkah 52a. Radak reads the text differently; for him it describes such a salvation that if even one person of Israel were killed in the battle, they will be astonished. 13.2–6: Away with the prophets. Although the removal of the idols is mentioned, the obvious emphasis is on the removal of the prophets. It is likely that a particular group or type of prophets is meant. 4: The hairy mantle is an allusion to Elijah (see 2 Kings 1.8). 5: The language seems to allude to Amos 7.14, but with a most significant shift that results in a possible association with Cain (see Gen. 4.2). 6: Possibly a reference to ecstatic prophesy.

a-a For the idiom cf. Gen. 43.30; it is also attested in postbiblical Hebrew.

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Usually “Megiddo.”

d In this way, apparently, they will prevail upon the LORD to spare the remnant of the besieging nations; cf. v. 10.

e-e To which abnormal human behavior was attributed.

f Heb. “They.” g In imitation of Elijah; cf. 2 Kings 1.8.

h-h I.e., I was addicted to wine like Noah, the tiller of the soil (cf. Gen. 9.20–21), hence my hallucinations and ravings; cf. Prov. 23.33.

i-i Connecting ‘adam with ‘adom “red” (cf. Prov. 23.31); but meaning of Heb. uncertain.

⁶And if he is asked, "What are those ^asores on your back?"^a he will reply, "From being beaten in the homes of my friends."^b

^{7c} O sword!
 Rouse yourself against My shepherd,
 The man ^din charge of My flock^d
 —says the LORD of Hosts.
 Strike down the shepherd
 And let the flock scatter;
 And I will also turn My hand
 Against all the shepherd boys.
⁸ Throughout the land —declares the LORD—
 Two-thirds shall perish, shall die,
 And one-third of it shall survive.
⁹ That third I will put into the fire,
 And I will smelt them as one smelts silver
 And test them as one tests gold.
 They will invoke Me by name,
 And I will respond to them.
 I will declare, "You are My people,"
 And they will declare,
 "The LORD is our God!"

14.1-21: Earth-shaking events lead to the establishment of Jerusalem as the center of the world and the place from which the LORD reigns over all. 4-5: Mount of Olives, a mount east of, and in the vicinity of, Jerusalem. Valley in the Hills, perhaps, "valley in/between the hills." The Heb word for "hill" is often translated "mount" or "mountain." And the Valley . . . shall be stopped up: Heb reads "you shall flee by the valley of My hills/mountains" (i.e., the new valley created by the LORD). Azal, an unknown location in the area. Some scholars assume that the original text read "etzel," i.e., "side" and, accordingly, that the text read: "the valley between the hills reached to each side (of the now split Mount of Olives)."

14 Lo, a day of the LORD is coming when your^e spoil shall be divided in your very midst! ²For I will gather all the nations to Jerusalem for war: The city shall be captured, the houses plundered, and the women violated; and a part of the city shall go into exile. But the rest of the population shall not be uprooted from the city.

³Then the LORD will come forth and make war on those nations as He is wont to make war on a day of battle. ⁴On that day, He will set His feet on the Mount of Olives, near Jerusalem on the east; and the Mount of Olives shall split across from east to west, and one part of the Mount shall shift to the north and the other to the south, a huge gorge. ⁵And the Valley in the Hills shall be stopped up, for the Valley of the Hills shall reach only to Azal; it shall be stopped up as it was stopped up as a result of the earthquake in the days of King Uzziah of Judah.—And a-a Lit. "sores between your arms"; cf. 2 Kings 9.24. Sores are sometimes symptoms of hysteria.

b Presumably for making drunken scenes; cf. Prov. 23.35.

c Vv. 7-9 would read well after 11.17. d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e Jerusalem is addressed.

f Vocalizing [we] nistam with Targum, Septuagint, and an old Heb. ms. Other mss. and printed editions read, "You [pl.] shall flee [to] the Valley in the Hills, for the Valley of the Hills shall reach up to Azal. You shall flee as you fled because of the earthquake . . ."

the LORD my God, with all the holy beings, will come to you.

⁶In that day, there shall be neither sunlight nor cold moonlight, ⁷but there shall be a continuous day—only the LORD knows when—of neither day nor night, and there shall be light at eventide.

⁸In that day, fresh water shall flow from Jerusalem, part of it to the Eastern Sea^b and part to the Western Sea,^c throughout the summer and winter.

⁹And the LORD shall be king over all the earth; in that day there shall be one LORD with one name.^d

¹⁰Then the whole country shall become like the Arabah,^e ^ffrom Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem.^f The latter, however, shall perch high up where it is, and ^gshall be inhabited^g from the Gate of Benjamin to the site of the Old Gate, down to the Corner Gate, and from the Tower of Hananel to the king's winepresses. ¹¹Never again shall destruction be decreed, and Jerusalem shall dwell secure.

¹²As for those peoples that warred against Jerusalem, the LORD will smite them with this plague: Their flesh shall rot away while they stand on their feet; their eyes shall rot away in their sockets; and their tongues shall rot away in their mouths.

¹³In that day, a great panic from the LORD shall fall upon them, and everyone shall snatch at the hand of another, and everyone shall raise his hand against everyone else's hand. ¹⁴Judah shall join the fighting in Jerusalem, and the wealth of all the nations roundabout—vast quantities of gold, silver, and clothing—shall be gathered in.

¹⁵The same plague shall strike the horses, the mules, the camels, and the asses; the plague shall affect all the animals in those camps.

¹⁶All who survive of all those nations that came up against Jerusalem shall make a pilgrimage year by year to bow low to the King LORD of Hosts and to observe the Feast of Booths. ¹⁷Any of the earth's communities that does not make the pilgrimage to Jerusalem to bow low to the King LORD of Hosts shall receive no rain. ¹⁸However, if the community of Egypt does not make this pilgrimage, it shall not be visited by the same affliction with which the 9: See introduction. The verse evokes the language of Deut. 6.4, the beginning of what became the Shema prayer in later Judaism, and, given its context, it most likely means that in that day all humanity will acknowledge and worship the LORD alone and invoke the LORD's name alone. (Contrast with the different vision in Mic. 4.5.) 10: Like the Arabah means as low and plain as the Jordan Valley. From Geba to Rimmon south of Jerusalem refers to the territory of Judah. Jerusalem will be higher than its surroundings; cf. Mic. 4.1; Isa. 2.2. The expression it shall be inhabited, placed in our translation in v. 10 for clarity, stands in v. 11 in the Heb. V. 11 then reads, "And it [Jerusalem] shall be inhabited, for never again shall destruction be decreed, Jerusalem shall dwell secure." 16–17: The Feast of Booths, Sukkot, stands at the beginning of the rainy season and is the time for petitioning rain from the LORD (see Rashi). As in other biblical calendars, Sukkot rather than Rosh Ha-Shanah (the New Year) or Yom Kippur (the Day of Atonement) is the central festival. 18: Egypt's agriculture was not dependent on rain, but on the Nile. 21: Holiness will be so pervasive that every mundane household object will be holy, and therefore there will be no need for merchants to sell ritually pure vessels.

a Meaning of verse uncertain; cf. Job 21.26.

b I.e., the Dead Sea; cf. Joel 2.20.

c I.e., the Mediterranean Sea; cf. Joel 2.20.

d I.e., the LORD alone shall be worshiped and shall be invoked by His true name.

e I.e., shall be depressed like the Jordan Valley.

f-f I.e., from the northern border of the Kingdom of Judah (1 Kings 15.22; 2 Kings 23.8) to the southern border (Josh. 15.32; 19.7).

g-g Brought up from v. 11 for clarity.

LORD will strike the other nations that do not come up to observe the Feast of Booths.^a ¹⁹Such shall be the punishment of Egypt and of all other nations that do not come up to observe the Feast of Booths.

²⁰In that day, even the bells on the horses shall be inscribed "Holy to the LORD." The metal pots in the House of the LORD shall be like the basins before the altar; ²¹indeed, every metal pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holy to the LORD of Hosts. And all those who sacrifice shall come and take of these to boil [their sacrificial meat] in; in that day there shall be no more traders^b in the House of the LORD of Hosts.

a Because Egypt is not dependent on rain, it will suffer some other punishment, presumably that described in v. 12.

b To sell ritually pure vessels.

Malachi

THE BOOK OF MALACHI is set in a period when the Second Temple was rebuilt and sacrificial worship was resumed. It was composed in the Persian period, and is addressed originally to the inhabitants of the Persian province of Yehud (Judah). Because of the reference to intermarriage (2.11), some modern scholars assume that it belongs to a time closely preceding that of Ezra's actions on the matter (cf. b. Meg. 15a).

Some scholars have argued that the book was composed to provide an appropriate closing to the book of the Twelve, or that its conclusion (3.22–24, or a portion thereof) was written as a conclusion to the Twelve rather than to Malachi, or that substantial portions of the book were originally associated with some form of the book of Zechariah. None of these proposals is compelling.

Since Malachi means “my messenger,” it has been thought from the earliest times that it was not the name of the prophet, but an appellation, perhaps based on 3.1, “Behold, I am sending My messenger to clear the way before Me.” The Septuagint, the ancient Greek translation (ca. 3rd century BCE) does not read “Malachi” as a personal name, but translates it as “His messenger.” There is a tradition in the Targum that Malachi is Ezra; a similar tradition is brought to bear in b. Meg. 15a; an alternate tradition of R. Nahman claims that Malachi was Mordecai. Still the Rabbis of the classical period (and later Ibn Ezra, Radak, and Maimonides) maintained that Malachi is the name of the prophet. Haggai, Zechariah, and Malachi are all understood by the Rabbis as the last of the prophets, and the Talmud mentions rulings and sayings by this prophet that seem to characterize him as an early sage, in addition to his being a prophet (see intro. to Haggai). Despite these traditions, it is likely that Malachi should be understood as a personal name.

The readers of the book of Malachi are asked to look at some pitfalls in everyday life and in the cult at the Temple, and particularly at how they affect the relationship between the LORD and Israel, resulting in a lack of prosperity. Issues concerning proper offerings, marriage practices, and tithes are especially prominent in the book.

Messages of cultic reform and proper worship are deeply interwoven with the conviction of the coming of a future day in which the LORD will trample all evildoers. Such optimism about an ideal future is typical in prophetic works. Further, the book asks its readers to identify proper behavior in these and all matters with following the Torah (or Teaching) of Moses. As a whole, the book is aimed at persuading its readership to follow the Torah of Moses, or at strengthening their resolve to continue to do so. This message must be understood within the book's historical setting, soon after the canonization of the Torah. Thus, the book presents a prophetic voice that ultimately asserts the superiority of Torah over prophecy.

The use of a disputation format in much of the book contributes rhetorically to that purpose, for it allows the arguments of evildoers to be heard, in order to be countered and neutralized. Further, it allows the readers some limited form of self-identification with the actions of the evildoers, and as such serves as a call for them to examine themselves and repent.

The book uses imagery that refers to the structure of ancient patriarchal family groups. The LORD, as the main power figure, is imagined as a father, and at times (given the tone of the book) as an infuriated patriarchal figure. To be sure, this figure loves Israel/Judah, but within this world, the loved one should fulfill its role and obligations as the father figure envisages them. This type of metaphor is common in its historical setting, but it is difficult for many contemporary readers because our understanding of family life differs significantly from the one presumed in the book. Certainly modern readers who have had a damaging experience of an overbearing patriarch find the message of such texts difficult to accept (cf. the book of Hosea). Other aspects of the imagery of the book of Malachi, and particularly its ending, have brought much hope and comfort. In fact, the reference to Elijah in 3.23–24 was often understood as an affirmation of hope for a final liberation, one even greater than the exodus from Egypt, for after Israel's first liberation it eventually becomes enslaved, but it will not after the one promised in Malachi (see Pesiq. Rab. 4.3). Similarly the language of 3.4 is repeated often in traditional Jewish liturgy as an expression of hope about the restoration of appropriate worship in a future, third Temple.

Malachi 1.1–2.7 is read as the haftarah for the parashah of Toledot (Gen. 25.19–28.9), since these share the themes of Jacob and Esau, and Malachi 3.4–24 as that of Shabbat Ha-Gadol, the Sabbath preceding Passover, most likely because of the association of Elijah and the forthcoming messianic liberation, which is traditionally connected to Passover. (In the Yemenite tradition Mal. 1.1–3.4 is read with the parashah of Toledot.) [EHUD BEN ZVI]

1 A pronouncement: The word of the LORD to Israel through Malachi.

²I have shown you love, said the LORD. But you ask, "How have You shown us love?" After all—declares the

1.1: Superscription. The book has a double title, a (prophetic) pronouncement and the word of the LORD. It is important to note that the word is to Israel, meaning here

Israel as a people with a particular relation to the LORD (see, e.g., 2.16), a particular history, and a particular obligation to follow the Torah of Moses (cf. 3.22) and to worship in Jerusalem. This conception of Israel is especially associated with the Persian period Yehud (or Judah), and it assumes a partial overlap between the concepts of "Israel" and "Judah" (a more geographico-political term). Thus references to Judah in 2.11 and 3.4 are identical with Israel in 1.1. The ancient readers of the book in ancient Yehud most likely identified themselves with both Judah and Israel.

LORD—Esau is Jacob's brother; yet I have accepted Jacob³ and have rejected Esau. I have made his hills a desolation, his territory "a home for beasts" of the desert. ⁴If Edom thinks, "Though crushed, we can build the ruins again," thus said the LORD of Hosts: They may build, but I will tear down. And so they shall be known as the region of wickedness, the people damned forever of the LORD. ⁵Your eyes shall behold it, and you shall declare, "Great is the LORD beyond the borders of Israel!"

⁶A son should honor his father, and a slave^b his master. Now if I am a father, where is the honor due Me? And if I am a master, where is the reverence due Me?—said the LORD of Hosts to you, O priests who scorn My name. But you ask, "How have we scorned Your name?" ⁷You offer defiled food on My altar. But you ask, "How have we defiled You?"^c By saying, "The table of the LORD can be treated with scorn." ⁸When you present a blind animal for sacrifice—it doesn't matter! When you present a lame or sick one—it doesn't matter! Just offer it to your governor: Will he accept you? Will he show you favor?—said the LORD of Hosts. ⁹And now implore the favor of God! Will He be gracious to us? This is what you have done—will He accept any of you?

The LORD of Hosts has said: ¹⁰If only you would lock My doors, and not kindle fire on My altar to no purpose! I take no pleasure in you—said the LORD of Hosts—and I will accept no offering from you. ¹¹For from where the sun rises to where it sets, My name is honored among the nations, and everywhere incense and pure oblation are offered to My name; for My name is honored among the nations—said the LORD of Hosts. ¹²But you profane it when you say, "The table of the Lord is defiled and the meat,^d the food, can be treated with scorn." ¹³You say, "Oh, what a bother!" And so you degrade^d it—said the LORD of Hosts—and you bring the stolen, the lame, and the sick; and you offer such as an oblation. Will I accept it from you?—said the LORD.

¹⁴A curse on the cheat who has an [unblemished] male in his flock, but for his vow sacrifices a blemished animal to the Lord! For I am a great King—said the LORD of Hosts—and My name is revered among the nations.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Septuagint and Targum add "should reverence"; cf. next part of verse.

c Septuagint "it."

d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

1.2–5: The LORD loves Jacob. This section is meant to persuade or remind the readers of the LORD's special relationship with them. This is shown in the divine preference of Jacob over Esau. Esau stands both for Edom and for all the other nations. The contrast between the fates of the siblings (Esau/Edom and Jacob/Israel) is a central motif in the book of Obadiah. (On the later identifications of Esau/Edom, see notes on Obadiah.) In the book of Malachi, however, the issue is not central; rather it is used for rhetorical purposes within an argument developed against a particular group in Israel. The central point is that Israel is beloved, even if certain of its members are acting improperly.

1.6–14: Improper cultic practices at the Temple. 8: The logic of the argument is that if an animal cannot be offered to a provincial governor without risking punishment, it is certainly not a suitable offering for the King of Kings (cf. vv. 13–14). From the LORD's perspective, the fact that these offerings are still brought demonstrates the priests' disrespect for, and lack of fear of, the LORD, as proven by the validity of the previous statement of the LORD, O priests who scorn My name (v. 6). There are numerous references in the Bible to the belief that blemished animals were not acceptable for sacrifice (e.g., Exod. 12.5; 29.1; Lev. 1.3, 10; 3.1; 22.22, passim). 10: The first sentence may be translated as, "Oh, that someone among you would shut the temple doors, so that you would not kindle fire on my altar in vain" (NRSV). The LORD prefers no sacrifices at all, and even the closing of the Temple, over the improper situation described in these vv.

14: [Unblemished] male: Blemished animals, which were not fit for sacrifice (cf. Lev. 1.3), were offered even by those who had unblemished animals. The main opposition in the text is not between female and male offerings, but between blemished and unblemished male animals. In Israel, as in other agrarian societies, the most

2 And now, O priests, this charge is for you: ²Unless you obey and unless you lay it to heart, and do honor to My name—said the LORD of Hosts—I will send a curse and turn your blessings into curses. (Indeed, I have turned them into curses, because you do not lay it to heart.) ³I will ^aput your seed under a ban,^a and I will strew dung upon your faces, the dung of your festal sacrifices, and you shall be carried out to its [heap].

⁴Know, then, that I have sent this charge to you that My covenant with Levi may endure—said the LORD of Hosts. ⁵I had with him a covenant of life and well-being, which I gave to him, and of reverence, which he showed Me. For he stood in awe of My name.

^{6b} Proper rulings were in his mouth,
And nothing perverse was on his lips;
He served Me with complete loyalty
And held the many back from iniquity.
⁷ ^cFor the lips of a priest guard knowledge,
And men seek rulings from his mouth;^c
For he is a messenger of the LORD of Hosts.

⁸But you have turned away from that course: You have made the many stumble through your rulings;^d you have corrupted the covenant of the Levites—said the LORD of Hosts. ⁹And I, in turn, have made you despicable and vile in the eyes of all the people, because you disregard My ways and show partiality in your rulings.

¹⁰Have we not all one Father? Did not one God create us? Why do we break faith with one another, profaning the covenant of our ancestors? ¹¹Judah has broken faith; abhorrent things have been done in Israel and in Jerusalem. For Judah has profaned what is holy to the LORD—what He desires—and espoused daughters of alien gods.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b See Hag. 2.10–13; cf. Lev. 10.8–11, Deut. 33.8, 10.

c-c Or: For the lips of a priest are observed; / Knowledge and ruling are sought from his mouth.

d By ruling falsely that an act was licit or an object ritually pure.

common sacrifice was that of a male animal. Female sacrifices were rarer and more expensive, since each female is potentially a separate breeding animal, but any number of males can be sacrificed as long as one is kept to impregnate the females.

2.1–9: The improper behavior of the priest. The readers overhear, as it were, the LORD's speech to the priests as reported in these vv. The speech reminds the readers of the importance of the rulings/torah/teachings of the priests (cf. Hag. 2.10–13), and of their role as "the LORD's messengers" (see v. 7 and notice the pun on the name Malachi, "My messenger"). To be sure, unless the priests perform their duty as the LORD expects them to,

there cannot be proper worship, with all the consequences that this might entail. 4: Cf. 2.8; Neh. 13.29. 9: Show partiality in your rulings seems to point to the priests' acceptance of unacceptable offerings brought by powerful members of society (e.g., Radak, cf. Prov. 18.5). Notice also the reference back to 1.8. (The Heb idiom translated as show . . . favor in 1.8 is the same as show partiality here.) The point of the verse is that the priests' privileged status is conditional and can be overturned.

2.10–16: On marriage. The improper behavior of (male) Israel. This passage condemns male Judah because of intermarriage and because they "acted treacherously" against their Judahite wives. It concludes with another reported speech of the LORD (v. 6) supporting the message conveyed by the preceding vv. Scholars have debated whether the language of intermarriage should be taken literally or symbolically, as a reference to idolatry. The majority of scholars support the first alternative, but the text may have more than one level of meaning. 10–11: Have we not all one Father? Did not one God create us? These words have been used numerous times to point to the unity (or, brotherhood or siblinghood) of all humanity (see b. Ta'an. 18a) and to advance ethical claims about the treatment of different groups on that basis. Within Malachi, however, these expressions carry a different meaning. Because we equals Israel, which in turn was identified with Persian Yehud (see intro.), they refer to inner Israelite responsibilities to "keep faith" with one another and to honor the covenant of their fathers. If this understanding of the text is accepted, then the term Father has two meanings: (a) the LORD as father of Israel; and (b) the patriarchs of Israel, and esp. Jacob (e.g., Ibn Ezra). The first meaning relates this verse to other sections in Malachi in which the LORD is characterized as father. The second meaning emphasizes the border between Israel and the ¹²May the LORD leave to him who does this ^ano descendants^a dwelling in the tents of Jacob and presenting offerings to the LORD of Hosts. ¹³And this you do ^bas well:^b You cover the altar of the LORD with tears, weeping, and moaning, so that He refuses to regard the oblation any more and to accept ^cwhat you offer.^c ¹⁴But you ask, “Because of what?” Because the LORD is a witness between you and the wife of your youth with whom you have broken faith, though she is your partner and covenanted spouse. ¹⁵Did not the One make [all,] ^aso that all remaining life-breath is His? And what does that One seek but godly folk? So be careful of your life-breath,^a and let no one break faith with the wife of his youth. ¹⁶For I detest divorce—said the LORD, the God of Israel—^aand covering oneself with lawlessness as with a garment^a—said the LORD of Hosts. So be careful of your life-breath and do not act treacherously.

¹⁷You have wearied the LORD with your talk. But you ask, “By what have we wearied [Him]?” By saying, “All who do evil are good in the sight of the LORD, and in them He delights,” or else, “Where is the God of justice?”

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Lit. “a second time”; Septuagint reads “which I detest”; cf. v. 16.

c-c Lit. “from your hand.”

nations, which is an important issue in the unit, and directly links the reference to the ancestral fathers at the conclusion of the v. (and perhaps even alludes to the reference to Jacob and Esau in 1.2–3). (The use of the capital “F” for Father, indicating the deity, is a translation choice that is not present in the Heb, which cannot make a distinction between common and proper nouns.) There is an alternative tradition of reading these expressions within their context in the book of Malachi. Within this tradition Have we not all one Father? Did not one God create us? actually points at the unity of humanity, but it is said by the (sinful) Judahites to justify their actions. To them, the prophetic voice in the text answers, Judah has broken faith. (It is also possible to understand father as referring to Adam.) The expression translated break faith with one another may also be translated “act treacherously, a man to his brother.” If the latter translation is followed, then v. 11 should be translated, “Judah has acted treacherously.” The text clearly conveys to the readers that marrying daughters of alien gods (i.e., foreign women) is tantamount to profaning what is holy to the LORD and committing abominations; Judah acting treacherously is the equivalent of a Judahite man breaking faith with his brothers. Thus, within the book intermarriage is presented here not only as a husband-wife affair, but as a brother-brother affair, and a son-patriarch affair (since the latter’s covenant is breached), and a matter between Israel and the LORD, with grave cultic and covenantal implications (see vv. 12–13). The precise language chosen to describe the women, namely not as “foreign women” but rather as daughters of alien gods, is rhetorically significant. 13–16: Judahite men failed on another account.

They “have acted treacherously” against (or broken faith with) their Judahite wives whom they married in their youth. Their actions not only caused great pain to these women, but also involved covenant breaking, and as such they carried grave cultic implications: The LORD rejected the offerings of those Judahites and of Judah. The sentence translated I detest [or “hate”] divorce—said the LORD, the God of Israel has attracted much attention in the last decades. The Heb is difficult. Moreover, a text of the v. in a Dead Sea Scrolls manuscript may be translated “But if you hate [your wife] divorce [her]!” (4Q12^a). Significantly, this is also the way in which the Targum, the Vulgate, and (likely) the LXX understood the v. (cf. b. Git. 80b). This reading is consistent with the liberal attitude toward divorce of the House of Hillel and R. Akiva (m. Git. 9.10); cf. Deut. 24.1–2; Sir. 25.26. Even if the MT version of the v. represents the original text, it is indisputable that different interpretations and versions of it already existed in ancient times. Controversies about its meaning are also well attested in medieval times.

2.17–3.21: The coming day: judgment for the doers of evil and a “sun of righteousness” for those who revere the LORD’s name. Although there is some debate about the scope of the different units included in these vv., it is clear that they address issues such as theodicy, a response to those who claim that the LORD is either unjust or unable to provide justice in this world, strong affirmations of a great day of judgment to come, a reference to a long history of Israel turning away from the LORD, and calls for repentance. As a whole, the emphasis on the future, and the general tone of hope, sets ch 3 apart from the previous chs in Malachi. Mal. 3.6–12, however, is closely related to 1.2–5. 2.17: Despite the present division according to chs, the v. is to be read as directly linked to the following vv. The scribal tradition of 3 Behold, I am sending My messenger to clear the way before Me, and the Lord whom you seek shall come to His Temple suddenly. As for the angel of the covenant^a that you desire, he is already coming. ²But who can endure the day of his coming, and who can hold out when he appears? For he is like a smelter's fire and like fuller's lye. ³He shall act^b like a smelter and purger of silver; and he shall purify the descendants of Levi and refine them like gold and silver, so that they shall present offerings in righteousness. ⁴Then the offerings of Judah and Jerusalem shall be pleasing to the LORD as in the days of yore and in the years of old. ⁵But [first] I will step forward to contend against you, and I will act as a relentless accuser against those who have no fear of Me: Who practice sorcery, who commit adultery, who swear falsely, who cheat laborers of their hire, and who subvert [the cause of] the widow, orphan, and stranger, said the LORD of Hosts.

⁶For I am the LORD—I have not changed; and you are the children of Jacob—you have not ceased to be. ⁷From the very days of your fathers you have turned away from My laws and have not observed them. Turn back to Me, and I will turn back to you—said the LORD of Hosts. But you ask, "How shall we turn back?" ⁸Ought man to defraud^d God? Yet you are defrauding Me. And you ask, "How have we been defrauding You?" In tithe and contribution.^e ⁹You are suffering under a curse, yet you go on defrauding Me—the whole nation of you. ¹⁰Bring the full tithe into the storehouse,^f and let there be food in My House, and thus put Me to the test—said the LORD of Hosts. I will surely open the floodgates of the sky for you and pour down blessings on you; ¹¹and I will banish the locusts^g from you, so that they will not destroy the yield of your soil; and your vines in the field shall no longer miscarry—said the LORD of Hosts. ¹²And all the nations shall account you happy, for you shall be the most desired of lands—said the LORD of Hosts.

¹³You have spoken hard words against Me—said the LORD. But you ask, "What have we been saying among ourselves against You?" ¹⁴You have said, "It is useless to the MT has a break after 2.16 reflected in the paragraph division in NJPS. 3.1-2: Cf. Isa. 40.3. Much of the discussion on the "messianic" tone of Malachi centers on 3.23 and this v. The identity of the messenger in 3.1 has been highly debated. Is My messenger (Heb "malakhi") Malachi? Or is there at least a pun on the name of the prophet? Is the messenger the angel of the covenant, a zealous, powerful enforcer of the covenant who is like a smelter's fire and like fuller's lye (i.e., a purifying, caustic treatment)? Is he Elijah (see v. 23)? Or is Elijah the angel of the covenant? Does the text indicate an expectation of a priestly Messiah? There is a very long history of interpretation on this v., with multiple meanings already in antiquity. The New Testament merges this v. with Isa. 40.3 and identifies the expected messenger as John the Baptist (Matt. 11.10; Mark 1.2; Luke 7.27). 4: See introduction. 8-9: The repeated use of terms translated as defraud and the like (Heb "kaba'") is a pun on the name Jacob ("Ya'akob") and its negative connotations (cf. Gen. 27.36; Jer. 9.3; Hos. 12.4) See translators' note d. 10: Cf. Neh. 13.10-11; Dan. 1.2.

a Apparently the messenger of the previous sentence is regarded as Israel's tutelary angel.

b Lit. "sit."

c Vv. 6-12 resume the thought of 1.2-5.

d Heb. qaba', a play on the name of Jacob (v. 6); cf. Gen. 27.36.

e I.e., the contributions to the priests from the new grain, oil, and wine; see Num. 18.12.

f I.e., the public storehouse; see Neh. 13.10-13.

g Lit. "devourer."

serve God. What have we gained by keeping His charge and walking in abject awe of the LORD of Hosts? ¹⁵And so, we account the arrogant happy: they have indeed done evil and endured; they have indeed dared God and escaped." ¹⁶In this vein have those who revere the LORD been talking to one another. The LORD has heard and noted it, and a scroll of remembrance has been written at His behest concerning those who revere the LORD and esteem His name. ¹⁷And on the day that I am preparing, said the LORD of Hosts, they shall be My treasured possession; I will be tender toward them as a man is tender toward a son who ministers to him. ¹⁸And you shall come to see the difference between the righteous and the wicked, between him who has served God and him who has not served Him.

¹⁹For lo! That day is at hand, burning like an oven. All the arrogant and all the doers of evil shall be straw, and the day that is coming—said the LORD of Hosts—shall burn them to ashes and leave of them neither stock nor boughs. ²⁰But for you who revere My name a sun of victory shall rise ^ato bring healing.^b You shall go forth and stamp like stall-fed calves, ²¹and you shall trample the wicked to a pulp, for they shall be dust beneath your feet on the day that I am preparing—said the LORD of Hosts.

²²Be mindful of the Teaching of My servant Moses, whom I charged at Horeb with laws and rules for all Israel.

²³Lo, I will send the prophet Elijah to you before the coming of the awesome, fearful day of the LORD. ²⁴He shall reconcile parents with children and children with their parents, so that, when I come, I do not strike the whole land with utter destruction.

Lo, I will send the prophet Elijah to you before the coming of the awesome, fearful day of the LORD.

16: This scroll of remembrance is found elsewhere in the Bible (e.g., Exod. 32.32); it is a Mesopotamian concept which becomes especially developed in the idea of the book of life associated with the Jewish high holiday liturgy. 19–24: In most English translations these vv. appear as Mal. 4.1–6. 20: A sun of victory, lit. and in most translations, "a sun of righteousness." To bring healing, lit. and in most translations, "with healing in its wings." The background of the imagery is mythological. The rising of "a sun of righteousness" is a metaphor for the dawn of a new "day," i.e., era of history. 22–24: At its conclusion, Malachi asserts the dominance of Mosaic Torah over the prophetic tradition. See intro. to Malachi and intro. to The Twelve. 23: There is a long tradition of interpretation of this v. expanding on the role of Elijah, the herald of the messianic era; see, e.g., b. Sanh. 118a; b. Eruv. 43b. Since Elijah did not die, but ascended to heaven (2 Kings 2.11), he can return. The awesome, fearful day of the LORD is associated with the "travails of the messiah" in b. Sanh. 118a. It is traditional in Jewish liturgy to repeat this v. after 3.24 so as to conclude the public reading on a strong, hopeful note, rather than the threat of the final phrase of v. 24. This liturgical reading is represented in NJPS by the repetition of the text of v. 23 in a smaller font. (The same holds true for the conclusion of Isaiah, Lamentations, and Ecclesiastes.) 24: The connection between intergenerational reconciliation and Elijah is enigmatic.

a-a Lit. "with healing in the folds of its garments"; others "with healing in its wings."

KETHUVIM

Terminology and Content

THE VAGUE TERM KETHUVIM, "WRITINGS," reflects the variety of material collected in this canonical division, ranging from historical works (e.g., Chronicles), prayers (Psalms), wisdom works (e.g., Job), and apocalyptic prophecy (the second half of Daniel). It is likely that the various books now in this section entered the canon for quite different reasons: Psalms was used for prayers, the Song of Songs was probably first canonized as an ancient erotic poem used in wedding ceremonies, while the books of Job, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes may have been placed together in the canon because all three belong to a category of writing known as wisdom literature. Most likely the books now in Kethuvim came together and were viewed as authoritative and ultimately canonized toward the end of the Second Temple period, after the canonical section Nevi'im was closed, and thus the books now comprising Kethuvim were assembled together, despite their differences, into a single group. The wide variety of the ordering of these books found in manuscripts and canonical lists also reflects the fact that Kethuvim was canonized later than Torah, which has a fixed order, and Nevi'im, where there is only slight variation in the order of the books.

An early order, where the books are largely arranged in what the Rabbis understood to be their chronological sequence (from Ruth to Chronicles), is found in the Babylonian Talmud (b. B. Bat. 15a). No surviving manuscripts, however, have this order. Most sources divide Kethuvim into three parts; however, unlike "the former prophets" and "the latter prophets," no names are extant for each part.

The first section is composed of the three large books Psalms, Proverbs, and Job, either in that order, or in the order Psalms, Job, and Proverbs. Psalms is always the first book, suggesting that in some early sources (e.g., Luke 24.44 and the Dead Sea Scrolls) Psalms may be the title for the entire collection of Kethuvim.

These three large books are typically followed by five smaller books called ḥamesh megillot, "the five scrolls." These books were likely copied together (much like the prophetic collection the Twelve) so that individual short scrolls would not get lost. Many orders exist for these books. The NJPS translation follows one common order, which arranges these books in the order in which they are read in the liturgical year: Song of Songs (Passover in the early spring), Ruth (Shavuot in the late spring), Lamentations (the fast of the ninth of Av in the summer), Ecclesiastes (Sukkot in the fall), and Esther (Purim in the late winter). Another common manuscript order arranges these books according to their attributed dates of authorship: Ruth (period of judges), Song of Songs (by Solomon as a youth), Ecclesiastes (by Solomon when he was old and jaded), Lamentations (by Jeremiah after the destruction of the Temple), and Esther (by Mordecai, during the Persian period).

The last collection is of three historical texts: Daniel (which also contains apocalyptic prophecy), Ezra-Nehemiah, which narrates the history of the early postexilic period, and Chronicles, which very selectively retells history from Adam through the Cyrus declaration of 538 BCE. This is the order found in the NJPS translation, which follows some manuscripts and most printed editions. It is a strange order, since Ezra-Nehemiah is a logical continuation of Chronicles, quite literally beginning where Chronicles ends, with the Cyrus declaration. It is thus not surprising that most manuscripts have Ezra-Nehemiah as the final book of the Bible.

Finally, it is noteworthy that Chronicles and Ezra-Nehemiah are each viewed by Jewish tradition as a single book. Like Samuel and Kings (see “Nevi’im,” p. 451), only under the influence of the Septuagint did some manuscripts and early printed versions of the Bible divide these books into two.

Authorship

THESE BOOKS COME FROM widely diverse time periods. Many show clear linguistic signs of being postexilic; for example, there is clear late Aramaic influence on Ecclesiastes, and Greek influence on Daniel (see the introductions to these books). In fact, historical references in Daniel would place its composition in the 2nd century BCE. Lamentations is clearly from the exilic period (586–538) or very shortly thereafter. Many attributed Ruth to the preexilic period, but it is increasingly being seen nowadays as a postexilic work. Psalms is a collection, containing some psalms which are considered among the earliest of biblical literature (e.g., Ps. 68), and others that are dated on the basis of language or content to the exilic or postexilic periods (Pss. 135; 145). Rabbinic literature attributes many of the works now found in Kethuvim to traditional figures; thus Jeremiah is considered the author of Lamentations, and Solomon is considered the author of Ecclesiastes. In the case of Song of Songs, an attribution of Solomonic authorship was even secondarily added as the first verse of the composition. These attributions, however, are not historically accurate; rather, they reflect a late biblical and early rabbinic desire to enhance these books by connecting them to figures who are central in tradition. Linguistic and other internal evidence, which is investigated in the introductions to each of the books in Kethuvim, is a more reliable way of dating these books.

Wisdom Literature

ACCORDING TO MOST BIBLICAL SCHOLARS, the three books Job, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes should be viewed together as wisdom literature. “Wisdom literature” describes works that do not focus on the nation Israel, on its great formative historical memories, such as the exodus and conquest, on the Temple and Jerusalem, or on covenant as the central theological notion binding together God, the people Israel, and the land of Israel. Wisdom books are thus in some ways a departure from the concerns of other biblical books. They share, rather, as their focus, reflection on universal human concerns, especially the understanding of individual experiences and the maintenance of ordered relationships that lead both to success on the human plane and to divine approval.

In more recent scholarship, the concept of “wisdom” has been criticized as too elastic and amorphous. Indeed, the three wisdom books in this collection are remarkably different from one another and do not form a clear unit: Proverbs, in contrast to Job, suggests that the righteous are rewarded and do not suffer, while Ecclesiastes, in contrast to both Job and Proverbs, is deeply skeptical of the utility of wisdom. In addition, “wisdom” is a modern category, deriving from the beginning of the twentieth century, and thus Job, Proverbs, and Ecclesiastes were not originally grouped together on generic grounds. They nevertheless share a thematic interdependence. Proverbs provides a normative version of a type of ancient Near Eastern thought that looked for pattern and repetition in nature and in the moral life. In this tradition, the regular recurrence of natural phenomena could provide an analogy to guide human beings in their social interactions:

Charcoal for embers and wood for a fire

And a contentious man for kindling strife. (26.21)

The inevitability of the natural occurrence is mirrored in the inevitability of the social one. This kind of thinking then was extended to moral behavior, with the argument that good behavior, like good farming practice, will be rewarded:

He who tends a fig tree will enjoy its fruit,

And he who cares for his master will be honored. (27.18)

Job and Ecclesiastes relate to this normative tradition in different ways. Job denies the inevitability of rewards for living an upright life and decisively refutes the idea that human suffering is always deserved. Ecclesiastes treats the idea of inevitability in a still different way, emphasizing the great power of God that may be seen through the natural repetitions of seasons, tasks, and occupations. Human attempts to circumvent this power, or even to understand it fully, are futile. The themes found in these wisdom texts are found in other biblical texts as well, suggesting that the wisdom school did not have a narrow sphere of influence. Additionally, the themes of the wisdom tradition are continued (with significant changes, as wisdom and Torah become identified) in later postbiblical Jewish works, such as the Apocryphal book of the Wisdom of (Ben) Sirach, which is also known as Ecclesiasticus.

The Historical Books in Kethuvim

MANY OF THE BOOKS IN KETHUVIM (Ruth, Esther, Chronicles, Ezra-Nehemiah, Daniel chs 1–6) may be understood as historical books in the sense that they narrate a past. Much like the historical texts now found in the Former Prophets (see p. 453), however, those found in Kethuvim are not historical in our sense, that is, they are not narratives giving an accurate systematic account that conforms to what really happened.

This is particularly true of the book of Chronicles, which is a retelling with significant variations of the books of Genesis through Kings. It is unclear if its author had access to a significant number of external sources not found in our canonical Bibles, but in any case, a close examination of the book illustrates the remarkable way in which its author deals with sources, rewriting them to fit a particular notion of “historical probability,” namely, what really should have happened based on notions of how the world worked. For example, in the book of Kings, which does not have a clear retribution theory (a theory concerning punishment and reward), the Judean King Manasseh (698/687–642 BCE) is depicted as the most evil king of Judah, who is ultimately responsible for the destruction of the Temple in 586 (2 Kings ch 21). The same source, however, indicates that Manasseh reigned for fifty-five years.

This “contradiction” between the behavior of Manasseh and his long reign did not bother the Deuteronomist, who did not believe that each individual king needed to be punished or rewarded for his behavior. The Chronicler, however, did believe in this type of retribution theology, and the Deuteronomist’s depiction of Manasseh in Kings was clearly very troublesome. For this reason, the Chronicler rewrote the life of Manasseh, adding 2 Chronicles 33.10–13: “The LORD spoke to Manasseh and his people, but they would not pay heed, so the LORD brought against them the officers of the army of the king of Assyria, who took Manasseh captive in manacles, bound him in fetters, and led him off to Babylon. In his distress, he entreated the LORD his God and humbled himself greatly before the God of his fathers. He prayed to Him, and He granted his prayer, heard his plea, and returned him to Jerusalem to his kingdom. Then Manasseh knew that the LORD alone was God.” Thus, Manasseh fits the paradigms that the author of Chronicles believed to be true: All people need to be warned before they are punished; repentance is extremely efficacious; and individuals may only succeed if their behavior is meritorious. These external beliefs forced a revision of the source’s account so that Manasseh’s life could be properly illustrative. Other examples of this type of revisionism are found throughout Chronicles, and are discussed in the introduction to that book (pp. 1712–1717).

Scholars have found similarities between Chronicles and Ezra-Nehemiah and have posited that these works belong to a single large history composed by the Chronicler, which parallels the Deuteronomistic History. A closer look at Chronicles and Ezra-Nehemiah, however, shows that they differ from each other in outlook and vocabulary, and that the general similarities between them are best attributed to the common time in which they were written, most likely the fourth century BCE. Like Chronicles, a strong ideological bias may be detected in Ezra-Nehemiah, and even though it purports to be written close to the events it describes, it must be used with great care by the contemporary historian of ancient Israel.

Ruth and Esther, both now found among the five scrolls, and Daniel are different in genre from Chronicles or Ezra-Nehemiah. They are fictional stories set in historical backgrounds, serving ideological and perhaps esthetic purposes. Clearly artistic from a literary point of view, these books are not simply entertainment: They narrate a past (sometimes a fanciful past) in order to convey lessons relevant to the community. Ruth, a deceptively simple pastoral tale, promotes the principles of hesed, “loyalty,” and of family continuity, elevating it to the national level with the genealogy of David. Esther, a comic farce that uses drinking parties as a major plot device, provides an etiology or origin for the festival of Purim and shows that, despite dire threats to their security, Diaspora Jews can triumph and succeed. Daniel chs 1–6, like Esther, models success in a foreign court and, unlike Esther, stresses that Jews should be faithful to their religious beliefs and practices in the Diaspora. The particular characteristics of these three very different books may be found in the introductions to each book (pp. 1578–79, 1623–25, and 1640–42).

Kethuvim as a Collection

THE OBSERVATIONS ABOVE SHOW THAT KETHUVIM is the most diverse collection of the three canonical divisions. Even though various texts may be grouped together, e.g., as wisdom literature or as historical texts, the individual works that comprise these categories (e.g., Job and Proverbs) have little in common. Kethuvim has no central theme or idea, in the way that the Torah (or Hexateuch) might have the land promise and its fulfillment as its center, or the Prophets as a whole might illustrate the significance of heeding the mediated divine word. In fact, with the exception of Psalms and the five scrolls, which have significant liturgical uses, Kethuvim has not received much attention within Jewish tradition.

This lack of attention is quite unfortunate, for these books are among the most interesting biblical books, and also among the most significant for understanding the Bible as a whole and for following the development from biblical Israel to rabbinic Judaism. Since this collection contains some of the latest books in the Bible (Chronicles, Ezra-Nehemiah, Daniel, Ecclesiastes), it shows us how classical biblical ideas evolved and changed in the late biblical period, as they began to develop into notions that would be much more familiar to readers of Jewish texts beginning with the Hellenistic period (Apocrypha, Pseudepigrapha, and Dead Sea Scrolls) and continuing in early rabbinic literature.

[MARC ZVI BRETTLER]

Psalms

THE BOOK OF PSALMS IS THE FIRST BOOK of Kethuvim, or Writings—probably because of its size and significance and also perhaps because it was the first book in Kethuvim to become authoritative. A text from the Dead Sea Scrolls, MMT^d (4Q397: 14–21; C.9–10), speaks of “the books of Moses and the books of the Prophets and David,” thus indicating its status. (For “David” as a locution for Psalms, see below.)

Psalms is a collection, actually a collection of collections, of poetic prayers. (Prose prayers are also found throughout the Bible, but they are ad hoc, private prayers of individuals.) The origin of most of these poetic prayers is lost in obscurity, but they were preserved because they were likely used liturgically in ancient Israel, certainly in the Second Temple and in some cases perhaps in the First Temple. The Hebrew name of the book, Tehilim, “songs of praise,” is found often in rabbinic literature and is also attested in one of the Dead Sea Scrolls, in a Psalms scroll (11QP^s^a, lines 4–5) which says that David wrote 3,600 tehilim plus other compositions (see below for David as the author of Psalms). The English title “Psalms” derives from the Greek psalmsos, a translation of Hebrew mizmor, “a song with the accompaniment of a stringed instrument.”

There are 150 chapters or psalms in the Masoretic Text of the Hebrew Bible; some chapters may contain two separate psalms (possibly Pss. 19 and 40), while in other cases, one composition has been split into two chapters (e.g., Pss. 9–10 and 42–43). The book crystallized in several different forms in different communities: The LXX contains an additional psalm at the end of the book, and the Syriac Peshitta Bible translation contains five additional psalms. Several of these, as well as some previously unknown compositions, have been found in the Qumran Psalm scroll (11QP^s^a), suggesting that the collection and arrangement of psalms in the early Psalter was fluid, within certain parameters, with no fixed order nor even a set list of compositions to be included.

The book of Psalms is subdivided into five “Books”: I, chapters 1–41 (most of the “Psalms of David” are in this collection); II, 42–72 (containing some psalms of Korah and Asaph); III, 73–89 (almost exclusively the psalms of Korah and Asaph); IV, 90–106 (mostly untitled psalms); V, 107–150 (mostly liturgical psalms for pilgrimages to the Temple and for festivals). The division into books is marked by the insertion of doxologies, short hymnic praises of God, at the end of each book. The doxologies to Books I–IV all begin with the words “Blessed is the LORD.” The last psalm, Ps. 150, serves as the concluding doxology for Book V and for the book of Psalms as a whole (just as Psalm 1 may be viewed as an introduction to the entire book). The division into five books of psalms is designed to parallel the five books of the Torah. As the Rabbis put it: “Moses gave the five books of the Torah to Israel and David gave the five books of Psalms to Israel” (Midrash Shohet Tov, 1.2). This arrangement into five books is artificial and relatively late, and reflects the development from Psalms as a liturgical collection to a Torah-like book to be studied. Strong evidence for the existence of separate collections is: (1) the end of one collection, Ps. 72.20, is clearly marked by the words “End of the prayers of David son of Jesse”; and (2) some psalms were included in two different collections, as is seen by the fact that Pss. 14 and 53 are nearly identical, as are Ps. 18 and 2 Sam. ch 22; Ps. 70 is comprised of Ps. 40.14–18. The first three books seem to have been in place before the last two were added, judging from the fact that 28 out of 33 untitled psalms are found in Books IV and V, and that the differences between the Dead Sea Psalms text and the Masoretic Text occur mostly in Books IV and V. Within the present collections are smaller collections, for example, the Songs of Ascents (the ascent of pilgrims to the Temple Mount; Pss. 120–134), so named from their opening words. Modern scholars speak of the Elohist psalter, Pss. 42–83, in which God is typically referred to as Elohim rather than as LORD (YHVH). Some scholars see clusters of psalms that begin or end with “hallelujah” as subcollections (Pss. 105–106; 111–113; 115–117; 146–150). Other collections have been isolated as well. It remains unclear, however, if the psalms within each collection, and the collections themselves, were arranged according to any overarching principle. It is clear, though, that Psalms, even at 150 chapters, is not the single definitive collection of ancient Israel’s psalms, since similar poems are also found outside of the Psalter (e.g., 1 Sam. 2.1–10; 2 Sam. 23.1–7; Jonah ch 3; Hab. ch 3).

An ancient and pervasive tradition, going back to the Bible itself, attributes the authorship of Psalms to David. David is “the favorite of the songs of Israel” (2 Sam. 23.1), the one who soothed Saul with music (1 Sam. 16.17–23), the classic example of a musician (Amos 6.5), and the founder of Temple singing (2 Chron. 23.18). Deriving from and reinforcing this tradition are the many psalm superscriptions or titles that contain “a psalm of David.” Other superscriptions link a psalm with a specific event in the life of David (Pss. 3; 18; 34; 51; 56). These superscriptions are not original to these psalms, but reflect early interpretive additions that derive from the notion of David as author of the psalms. Early extrabiblical sources show that ancient Jewish and Christian tradition also assumed that David wrote all or most of Psalms. As mentioned above, a Psalms scroll from the Dead Sea Scrolls attributes 3,600 psalms to David (a tradition on the analogy of the Bible’s attribution of 3,000 proverbs and 1,005 songs to Solomon in 1 Kings 5.12). Additionally, Davidic superscriptions occur in that scroll in Pss. 104 and 123, although they are lacking in the Masoretic Text. Along the same lines, the author of Acts, the first century CE New Testament book, assigns Ps. 2 to David (Acts 4.25), even though the psalm itself has no such ascription. This evidence suggests that there was widespread acceptance of the Davidic authorship of the entire Psalter, a tradition that is echoed in rabbinic literature and has continued until modern times in both Jewish and Christian circles. Davidic authorship, however, on the basis of linguistic and contextual evidence, is not accepted as historical fact by modern scholars, but is viewed as a way the ancients linked biblical writings with the appropriate inspired well-known biblical figure, thereby confirming the divine inspiration and the authority of those writings (as is the case in the ascription of Proverbs to Solomon, Lamentations to Jeremiah, and so forth). Not all psalms are specifically attributed to David; some are attributed to the sons of Korah (Ps. 42), to Asaph (Ps. 50), to Ethan the Ezrahite (Ps. 89), to Heman the Ezrahite (Ps. 88), to Solomon (Ps. 72), and to Moses (Ps. 90)—and others bear no ascription at all.

Dating the psalms is notoriously difficult, partly because they contain few explicit references to specific historical events or personages (as noted above, the superscriptions are not useful in this regard). While many modern scholars believe that at least some, perhaps even many of the psalms are from the preexilic period (before 586 BCE), none can be dated on linguistic grounds to the tenth century BCE, the period of David. There is little consensus on the dating of preexilic psalms, or even on which psalms are preexilic. Linguistic analysis can, in general, differentiate between preexilic and postexilic Hebrew, but the analysis is not always refined enough to be definitive. For one thing, poetry is often archaizing, so the presence of older-sounding phrases does not, in itself, prove an early date. Moreover, the hints to specific events that scholars find in the psalms often have more than one possible reference. Dating of psalms is subject to trends in biblical scholarship: At one time many psalms were thought to have originated in the Maccabean era (2nd century BCE), then in the preexilic period, and now more are being seen as products of the exilic or postexilic period. Some psalms clearly date from exilic or postexilic times, as we know from their references to events or their linguistic usages (e.g., Pss. 137; 145). It is also likely that some psalms have an ancient core that was reshaped after the exile into a new psalm. The bane of historical critics may be the virtue of the book of Psalms: The absence of specific historical references results in the poems' being seen as timeless, appropriate to many recurring occasions in the life of the individual or the community.

Many of the psalms have superscriptions containing information other than a personal name. Their terms are not well understood, but some are thought to be musical directions or instruments; for example: sheminith (Ps. 12); ayyeleth ha-shahar (Ps. 22); maskil (Ps. 32). The menatzeah or "leader" often referred to is presumably a choir-leader or chief musician. It is likely that the psalms were sung or recited to musical accompaniment. Psalm 150 indicates that music was a form of praise to God, and terms for praise include "sing . . . a new song" (96.1; 98.1; 149.1), "chant hymns" (147.1), and "sing joyously" (95.1). Unfortunately, the acoustic dimension has been lost, but it must have been an important component of the performance of psalms.

While no psalm is exactly identical with another and many show considerable creativity, all the psalms have similar style, vocabulary, and forms of expression. They share these features with other ancient Near Eastern prayers as well; Israel's borrowing from its neighbors included forms of religious expression. Like all biblical poetry, the psalms make much use of repetition, parallelism, and imagery (see essay on “Biblical Poetry,” pp. 2097–2104). They also have recourse to many of the same themes found elsewhere in the Bible, for these themes were central to the corporate identity of Israel. Included are the themes of creation (which shows God’s supreme power over everything in the world); the promise to Abraham of land and progeny (especially important after the exile); the exodus (the foundational experience in the formation of the people of Israel and their covenant with God); the exile (the key event in the formation of Jewish identity after 586 BCE); the Davidic monarchy (symbol of the continuity of Judah); the centrality of Jerusalem, Zion, and the Temple. (Striking in its absence is the giving of the Decalogue or Torah at Sinai.) In addition, psalms borrow mythological motifs found at Ugarit and elsewhere in the ancient Near East that were known in ancient Israel, such as God the warrior defeating Israel’s enemies, the conquest of the primeval waters (the forces of chaos), and God as king enthroned amid a heavenly court. Not surprisingly, the psalms draw heavily on the religious concepts of ancient Israel; for modern scholars they are a window into the religious experience that the Bible chose to preserve (see essay on the “Religion of the Bible,” pp. 2021–40).

Based on the literary structure or “form” of each psalm, modern form-critical scholars have been concerned to assign to each psalm a genre and a specific social setting (the German term Sitz im Leben is often used) in the religious practice of ancient Israel. This is often conjectural, based on interpreting hints contained in the psalms (see, e.g., Ps. 67.7–8 n.). It is surprising that the psalms contain so few hints (but see 118.27 n.). Like dates, and for much the same reasons, genre labels must be assigned tentatively. Most psalms fall into three general categories (sometimes a psalm partakes of more than one category): hymns of praise; complaints or pleas for help (sometimes called laments); and thanksgiving psalms. Other subcategories, like wisdom psalms (see Ps. 1), royal psalms (see Ps. 2), or Zion psalms, have also been discerned. Several do not address God at all, and can only with great difficulty be classified as prayers. Psalms may be written in the first-person singular, called a psalm of the individual, or in the first-person plural, communal psalms. The speaking voice should not be understood as a sign of authorship, but rather as a literary persona through whom the psalm is conveyed. In fact, psalms often move from an individual speaker to communal speaker; and all psalms, by their inclusion in the Psalter, are property of the community. As is the case in later prayer, a psalm may be recited privately by an individual or publicly by an individual or by a group.

Psalms also occupies a prominent place in Jewish liturgy; some entire psalms are recited as part of the regular service or on special occasions, and many individual verses or passages have found their way into later prayers (see list in “The Bible in the Liturgy,” pp. 1937–48). Additional psalms are recited publicly or privately at times of joy or danger. Some individuals or groups take upon themselves the recitation of all the psalms on a weekly basis.

Praise is the quintessential nature of psalms, and hymns of praise are the most common type of psalm in the Psalter. In the words of Ps. 92.2: “It is good to praise the LORD, to sing hymns to Your name, O Most High.” Most psalms are, in one way or another, aimed at praising God—for His power and beneficence, for His creation of the world, and for His past acts of deliverance to Israel. Often the praise comes after the psalmist has prayed for help from sickness or enemies (the typical subject of complaints) and his prayer has been answered. As part of his complaint, he promises to praise God when he has been delivered from trouble. Thanksgiving for God’s help or beneficence is another form of praise. According to the outlook of Psalms, the main religious function of human beings is to offer praise to God, to proclaim His greatness throughout the world. Thus, the psalms enjoin others to praise God, and they envision a world in which everyone and everything will praise God. This implies a relationship between God and humans, another important dimension of Psalms. God is called upon to hear prayers and to respond; this is one of His attributes. Worst of all is when He “hides His face” and refuses to pay attention to the psalmist, because this puts into question the efficacy of prayer. If there is one primary underlying assumption of the book of Psalms, it is the potential efficacy of prayer.

[ADELE BERLIN AND MARC ZVI BRETTLER]

BOOK ONE

- 1 Happy is the man who has not followed the counsel of the wicked, or taken the path of sinners,
or joined the company of the insolent;
2 rather, the teaching of the LORD is his delight,
and he studies^a that teaching day and night.
3 He is like a tree planted beside streams of water, which yields its fruit in season,
whose foliage never fades, and whatever^b it produces thrives.^b 4 Not so the wicked;
rather, they are like chaff that wind blows away.

a Or “recites”; lit. “utters.” b-b Or “he does prosper.”

Ps. 1: This psalm serves as an introduction to the Psalter, as is suggested by its lack of a superscription or introduction mentioning David unlike most psalms in Book I. It depicts a straightforward system of personal retribution that stands behind many psalms (see also Ezek. ch 18), and it contains a reference to “torah” (v. 2), translated as “teaching,” but perhaps understood as Torah (“Teaching”), the five books of Moses. By placing a reference to Torah at the beginning of this canonical section, the centrality of the first part of the canon, the Torah, is reinforced (see similarly Josh. 1.7–8). The mention of Torah here may also be connected to the fact that the Psalter is divided into five books (see introduction to Psalms), and thus study of the Psalter may also be intended. Many scholars consider Ps. 1 to be a wisdom psalm, based on the contrast between the righteous and the wicked as seen in Proverbs, Job, and Ecclesiastes (see the discussion of “wisdom literature” in “Kethuvim,” pp. 1276–77). Ps. 1, however, does not share extensive terminology with these books, and scholars are beginning to question the usefulness of the designation “wisdom psalms.” 1–3: Standard biblical imagery (e.g., Jer. 17.8 for a tree image and Josh. 1.8 for reciting “torah” day and night) is used to develop the picture of the ideal righteous individual. This individual is first described through what he does not do (v. 1), then through what he does (v. 2), and then via a simile. Followed . . . taken . . . joined . . . does not fully capture the imagery of location and movement in the Heb “walk, stand, sit.” 2: Day and night is figurative for “always,” though the Dead Sea Scroll community took it literally, suggesting that “[I]n the place in which the Ten assemble there should not be missing a man to interpret the law day and night, always relieving each other” (1QS 6.6–7, as translated in Florentino García Martínez and Eibert J.C. Tigchelaar, The Dead Sea Scrolls Study Edition [Leiden: Brill, 1997], vol. 1, p. 83). This psalm is unusual in its stress on Torah study rather than observance based on Torah study (see Josh. 1.7–8); it

5 Therefore the wicked will not survive judgment, nor will sinners, in the assembly of the righteous.

6 For the LORD cherishes the way of the righteous,
but the way of the wicked is doomed.

2 Why do nations assemble, and peoples plot^a vain things;
2 kings of the earth take their stand, and regents intrigue together against the LORD and against His anointed?

3 “Let us break the cords of their yoke, shake off their ropes from us!”

4 He who is enthroned in heaven laughs;
the Lord mocks at them.

5 Then He speaks to them in anger, terrifying them in His rage,

6 “But I have installed My king on Zion, My holy mountain!”

7 Let me tell of the decree:
the LORD said to me,

^b“You are My son,
I have fathered you this day.”^b a Lit. “utter.” b-b Compare 2 Sam. 7.14, and Ps. 89.27 ff.

thus approaches the rabbinic ideal of “torah lishmah,” Torah study for its own sake, as an end in itself.

3: And whatever it produces thrives is ambiguous, referring either to the tree or the righteous individual.

4–5: The depiction of the wicked is much shorter, and in the plural, whereas the righteous person was spoken of in the singular. In contrast to the deeply rooted tree, the wicked are insubstantial chaff, the light outside husk of grain that flies away during winnowing.

5: Judgment refers to a court case. Medieval Jewish interpretation traditionally understands this judgment as the afterworld (e.g., Ibn Ezra and Radak), but interest in the afterworld is largely a post-biblical development (see Dan. 12.2 n.). 6: The final v. sums up the fate of both the righteous of vv. 1–3 and the wicked of vv. 4–5.

Most biblical verses may be divided into two halves of relatively equal size (see “Biblical Poetry,” pp. 2097–2104). Here, the second half is substantially shorter than the first, mimicking the structure of vv. 4–5 in contrast to vv. 1–3, again emphasizing the insubstantial nature of the wicked.

Ps. 2: Some traditions see this as a continuation of Ps 1. (A variant in the New Testament quotes from this psalm, calling it “the first,” and the Talmud in b. Ber. 9b–10a notes that Pss. 1–2 are a single psalm, enclosed by the inclusio “happy” [1.1 and 2.12]). There are several vocabulary links between these psalms, but the differences in style, tone, and theme outweigh these similarities, suggesting that the medieval tradition, which sees them as separate psalms, is correct. Most modern scholars classify this psalm as a royal psalm, and connect it to other psalms concerning kings. (One possible list of royal psalms: Pss. 2; 18; 20; 21; 45; 72; 89; 101; 110; 132; 144.) None of these mentions a specific king by name, and their origin and uses remain obscure. The context in which this psalm might be recited is also obscure, though it is significant to note that a divine (perhaps prophetic) oracle is quoted (vv. 6–9), and that the nations are spoken to as if they are present (vv. 10–12). Like Ps. 1, it lacks a superscription; Ps. 2 may not have originally been at the beginning of the Psalter, but perhaps was inserted toward the beginning to emphasize the royal nature (connected with King David) of the Psalter. 1–2: The attack depicted is extreme and hyperbolic. 2: Since anointing was the major performative ritual of kingship (e.g., 1 Sam. 10.1), His anointed may refer to the king. The same term “mashiah” is used in postbiblical literature (but never in the Bible) to refer to the ideal future Davidic king, and is the origin of the term “Messiah.” The relationship between God and king is very close; the attack against the LORD is equated with that against His anointed, suggesting that the (Davidic) king was viewed by some as God’s earthly representative. (See also the striking filial language in v. 7 and Ps. 45.) This idea is picked up in many depictions of the ideal future Davidic king, called Messiah in postbiblical texts. 3: Similar animal yoke imagery is found later in rabbinic expressions: “the yoke of commandments,” “the yoke of the Torah,” and “the yoke of the kingdom of heaven.” 4: The Bible contains various conceptions of where God resides. 1 Kings 8.32 similarly argues that God dwells in heaven; for two different conceptions see 1 Kings 8.13 and 27. 6: Zion, a synonym for Jerusalem, is typically depicted as holy (e.g., Isa. 52.1; Ps. 20.3); Zion and Davidic kingship are often connected in the Bible. God is here envisaged as present both in heaven (v. 4) and in Jerusalem (see 1 Kings 8.13), perhaps (hyperbolically) where this mountain and heaven meet. 7: Adoption language expresses the close kinship between God and the king, and is common in the ancient Near East. Some biblical passages may sug-

- 8 Ask it of Me,
and I will make the nations your domain;
your estate, the limits of the earth.
- 9 You can smash them with an iron mace, shatter them like potter's ware."
- 10 So now, O kings, be prudent; accept discipline, you rulers of the earth!
- 11 Serve the LORD in awe; ^atremble with fright,^a
- 12 ^bpay homage in good faith,^b lest He be angered, and your way be doomed in the mere flash of His anger.
Happy are all who take refuge in Him.

3 A psalm of David when he fled from his son Absalom.

- 2 O LORD, my foes are so many!
Many are those who attack me;
- 3 many say of me,
"There is no deliverance for him through God."
Selah.^c
- 4 But You, O LORD, are a shield about me, my glory, He who holds my head high.
- 5 I cry aloud to the LORD,
and He answers me from His holy mountain.
Selah.
- 6 I lie down and sleep and wake again,
for the LORD sustains me.
- 7 I have no fear of the myriad forces arrayed against me on every side.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; others "rejoice with trembling."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c A liturgical direction of uncertain meaning.

gest that some groups in ancient Israel viewed the king as divine; see 45.7 n. The son language here has played a significant role in medieval Jewish-Christian polemic (e.g., the final comment of Radak on this psalm). The decree cited may be 2 Sam. 7.14, where God says to David concerning his heir: "I will be a father to him, and he shall be a son to Me." 10-12: In a rhetorical flourish, God is depicted as speaking directly to the foreign monarchs. A similar depiction of the centrality of God and Zion for all nations is also found in Isa. 2.2-4, but is there in an eschatological setting. 12: As noted, the translation in good faith is uncertain. The Heb word "bar" can also mean "son," especially in Aramaic, and this has sometimes been connected to the divinely adopted son ("ben") in v. 7.

Ps. 3: This may have originally been the first psalm (see introductory notes to Pss. 1 and 2); it is the first of many psalms with a superscription or title mentioning David. It also reflects a typical genre of psalms, the individual petition (also called the lament of the individual), in which an individual asks God for help. 1: Several psalms have introductions which connect their content to the life of David as depicted in Samuel (e.g., Pss. 18; 51); the superscription here refers to events narrated in 2 Sam. 15-19. These historical superscriptions reflect a type of inner-biblical interpretation (see "Inner-biblical Interpretation," pp. 1829-35, and "Midrash," pp. 1863-75) in which individual psalms are connected to the life of David. The Heb and Gk (Septuagint) texts show significant variation in these superscriptions, indicating that they are a late, secondary element. The phrase of David may mean written by David, or in the style of David (cf. a Mil-tonic Ode); already in early post-biblical tradition, the former was assumed, in support of other traditions that see David as the author of Psalms (see introduction).

The word psalm, translating Heb "mizmor," is a borrowing from Gk. Both words mean a song sung to the accompaniment of a stringed instrument (see esp. 33.2; 92.4; 144.9). 2-3: A description of the psalmist's numerous troubles; this is highlighted by the threefold repetition of many. 3: Selah is most likely a musicological term, of uncertain meaning and etymology, typically appearing at major disjunctures in a psalm. The Septuagint translates it as "an interlude," while another ancient Gk translation, the early Church father Jerome, and some medievals render it as "always." Radak understands it as "with a raised voice," from the Heb root "s-l-l," "to raise." Some modern scholars view it as an abbreviation, though it is not known to what extent abbreviations were used in ancient Israel. Selah is found only in the Psalter and in the psalm in Hab. ch 3. 4-7: The contrast between the many enemies and the single God, more powerful than the lot of them. 5: It is unclear exactly how God answers me from His holy mountain, in other words whether the psalmist saw or heard some clear sign or oracle of God's attention. 6-7: The confidence motif is central to many such

- 8 Rise, O LORD!
Deliver me, O my God!
For You slap all my enemies in the face;^a
You break the teeth of the wicked.
- 9 Deliverance is the LORD's;
Your blessing be upon Your people! Selah.

4^bFor the leader; with instrumental music.^b
A psalm of David.

- 2 Answer me when I call,
O God, my vindicator!
You freed me from distress;
have mercy on me and hear my prayer.
- 3 You men, how long will my glory be mocked,
will you love illusions,
have recourse to frauds? Selah.
- 4 Know that the LORD singles out the faithful for Himself;
the LORD hears when I call to Him.
- 5 So tremble, and sin no more;
ponder it on your bed, and sigh.^c
- 6 Offer sacrifices in righteousness and trust in the LORD.
- 7 Many say, "O for good days!"
^dBestow Your favor on us,^d O LORD.
- 8 You put joy into my heart
when their grain and wine show increase.
- 9 Safe and sound, I lie down and sleep, ^efor You alone, O LORD, keep me secure.^e

a Lit. "cheek."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Others "be still."

d-d Lit. "Lift up the light of Your countenance upon us"; cf. Num. 6.25 f.

e-e Or "for You, O LORD, keep me alone and secure."

psalms. The psalmist may have received some type of sign or oracle of divine support (see v. 5 n.), or perhaps the recitation of the psalm itself put him into a confident mood. (See also 6.9–11 n.)

8–9: These vv. have an odd mixture of tenses and moods not fully conveyed in the English: God is commanded to act, but the defeat of the enemies is depicted in the past. This may reflect the certainty of the psalmist that his petition has been heeded. Such mixing of tenses is frequent at the conclusion of individual petitions. 9: The psalm concludes by moving from the individual to the community, upon Your people.

Ps. 4: This is an unusual individual petition: it is unclear what the petitioner's problem might be; it highlights the psalmist's confidence in God more than his troubles; and it focuses more on others than on the psalmist. Radak, followed by some early modern commentators, connects this psalm to the previous one and understands "them" as those allied with Absalom and his rebellion against David. More likely, v. 6, Offer sacrifices in righteousness, suggests a Temple setting. 1: The meaning of the two terms translated as leader and instrumental music is uncertain; it was already lost in antiquity, as reflected in the divergent renditions found in the ancient biblical translations. 2: The Heb, followed in this translation, reflects an imperative, a past, and two imperatives, suggesting that based on a past experience of salvation, the psalmist, again in straits, wants to be saved again; other ancient translations reflect different tenses. 3–7: The psalmist's adversaries are addressed; they are called men (v. 3) and many (v. 7). 4: Faithful translates "ḥasid." In most psalms "ḥasid" is likely a generic term for the righteous individual, though in some Second Temple writings, it may refer to a specific group of Jews (see 2 Maccabees 14.6, where the Greek "asidaioi" refers to the followers of Judah the Maccabee). 6: The Heb tolerates both sacrifices in righteousness (Ibn Ezra, Radak) and sacrifices of righteousness (Rashi). If the former is meant, it may be connected to Isa. 1. 10–17, which stresses that sacrifices are not automatically efficacious, while the latter idea may be connected to Ps. 51.19, "True sacrifice to God is a contrite spirit." In either case, the word righteousness ("tzedek") recalls God's title in v. 2 as my vindicator, lit. "of my righteousness" ("tzidki")—a righteous deity must be offered righteous offerings. 7: Bestow Your favor on us is lit. "lift up for us the light of your face." As in the priestly blessing in Num. 6.25, the striking anthropomorphism of God's shining face refers to divine blessing. 9: Anxiety causes sleeplessness (6.7–8), while full confidence in God allows for untroubled sleep, even in distress, as in 3.6.

5^aFor the leader; on nehiloth.^a A psalm of David.

2 Give ear to my speech, O LORD;
consider my utterance.

3 Heed the sound of my cry,
my king and God,
for I pray to You.

4 Hear my voice, O LORD, at daybreak;
at daybreak I plead before You, and wait.

5 For You are not a God who desires wickedness;
evil cannot abide with You;

6 wanton men cannot endure in Your sight.
You detest all evildoers;

7 You doom those who speak lies;
murderous, deceitful men the LORD abhors.

8 But I, through Your abundant love, enter Your house;

I bow down in awe at Your holy temple.

9 O LORD, ^blead me along Your righteous [path]^b
because of my watchful foes;
make Your way straight before me.

10 For there is no sincerity on their lips;^c their heart is [filled with] malice;
their throat is an open grave;
their tongue slippery.

11 Condemn them, O God;
let them fall by their own devices;
cast them out for their many crimes,
for they defy You.

12 But let all who take refuge in You rejoice, ever jubilant as You shelter them;
and let those who love Your name exult in
You.

13 For You surely bless the righteous man, O LORD, encompassing him with favor like a shield.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Or "as You are righteous, lead me."

c Lit. "mouth."

Ps. 5: Petitions to God have a similar structure to petitions to a human: The one petitioned is invoked; a petition explaining the need, typically in the imperative, is offered; and (a) motivation(s) for why this petition should be heard is/are outlined. Here, God is invoiced as O LORD (v. 2) with the imperatives Give ear, consider, Heed, and Hear (vv. 2–4). The psalmist's need in this case is vague; this allows the psalm to be reused in a wide variety of situations. Several reasons are given for why God should heed the petition: God de-spises evildoers (vv. 5–7), because of my watchful foes (vv. 9–11), and because rectification of the situation will encourage the already faithful (vv. 12–13). The poetic diction of the psalm is quite standard, often using parallelism (see "Biblical Poetry," pp. 2097–2104), as in v. 2: Give ear || consider and my speech || my utterance. 3: The psalmist's view of God is highly personal, as my king and (my) God. The image of God as king is frequent in the psalms, esp. in Pss. 93–100; here it expresses God's interest in His subjects and His ability to help them. In the words of Radak: "I am crying out to you just as one cries out to a king." 4: This verse may reflect a ritual performed at daybreak, or daybreak as the expected time of divine deliverance (see 46.6). 6–8: These vv. express the idea that sinners were not welcome at the Jerusalem Temple (see intro. to Ps. 15). 6: The evildoers ("po'alei 'aven") are often mentioned in Psalms, always in the plural, and may represent a particular group of maleficent individuals. 8: It is uncertain if this is a description of the individual worshipping in Jerusalem, as in this translation, or if it should be read as a wish, "... may I enter ... may I bow," in which case the psalmist's enemies are preventing him from going to Jerusalem. Love here translates "hesed," a frequent attribute of God in the Bible. "Hesed," a common biblical term, describes the relationship between individuals or groups, and between God and human beings, especially Israel. It expresses both an attitude and actions devolving from that attitude; English "loyalty" best approximates its sense, which combines obligation and kindness or favor. When used of God toward Israel, it may be related to the covenant, and it expresses God's faithfulness, goodness, and graciousness. 12–13: As in 3.9, the conclusion moves from the individual to the community. 13: Since the theme of the psalm is divine protection from enemies, it concludes with the simile of God as a shield.

6^aFor the leader; with instrumental music on the sheminith.^a A psalm of David.

- 2 O LORD, do not punish me in anger,
do not chastise me in fury.
- 3 Have mercy on me, O LORD, for I languish; heal me, O LORD, for my bones shake with terror.
- 4 My whole being is stricken with terror, while You, LORD—O, how long!
- 5 O LORD, turn! Rescue me!
Deliver me as befits Your faithfulness.
- 6 For there is no praise of You among the dead;
in Sheol, who can acclaim You?
- 7 I am weary with groaning;
every night I drench my bed,
I melt my couch in tears.
- 8 My eyes are wasted by vexation,
worn out because of all my foes.
- 9 Away from me, all you evildoers, for the LORD heeds the sound of my weeping.
- 10 The LORD heeds my plea,
the LORD accepts my prayer.
- 11 All my enemies will be frustrated and stricken with terror;
they will turn back in an instant, frustrated.

7^a*Shiggaion* of David,^a which he sang to the LORD, concerning Cush, a Benjaminite.

- 2 O LORD, my God, in You I seek refuge; deliver me from all my pursuers and save me,

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Ps. 6: This psalm has entered the Jewish liturgy as the daily prayer for supplication (“tahanun”), recited every weekday morning. It is the paradigmatic individual petition (see intro. to Ps. 5), opening with a divine invocation (v. 2, O LORD), followed by imperatives describing the petitioner’s condition and problems (vv. 2–3), and offering a set of motivations for divine intervention: God’s “hesed” (see 5.8 n.), and the fact that if God kills the petitioner, He will no longer hear his praise (v. 6). The psalm is tightly structured, in balanced verses. It uses repetition very effectively, as seen in “b-h-l” in vv. 3 (shake with terror), 4 (stricken with terror), and 11 (stricken with terror). The Heb expresses the turn in fortunes through an anagram: God’s turning (“shuv” v. 5) is transposed into the enemies’ becoming frustrated (“bush” v. 11); these are combined at the psalm’s conclusion “yashuvu yevoshu,” they will turn back . . . frustrated. The psalmist is ill (v. 3), scared (v. 4), and is being persecuted by enemies (v. 11). This allows the psalm to be used on multiple occasions. 1: The sheminith is most likely a type of musical instrument, perhaps with eight strings (from Heb “she-moneh”). 2–4: The plea, O, how long, found in other psalms as well (e.g., 74.10; 80.5), is part of the Near Eastern prayer tradition; see, for example, a Mesopotamian prayer to the goddess Ishtar, which includes: “How long, O my Lady, will you be angered so that your face is turned away? How long, O my Lady, will you be infuriated so that your spirit is enraged?” (modified translation from ANET, p. 385). 2: Like other psalms of this type, this psalm contains no confession of guilt. 4–5: The elliptical O, how long! is connected to the following turn; the psalmist is saying, How long will You neglect me, hiding Your face from me (see introduction; Deut. 31.18)? On God’s faithfulness (“hesed”), see 5.8. 6: Biblical Israel knew of no afterlife with reward and punishment—everyone, irrespective of behavior or social status, descended to “She’ol,” the dark underworld, and lived a quasi-life there. Among the dead may also be translated “in the place of death,” paralleling “She’ol.” 9–11: The Heb tenses are better reflected by rendering: “Away . . . has heard . . . has heeded . . . will be frustrated.” The back-and-forth movement may express the psalmist’s religious conviction that God will hear his prayer, and thus he simultaneously expresses hope and certainty. Alternately, a ritual was performed (perhaps by a cultic prophet) through which the psalmist understood that God will come to his help; perhaps this is reflected in Lam. 3.57, “You have ever drawn nigh when I called You; You have said, ‘Do not fear!’” A similar ritual may also be reflected in Ps. 12.6, where God is quoted in the middle of the psalm.

Ps. 7: This psalm is a petition of the individual like the previous one; the two are very different, however, in structure and tone, illustrating the flexibility of the 3 lest, like a lion, they tear me apart, rending in pieces, and no one save me.

4 O LORD, my God, if I have done such things,
if my hands bear the guilt of wrongdoing,
5 if I have dealt evil to my ally—
^aI who rescued my foe without reward^a—6 then let the enemy pursue and overtake me;
let him trample my life to the ground,
and lay my body in the dust. Selah.

7 Rise, O LORD, in Your anger; assert Yourself^b against the fury of my foes;^b
bestir Yourself on my behalf;
You have ordained judgment.

8 ^cLet the assembly of peoples gather about You, with You enthroned above, on high.^c

9 The LORD judges the peoples;
vindicate me, O LORD,
for the righteousness and blamelessness that are mine.

10 Let the evil of the wicked come to an end,
but establish the righteous;
he who probes the mind and conscience^d is God
the righteous.

11 ^eI look to God to shield me;^e
the deliverer of the upright.

12 God vindicates the righteous;
God ^fpronounces doom^f each day.

13 ^gIf one does not turn back, but whets his sword, bends his bow and aims it, 14 then against himself he readies deadly weapons, and makes his arrows sharp.^g

15 See, he hatches evil, conceives mischief, and gives birth to fraud.

16 He has dug a pit and deepened it, and will fall into the trap he made.

17 His mischief will recoil upon his own head;
his lawlessness will come down upon his skull.

18 I will praise the LORD for His righteousness, and sing a hymn to the name of the LORD Most High.

genre. Ps. 7, unlike 6, contains a protestation of innocence (vv. 4-6), emphasizes God's role as a warrior (see v. 7 n.), and concludes with the wisdom idea that evil will befall the one who initiates it (vv. 13-17). 1: In contrast to other superscriptions that refer to events mentioned in Samuel, the reference to Cush is puzzling; no such name occurs in Samuel. Rabbinic interpreters (e.g., Targum, but rejected by Ibn Ezra) took Cush as a reference to "Saul, son of Kish." The superscription may refer to a story about David that was not incorporated into Samuel. 4-6: This short section, concluded by Selah (see 3.3 n.), is a protestation of innocence in the form of a self-imprecation. A much longer self-imprecation is found in Job ch 31; in Pss. 17 and 26 the psalmists likewise insist that they are punished unfairly by God. 7: In the previous psalm, the individual feels that God is unjustly using his anger against him; our psalmist wants God to use his anger justly against his enemies. The demand to rise (Heb "kumah") may recall God's role as warrior, as in Num. 10.35, "Advance (or rise: Heb "kumah"), O LORD! May Your enemies be scattered, And may Your foes flee before You!" Bestir Yourself (Heb "'urah") is more literally "awake." Some psalms imagine God as sleeping, as in 44.24, "Rouse Yourself (Heb "'urah"); why do You sleep, O Lord? Awaken, do not reject us forever!" while 121.4 states categorically: "See, the guardian of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps!" 9-10: Through the punishment of the wicked, the psalmist is vindicated. 11: As in 5.13, God is a shield, protecting the supplicant from his enemies. 15-17: A similar notion predominates in wisdom texts, e.g., Prov. 26.27: "He who digs a pit will fall in it, And whoever rolls a stone, it will roll back on him." 18: A common motif in petitions is that if the plea is heeded, the psalmist will utter praise and thanksgiving to God. Most High (Heb "'elyon") is an ancient Canaanite divine epithet a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; others "or stripped my foe clean."

b-b Or "in Your fury against my foes." c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d Lit. "kidneys." e-e Cf. Ibn Ezra and Kimhi; lit. "My Shield is upon God."

f-f Others "has indignation."

g-g Meaning of vv. 13-14 uncertain; an alternate rendering, with God as the main subject, is: ¹³If one does not turn back, He whets His sword, / bends His bow and aims it; / ¹⁴deadly weapons He prepares for him, / and makes His arrows sharp.

8^a For the leader; on the gittith.^a A psalm of David.

2 O LORD, our Lord, How majestic is Your name throughout the earth,
^bYou who have covered the heavens with Your splendor!^b

3 ^aFrom the mouths of infants and sucklings
You have founded strength on account of Your foes,
to put an end to enemy and avenger.^a

4 When I behold Your heavens, the work of Your fingers,
the moon and stars that You set in place,
what is man that You have been mindful of him,
mortal man that You have taken note of him,
that You have made him little less than divine,^c and adorned him with glory and majesty;
You have made him master over Your handiwork,
laying the world at his feet,
sheep and oxen, all of them,
and wild beasts, too;
the birds of the heavens, the fish of the sea,
whatever travels the paths of the seas.

10 O LORD, our Lord, how majestic is Your name throughout the earth!

9^d For the leader; ‘almuth labben.^d A psalm of David.

2 I will praise You, LORD, with all my heart;
I will tell all Your wonders.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; or “You whose splendor is celebrated all over the heavens!”

c Or “the angels.”

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain; some mss. and ancient versions, ‘al muth labben, as though “over the death of the son.”

used for the deities Baal and El; it was taken over by Israel, and used of God.

Ps. 8: Five consecutive individual petitions (Pss. 3–7) are followed by a hymn, a psalm singing God’s praises. This psalm is pure praise, without any request, and like other hymns from the Bible and the ancient Near East expresses the religious moment when the individual stands before the deity and appreciates the greatness and power of the divine. Like Pss. 19 and 104, its hymnic focus is on creation, a motif that shows God’s power over the entire world. This psalm is tightly structured, framed by the inclusio (vv. 2, 10): “O LORD, our Lord, How majestic is Your name throughout the earth.”

2: The parallelism highlights the complete extent of God’s power (name) and splendor, on the earth and in the heavens. 3: Though somewhat obscure, this seems to emphasize that even very young children recognize God’s majesty. The enemy and avenger likely refer to sea-monsters, whom God subdued while creating the world. Though this is not mentioned in Genesis, fragments of a creation story known from Ugarit, where God subdues the sea, are found throughout the Bible and in rabbinic literature (see 7.4.12–17; Job 26.12; Isa. 51.9 n.). 4: The finery of God’s creation is not handiwork, but the work of Your fingers. As noted by Ibn Ezra and Radak, the sun is lacking; according to some medieval and modern scholars, this is because the psalm was recited at night. 6–9: As in Gen. 1.26–30, humans are very highly regarded (contrast Job 17.17–18 and ch 26). “‘Elohim” is properly translated as divine; this explains why people are adorned . . . with glory and majesty, typically divine qualities. Thus, the tradition that “‘elohim” should be rendered here as angels (Septuagint, Targum, Radak) is incorrect, and is the result of the discomfort of depicting humans as too God-like—a discomfort surely not shared by this psalmist.

Ps. 9: As v. 2 suggests (I will praise You, LORD, with all my heart), this is a psalm of thanksgiving. Various pieces of evidence taken together suggest, however, that Ps. 9 does not stand by itself; rather 9–10 were originally a single psalm. The Septuagint treats them as a single psalm. Ps. 10 is the only psalm between Pss. 3 and 32 lacking a superscription, a sign that it is the second half of Ps. 9. Finally, the beginning and ending of an acrostic is preserved in the combined Pss. 9–10 (the first two letters are found in 9.2, 4, while the last two are found in 10.15, 17; fuller acrostics occur in Pss. 25; 34; 37; 111; 112; 119; 145; and Lam. chs 1–4). 1: This superscription is especially difficult, and many medievals struggle

- 3 I will rejoice and exult in You, singing a hymn to Your name, O Most High.
- 4 When my enemies retreat,
they stumble to their doom at Your presence.
- 5 For You uphold my right and claim, enthroned as righteous judge.
- 6 You blast the nations;
You destroy the wicked;
You blot out their name forever.
- 7 ^aThe enemy is no more—ruins everlasting;
You have torn down their cities;
their very names are lost.^a
- 8 But the LORD abides forever;
He has set up His throne for judgment;
it is He who judges the world with righteousness,
rules the peoples with equity.
- 10 The LORD is a haven for the oppressed,
a haven in times of trouble.
- 11 Those who know Your name trust You,
for You do not abandon those who turn to You,
O LORD.
- 12 Sing a hymn to the LORD, ^bwho reigns in Zion;^b declare His deeds among the peoples.
- 13 ^cFor He does not ignore the cry of the afflicted;
He who requites bloodshed is mindful of them.^c
- 14 Have mercy on me, O LORD;
see my affliction at the hands of my foes,
You who lift me from the gates of death,
so that in the gates of ^dFair Zion^d
I might tell all Your praise,
I might exult in Your deliverance.
- 16 The nations sink in the pit they have made;
their own foot is caught in the net they have hidden.
- 17 The LORD has made Himself known:
He works judgment;
the wicked man is snared by his own devices.
Higgaion.^e Selah.
- 18 Let the wicked be^f in Sheol, all the nations who ignore God!

to understand the possible historical context of "over the death of the son," if that is the correct translation (see translators' note).

2-3: Each of the four lines opens with "alef," the first letter of the Heb alphabet, anchoring the acrostic. 3: On Most High, see 7.8. 4-7: The finality of the vanquishing of the enemy (forever, no more, everlasting, are lost) is hyperbolic, since the enemies reappear in vv. 20-21. 5: The main image is God enthroned as king; like the ancient Israelite king, He is judge and warrior, but He carries out these roles with greater power and equity than human monarchs. 8-9: Parts of these vv., with slight variants, are found elsewhere (v. 8: Pss. 29.10; 102.13; Lam. 5.19; v. 9: Pss. 96.13; 98.9); such repetitions offer some hints about the composition of the psalms, as authors reused traditional phrases.

8: Abides is better rendered "is enthroned," continuing the main theme of God's kingship. 10-13: As in many other places in the Bible, Psalms shows great concern for the oppressed, afflicted, and poor. 12-15: The call to others to praise God and the explicit mention of the gates of Fair Zion suggest that psalms such as this were recited publicly, though not always at the Temple. 12: God reigns in Zion, enthroned in the Temple (see Exod. 25.21-22). 14: Images such as lift me from the gates of death or "You brought me up from Sheol" (30.4) are always metaphorical in the Bible, which by and large lacks a concept of personal resurrection; similar phrases are used in Akkadian literature to express salvation from severe illness or danger.

16: See 7.15-17. 17: Higgaion is probably a musical notation, related to the Heb root "h-g-h" meaning to utter (quietly) or recite. 18: A polite way of saying "may the wicked die" (see 6.6 n.).

19-21: Beginning with an acknowledgment that God is not always or immediately fair in doling out retribution, the psalmist calls upon God to rise, namely to immediately show Himself as a warrior (see 7.7 n. and Ps. 13). The psalm-a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Or "O You who dwell in Zion."

c-c Order of Hebrew clauses inverted for clarity. d-d Lit. "the Daughter of Zion."

e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. f Others "return to."

19 Not always shall the needy be ignored, nor the hope of the afflicted forever lost.
20 Rise, O LORD!
Let not men have power;
let the nations be judged in Your presence.
21 ^aStrike fear into them, ^aO LORD;
let the nations know they are only men.

Selah.

10 Why, O LORD, do You stand aloof, heedless in times of trouble?
2 The wicked in his arrogance hounds the lowly—^bmay they be caught in the schemes they devise!^b
3 ^aThe wicked crows about his unbridled lusts;
the grasping man reviles and scorns the LORD.
4 The wicked, arrogant as he is,
in all his scheming [thinks],^a “He does not call to account;
“God does not care.”^c
5 His ways prosper at all times;
Your judgments are far beyond him;
he snorts at all his foes.
6 He thinks, “I shall not be shaken, through all time never be in trouble.”
7 His mouth is full of oaths, deceit, and fraud;
mischief and evil are under his tongue.
8 He lurks in outlying places;
from a covert he slays the innocent;
his eyes spy out the hapless.
9 He waits in a covert like a lion in his lair;
waits to seize the lowly;
he seizes the lowly as he pulls his net shut;
10 he stoops, he crouches, ^aand the hapless fall prey to his might.^a 11 He thinks, “God is not mindful,
He hides His face, He never looks.”
12 Rise, O LORD!
^dStrike at him, ^dO God!
Do not forget the lowly.
13 Why should the wicked man scorn God, thinking You do not call to account?
14 You do look!
You take note of mischief and vexation!
^aTo requite is in Your power.^a ist’s claim that God should do this for His own sake, for the sake of His reputation (rather than for the psalmist or for Israel), is a major theme of Ezekiel (e.g., 5.13; 20.9). 20: The conception of humanity here is in stark contrast to the previous psalm (see vv. 6–9), a striking reminder of the number of different religious moods encompassed in the Psalter.

Ps. 10: A continuation of the previous psalm (see Ps. 9 n.). The calls to God to act (vv. 1, 12, 15) continue 9.20–21. In fact, both 9.20 and 10.12 begin Rise, O LORD!, further suggesting the unity of these two psalms. 1: The psalmist continues, wanting to know why God hides His face (see v. 11 and 6.4–5 n.). 2: Continuing a previous theme, the persecution of the lowly (see also vv. 9, 10, 14, 18). 3–5: These vv. are unusually obscure. The acrostic of Pss. 9–10 is not apparent here, suggesting that the vv. are corrupt. 4: The translation of Heb “There is no God” as God does not care is based on the assumption that atheism did not exist in antiquity (see also 14.1). People could, however, believe in a deity who created the world, but then absented himself from running it. 7: Here and elsewhere in Psalms there is tremendous concern for what is in the mouth of the wicked person. Some modern scholars therefore believe that the evildoers of the Psalms are evil magicians, casting spells upon the hapless. 8–9: The emphasis is on covert places; the wicked are not seen in their activities and cannot be punished by human courts, so the psalmist needs to call on God (Radak to v. 1). 11–12: The Heb root “sh-k-l” joins these two vv. together: the wicked believes that God has forgotten (translated God is not mindful), but the psalmist tells God Do not forget the lowly.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Or “they (i.e., the lowly) are caught by the schemes they devised.”

c-c Lit. “There is no God.” d-d Lit. “Lift Your hand.”

To You the hapless can entrust himself;
 You have ever been the orphan's help.
 15 O break the power of the wicked and evil man, so that when You ^alook for^a his wickedness
 You will find it no more.

16 The LORD is king for ever and ever;
 the nations will perish from His land.
 17 You will listen to the entreaty of the lowly,
 O LORD,
 You will make their hearts firm;
 You will incline Your ear 18 to champion the orphan and the downtrodden, ^bthat men who are of the earth tyrannize no more.^b

11 For the leader. Of David.

In the LORD I take refuge;
 how can you say to me,
 "Take to ^cthe hills like a bird!^c 2 For see, the wicked bend the bow, they set their arrow on the string to shoot from the shadows at the upright.
 3 ^dWhen the foundations are destroyed,
 what can the righteous man do?"^d 4 The LORD is in His holy palace;
 the LORD—His throne is in heaven;
 His eyes behold, His gaze searches mankind.
 5 The LORD seeks out the righteous man, but loathes the wicked one who loves injustice.
 6 He will rain down upon the wicked blazing coals and sulfur;
 a scorching wind shall be ^etheir lot.^e
 7 For the LORD is righteous;
 He loves righteous deeds;
 the upright shall behold His face.

a-a A play on darash, which in vv. 4 and 13 means "to call to account."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; lit. "your hill, bird!"

d-d Or "For the foundations are destroyed; what has the Righteous One done?" Or "If the foundations are destroyed, what has the righteous man accomplished?"

e-e Lit. "the portion of their cup."

16: The image of God as king (and thus judge and warrior) that stands behind these two psalms is made explicit here. The LORD is king for ever and ever recalls the earlier (9.6), "You blot out their name forever." 17: The Heb ends with a past tense, "you have heeded," expressing a pattern of confidence seen at the conclusion of many psalms (see 3.6–7 n.); the translation You will listen, which sees the tense as less significant, follows Radak.

Ps. 11: Though this psalm contains standard motifs of the Psalter, it is odd structurally. It invokes divine punishment (vv. 4–7), but God is referred to in the third person, not the second person that typifies other petitions. Perhaps the psalmist is speaking from the Temple to his friends, rejecting their advice that he flee from the persecution of the evildoers (see comments below). 1–3: Though taking refuge in God is frequently used metaphorically in the Psalms, it is literal in 61.5, "O that I might dwell in Your tent forever, take refuge under Your protecting wings," and perhaps here. The psalmist is thus seeking refuge at the Temple (see 1 Kings 1.50 n.) and rejecting his friends' advice. 4–5: Many medieval and modern commentators understand Holy palace and heaven as synonymous. More likely, the point of the psalmist is that (paradoxically) God is located both in the Jerusalem Temple (His holy palace), where He can offer protection, and in heaven, from where His eyes behold and seek out and punish evildoers. 6: These are supernatural punishments, like that of Sodom (Gen. 19.24). 7: The LORD is righteous in the sense of being fair in retribution: this is emphasized through the word-repetition For the LORD is righteous; He loves righteous deeds. Behold His face: This may refer to being in God's presence or to seeing a manifestation of God at the Temple, yet another hint that this psalmist is praying at the Temple, and wants to remain there. Other biblical texts suggest that the worshipper

12 For the leader; on the sheminith. A psalm of David.

2 Help, O LORD!
For the faithful are no more;
the loyal have vanished from among men.

3 Men speak lies to one another;
their speech is smooth;
they talk with duplicity.

4 May the LORD cut off all flattering lips, every tongue that speaks arrogance.

5 They say, "By our tongues we shall prevail;
with lips such as ours, who can be our master?"

6 "Because of the groans of the plundered poor and needy,
I will now act," says the LORD.
"I will give help," He affirms to him.^a

7 The words of the LORD are pure words, silver purged in an earthen crucible, refined sevenfold.

8 You, O LORD, will keep them, guarding each ^afrom this age^a evermore.

9 On every side the wicked roam
^awhen baseness is exalted among men.^a

13 For the leader. A psalm of David.

2 How long, O LORD; will You ignore me forever?
How long will You hide Your face from me?

3 How long will I have cares on my mind, grief in my heart all day?
How long will my enemy have the upper hand?

4 Look at me, answer me, O LORD, my God!
Restore the luster to my eyes,
lest I sleep the sleep of death;
lest my enemy say, "I have overcome him," my foes exult when I totter.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

could behold the face of God at a temple (see Exod. 33.11; but contrast 33.17–23).

Ps. 12: This psalm has an unusual structure: after the superscription (v. 1) it contains a standard petition (vv. 2–5), but this is followed by the divine response (v. 6) and the psalmist's answer (vv. 7–9). It is difficult to understand how this psalm was used liturgically—perhaps since the divine response is positive, a supplicant might recite it as a way of "assuring" a positive hearing. The main theme has to do with words—the false and arrogant words of the wicked against the righteous, and God's pure words. 2: Faithful translates "hasid"; see 4.4 n. This v. compactly contains the three crucial parts of the petition: the invocation (O LORD), the plea in the imperative (Help), and the motivation (for the faithful . . .). 3–5: The emphasis here is only on the danger of the word, which may reflect slander, a false oath, or magic (see 10.7 n.); no physical harm is described. 6: The divine speech reflects care for the underclasses (see 9.10–13 n.). 7: Sevenfold is a typologically large number (see Ibn Ezra and Radak). 8–9: Unfortunately, the psalm's conclusion is likely corrupt and defies precise translation, though the general sense of God preserving the faithful from the evildoers is clear.

Ps. 13: In this poignant individual petition, the petitioner feels abandoned, as in the more famous 22.2: "My God, my God, why have You abandoned me?" The typical elements for the petition are all found: the invocation, O LORD (v. 2), the petition, which here takes up most of the psalm (vv. 2–4a), and a short, double motivation, lest I sleep the sleep of death; lest my enemy . . . (vv. 4b–5). A typical expression of divine confidence concludes the psalm (v. 6). 2–3: The four-fold repetition of How long forms a refrain, emphasizing the psalmist's long-standing sense of abandonment. The paradoxical How long . . . will You ignore (lit. "forget") me forever? heightens the petitioner's pain. On God hiding His face, see 6.4–5 n. In Torah and prophetic contexts, God's hidden face is typically a result of punishment; in many psalms, including this one, the psalmist suggests that this hiddenness is instead the result of divine neglect. 4: If God looks, he is no longer hiding his face (see Ibn Ezra and Radak). Restore the luster to my eyes refers to strength (see 1 Sam. 14.27). The sleep of death represents the ultimate and permanent separation between God and humans, for in death one cannot praise God (Ps. 6.6). 5: This v. contains a classic illustration of the notion that in biblical poetry the second half heightens the first (see "Biblical Poetry," pp. 2097–2104), as we

6 But I trust in Your faithfulness, my heart will exult in Your deliverance.
I will sing to the LORD,
for He has been good to me.

14^aFor the leader. Of David.

The benighted man thinks,
^b“God does not care.”^b

Man’s deeds are corrupt and loathsome;
no one does good.

2 The LORD looks down from heaven on mankind to find a man of understanding,
a man mindful of God.

3 All have turned bad,
altogether foul;
there is none who does good,
not even one.

4 Are they so witless, all those evildoers,
who devour my people as they devour food,
and do not invoke the LORD?

5 There they will be seized with fright,
for God is present in the circle of the righteous.

6 You may set at naught the counsel of the lowly,
but the LORD is his refuge.

7 O that the deliverance of Israel might come from Zion!

When the LORD restores the fortunes of His
people,
Jacob will exult, Israel will rejoice.

^a Cf. Ps. 53.

^{b-b} Lit. “There is no God”; cf. Ps. 10.4.

move from enemy (singular) to foes (plural). 6: As in other petitions, the tenses are confusing (see 3.8–9 n.; 6.9–11), and a more literal rendering would be: “But I trust in your faithfulness (‘hesed,’ see 5.8 n.), may my heart exult in Your deliverance. May I sing to the LORD because He has been good to me.”

Ps. 14: This is an atypical psalm—it is not addressed to God, instead referring to Him in the third person; for this reason, some modern scholars view it as a psalm of instruction. Ps. 53, from the Elohist

Psalter (see introduction, p. 1281) is a variant of this psalm; the variations both small (e.g., 14.3 All have turned bad [“hkl sr”]; 53.4 “Everyone is dross” [“klw sg”]) and large (e.g., 14.5b–6: for God is present in the circle of the righteous. You may set at naught the counsel of the lowly, but the LORD is his refuge; 53.6 “There they will be seized with fright—never was there such a fright—for God has scattered the bones of your besiegers; you have put them to shame, for God has rejected them”) offer important data about the transmission of psalms in antiquity. The medievals viewed both as Davidic compositions. Rashi, for example, viewed Ps. 14 as David’s words concerning the destruction of the First Temple (586 BCE), while Ps. 53, which is so similar, is about the destruction of the Second Temple (70 CE). Radak much more prosaically suggests in his intro. to Ps. 53: “and now he [David] repeated himself here in slightly different words.” 1: Heb “naval,” benighted, is a very strong term that can carry moral overtones; see esp. 2 Sam. 13.13, in relation to Amnon’s rape of his half-sister Tamar. On God does not care, see 10.4. The claim of this benighted individual would invalidate two of the basic assumptions of Psalms: the ability of God to hear prayers, and the ability of God to punish the human wrongs that various psalmists lament. 2: On God in heaven, see 2.6 n. Being mindful of God (“doresh ’et ’elohim”) may also be understood as praying to God (see esp. Ps. 77.3); note the prayer language in v. 4, invoke the LORD. 6: The wicked are spoken to in the second person (You), rather than in the third person as earlier in the psalm (e.g., v. 5 they). Such changes in person are frequent in biblical poetry (e.g., Isa. 1.2–9). 7: Many modern scholars see this final v. as secondary, since it does not fit the theme or tone of the psalm. (In antiquity, it was easiest to make additions at the end of a composition.) The phrase restores the fortunes is ambiguous in the Bible; it may refer to personal restoration (see esp. Job 42.10), or more specifically to the return from the Babylonian exile (see esp. Ps. 126.4). The latter sense explains why many medievals (e.g., Rashi, Radak) view the psalm as a Davidic prophecy concerning the Babylonian exile. Many other individual petitions conclude with general verses about the community (e.g., 3.9).

15

A psalm of David.

LORD, who may sojourn in Your tent,
 who may dwell on Your holy mountain?
 2 He who lives without blame,
 who does what is right,
 and in his heart acknowledges the truth;
 3 whose tongue is not given to evil;
 who has never done harm to his fellow, or borne reproach for [his acts toward] his neighbor;
 4 for whom a contemptible man is abhorrent,
 but who honors those who fear the LORD;
 who stands by his oath even to his hurt;
 5 who has never lent money at interest, or accepted a bribe against the innocent.
 The man who acts thus shall never be shaken.

16

A michtam^b of David.

Protect me, O God, for I seek refuge in You.
 2 I say to the LORD,
 "You are my Lord, ^cmy benefactor;
 there is none above You."^c 3 ^dAs to the holy and mighty ones that are in the land,
 my whole desire concerning them is that 4 those who espouse another [god] may have many sorrows!^d
 I will have no part of their bloody libations;
 their names will not pass my lips.
 5 The LORD is my allotted share and portion;^e
 You control my fate.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; or "who has no slander upon his tongue."

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c-c Others "I have no good but in You."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain; "holy and mighty ones" taken as epithets for divine beings; cf. qedoshim in Ps. 89.6, 8, and 'addirim in 1 Sam. 4.8.

e Lit. "cup."

Ps. 15: Perhaps like the previous psalm, this may be considered a psalm of instruction, teaching the listener to become an individual who shall never be shaken (v. 5). In Jewish ritual, the psalm is often used as a type of eulogy, expressing the ideal human qualities that assure the deceased a place in the afterlife (see Radak to v. 5: "Even at his death he shall never be shaken, since his soul will rest in the place of glory"); this is, however, a post-biblical notion. Most modern scholars take v. 1 literally, and suggest that the psalm functioned as an entrance liturgy for the Temple, where who may sojourn in Your tent, who may dwell on Your holy mountain? functions as the beginning of a dialogue between the priest and the worshipper who wishes to enter the Temple precincts. Such liturgies are suggested by Egyptian and Mesopotamian texts, and may also stand behind Ps. 24.3–4: "Who may ascend the mountain of the LORD? Who may stand in His holy place?—He who has clean hands and a pure heart, who has not taken a false oath by My life or sworn deceitfully." The psalm, like much prophetic literature, emphasizes general moral, rather than cultic, characteristics. As in the Decalogue and later medieval lists of precepts, these are listed in groupings of positive and negative qualities. The qualities listed in this psalm are included among epitomes of the commandments (e.g., Isaiah 33.14–16; Micah 6.8) listed in b. Makkot 24a. 1: Tent may refer to a temple or sanctuary (see 1 Kings 2.28). 2: The list begins with very general positive qualities (He who lives without blame, who does what is right), followed by a more specific positive quality (and in his heart acknowledges the truth), which is to be connected to the following v. 3–4: Three qualities, all expressed as negatives, balanced by three positive qualities. 5: Two negative qualities conclude the list. To be shaken or to totter is the opposite of the ideal of stability. It is uncertain how this conclusion connects to the opening "who may sojourn in Your tent, who may dwell on Your holy mountain?"

Ps. 16: The structure of this psalm is anomalous in that while it opens as a typical personal petition, the rest of the psalm expresses the psalmist's confidence in God; perhaps this serves as an extended motivation for why his petition should be heard. 1: The obscure term michtam is found only here and in a cluster of Psalms (56–60); the Septuagint translates it as "a stele or pillar inscription." 2: Alternately, this may be understood as the individual praying citing his earlier prayer, "I have said to the LORD . . ." 3–4: These are among the most obscure verses in the Psalter. 5–6: With the exception of portion (lit. "cup"), it is striking

6 Delightful country has fallen to my lot; lovely indeed is my estate.
7 I bless the LORD who has guided me;
my conscience^a admonishes me at night.
8 I am ever mindful of the LORD's presence;
He is at my right hand; I shall never be shaken.
9 So my heart rejoices,
my whole being exults,
and my body rests secure.
10 For You will not abandon me to Sheol, or let Your faithful one see the Pit.
11 You will teach me the path of life.
In Your presence is perfect joy;
delights are ever in Your right hand.

17 A prayer of David.

Hear, O LORD, what is just;
heed my cry, give ear to my prayer,
uttered without guile.
2 My vindication will come from You;
Your eyes will behold what is right.
3 You have visited me at night, probed my mind,
You have tested me and found nothing amiss;
^bI determined that my mouth should not transgress.
4 As for man's dealings,
in accord with the command of Your lips,^b
I have kept in view the fate^c of the lawless.
5 My feet have held to Your paths;
my legs have not given way.
6 I call on You;
You will answer me, God;
turn Your ear to me,
hear what I say.
7 Display Your faithfulness in wondrous deeds,
You who deliver with Your right hand
those who seek refuge from assailants.
8 Guard me like the apple of Your eye;
hide me in the shadow of Your wings

^a Lit. "kidneys." ^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^c Cf. Prov. 1.19; lit. "paths."

and unusual that all the nouns used of God refer to the land and land allocation (allotted share and portion, Delightful country, my estate). 7–11: The conclusion of the psalm is unified through references to body parts. The psalmist speaks of his kidneys (the seat of his conscience), right hand, heart, and body (lit. "flesh"; my whole being, "kevod," might also be a play on "kevedi," my liver); this is matched (v. 11) by God's face (translated here as presence and right hand. 8: The phrase I am ever mindful of the LORD's presence was frequently used for meditation within the kabbalistic tradition; as a result, it is often inscribed on the Ark or at the front of the synagogue. 10: On Sheol, see 6.6 n.; on faithful ("hasid"), see 4.4 n. 11: The tense of the first word allows for both the translation You will teach me, followed here (so Rashi), as well as "May you teach me," as a prayer or request (so Radak). The right hand is more powerful, as in 118.16, "The right hand of the LORD is exalted! The right hand of the LORD is triumphant!" As elsewhere in the Bible (see esp. Exod. 24.10–11), God is often depicted anthropomorphically.

Ps. 17: This individual petition is similar to Ps. 7, which is also characterized by a protestation of innocence (see esp. 7.4–6). The word "tzedek," just, is used in the first and last v., framing the psalm, and offering a summary of sorts: a just God may not let the just suffer.

1: Prayer ("tefilah") is the most general, all-encompassing word for a prayer (see 72.20), though etymologically it refers to an intercessory prayer. The poetry of the verse is very striking: after demanding three times, through typical biblical poetic diction, that God hear, the pattern is broken by introducing the next sub-theme of the petitioner's innocence: uttered without guile. Biblical poetry thus combines patterns and broken patterns. 2–5: The protestation of innocence. 2: The psalmist's acknowledgment of God's role as judge is a subtle demand that he be adjudicated fairly. 6–12: The second section of the psalm is introduced by another call for divine justice; this section emphasizes the enemies and their evil activities. 7: On God's faithfulness ("hesed"), see 5.8 n. 8: The apple of Your eye is the pupil. The second half of the v. uses a stereotypical image of God as a protective bird (36.8; 57.2;

- 9 from the wicked who despoil me,
 a my mortal enemies who^a encircle me.
- 10 b Their hearts are closed to pity;^b
 they mouth arrogance;
 11 now they hem in our feet on every side;
 they set their eyes roaming over the land.
- 12 He is like a lion eager for prey,
 a king of beasts lying in wait.
- 13 Rise, O LORD! Go forth to meet him.
 Bring him down;
 rescue me from the wicked with Your sword, 14 b from men, O LORD, with Your hand, from men whose share in life is fleeting.
 But as to Your treasured ones, fill their bellies.^b
 Their sons too shall be satisfied, and have something to leave over for their young.
- 15 Then I, justified, will behold Your face;
 awake, I am filled with the vision of You.

18 For the leader. Of David, the servant of the LORD, who addressed the words of this song to the LORD after the LORD had saved him from the hands of all his enemies and from the clutches of Saul.

² He said:

^d I adore you, O LORD, my strength,^d

a-a Or "from my enemies who avidly." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c This poem occurs again at 2 Sam. 22, with a number of variations, some of which are cited in the following notes. d-d Not in 2 Sam. 22.2.

63.8). 11: The psalmist suddenly speaks in the plural (our feet); this and similar cases have led some scholars to suggest that the "I" of the individual petitions may be the king or some other significant individual who speaks on behalf of the entire community. 12: Lions roamed the countryside of ancient Israel, and are mentioned frequently in the Bible. They were symbols of great power; this is why a standard scene of the Assyrian royal reliefs depicts the king killing a lion. Compare David's statement in 1 Sam. 17.34–35. 13–16: This final section is also introduced by a set of imperatives. 13: Rise is again being used in a military sense (see Ibn Ezra, "to show your strength," and 7.7 n.), carefully playing against the enemies who are brought down.

15: This v. is better taken as expressing a wish or desire ("may I behold . . . ; may I be filled . . ."), perhaps a wish to see God at the Temple (see 11.7 n.), or even expressing a type of mystical yearning to see God, as in the vision in Ezek. ch 1. Many medieval interpreters (e.g., Rashi, Radak) understand this as a reference to seeing God in heaven after death, but as noted (see 6.6 n.), the conception of a heavenly afterworld is absent from the Bible.

Ps. 18: Linguistic and stylistic evidence suggest that this may be one of the oldest psalms in the Psalter, dating most likely from the tenth century BCE. It is also one of the longest psalms, and its flow is not entirely clear. It is nearly identical to 2 Sam. ch 22, which, based on linguistic evidence, is older than the psalm, though it is unclear if Ps. 18 was copied from 2 Sam. 22, or if they were both copied from a common source. As in Ps. 14, which is parallel to Ps. 53, the many types of differences are illustrative of the process of textual transmission. A major difference is the extra v. found in the psalm but not in Samuel (v. 2). Sometimes synonyms or near synonyms are used (e.g., Ps. 18.5 ropes of Death; 2 Sam. 22.5, "breakers of Death"); a singular in place of a plural (e.g., lightning in v. 15 is singular in 2 Sam. 22 ["brk'"] and plural in Ps. 18 ["brkym"]); word order may vary (e.g., Ps. 18.50 among the nations, LORD; 2 Sam. 22.50, "LORD, among the nations"); and graphically similar letters are confused (e.g., Ps. 18.11 "vyd'," gliding, vs. 2 Sam. 22.11 "vyr'," "He was seen"). Some medievals understood the variants in Ps. 18 as reflecting David's divinely inspired reworking of his earlier composition as he revised it for inclusion in the Psalter (see esp. Abravanel to 2 Sam. ch 22), while others paid less attention to the variants, believing that they reflect the same meaning (Radak at Ps. 18.1).

1: David's troubles are described in 1 Sam. ch 18–2 Sam. ch 20. As elsewhere in the Psalter, this superscription is secondary, reflecting an attempt to understand the psalms biographically (see 3.1 n.); the superscription here, however, is unique in its reference to a broad set of events, rather than to a particular event—this long and general psalm has been assigned to a long period of general troubles. The servant of the LORD is lacking in the parallel in Samuel; for similar phrases concerning David, see, e.g., 2 Sam. 7.8; 1 Kings 8.66; Jer. 33.26; Pss. 4; 21; 89. 2: Lacking in 2 Sam. 22.

3 O LORD, my crag, my fortress, my rescuer, my God, my rock in whom I seek refuge,
 my shield, my ^amighty champion,^a my haven.
 4 ^bAll praise! I called on the LORD^b and was delivered from my enemies.
 5 Ropes^c of Death encompassed me;
 torrents of Belial^d terrified me;
 6 ropes of Sheol encircled me;
 snares of Death confronted me.
 7 In my distress I called on the LORD,
 cried out to my God;
 in His temple He heard my voice;
 my cry to Him reached His ears.
 8 Then the earth rocked and quaked;
 the foundations of the mountains shook,
 rocked by His indignation; 9 smoke went up from His nostrils, from His mouth came devouring fire;
 live coals blazed forth from Him.
 10 He bent the sky and came down, thick cloud beneath His feet.
 11 He mounted a cherub and flew, gliding on the wings of the wind.
 12 He made darkness His screen;
 dark thunderheads, dense clouds of the sky were His pavilion round about Him.
 13 Out of the brilliance before Him, hail and fiery coals ^epierced His clouds.^e 14 Then the LORD thundered from heaven, the Most High gave forth His voice—^fhail and fiery coals.^f
 15 He let fly His shafts and scattered them;
 He discharged lightning and routed them.
 16 The ocean bed was exposed;
 the foundations of the world were laid bare by Your mighty roaring, O LORD,
 at the blast of the breath of Your nostrils.
 17 He reached down from on high, He took me;
 He drew me out of the mighty waters;
 18 He saved me from my fierce enemy,
 from foes too strong for me.
 19 They confronted me on the day of my calamity,
 but the LORD was my support.

3: Slightly shorter than the parallel in Samuel, a list of divine attributes connected to God's strength, highlighting the theme of the psalm, God the warrior. The Samuel parallel is the longest such list of divine qualities in the Bible.

5–7: Highly mythological underworld imagery is used to express the psalmist's former dire straits. Given that God descends (v. 10), the psalmist's cry is likely ascending to God's heavenly temple (see Isa. 6.1–4). 8–16: A description of a divine theophany. These descriptions often emphasize God as a thunderstorm deity, and likely borrowed similar, earlier descriptions of the Canaanite deity, Baal.

11: A cherub is a winged composite figure, combining various human and animal elements. 15: His shafts represent both arrows thrust against the enemies, as well as lightning mentioned later in the v.

16: The description of the theophany in Hab. ch 3 likewise emphasizes the fear of the primordial waters. 17–20: A single deity saves a single individual against many enemies because of that person's righteousness. 18: Mighty waters are associated with chaos that was vanquished by God in some biblical creation stories (see 8.3 n.).

a-a Lit. "horn of rescue." b-b Construction of Heb. uncertain.

c c 2 Sam. 22.5, "breakers."

d I.e., the netherworld, like "Death" and "Sheol."

e-e 2 Sam. 22.13, "blazed." f-f Not in 2 Sam. 22.14.

20 He brought me out to freedom;
 He rescued me because He was pleased with me.

21 The LORD rewarded me according to my merit;
 He requited the cleanness of my hands;
 22 for I have kept to the ways of the LORD,
 and have not been guilty before my God;
 23 for I am mindful of all His rules;
 I have not disregarded His laws.
 24 I have been blameless toward Him,
 and have guarded myself against sinning;
 25 and the LORD has requited me according to my merit,
 the cleanness of my hands in His sight.

26 With the loyal, You deal loyally;
 with the blameless man, blamelessly.

27 With the pure, You act purely,
 and with the perverse, You are wily.

28 It is You who deliver lowly folk,
 but haughty eyes You humble.

29 It is You who light my lamp;
 the LORD, my God, lights up my darkness.

30 With You, I can rush a barrier;^a with my God I can scale a wall; 31 the way of God is perfect;
 the word of the LORD is pure;
 He is a shield to all who seek refuge in Him.

32 Truly, who is a god except the LORD, who is a rock but our God?— 33 the God who girded me with might,
 who made my way perfect;
 34 who made my legs like a deer's,
 and let me stand firm on the^b heights;
 35 who trained my hands for battle;
 my arms can bend a bow of bronze.

36 You have given me the shield of Your protection;
 Your right hand has sustained me,
 Your care^c has made me great.

37 You have let me stride on freely;
 my feet have not slipped.

38 I pursued my enemies and overtook them;
 I did not turn back till I destroyed them.

21-25: Vv. 21 and 25 are almost identical, framing the intervening protestation of innocence. 26-31: These vv. show particular affinity to wisdom texts; see esp. v. 31 and Prov. 30.5, "Every word of God is pure, / A shield to those who take refuge in Him." 26-27: God works in a fair, measure-for-measure manner. 32: Vv. declaiming the absolute exclusivity of God are typically found in later biblical literature (cf. Exod. 15.11 n. and Isa. 44.6). 33-49: It is God who helps the psalmist totally and completely annihilate the enemy. 34: An image of swiftness and stability.

a Cf. note to 2 Sam. 22.30; or "troop."

b Taking bamothai as a poetic form of bamoth; cf. Hab. 3.19; others "my."

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; others "condescension."

39 I struck them down, and they could rise no more;
they lay fallen at my feet.
40 You have girded me with strength for battle, brought my adversaries low before me, 41 made my enemies turn tail before me;
I wiped out my foes.
42 They cried out, but there was none to deliver;
[cried] to the LORD, but He did not answer
them.
43 I ground them fine as windswept dust;
I trod them flat as dirt of the streets.
44 You have rescued me from the strife of people;
You have set me at the head of nations;
peoples I knew not must serve me.
45 At the mere report of me they are submissive;
foreign peoples cower before me;
46 foreign peoples lose courage, and come trembling out of their strongholds.^a 47 The LORD lives! Blessed is my rock!

Exalted be God, my deliverer, 48 the God who has vindicated me and made peoples subject to me, 49 who rescued me from my enemies, who raised me clear of my adversaries,
saved me from lawless men.
50 For this I sing Your praise among the nations,
LORD,
and hymn Your name:
51 ^bHe accords great victories^b to His king, keeps faith with His anointed, with David and his offspring forever.

19 For the leader. A psalm of David.

2 The heavens declare the glory of God,
the sky proclaims His handiwork.
3 Day to day makes utterance, night to night speaks out.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b 2 Sam. 22:51, "Tower of victory."

47: The LORD lives! A similar statement about the Canaanite deity Baal is found in the Ugaritic epics. When used in biblical literature, "living" with respect to God often carries the connotation of power.
40: Bringing adversaries low may be a literal reference to stepping on the necks of enemies (see v. 39, "they lay fallen at [lit. 'under'] my feet"). 49: As the psalm moves to a close, it returns to the word rescue, found also in v. 3. 50: Singing God's praise is a major theme of the Psalter, appearing in over sixty vv. 51: Anointed, Heb "mashiah"; see 2.2 n. The final v. suggests that this psalm was recited by or on behalf of a Davidic king.

Ps. 19: This psalm is recited as part of the preliminary morning service on Saturday and at festivals. It divides neatly into three sections: Vv. 2–7 are a hymn, focusing on creation, specifically on the sun; vv. 8–11 are a hymn focusing on torah; and vv. 12–15, which are connected to the immediately preceding section (see v. 12, them), are a petition to be saved from sin, and for prayers to be heard. Many scholars believe that either two psalms have been combined (vv. 2–7 and 8–15), or that a later psalmist who composed vv. 8–15 incorporated the earlier vv. 2–7, which have a different topic, style, and poetic structure. Vv. 8–15, but not 2–7, show significant connections to wisdom ideas and vocabulary (see below). The difference between vv. 2–7 and 8–15 was realized already by the medieval Jewish interpreters, who suggested various ways that creation, the sun, and torah may be connected. The discovery of ancient Near Eastern texts, where justice is often part of the sun god's realm (so, e.g., Shamash, the Mesopotamian sun god), has offered a new way of understanding the psalm as a unity. Some modern scholars have understood the poem as a whole as focused on God's revelation in heaven and on the earth (Radak is similar), while others have noted that torah is associated with light (e.g., Prov. 6.23), allowing the two sections to function together. 2–7: The absence of God's personal name ("YHVH"; LORD in NJPS) here suggests to some that this section may have been adapted from a non-Israelite hymn praising the sun. 2–4: The cosmos praises God; the creation testifies to God's greatness. It is unclear if the sound is metaphorical, or if some Israelites believed in the music of the spheres, an idea later associated

4 There is no utterance,
there are no words, ^awhose sound goes unheard.^a

5 Their voice^b carries throughout the earth, their words to the end of the world.
He placed in them^c a tent for the sun, 6 who is like a groom coming forth from the chamber,
like a hero, eager to run his course.

7 His rising-place is at one end of heaven, and his circuit reaches the other;
nothing escapes his heat.

8 The teaching of the LORD is perfect, renewing life;
the decrees of the LORD are enduring,
making the simple wise;

9 The precepts of the LORD are just,
rejoicing the heart;
the instruction of the LORD is lucid, making the eyes light up.

10 The fear of the LORD is pure, abiding forever;
the judgments of the LORD are true,
righteous altogether, 11 more desirable than gold,
than much fine gold;
sweeter than honey,
than drippings of the comb.

12 Your servant pays them heed;
in obeying them there is much reward.

13 Who can be aware of errors?
Clear me of unperceived guilt,
14 and from ^dwillful sins^d keep Your servant;
let them not dominate me;
then shall I be blameless and clear of grave offense.

15 May the words of my mouth and the prayer of my heart^e be acceptable to You,
O LORD, my rock and my redeemer.

with Pythagoras. An Ugaritic epic speaks of "Speech of tree and whisper of stone, converse of heaven with earth" (ANET, p. 136). An alternative rendering of v. 4, "their sound is not heard," means that the celestial bodies "speak" soundlessly; they convey their message simply by their being.

5–7: The sun was typically associated with a major deity in the ancient Near East. Cylinder seals with winged sundisks have been found in Israel, and 2 Kings 23.11 and other sources offer evidence for solar worship in ancient Israel.

6–7: The sun, shining and eager, traverses the sky. 8–11: This section is suffused with wisdom terminology, including simple, wise, fear of the LORD, and wisdom or torah being compared to gold (of great value, and in this case, also the color of the sun). The highly stylized, repetitive form of vv. 8–10 is very striking, though in Heb, v. 10 is slightly different in structure from the previous vv.; v. 11 concludes this section by breaking the structure altogether. Heb "torah" is here translated as instruction, on the assumption that this psalm was written before the Torah was canonized; traditional Jewish interpretation, which assumes that this is a Davidic composition from the period after a Mosaic Torah, understands "torah" as the Torah. 13: In Heb, unperceived guilt ("nistarot") plays with v. 7, "escapes" ("nistar"), lending additional unity to the psalm. (See similarly v. 9, "light up," which as Rashi points out [v. 8], connects back to the sun.) 15: This v. is reused as part of the conclusion of the "'Amidah," the main daily prayer. In its original context, it is unclear if the words of my mouth and the prayer of my heart refer to the immediately preceding vv., asking forgiveness from sins, or if this entire psalm served as an introduction to a larger liturgical complex.

a-a With Septuagint, Symmachus, and Vulgate; or "their sound is not heard."

b Cf. Septuagint, Symmachus, and Vulgate; Arabic qawwah, "to shout."

c Viz., the heavens.

d-d Or "arrogant men"; cf. Ps. 119.51.

e For leb as a source of speech, see note to Eccl. 5.1.

20 For the leader. A psalm of David.

² May the LORD answer you in time of trouble,
the name of Jacob's God keep you safe.
³ May He send you help from the sanctuary, and sustain you from Zion.
⁴ May He receive the tokens^a of all your meal
offerings,
and approve^b your burnt offerings. Selah.
⁵ May He grant you your desire, and fulfill your every plan.
⁶ May we shout for joy in your victory,
arrayed by standards in the name of our God.
May the LORD fulfill your every wish.

⁷ Now I know that the LORD will give victory to His anointed,
will answer him from His heavenly sanctuary with the mighty victories of His right arm.
⁸ They [call] on chariots, they [call] on horses, but we call on the name of the LORD our God.
⁹ They collapse and lie fallen,
but we rally and gather strength.
¹⁰ ^cO LORD, grant victory!
May the King answer us when we call.^c

21 For the leader. A psalm of David.

² O LORD, the king rejoices in Your strength;
how greatly he exults in Your victory!
³ You have granted him the desire of his heart, have not denied the request of his lips. Selah.
⁴ You have proffered him blessings of good things, have set upon his head a crown of fine gold.
⁵ He asked You for life; You granted it;
a long life, everlasting.
⁶ Great is his glory through Your victory;
You have endowed him with splendor and majesty.
⁷ You have made him blessed forever,
gladdened him with the joy of Your presence.
⁸ For the king trusts in the LORD;
Through the faithfulness of the Most High he will not be shaken.

a Reference to azkara, "token portion" of meal offering; Lev. 2.2, 9, 16, etc.

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Or in the light of v. 7, "O LORD, grant victory to the king; may He answer us when we call."

Ps. 20: This is a prayer for the king before battle. A very close parallel to this psalm from Papyrus Amherst 63 was published in 1983. That version, however, was written in Aramaic in Demotic script (late Egyptian characters) and opens: "May Horus [an Egyptian deity]/the master answer us in our straits; send your messenger from the temple of Arash" (translation from Ziony Zevit, The Religions of Ancient Israel: A Synthesis of Parallelic Approaches [London: Continuum, 2001], p. 669). Initially, it was thought that this Aramaic text was a paganized version of the biblical psalm, but more recently it has been suggested that both the Aramaic Egyptian text and Ps. 20 derive from a common non-Israelite poem, most likely to Baal (see intro. to Ps. 29). Ps. 20 is now recited toward the conclusion of the morning weekday service. 2: The reference to "His anointed" in v. 7 makes it clear that the you is the king. The name of Jacob's God is an odd circumlocution of LORD, perhaps used so that both verses would be of approximately the same size. 3: God is envisioned as enthroned in the sanctuary in Zion. 4: This may reflect a ritual of sacrificing before going to battle (1 Sam. 7.9–10). 7: Now I know may reflect a positive answer to a ritual; see Ps 6.9–11 n.; 1 Sam. 30.8; 28.6. 8: The strength of divine presence over military might is a central biblical theme. 10: As noted, it is unclear where this v. should be divided. This translation (following the Targum) takes the king to be the divine King, God. The Septuagint read it as: "O LORD grant victory to the king; answer us when we call"; this is the origin of the expression, "God save the king!" The psalm begins as it ends, with a request for an answer.

Ps. 21: A blessing for the king, who will lead his nation to victory. A companion hymn to Ps. 20 sharing vocabulary and theme (cf. 20.5 and 21.3; 20.7c and 21.9b). Vv. 1–7 rejoice in God's beneficence to the king; vv. 8–13 express trust that God will grant victory. 3: Selah, see

9 Your hand is equal to all Your enemies;
Your right hand overpowers Your foes.
10 You set them ablaze like a furnace ^awhen You show Your presence.^a
The LORD in anger destroys them;
 fire consumes them.
11 You wipe their offspring from the earth,
 their issue from among men.
12 For they schemed against You;
 they laid plans,
 but could not succeed.
13 ^bFor You make them turn back^b
 by Your bows aimed at their face.
14 Be exalted, O LORD, through Your strength; we will sing and chant the praises of Your mighty deeds.

22 For the leader; on ^b*ayyeleth ha-shahar*.^b
A psalm of David.

2 My God, my God,
 why have You abandoned me;
 why so far from delivering me
 and from my anguished roaring?
3 My God,
 I cry by day—You answer not;
 by night, and have no respite.
4 ^cBut You are the Holy One,
 enthroned,
 the Praise of Israel.^c 5 In You our fathers trusted;
 they trusted, and You rescued them.
6 To You they cried out and they escaped;
 in You they trusted
 and were not disappointed.

a-a Or "at the time of Your anger."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Or "But You are holy, enthroned upon the praises of Israel."

3.3 n. 5: A past request for the long life of the king was granted (1 Kings 3.14; Ps. 61.6). 6: Glory . . . splendor and majesty, the nimbus of light surrounding gods and kings (Ps. 8.6). Through the victory that God grants, the king is enhanced. 8: This abundant royal blessing is here predicated on royal obedience. 10: For the fiery wrath of God, see Isa. 29.6; 66.15–16. The image of God's blazing fury burning up the enemy is common, and may reflect the reality of war in which cities were set ablaze. 11: See Ps. 37.38. 12: The plots against Israel are plots against God; cf. Ps. 83.5–6. 14: God's strength frames the psalm (see v. 2) and is the source of the king's strength.

Ps. 22: The psalm opens with a plea from a person in dire straits, apparently a serious illness. His prayers having been answered, he brings the offerings he vowed and gives public acclaim to God as he promised. God is praised for His care of all people, and all people, now and in the future, should praise God. The structure of the psalm is complex and not obvious. A refrainlike repetition occurs in vv. 2, 12, and 20, suggesting one way the psalm might be subdivided. NJPS has made four subdivisions based on the contents, but they do not correlate with the refrain-like lines. Another possibility is to see two main parts: vv. 2–22, the petition in time of trouble, and 23–31, the vow to praise God. The first of these sections is framed by You answer not (v. 3) and "answer me" (v. 22; NJPS main translation: rescue me). The second is framed by will I proclaim (v. 23) and shall be proclaimed (v. 31). Jewish tradition interprets this psalm as a lament by David over the future exile (Rashi), more specifically the threat against the Jews by Haman in the book of Esther (various Rabbis). For that reason there is a custom to read it on Purim (Sephardic custom reads it on the Fast of Esther and on Purim). 1: Ayyeleth ha-shahar (perhaps "Deer of the Dawn"; see translators' note b-b), a musical term, which may indicate the melody to which the words were sung. 2–12: Why does God, who cared for the ancestors (vv. 5–6) and the psalmist (vv. 10–11) in the past, not do so now? 2: Divine abandonment is a major theme of the Psalter; see Ps. 10.1. The first part of this v. occurs in the New Testament, uttered by Jesus when he is being crucified (Matt. 27.46; Mark 15.34). 4: Praise of Israel: Cf. Exod. 15.11. According to the alternate translation, prayers form the throne upon which God sits—a 7 But I am a worm, less than human;

 scorned by men, despised by people.

8 All who see me mock me; ^athey curl their lips,^a they shake their heads.

9 "Let him commit himself to the LORD;
 let Him rescue him,
 let Him save him,
 for He is pleased with him."

10 You ^bdrew me ^bfrom the womb, made me secure at my mother's breast.

11 I became Your charge at birth;
 from my mother's womb You have been my God.

12 Do not be far from me, for trouble is near,
 and there is none to help.

13 Many bulls surround me, mighty ones of Bashan encircle me.

14 They open their mouths at me like tearing, roaring lions.

15 ^cMy life ebbs away:^c all my bones are disjointed;
 my heart is like wax,
 melting within me;

16 my vigor dries up like a shard;
 my tongue cleaves to my palate;
 You commit me to the dust of death.

17 Dogs surround me;
 a pack of evil ones closes in on me,
^dlike lions [they maul] my hands and feet.^d

18 I take the count of all my bones while they look on and gloat.

19 They divide my clothes among themselves, casting lots for my garments.

20 But You, O LORD, be not far off;
 my strength, hasten to my aid.

21 Save my life from the sword,
 my precious life^e from the clutches of a dog.

22 Deliver me from a lion's mouth;
 from the horns of wild oxen rescue^f me.

23 Then will I proclaim Your fame to my brethren, praise You in the congregation.

lovely metaphor stressing the importance of prayer. 7-8: The psalmist feels less than human. He is scorned by those who think that God will not help him. Curl their lips: gestures of derision. 9: The scorners open their mouths to mock and to devour (v. 14). 10-12: The psalmist hopes that God who was with him since conception will not abandon him now. 13-22: The psalmist's opponents as animal predators (Ps. 17.12). The mixing of metaphors and similes of various types is common in Psalms. 13: Bashan, a region in northern Transjordan famous for its fat, strong cattle, which are here predators. 15-19: A graphic description of mortal illness. The psalmist feels his body stop working and disintegrate. He sees himself die, his body so dried up that it turns to dust. The scorners are like dogs (and lions, according to NJPS) hunting prey (cf. v. 14). They gloat at his death and are eager to take his possessions. 20-23: At his lowest point, the psalmist calls on God to save him from what has just been described. 23-24: See Ps. 35.18-19. 24-31: The psalmist's recovery is a sign of God's power and mercy, an example for all, and an occasion for praise. With his reintegration into the community, all Israel is invited to join him in praise. 24: You who fear the LORD: YHVH-fearers is a term that occurs elsewhere in Psalms; sometimes it is a general designation for those who worship the God of Israel and at other times it seems to be a group within Israel—proselytes, according to some scholars. Here it is the former. 28: On praise of God by the nations, see Pss. 47.10; 67.3-5; 86.9; 117.1. 30: The healthy and the sick should praise God. Those at death's door: Heb "those who go down to dust," usually a reference to the dead or the almost dead. If the reference is to the dead, it would contradict the belief that the dead do not praise God (Ps. 6.6); but it is perhaps a poetic way to reinforce the idea of the surrounding vv. that everyone, in every time and every place, should a-a Lit. "they open wide with a lip." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Lit. "I am poured out like water."

d-d With Raslii; cf. Isa. 38.13. e Lit. "only one." f Lit. "answer."

24 You who fear the LORD, praise Him!
 All you offspring of Jacob, honor Him!
 Be in dread of Him, all you offspring of Israel!

25 For He did not scorn, He did not spurn
 the plea^a of the lowly;
 He did not hide His face from him;
 when he cried out to Him, He listened.

26 ^bBecause of You I offer praise^b in the great congregation;
 I pay my vows in the presence of His worshippers.

27 Let the lowly eat and be satisfied;
 let all who seek the LORD praise Him.
 Always be of good cheer!

28 Let all the ends of the earth pay heed and turn to the LORD,
 and the peoples of all nations prostrate themselves before You;
 for kingship is the LORD's and He rules the nations.

29 ^cAll those in full vigor shall eat and prostrate themselves;
 all those at death's door, whose spirits flag, shall bend the knee before Him.^c

31 Offspring shall serve Him;
 the Lord's fame shall be proclaimed to the generation to come;
 they shall tell of His beneficence to people
 yet to be born,
 for He has acted.

23 A psalm of David.

The LORD is my shepherd;
 I lack nothing.

2 He makes me lie down in green pastures;
 He leads me to ^dwater in places of repose;^d

3 He renews my life;
 He guides me in right paths
 as befits His name.

4 Though I walk through ^ea valley of deepest darkness,^e

^a Or "plight." ^{b-b} Lit. "From You is my praise."

^{c-c} Meaning of Heb. uncertain; others "All the fat ones of the earth shall eat and worship; / All they that go down to the dust shall kneel before Him, / Even he that cannot keep his soul alive."

^{d-d} Others "still waters."

^{e-e} Others "the valley of the shadow of death."

praise God. 31: God's power to cure will be proclaimed to future generations.

Ps. 23: God, the divine shepherd-king, leads his people to nourishment and safety (vv. 1-4), keeping them alive and protecting them. In vv. 5-6 the psalmist is hosted by God and hopes to remain in His presence all his life. Some scholars now interpret the psalm as an exilic or postexilic portrait of a new exodus, from the exile to the return in the land of Israel (cf. Isa. 40.3-5; 49.8-13; Ps. 78.43-55—the exodus is a common exilic trope for the return). This interpretation helps to see the psalm's two parts as a unity: God guides the people through the difficult journey from Babylonia and then hosts them at His own table, the rebuilt Temple. 1-4: The shepherd-sheep metaphor for God and Israel (see also Ps. 95.7). The shepherd leads the sheep to pasture, to water, and through difficult terrain. Shepherd is a frequent biblical and ancient Near Eastern metaphor for royalty (Isa. 40.11; Ezek. 34; Ps. 80). This is the case with David (and Moses); the Babylonian king Hammurabi is called "the shepherd" (ANET, p. 164). 2: The alternate reading "still waters" (translators' note d-d) means that the waters are not turbulent and hence are easy to drink from. 3: See Ps. 31.4. 4: The shepherd's rod and staff, implements that prod and guide the sheep, provide the comfort that comes from divine guidance.

I fear no harm, for You are with me;
Your rod and Your staff—they comfort me.

- 5 You spread a table for me in full view of my enemies;
You anoint my head with oil;
my drink is abundant.
- 6 Only goodness and steadfast love shall pursue me
all the days of my life,
and I shall dwell in the house of the LORD for many long years.

24 Of David. A psalm.

- The earth is the LORD's and all that it holds,
the world and its inhabitants.
- 2 For He founded it upon the ocean, set it on the nether-streams.
- 3 Who may ascend the mountain of the LORD?
Who may stand in His holy place?—
- 4 He who has clean hands and a pure heart, who has not taken a false oath by My^a life or sworn deceitfully.
- 5 He shall carry away a blessing from the LORD,
a just reward from God, his deliverer.
- 6 Such is the circle^b of those who turn to Him,
Jacob, who seek Your presence. Selah.
- 7 O gates, lift up your heads!
Up high, you everlasting doors,
so the King of glory may come in!
- 8 Who is the King of glory?—
the LORD, mighty and valiant,
the LORD, valiant in battle.
- 9 O gates, lift up your heads!
Lift them up, you everlasting doors,
so the King of glory may come in!

^a Ancient versions and some mss. read "His."

^b Lit. "generation."

5–6: The shepherd metaphor is replaced by a banquet metaphor: God's luxurious care of the psalmist. 5: God hosts with luxury. A set or spread table (cf. Ezek. 23.41; Prov. 9.2) and oil on the head (cf. Eccl. 9.8; Ps. 92.11) are signs of luxury. Oil was placed on the heads of guests at banquets. Ps. 78.19 speaks of the preparation of a table in the wilderness for the first exodus generation. This lends support for seeing our psalm as a reference to the (second) exodus. 6: Goodness and steadfast love, covenant blessings, rather than curse, pursue the psalmist (Deut. 28.3, 15, 45). 6: The house of the LORD: The Temple (Ps. 27.4). The psalmist hopes to be in God's presence at the Temple (have access to God) throughout his long life. If this is an exilic psalm, it implies the return to the land of Israel. For many long years: lit. "for length of days." This refers to one's natural life (to live a long life was a blessing), but it has traditionally been understood as referring to the next life (after death), and hence this psalm is customarily recited at funerals or on occasions commemorating the dead.

Ps. 24: A liturgy on entering the sanctuary. A hymn celebrating God, creator and victor, with an "entrance liturgy" (vv. 3–6; Pss. 5; 15). After an introduction celebrating God as the creator, the psalm has two parts; in the first (vv. 3–6), pilgrims enter the Temple, and in the second (vv. 7–10), the Ark enters. The two are separated by "Selah." Each part has rhetorical questions and their answers; perhaps they were recited antiphonally. The psalm is used in Jewish liturgy on festivals, when the Torah is returned to the Ark. 1–2: God tamed the primeval waters and founded the earth upon them (Ps. 136.6); He is therefore to be acknowledged as the supreme sovereign of the world. The Temple is a microcosm of the world (cf. Gen. 2.1–3; Exod. 39.32, 42–43) and thus God's act of creation forms an appropriate introduction to this Temple liturgy. 3–6: The requirements for participation in Temple worship are predominantly moral, signifying obedience to God; see Ps. 15.2–5. 3: The mountain of the LORD: The Temple mount, with an echo of Mt. Sinai. 6: Jacob: Israel, the congregation present at the ceremony. Selah (also v. 10), see Ps. 3.3 n. 7–10: God, as it were, enters the Temple. The Temple gates open for the Ark, symbolizing God's presence, to enter. The gates "lift up their heads," a metaphoric expression for joyously welcoming God, pictured as a victorious king returning home to his palace.

10 Who is the King of glory?—
the LORD of hosts,
He is the King of glory!

Selah.

25 Of David.

κ O LORD, I set my hope on You;
2 3 my God, in You I trust;
may I not be disappointed,
may my enemies not exult over me.
3 λ O let none who look to You be disappointed;
let the faithless be disappointed, empty-handed.
4 γ Let me know Your paths, O LORD;
teach me Your ways;
5 17 guide me in Your true way and teach me,
for You are God, my deliverer;
it is You I look to at all times.
6 ρ O LORD, be mindful of Your compassion and Your faithfulness;
they are old as time.
7 η Be not mindful of my youthful sins and transgressions;
in keeping with Your faithfulness consider what is in my favor,
as befits Your goodness, O LORD.
8 6 Good and upright is the LORD;
therefore He shows sinners the way.
9 7 He guides the lowly in the right path,
and teaches the lowly His way.
10 3 All the LORD's paths are steadfast love for those who keep the decrees of His covenant.
11 6 As befits Your name, O LORD, pardon my iniquity though it be great.
12 7 Whoever fears the LORD,
he shall be shown what path to choose.
13 1 He shall live a happy life,
and his children shall inherit the land.
14 6 The counsel^a of the LORD is for those who fear
Him;
to them He makes known His covenant.
15 7 My eyes are ever toward the LORD, for He will loose my feet from the net.
16 8 Turn to me, have mercy on me,
for I am alone and afflicted.
17 8 ^bMy deep distress^b increases; deliver me from my straits.

^a Or "secret." ^{b-b} Lit. "The distress of my heart."

10: The LORD of hosts, a relatively infrequent divine epithet in Psalms, emphasizes God's role in leading the heavenly hosts in battle, and is associated with the Ark, which could precede Israel in battle (see 1 Sam. ch 4). A plausible setting for the psalm might be the return from battle of the Ark, a symbol of (v. 8) "the LORD, mighty and valiant, the LORD, valiant in battle."

Ps. 25: An individual's petition in acrostic form: the first line begins with the first letter of the Hebrew alphabet, the first word of the second line with the second letter of the alphabet, and so on to the final letter (see Pss. 9–10 n.). Two letters are missing and two are doubled, likely reflecting changes that the psalm has undergone in its transmission. The psalm is made up of alternating petitions and expressions of trust. It resembles wisdom literature in its concern with learning and finding the right path, but has the religious concerns of Psalms in its hope for forgiveness and for deliverance from distress. 1: Set my hope on You, lit. "lift my soul to You" (cf. 86.4; 143.8), i.e., "turn to You for protection."

2–3: The plea for the "shaming" of one's enemies is frequent in complaints (6.11; 35.4, 26; 40.15–16).

4–5: Prayer for (moral) guidance, with a wisdom cast; cf. vv. 8–10, 12. 6–7: Prayer for divine mercy and forgiveness of sins. A key word is "z-k-r," "remember," translated as be mindful and consider. God should remember that He is merciful and not remember (take into account) the psalmist's sins. Youthful sins: Since God's mercy dates from the beginning of time, the psalmist mentions sins that date from the beginning of his life. 11: The request for forgiveness of sins closes the first half of the psalm; name here means essence. Pardon my iniquity echoes Moses' words in Exod. 34.9.

12–13: Those who fear the LORD and their children shall be blessed (Ps. 37.28–29). Possession of the land is a major theme of Ps. 37.

17: Increases, Heb "broadens," the

- 18 γ Look at my affliction and suffering, and forgive all my sins.
- 19 See how numerous my enemies are,
and how unjustly they hate me!
- 20 ψ Protect me and save me;
let me not be disappointed,
for I have sought refuge in You.
- 21 η May integrity and uprightness watch over me,
for I look to You.
- 22 O God, redeem Israel
from all its distress.

26 Of David.

- Vindicate me, O LORD,
for I have walked without blame;
I have trusted in the LORD;
I have not faltered.
- 2 Probe me, O LORD, and try me, test my ^aheart and mind;^a
- 3 ^bfor my eyes are on Your steadfast love;
I have set my course by it.^b
- 4 I do not consort with scoundrels,
or mix with hypocrites;
I detest the company of evil men,
and do not consort with the wicked;
I wash my hands in innocence,
and walk around Your altar, O LORD, raising my voice in thanksgiving,
and telling all Your wonders.
- 8 O LORD, I love Your temple abode,
the dwelling-place of Your glory.
- 9 Do not sweep me away with sinners, or [snuff out] my life with murderers, who have schemes at their fingertips,
and hands full of bribes.
- 11 But I walk without blame;
redeem me, have mercy on me!
- 12 My feet are on level ground.
In assemblies I will bless the LORD.

27 Of David.

The LORD is my light and my help;
whom should I fear?

a-a Lit. "kidneys and heart."

b-b Or "I am aware of Your faithfulness, and always walk in Your true [path]."

opposite of distress and straits, with their meaning of narrowness. 19: Here as elsewhere, enemies need not be literal but stands for trouble in general. 21: Integrity and uprightness, characteristics of Job (1.1), here personified as protecting guardians. 22: As in many psalms, the end of a prayer of an individual becomes a prayer for the community. A v. beginning with the letter "pe" follows the acrostic (see also Ps. 34.23). It has been suggested that this arrangement makes the first letter "alef," the middle letter "lamed," and the last letter "pe"—spelling the word "to learn, teach" and thereby emphasizing the instructional nature of the psalm.

Ps. 26: A prayer for divine justice. The bulk of the psalm is a protestation of innocence, where the psalmist insists that he has conducted his life as God requires and therefore should not be punished like the wicked. His plea is based on the assumption that the righteous are rewarded and the wicked punished, yet in his case this expectation seems not yet to have been fulfilled. Like Ps. 25, this psalm uses some language of wisdom literature. 1–3: The psalmist prays that God adjudicate him and find him righteous (7.9; 17.2–5). 4–5: The psalmist's protestation of innocence and his nonassociation with the wicked is similar to 1.1–2. 6–8: The mention of the altar and temple suggests to some that the psalmist is a priest, but he may be an ordinary person who delights in coming to the Temple. Clean hands (literally or metaphorically) are required for entrance to the Temple (Ps. 24.4). 8: Glory, the light streaming from the deity (36.10; 63.3). 9–10: If the psalmist is swept away with the evildoers, he will not be able to come to the Temple, which he loves (v. 8). 11–12: I walk without blame forms an inclusio, with a change of tense, with v. 1; the psalmist was blameless in the past and continues to be. My feet are on level ground, Heb "my foot stands on level ground" recalls the walk-

The LORD is the stronghold of my life, whom should I dread?
2 When evil men assail me ^ato devour my flesh^a—it is they, my foes and my enemies, who stumble and fall.
3 Should an army besiege me, my heart would have no fear;
 should war beset me,
 still would I be confident.
4 One thing I ask of the LORD, only that do I seek:
 to live in the house of the LORD
 all the days of my life,
 to gaze upon the beauty of the LORD, ^bto frequent^b His temple.
5 He will shelter me in His pavilion on an evil day,
 grant me the protection of His tent,
 raise me high upon a rock.
6 Now is my head high over my enemies roundabout;
 I sacrifice in His tent with shouts of joy,
 singing and chanting a hymn to the LORD.
7 Hear, O LORD, when I cry aloud; have mercy on me, answer me.
8 ^bIn Your behalf^b my heart says:
 “Seek My face!”
 O LORD, I seek Your face.
9 Do not hide Your face from me;
 do not thrust aside Your servant in anger;
 You have ever been my help.
 Do not forsake me, do not abandon me,
 O God, my deliverer.
10 Though my father and mother abandon me,
 the LORD will take me in.
11 Show me Your way, O LORD, and lead me on a level path
 because of my watchful foes.
12 Do not subject me to the will of my foes, for false witnesses and unjust accusers have appeared against me.
13 Had I not the assurance that I would enjoy the goodness of the LORD in the land of the living . . .

ing in vv. 1, 3. Heb without blame and level ground echoes the words “tam” and “yashar,” “to have integrity and be upright,” the desired traits of the righteous person (cf. 25.21).

Ps. 27: A psalm of trust; the psalmist has no fear of enemies in the protective refuge of the Temple. This psalm is recited from 1st Elul (in the late summer) through Hoshanah Rabbah in the early fall, the period of seeking forgiveness from God surrounding Rosh Ha-Shanah and Yom Kippur.

1: My light, see 36.10; Mic. 7.8; Job 33.30. As in other psalms, various metaphors, here light and stronghold, are combined to reflect different aspects of God’s great power.

2: Devour my flesh, an idiom for harmful, malicious speech (cf. English “backbite”; see translators’ note a-a); it can also refer to enemies as predators. 4–6: The Temple as a place of refuge, where the psalmist can experience God’s presence. The same theme occurs in Ps. 26.6–8. For another connection between these two psalms cf. 27.11 and 26.12. 4: Live in the house of the LORD, the psalmist hopes to visit the Temple on pilgrimages throughout his life (23.6; 84.5).

5: Pavilion (Heb “sukkah”) and tent are terms for the Temple (cf. 76.3; 15.1; 61.5). 7–13: The psalmist seeks God, worried that God will abandon him (see 6.4–5 n.).

10: Even if his parents abandon him, through death or otherwise, the psalmist will have a divine “parent” who will protect and instruct him. The motif of the god as a parent of the king is familiar from Mesopotamian hymns and elsewhere in biblical literature, where God is the superlative parent (see esp. Isa. 49.15). 12: The foes are lying witnesses testifying against the psalmist. 13: The land of the living, as opposed to the land of the dead, where there is no access to God; a metaphor for the Temple.

a-a Or “to slander me”; cf. Dan. 3.8; 6.25. b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

14 Look to the LORD;
 be strong and of good courage!
 O look to the LORD!

28 Of David.

O LORD, I call to You;
 my rock, do not disregard me,
 for if You hold aloof from me,
 I shall be like those gone down into the Pit.
 2 Listen to my plea for mercy when I cry out to You, when I lift my hands toward Your inner sanctuary.
 3 Do not ^acount me^a with the wicked and evildoers who profess goodwill toward their fellows while malice is in their heart.
 4 Pay them according to their deeds, their malicious acts;
 according to their handiwork pay them,
 give them their deserts.
 5 For they do not consider the LORD's deeds,
 the work of His hands.
 May He tear them down,
 never to rebuild them!
 6 Blessed is the LORD,
 for He listens to my plea for mercy.
 7 The LORD is my strength and my shield;
 my heart trusts in Him.
 I was helped,^b and my heart exulted,
 so I will glorify Him with my song.
 8 The LORD is ^ctheir strength;^c
 He is a stronghold for the deliverance of His anointed.
 9 Deliver and bless Your very own people;
 tend them and sustain them forever.

a-a Or "drag me off"; Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Or "strengthened."

c-c Septuagint, Saadia, and others render, and some mss. read, 'oz le'ammo, "the strength of His people."

14: Possibly a response to the psalmist's prayer, this sums up the psalm's message.

Ps. 28: A plea for deliverance from enemies; perhaps a royal psalm (cf. vv. 8–9). God is described in terms of military strength: a rock, strength, shield, stronghold. In vv. 1–5 the psalmist prays for God's response, arguing that he should not be grouped with the wicked, whom God correctly distances from Himself, punishing them with death. Vv. 6–9 follow God's response; the psalmist praises Him and encourages others to do likewise. V. 9 moves from the personal to the national, praying for God's ongoing protection of Israel. 1: Disregard, lit. "be deaf" to my call. The Pit, a synonym for Sheol, the abode of the dead. One cut off from God is like the dead, who were permanently cut off from God. 2: To lift one's hands was the typical position of biblical prayer (see, e.g., 1 Kings 8.22; cf. Ps. 44.21 n.). 3: The deceitful, untrustworthy speech of the wicked is commonplace (Ps. 27.12), but if this is a royal psalm, as some think (cf. vv. 8–9), it may refer to conspiracy against the king. 4: Prayer for measure-for-measure retribution (Ps. 94.2). 6–7: The characteristic move from complaint and petition to praise, with expressions of trust. 8–9: The mention of His anointed (a Davidic king) and the prayer for the people (cf. 3.9) suggest that the speaker is a king.

Ps. 29: A hymn celebrating God's awesome power over nature. Cf. Pss. 46–48; 96–99. God is portrayed as a storm, an earthquake—a theme associated with theophany (cf. b. Zevah. 116a where a link is made with the giving of the Torah at Sinai). More commonly, the psalm is considered a prayer for rain. According to the Talmud, b. Sukkah 55a, the psalm was recited in the Temple on the first of the intermediate days of Sukkot; LXX associates it with the end of Sukkot ("Shemini 'Atzeret"), the time for the prayer for rain; b. Rosh Hash. 32a and b. Meg. 17b link it with the paragraph about rain in the "Shemoneh 'Esrei" prayer. A number of themes and linguistic usages that are also found in Ugaritic literature, as well as the mention of northern locations (Lebanon and Sirion, v. 6), have led modern scholars to see this psalm as an adaptation of a Ugaritic hymn to Baal (or to Hadad, the storm-god). Others see the psalm as part of a more generally shared ancient Near Eastern tradition rather than as a direct borrowing. Either way,

29 A psalm of David.

Ascribe to the LORD, O divine beings,
 ascribe to the LORD glory and strength.
 2 Ascribe to the LORD the glory of His name;
 bow down to the LORD, majestic in holiness.
 3 The voice of the LORD is over the waters;
 the God of glory thunders,
 the LORD, over the mighty waters.
 4 The voice of the LORD is power;
 the voice of the LORD is majesty;
 the voice of the LORD breaks cedars;
 the LORD shatters the cedars of Lebanon.
 6 ^aHe makes Lebanon skip like a calf,^a Sirion, like a young wild ox.
 7 The voice of the LORD kindles flames of fire;
 the voice of the LORD convulses the wilderness;
 the LORD convulses the wilderness of Kadesh;
 the voice of the LORD causes hinds to calve, ^band strips forests bare;^b while in His temple all say "Glory!"
 10 The LORD sat enthroned at the Flood;
 the LORD sits enthroned, king forever.
 11 May the LORD grant strength to His people;
 may the LORD bestow on His people wellbeing.

30 A psalm of David. A song for the dedication of the House.^c

2 I extol You, O LORD, for You have lifted me up,

a-a Lit. "He makes them skip like a calf, Lebanon and Sirion, etc."

b-b Or "brings ewes to early birth."

c I.e., the Temple.

the basic theme is built on the "combat-myth," known in Ugarit and Mesopotamia and reflected in other biblical passages, in which the hero-god defeats the forces of chaos and is then acclaimed by the other gods as their leader. The psalm shares with Ps. 24 the themes of God's triumph over the forces of chaos (primeval waters) and God enthroned as king in His Temple. Ps. 29 is used liturgically on the Sabbath when the Torah is returned to the Ark. 1–2: Cf. 96.7–9; 1 Chron. 16.28–30. 1: Divine beings, lit. "sons of God," or "sons of gods," subordinate deities in the heavenly assembly. In Israelite thought these divine beings are part of God's retinue, his heavenly court (Exod. 15.11; Pss. 82.1; 89.6–8; Job chs 1–2). Probably because of its pagan overtones, Ps. 96.7 substitutes "families of the peoples" for this term. Glory and strength, cf. Ps. 63.3. Glory, Heb "kavod," may refer to the divine radiance, the visual manifestation of God. 2: Majestic in holiness, "behadrat kodesh," an odd phrase but

cf. 110.3, "behadrei kodesh." LXX and Peshitta (Syriac) render "in His holy court." Cf. b. Ber. 30b. 3–9: The voice of the LORD (claps of thunder), signifying God's power over the natural world, occurs seven times in these vv. 3: The LORD battles the mighty waters, the primeval forces of chaos (cf. 24.2). 5: The cedars of Lebanon were famous for their height and strength. 6–8: Earthquake is a traditional accompaniment of a theophany or divine manifestation (18.8; 114.7). 6: Sirion, Mount Hermon (see Deut. 3.9), at the southern border of Lebanon. For mountains skipping, see also 114.4. 8: The wilderness of Kadesh, in western Syria; or, the wilderness of Zin at Qadesh, to the south of Israel, where the Israelites encamped during their wanderings (Num. 20.1; 33.36). 9: Reading with translators' note b-b makes a closer parallelism. An alternate emendation of causes hinds ("ayalot") to calve yields "causes 'elot' (oak trees) to tremble." In His temple, praise from the subordinate deities in the heavenly temple. 10: The LORD's enthronement as king at the Flood (see Ps. 93) may be a double entendre, signifying that God defeated the waters (forces of chaos) and that He reigned since the time of the flood, and will reign forever. 11: A prayer that God, supremely powerful and enthroned forever, will grant well-being to Israel.

Ps. 30: The superscription reinterprets the hymn, perhaps originally a thanksgiving hymn upon recovering from illness, as a prayer about the sickness of the community—i.e., national calamity—and its recovery, the restoration from exile and the rebuilding of the Temple (in 515 BCE; cf. Ezra 6.15–18). An older view sees the occasion as the rededication of the Temple in 164 BCE, following the victory of Judah Maccabee (cf. 1 Macc. 4.36–59). Following tractate Soferim, this psalm is read on Hanukkah. It is also part of the introductory liturgy for the daily, Sabbath, and festival morning service. 1: The translation inverts the

and not let my enemies rejoice over me.

- 3 O LORD, my God,
I cried out to You,
and You healed me.
- 4 O LORD, You brought me up from Sheol, preserved me from going down into the Pit.

- 5 O you faithful of the LORD, sing to Him,
and praise His holy name.
- 6 For He is angry but a moment,
and when He is pleased there is life.
^aOne may lie down weeping at nightfall;^a but at dawn there are shouts of joy.

- 7 When I was untroubled,
I thought, "I shall never be shaken,"
8 for You, O LORD, when You were pleased, made [me]^b firm as a mighty mountain.

When You hid Your face,
I was terrified.

- 9 I called to You, O LORD;
to my LORD I made appeal, 10 "What is to be gained from my death,^c from my descent into the Pit?

Can dust praise You?
Can it declare Your faithfulness?

- 11 Hear, O LORD, and have mercy on me;
O LORD, be my help!"

- 12 You turned my lament into dancing, you undid my sackcloth and girded me
with joy,
13 that [my] whole being might sing hymns
to You endlessly;
O LORD my God, I will praise You forever.

31 For the leader. A psalm of David.

- 2 I seek refuge in You, O LORD;
may I never be disappointed;
as You are righteous, rescue me.
- 3 Incline Your ear to me;
be quick to save me;
be a rock, a stronghold for me,

words, which in Heb are "A psalm, a song of dedication of the House; of David." The mention of David in connection with the dedication of the Temple is anachronistic, since it occurred under Solomon (1 Kings 8; 2 Chron. 5-7); see Ps. 3.1 n. For that reason, some scholars think that the "house" is David's royal residence (2 Sam. 5.11; 7.1-2). 2: Lifted me up, lit. "drew me up" (like water from a well); it complements the idea of being raised from the Pit (v. 4). 4: God brought the psalmist back from a near-death state, from imminent death; he did not let the psalmist actually die. Here, as in Mesopotamian literature, the image of being brought up from death (Sheol and the Pit; 28.1 n.) reflects recovery from serious illness, and not resurrection from death. 5-6: The ritual of thanksgiving in the Temple, involving family and friends celebrating the psalmist's reintegration into the community. God is angry only momentarily (cf. Isa. 54.7-8); His (normal) favor is life-sustaining. An alternative meaning: God is angry for but a moment; His favor lasts a lifetime. 7: The psalmist was apparently in God's favor for a long time, as evidenced by his good health; he expected to remain so indefinitely. He was terrified when God hid His face, was no longer accessible. 9-11: The psalmist quotes his earlier appeal for divine help. 10: Dust, the dead, who have returned to dust. On the inability of the dead to praise God, see 6.5-6; 88.4-6, 11-13; 115.7; 118.17; Isa. 38.18-19. For this reason, argues the psalmist, God should keep him alive; so he can continue to fulfill the main purpose of human life—praising God (cf. v. 13). 12: God replaces the psalmist's lament (mourning) with dancing, and his sackcloth with a festal robe, signifying that God has brought him back from near-death into God's presence. Dancing is a form of praising God (149.3; 150.4).

Ps. 31: An anthological psalm, drawing on vv. from other psalms and Jeremiah, it calls on God for ^{a-a} Or "Weeping may linger for the night."

^b Following Sandia, R. Isaiah of Trani; cf. Ibn Ezra.

^c Lit. "blood."

a citadel, for my deliverance.

4 For You are my rock and my fortress;
You lead me and guide me as befits Your name.

5 You free me from the net laid for me,
for You are my stronghold.

6 Into Your hand I entrust my spirit;
You redeem me, O LORD, faithful God.

7 I detest those who rely on empty folly,
but I trust in the LORD.

8 Let me exult and rejoice in Your faithfulness when You notice my affliction, are mindful of my deep distress, 9 and do not hand me over to my enemy, but ^agrant me relief.^a

10 Have mercy on me, O LORD,
for I am in distress;
my eyes are wasted by vexation,
^bmy substance and body too.^b

11 My life is spent in sorrow, my years in groaning;
my strength fails because of my iniquity,
my limbs waste away.

12 Because of all my foes
I am the particular butt of my neighbors, a horror to my friends;
those who see me on the street avoid me.

13 I am put out of mind like the dead;
I am like an object given up for lost.

14 I hear the whisperings of many,
intrigue^c on every side,
as they scheme together against me,
plotting to take my life.

15 But I trust in You, O LORD;
I say, "You are my God!"

16 My fate is in Your hand; save me from the hand of my enemies and pursuers.

17 Show favor to Your servant;
as You are faithful, deliver me.

18 O LORD, let me not be disappointed when I call You; let the wicked be disappointed;
let them be silenced in Sheol;

help and affirms the psalmist's trust in God. 1–5: God is a refuge, described in terms connoting physical strength and protection (rock, stronghold, citadel, fortress). 1–3: Cf. 71.1–3. 5: The net is a military weapon used to capture prisoners. 6: The language of commercial borrowing and lending. The psalmist entrusts to God his spirit, the animating force that keeps him alive (this is not the "body" and "soul" dichotomy), as one would give a valuable object as a pledge. He is sure that his pledge will be redeemed, returned to him and not forfeited. God will return his life to him, because He is a faithful God. He keeps faith with those who trust in Him. 7: Empty folly is the opposite of the faithful God (v. 6). 9: The psalmist is not entrapped in an enemy's net (v. 5), but finds a "broad place" in the care of God (25.15). 10–11: Physical wasting away, perhaps by illness or perhaps a metaphor for the psalmist's distress. Because of illness the psalmist is shunned by all (38.12; 88.9). Cf. 6.3, 8 for similar phraseology. 12–13: The scorn or shame felt by the petitioner is a major theme of Psalms (e.g., 22.7), and of the Bible as a whole (e.g., Job 19.19; Jer. 23.40), reflecting the fact that ancient Israel was a shame culture. 13: Cf. Eccl. 9.5. 14: Cf. Jer. 20.10. 15: In the preceding vv., the psalmist was the object of other people's thoughts or actions. Now he is the grammatical subject, expressing his own beliefs. The opening words, But I, contrast the psalmist's trust in God with his troubled condition. 17: See Ps. 4.7. 18–21: Counterpoised to Sheol, the abode of the silent dead, is the Temple, residence of the living God. The psalmist prays that the wicked will be silenced in Sheol, while he, like all God-fearers, will be granted the protection of Your presence and will be sheltered in Your pavilion (the Temple). 18: Let the wicked suffer the fate that the psalmist almost suffered. The sin of the wicked is their arrogant speech against the righteous; cf. v. 21.

a-a Lit. "make my feet stand in a broad place."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Others "terror."

19 let lying lips be stilled that speak haughtily against the righteous with arrogance and contempt.
20 How abundant is the good that You have in store for those who fear
You,
that You do in the full view of men for those who take refuge in You.
21 You grant them the protection of Your presence “against scheming men;”
You shelter them in Your pavilion from contentious tongues.
22 Blessed is the LORD,
for He has been wondrously faithful to me,
a veritable bastion.
23 Alarmed, I had thought,
“I am thrust out of Your sight”;
yet You listened to my plea for mercy
when I cried out to You.
24 So love the LORD, all you faithful;
the LORD guards the loyal,
and more than requites him who acts arrogantly.
25 Be strong and of good courage, all you who wait for the LORD.

32 Of David. ^aA maskil.^a Happy is he whose transgression is forgiven, whose sin is covered over.

2 Happy the man whom the LORD does not hold guilty,
and in whose spirit there is no deceit.
3 As long as I said nothing, my limbs wasted away
from my anguished roaring all day long.
4 For night and day
Your hand lay heavy on me;
my vigor waned
as in the summer drought. Selah.
5 Then I acknowledged my sin to You;
I did not cover up my guilt;
I resolved, “I will confess my transgressions to the LORD,”
and You forgave the guilt of my sin. Selah.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

21: Cf. Ps. 76.3. 22: A veritable bastion: According to this reading, God is a bastion; cf. v. 3. Heb reads “in the besieged city,” which might mean “while the psalmist felt himself under siege.” 23: Thrust out of Your sight, separated from the presence of God in the Temple (2 Chron. 26.21; Hos. 9.15; Jonah 2.5). Like v. 15, this v. begins in Heb with “but I,” this time contrasting the “before” and the “after.” 24–25: A ritual of public thanksgiving with the psalmist’s community (30.12–13). The psalmist’s experience validates the principle of trusting in God and encourages others to do so.

Ps. 32: The happiness of the sinner who is forgiven. The psalm has some affinity to wisdom texts (vv. 1–2, 8–9; cf. Ps. 1). The term maskil, of unknown meaning, resonates with “askilka,” “let me enlighten you” (v. 8). 1: Forgiven . . . covered over, divine passives; it is God who forgives sin and covers it (i.e., puts it out of sight). 3–5: The psalmist’s silence (not confessing his sin) brought on illness; acknowledgment of sin brought healing and forgiveness. 4: Selah (also vv. 5, 7), see Ps. 3.3 n. 7: You preserve me from distress in Heb is a soundplay, “mitzar” and “titzreni.” 8–9: A teacher’s instruction, promising guidance for life. Senseless horse . . . cf. Prov. 26.3. 10–11: The varying fates of the wicked and the upright (1.6). Sickness and pain are punishment for sin. Favor, Heb “hesed,” God’s faithful care (cf. 5.8 n.). The psalm ends on a high note of joyful praise (see 97.12), leading into the next psalm.

- 6 Therefore let every faithful man pray to You ^aupon discovering [his sin],^a that the rushing mighty waters not overtake him.
- 7 You are my shelter;
 You preserve me from distress;
 You surround me with the joyous shouts of deliverance. Selah.
- 8 Let me enlighten you and show you which way to go;
 let me offer counsel; my eye is on you.
- 9 Be not like a senseless horse or mule ^bwhose movement must be curbed by bit and bridle;^b
^cfar be it from you!^c
- 10 Many are the torments of the wicked, but he who trusts in the LORD shall be surrounded with favor.
- 11 Rejoice in the LORD and exult, O you righteous;
 shout for joy, all upright men!

33 Sing forth, O you righteous, to the LORD;
 it is fit that the upright acclaim Him.

- 2 Praise the LORD with the lyre;
 with the ten-stringed harp sing to Him;
 3 sing Him a new song;
 play sweetly with shouts of joy.
- 4 For the word of the LORD is right;
 His every deed is faithful.
- 5 He loves what is right and just;
 the earth is full of the LORD's faithful care.
- 6 By the word of the LORD the heavens were made, by the breath of His mouth, all their host.
- 7 He heaps up the ocean waters like a mound, stores the deep in vaults.
- 8 Let all the earth fear the LORD;
 let all the inhabitants of the world dread Him.
- 9 For He spoke, and it was;
 He commanded, and it endured.
- 10 The LORD frustrates the plans of nations, brings to naught the designs of peoples.
- 11 What the LORD plans endures forever,
 what He designs, for ages on end.

Ps. 33: Praise of God's faithful care and the joy of trusting in God. The creator of the world maintains control of it; in contrast to Him, all human power pales in significance. Pss. 33 and 34 have been incorporated into the introductory prayers to the morning service on Sabbath and festivals. 1–3: For music as a form of worship, see 81.2–4; 92.2–4; 150.3–5. 4–6: The world that God created by his word, which is right, is full of God's faithful care. The world is, as a result of how it was created, a place of rightness, justice, and "hesed." 6–9: As in Gen. ch 1, creation is by the divine word: the making of the "heavens," the confinement of the chaotic waters, and the peopling of the earth (Gen. 1.6–10). 7: Cf. Exod. 15.8 where the water of the Sea of Reeds is piled in a heap. 8–11: All inhabitants of the world must be in awe of the creator. Human plans can easily come to naught, but God's plans are eternal.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; others "in a time when You may be found."

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain; for this rendering cf. Ibn Ezra.

12 Happy the nation whose God is the LORD,
 the people He has chosen to be His own.
 13 The LORD looks down from heaven;
 He sees all mankind.
 14 From His dwelling-place He gazes on all the inhabitants of the earth—15 He who fashions the hearts of them all,
 who discerns all their doings.
 16 Kings are not delivered by a large force;
 warriors are not saved by great strength; 17 horses are a false hope for deliverance;
 for all their great power they provide no escape.
 18 Truly the eye of the LORD is on those who fear
 Him,
 who wait for His faithful care
 to save them from death,
 to sustain them in famine.
 20 We set our hope on the LORD,
 He is our help and shield;
 21 in Him our hearts rejoice,
 for in His holy name we trust.
 22 May we enjoy, O LORD, Your faithful care,
 as we have put our hope in You.

34 Of David, ^awhen he feigned madness in the presence of Abimelech, who turned him out, and he left.^a

2 κ I bless the LORD at all times;
 praise of Him is ever in my mouth.
 3 ϙ I glory in the LORD;
 let the lowly hear it and rejoice.
 4 λ Exalt the LORD with me;
 let us extol His name together.
 5 γ I turned to the LORD, and He answered me;
 He saved me from all my terrors.
 6 η Men look to Him and are radiant;
 γ let their faces not be downcast.
 7 ι Here was a lowly man who called,
 and the LORD listened,
 and delivered him from all his troubles.
 8 π The angel of the LORD camps around those who fear Him
 and rescues them.

12: Israel's special relationship with God. 13–14: Cf. Deut. 26.15; 1 Kings 8.30, 39; Pss. 14.2; 53.3; 102.20; 113.4–6; Lam. 3.50.
16–17: Armies and military equipment, however strong, are no match for God's power. Horses pulled war-chariots. 19: Death and famine were common results of war and siege. 20: Shield is an apt image in a military context.
22: The psalm ends with the hope of God's continued care and protection, for which the psalm has been praising Him.

Ps. 34: Praise of God for deliverance from trouble. An acrostic psalm (see Pss. 9–10 n.) with the letter "vav" missing. As in Ps. 25, an additional verse, beginning with the letter "pe," follows the acrostic. The psalm can be divided into two sections, vv. 2–11 and 12–22; the second half in particular has wisdom affinities. Frequent reference is made to parts of the body: mouth, tongue, lips, eyes, ears, face, bones; and to actions associated with them: seeing, hearing, tasting, shouting. 1: See 1 Sam. 21.12–15, where the king, who is here called Abimelech, is referred to as Achish; see also Ps. 3. 3: The lowly, those completely dependent on God. 6: Radiant, the external manifestation of happiness, a bright, smiling face. 8: Protection by a guardian angel, a member of the heavenly court or a manifestation of God (Gen. 24.4; 48.16; Ps. 35.5–6).

a-a Cf. 1 Sam. 21.14 ff.

- 9 ו Taste and see how good the LORD is;
 happy the man who takes refuge in Him!
 10 י Fear the LORD, you His consecrated ones, for those who fear Him lack nothing.
 11 ל Lions have been reduced to starvation, but those who turn to the LORD shall not lack any good.
 12 מ Come, my sons, listen to me;
 I will teach you what it is to fear the LORD.
 13 נ Who is the man who is eager for life,
 who desires years of good fortune?
 14 ס Guard your tongue from evil,
 your lips from deceitful speech.
 15 פ Shun evil and do good,
 seek amity^a and pursue it.
 16 צ The eyes of the LORD are on the righteous,
 His ears attentive to their cry.
 17 ק The face of the LORD is set against evildoers, to erase their names from the earth.
 18 ר They^b cry out, and the LORD hears,
 and saves them from all their troubles.
 19 ש The LORD is close to the brokenhearted;
 those crushed in spirit He delivers.
 20 ת Though the misfortunes of the righteous be many,
 the LORD will save him from them all, 21 י Keeping all his bones intact,
 not one of them being broken.
 22 כ One misfortune is the deathblow of the wicked;
 the foes of the righteous shall be ruined.
 23 The LORD redeems the life of His servants;
 all who take refuge in Him shall not be ruined.

35 Of David.

- O LORD, strive with my adversaries,
 give battle to my foes,
 2 take up shield and buckler,
 and come to my defense;
 3 ready the spear and javelin against my pursuers;
 tell me, "I am your deliverance."
 4 Let those who seek my life
 be frustrated and put to shame;
 let those who plan to harm me
 fall back in disgrace.

^a Or "integrity." ^b Viz., the righteous of v. 16.

10–11: Predatory carnivores (the proud and arrogant) suffer want, while the humble are sustained by God. 12–15: A sage's address to students, teaching fear of the LORD (Job 28.28; Prov. 1.7). In order to achieve a good life, one should guard one's tongue, etc. Questions and riddles were among the ancient pedagogic techniques. 16–18: The LORD's benevolent gaze on the righteous, and His angry face, glaring at evildoers. If we follow the order of the alphabet found in Lam. 2, 3, and 4, and read v. 17 after v. 18, the verses flow more smoothly. 19: Broken-hearted . . . crushed in spirit, the depressed and despondent who call on God. 20–23: The varying fates of the righteous and the wicked. 20: An admission that the righteous do encounter misfortune but that it is temporary; God will remove it. 23: This v. stands outside the acrostic and provides a happy ending for the psalm. See 25.22 n.

Ps. 35: The speaking persona is a military leader, possibly the king, who prays for deliverance from his enemies. In vv. 1–10 the enemies are portrayed as foreign countries with armies; in vv. 11–16 they are false witnesses and treacherous friends, that is, allies who proved untrustworthy. 1–3: Prayer that God, the Divine Warrior, arm Himself for battle against the psalmist's foes. 4–6: Traditional invective against enemies; punishment by God's angelic forces (40.15–16).

5 Let them be as chaff in the wind,
 the LORD's angel driving them on.
 6 Let their path be dark and slippery,
 with the LORD's angel in pursuit.
 7 For without cause they hid a net to trap me;
 without cause they dug a pit^a for me.
 8 Let disaster overtake them unawares;
 let the net they hid catch them;
 let them fall into it when disaster [strikes].
 9 Then shall I exult in the LORD, rejoice in His deliverance.
 10 All my bones shall say,
 "LORD, who is like You?
 You save the poor from one stronger than he,
 the poor and needy from his despoiler." 11 Malicious witnesses appear who question me about things I do not know.
 12 They repay me evil for good,
 [seeking] my bereavement.
 13 Yet, when they were ill,
 my dress was sackcloth,
 I kept a fast—
^bmay what I prayed for happen to me!^b
 14 I walked about as though it were my friend or my brother;
 I was bowed with gloom, like one mourning for his mother.
 15 But when I stumble, they gleefully gather;
 wretches gather against me,
 I know not why;
^cthey tear at me without end.
 16 With impious, mocking grimace^c they gnash their teeth at me.
 17 O Lord, how long will You look on?
 Rescue me ^cfrom their attacks,^c
 my precious life, from the lions, 18 that I may praise You in a great congregation, acclaim You in a mighty throng.
 19 Let not my treacherous enemies rejoice over me, or those who hate me without reason wink their eyes.

5: As in the previous psalm (v. 7), the focus moves to the LORD's angel, a manifestation of God. This commonality may explain the adjacent placement of these two psalms. Chaff is easily blown away (Ps. 1.4; Isa. 17.13). 7-8: By the law of talion or equivalent retribution (see 3.8), net and pit entrap those who used them to ensnare others. 8: Disaster, Heb "sho'ah," the term now used for the Holocaust. Unawares: Just as the enemy plotted to catch the psalmist without warning, so their measure-for-measure punishment will come without warning. 10: All my bones, my whole being. 13-18: The king is betrayed by those he prayed for (former allies). 13: Typical mourning practices. 19-21: The language of conspiracy. 22-25: Appeal to God to intervene; the psalmist assumes that God has seen (v. 22), but for unknown reasons, has not acted. 27-28: In place of the enemies' damaging speech (vv. 11-12, 20-21), the psalmist's tongue tells of the LORD's victory.

a Transferred from first clause for clarity.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain; lit. "my prayer returns upon my bosom."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

20 For they do not offer amity, but devise fraudulent schemes against harmless folk.

21 They open wide their mouths at me, saying, "Aha, aha, we have seen it!"

22 You have seen it, O LORD;
do not hold aloof!
O Lord, be not far from me!

23 Wake, rouse Yourself for my cause, for my claim, O my God and my Lord!

24 Take up my cause, O LORD my God, as You are beneficent,
and let them not rejoice over me.

25 Let them not think,
"Aha, just what we wished!"
Let them not say,
"We have destroyed him!"

26 May those who rejoice at my misfortune be frustrated and utterly disgraced;
may those who vaunt themselves over me be clad in frustration and shame.

27 May those who desire my vindication sing forth joyously;
may they always say,
"Extolled be the LORD who desires the well-being of His servant," while my tongue shall recite Your beneficent acts,
Your praises all day long.

36 For the leader. Of the servant of the LORD, of David.

2 ^aI know^a what Transgression says to the wicked;
he has no sense of the dread of God,
3 ^bbecause its speech is seductive to him till his iniquity be found out and he be hated.^b

4 His words are evil and deceitful;
he will not consider doing good.

5 In bed he plots mischief;
he is set on a path of no good,
he does not reject evil.

6 O LORD, Your faithfulness reaches to heaven;
Your steadfastness to the sky;
7 Your beneficence is like the high mountains;

Ps. 36: Rejoicing in the Temple, protected from evildoers. The poem consists of instruction about the wicked (vv. 2-5), a hymn lauding the Temple (vv. 6-10), and a prayer for God's care of the righteous and the fall of the wicked (vv. 11-13). 1: Servant of the LORD, 18.1. 2: Personified transgression speaks in oracular form (as prophets do). To the wicked, this voice is authoritative. The Rabbis identified it with the evil inclination. 2-5: The wicked have no dread of God, nothing to motivate them to desist from evil thoughts and speech, which occupy them privately (in bed) and publicly (on a path). 6-11: Contrasted with the wicked are those who seek God in his Temple. 6-7: Though He is worshipped at the Temple, God's beneficent justice is of cosmic proportion, reaching everywhere. 7-9: These vv. are recited when donning the tallit (prayer shawl).

a-a Lit. "In my heart is." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Your justice like the great deep;
man and beast You deliver, O LORD.

8 How precious is Your faithful care, O God!
Mankind shelters in the shadow of Your wings.

9 They feast on the rich fare of Your house;
You let them drink at Your refreshing stream.

10 With You is the fountain of life;
by Your light do we see light.

11 Bestow Your faithful care on those devoted to You, and Your beneficence on upright men.

12 Let not the foot of the arrogant tread on me, or the hand of the wicked drive me away.

13 There lie the evildoers, fallen, thrust down, unable to rise.

37 Of David.

κ Do not be vexed by evil men;
do not be incensed by wrongdoers;

2 for they soon wither like grass, like verdure fade away.

3 ς Trust in the LORD and do good, abide in the land and remain loyal.

4 Seek the favor of the LORD, and He will grant you the desires of your heart.

5 λ Leave all^a to the LORD;
trust in Him; He will do it.

6 He will cause your vindication to shine forth like the light,

the justice of your case, like the noonday sun.

7 ρ Be patient and wait for the LORD, do not be vexed by the prospering man who carries out his schemes.

8 η Give up anger, abandon fury, do not be vexed;
it can only do harm.

9 For evil men will be cut off, but those who look to the LORD—
they shall inherit the land.

10 ρ A little longer and there will be no wicked man;
you will look at where he was—he will be gone.

11 But the lowly shall inherit the land, and delight in abundant well-being.

12 τ The wicked man schemes against the righteous, and gnashes his teeth at him.

^a Lit. "your way."

8–10: The Temple protects and its sacrificial meals provide rich fare, the meat and fat eaten by the sacrificer. Refreshing stream, the river of life-giving water that goes out from the Temple; cf. Ezek. 47.1–2; Joel 4.18; Zech. 14.8; Ps. 46.5. Heb for "refreshing" is "adanekha," forming a nexus with the rivers of Eden (Gen. 2.10); Eden is also known as the Garden of God.

These waters are the fountain (source) of life. Light signifies life.

12–13: The psalmist hopes to be safe from the wicked, arrogant in that they do not recognize a higher power. The wicked will be made permanently powerless. 13: There, at Mt. Zion, where the wicked cannot come. Alternatively, it may mean the underworld (cf. Job 3.17) or be an adverb of time ("then").

Ps. 37: An acrostic psalm (see Pss. 9–10 n.; 25 n.) whose themes, structure, and vocabulary are characteristic of Proverbs. "Wisdom" is mentioned explicitly in v. 30, and thus the psalm should be considered a wisdom psalm, written by someone who was part of the wisdom movement or heavily influenced by it. It expresses the certainty that ultimately the righteous will succeed and will inherit the land, and the wicked will fail. Inheriting the land is a major theme, repeated six times. The authors of the Dead Sea Scrolls wrote a "pesher" (a type of commentary) on this psalm in which they apply it to their own situation (4Q171 = 4QpPs^a). They see "Ephraim" and "Manasseh" (their code words for Pharisees and Sadducees) as the wicked and themselves as the people who will, in the future, inherit the land. 1–2: Do not be vexed by the apparent success of evil men: Repeated in vv. 7–8; see Prov. 23.17–18; 24.1, 19–20. 2: Like grass, the evanescence of the wicked (90.5–6; 102.5, 12; 103.15; Job 8.12–13), especially apt in the context of "the land"; cf. vv. 20, 35. 3: The first occurrence of the refrainlike promise of possessing the land (vv. 9, 11, 22, 29, 34). 9–10: Cut off, separated from the land (cf. vv. 28, 38; Prov. 2.21–22).

13 The Lord laughs at him, for He knows that his day will come.
 14 π The wicked draw their swords, bend their bows, to bring down the lowly and needy, to slaughter ^aupright men.^a 15 Their swords shall pierce their own hearts, and their bows shall be broken.
 16 υ Better the little that the righteous man has than the great abundance of the wicked.
 17 For the arms of the wicked shall be broken,
 but the LORD is the support of the righteous.
 18 ϝ The LORD is concerned for the need^b of the blameless;
 their portion lasts forever;
 they shall not come to grief in bad times;
 in famine, they shall eat their fill.
 20 Ϟ But the wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the LORD shall be consumed,
 like meadow grass^c consumed in smoke.
 21 ϟ The wicked man borrows and does not repay;
 the righteous is generous and keeps giving.
 22 Those blessed by Him shall inherit the land,
 but those cursed by Him shall be cut off.
 23 η The steps of a man are made firm by the LORD,
 when He delights in his way.
 24 Though he stumbles, he does not fall down,
 for the LORD gives him support.
 25 θ I have been young and am now old, but I have never seen a righteous man abandoned,
 or his children seeking bread.
 26 He is always generous, and lends, and his children are held blessed.
 27 ο Shun evil and do good,
 and you shall abide forever.
 28 For the LORD loves what is right,
 He does not abandon His faithful ones.
 They are preserved forever,
 while the children of the wicked will be cut off.
 29 The righteous shall inherit the land,
 and abide forever in it.
 30 ϛ The mouth of the righteous utters wisdom, and his tongue speaks what is right.
 31 The teaching of his God is in his heart;
 his feet do not slip.

13: God's derisive laughter at the pretensions of the wicked (2.4; 59.9). 14–15: The weapons of the wicked "backfire" and are broken, as are their arms (v. 17). 16: Better . . . than, characteristic wording of wisdom literature (e.g., Prov. 15.16–17). 18–20: The varying fates of the righteous and the wicked. 27: See v. 3; Ps. 34.15; Prov. 13.19.

a-a Lit. "those whose way is upright." b Lit. "days."
c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

32 x The wicked watches for the righteous, seeking to put him to death; 33 the LORD will not abandon him to his power;
 He will not let him be condemned in judgment.
 34 p Look to the LORD and keep to His way, and He will raise you high that you may inherit the land;
 when the wicked are cut off, you shall see it.
 35 r I saw a wicked man, powerful,
 well-rooted like a robust native tree.
 36 Suddenly he vanished and was gone;
 I sought him, but he was not to be found.
 37 w Mark the blameless, note the upright, for there is a future for the man of integrity.
 38 But transgressors shall be utterly destroyed,
 the future of the wicked shall be cut off.
 39 n The deliverance of the righteous comes from the LORD,
 their stronghold in time of trouble.
 40 The LORD helps them and rescues them, rescues them from the wicked and delivers
 them,
 for they seek refuge in Him.

38 A psalm of David. Lehazkir.^a

2 O LORD, do not punish me in wrath;
 do not chastise me in fury.
 3 For Your arrows have struck me;
 Your blows have fallen upon me.
 4 There is no soundness in my flesh because of Your rage,
 no wholeness in my bones because of my sin.
 5 For my iniquities have ^boverwhelmed me;^b they are like a heavy burden, more than I can bear.
 6 My wounds stink and fester because of my folly.
 7 I am all bent and bowed;
 I walk about in gloom all day long.
 8 For my sinews are full of fever;
 there is no soundness in my flesh.
 9 I am all benumbed and crushed;
 I roar because of the turmoil in my mind.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^{b-b} Lit. "passed over my head."

35–38: The varying fates of the children of the righteous (v. 25) and of the transgressors; this type of contrast also typifies wisdom literature. Wisdom literature often employs empirical observation, as in vv. 25 and 35 "to see." This word occurs eighteen times in Ecclesiastes.

Ps. 38: A sinner prays for healing, a sign that his sins are forgiven. The psalm contains an extensive description of physical illness and mental anguish (see Pss. 6; 13; 22; 31). The list of ailments—which includes the entire body racked with pain, festering wounds, inability to stand erect, fever, dull eyes, lack of strength—sounds like a catalogue of all possible maladies, suggesting that the illness is metaphoric; they are manifestations (perhaps physical) of sin. Burdened by his sins, the psalmist is in mental and physical anguish. Understood thus, the psalm is more a prayer for forgiveness (see esp. v. 19) than a prayer for healing. 2: Sickness was thought to be the punishment for sin. Cf. 6.2; the similarity suggests that either some psalmists copied from each other, or that psalmists used various stock phrases or verses. 3: The punishing illness is described as arrows sent by God (Job 6.4; 16.12–13). 4–6: Sin as the cause of the psalmist's malady (Isa. 1.5–6). Most psalms of complaint lack confes-

10 O Lord, You are aware of all my entreaties;
my groaning is not hidden from You.

11 My mind reels;
my strength fails me;
my eyes too have lost their luster.

12 My friends and companions stand back from my affliction;
my kinsmen stand far off.

13 Those who seek my life lay traps;
those who wish me harm speak malice;
they utter deceit all the time.

14 But I am like a deaf man, unhearing, like a dumb man who cannot speak up;
I am like one who does not hear,
who has no retort on his lips.

16 But I wait for You, O LORD;
You will answer, O Lord, my God.

17 For I fear they will rejoice over me; when my foot gives way they will vaunt themselves against me.

18 For I am on the verge of collapse;
my pain is always with me.

19 I acknowledge my iniquity;
I am fearful over my sin;
for my mortal enemies are numerous;
my treacherous foes are many.

21 Those who repay evil for good harass me for pursuing good.

22 Do not abandon me, O LORD;
my God, be not far from me;
hasten to my aid,
O Lord, my deliverance.

39 For the leader; for Jeduthun. A psalm of David.

2 I resolved I would watch my step lest I offend by my speech;
I would keep my mouth muzzled
while the wicked man was in my presence.

3 I was dumb, silent;
I was very^a still while my pain was intense.

4 My mind was in a rage,
my thoughts were all aflame;
I spoke out:

sions. 12-13: Friends and family distance themselves from the psalmist, showing indifference (see 31.9-13 n.), while enemies speak against him. 14-18: The psalmist cannot or will not respond to his foes, pretending that he does not hear them. He prefers to wait for God's response, without which the psalmist will die. He worries that if his death occurs, his foes will rejoice, a common theme of Psalms (e.g., 13.5). As a sinner, the psalmist has no way to withstand evildoers by himself. 14: Deaf, i.e., ignorant of the plotting of his foes in v. 13. 19: Confession of sin (32.5). 22-23: Like the opening, highly stereotypical language; see 22.12, 20; 40.14.

Ps. 39: A meditation on the brevity of human life (cf. Pss. 90; 102), with the hope that the short time the psalmist has to live will be spent in God's favor. This psalm has some commonality with Ps. 38 (admission that suffering is the result of sin, being "dumb"), but it does not emphasize physical suffering. It also shares major themes with Eccl.: the idea of the brevity of life, expressed by the term "hevel," "a breath," (see the refrain in vv. 6 and 12), a questioning of the purpose of life, and the conclusion that people should use their time in the service of God. 1: Jeduthun was a famous Temple musician; see 1 Chron. 16.42; 25.6; Pss. 62; 77. 2-5: Avoidance of sins of speech is a common concern of Psalms. Here, speech would challenge God or express anger at His actions against the psalmist, so the psalmist keeps silent as long as he can (cf. v. 10); but at last he speaks out, asking God how long he has to live, that is, how long he must bear his suffering. (Cf. Job, who

^a Cf. use of twb in Hos. 10.1; Jonah 4.4.

5 Tell me, O LORD, what my term is, what is the measure of my days;
 I would know how fleeting my life is.
 6 You have made my life just handbreadths long;
 its span is as nothing in Your sight;
 no man endures any longer than a breath.
Selah.
 7 Man walks about as a mere shadow;
 mere futility is his hustle and bustle, amassing and not knowing who will gather in.
 8 What, then, can I count on, O Lord?
 In You my hope lies.
 9 Deliver me from all my transgressions;
 make me not the butt of the benighted.
 10 I am dumb, I do not speak up,
 for it is Your doing.
 11 Take away Your plague from me;
 I perish from Your blows.
 12 You chastise a man in punishment for his sin, consuming like a moth what he treasures.
 No man is more than a breath. Selah.

13 Hear my prayer, O LORD; give ear to my cry;
 do not disregard my tears;
 for like all my forebears
 I am an alien, resident with You.
 14 Look away from me, that I may recover,
 before I pass away and am gone.

40 For the leader. A psalm of David.

2 I put my hope in the LORD;
 He inclined toward me,
 and heeded my cry.
 3 He lifted me out of the miry pit,
 the slimy clay,
 and set my feet on a rock,
 steadied my legs.
 4 He put a new song into my mouth,
 a hymn to our God.
 May many see it and stand in awe,
 and trust in the LORD.
 5 Happy is the man who makes the LORD his trust, who turns not to the arrogant or to followers of falsehood.

does not hesitate to challenge God.) 6: Selah (also v. 11), see 3.3 n. 7: For the theme of one's wealth left for others, see 49.17-18; Eccl. 2.18-19. 8: Given that life is short and unpredictable, the only durable hope is faith in God, which the psalmist professes. This faith should lead God to forgive his sins and remove his punishment. 12: Here and in v. 7 the suffering seems to be financial loss rather than illness. 13: An alien, resident, a resident alien, a legal term (see Lev. 25.23; 1 Chron. 29.15) used metaphorically to mean that the psalmist resides only temporarily and conditionally with God. 14: Look away from me, stop punishing me. Am gone, there is no thought of an afterlife in Psalms.

Ps. 40: The psalmist seeks a public and permanent venue for praising God, to acknowledge God's past favors and in anticipation of the current favor now requested. This balance between anticipatory praise and a request for deliverance is not unusual (cf. Ps. 22), but here the emphasis is on praise rather than on complaint about misfortune. This psalm is perhaps a combination of two psalms, the second of which (vv. 14-18) is preserved as Ps. 70. (NJPS makes the break after v. 12.) Alternatively, the psalm was one composition and Ps. 70 has lost the first part. 3: Pit . . . slimy clay, synonyms for the abode of the dead; as in 30.4, death is used to refer to grave illness. The terra firma image of a rock contrasts with the slippery and sinking image of slimy clay. 4: A new song, cf. Ps. 33.3. 5: Ps. 34.9; Prov. 16.20. 6: Cannot be set out before you, or, "cannot be compared to you." 7-9: Difficult to interpret. A general statement about sacrifice is illustrated by listing several main types: sacrifice, a nonspecific term for animal offerings; meal offering, a

- 6 ^aYou, O LORD my God, have done many things;
the wonders You have devised for us cannot be set out before You;^a I would rehearse the tale of them, but they are more than can be told.
- 7 ^bYou gave me to understand that^b
You do not desire sacrifice and meal offering;
You do not ask for burnt offering and sin offering.
- 8 Then I said,
^b“See, I will bring a scroll recounting what befell me.”^b
- 9 To do what pleases You, my God, is my desire;
Your teaching is in my inmost parts.
- 10 I proclaimed [Your] righteousness in a great congregation;
see, I did not withhold my words;
O LORD, You must know it.
- 11 I did not keep Your beneficence to myself;
I declared Your faithful deliverance;
I did not fail to speak of Your steadfast love in a great congregation.
- 12 O LORD, You will not withhold from me Your compassion;
Your steadfast love will protect me always.
- 13 For misfortunes without number envelop me;
my iniquities have caught up with me;
I cannot see;
they are more than the hairs of my head;
^c“I am at my wits’ end.”^c
- 14^d O favor me, LORD, and save me;
O LORD, hasten to my aid.
- 15 Let those who seek to destroy my life
be frustrated and disgraced;
let those who wish me harm
fall back in shame.
- 16 Let those who say “Aha! Aha!” over me be desolate because of their frustration.
- 17 But let all who seek You be glad and rejoice in You;
let those who are eager for Your deliverance always say, “Extolled be the LORD!”
- 18 But I am poor and needy;
may the Lord devise [deliverance] for me.

grain offering accompanying animal sacrifice; burnt offering, in which the entire sacrifice is consumed by fire; sin offering, a purification offering. This is not a critique of the sacrificial system, but rather a notice that sacrifice is not required in this instance and does not satisfy the psalmist’s desire to do what pleases . . . God. God is pleased if people follow his teaching, his torah, written in a scroll (cf. Deut. 31.26). Doing what pleases God is preferable to sacrifice (1 Sam. 15.22; Jer. 7.21–23; Mic. 6.6–7). For the idea that a psalm or prayer may please God more than a sacrifice or may take the place of (unavailable) sacrifice, cf. Pss. 69.30–32; 141.2. 8: This v. is a crux. NJPS interprets a scroll as the psalmist’s hymn or a record of his experience. Other interpretations are: the Torah (Jer. 31.31–34); or the book of life, which appears elsewhere in the Bible (e.g., Exod. 32.32; Pss. 69.29; 139.16; Dan. 12.1)—this idea is further developed in later Judaism, especially in the Rosh Ha-Shanah liturgy; or, if the psalmist is a king, the law of the king (Deut. 17.14–20). Recounting what befell me translates Heb “katuv ‘alay,” “written on/about me.” According to this translation, the psalmist brings a written, and therefore permanent, account of his experience in place of a sacrifice—a very literary touch by a man of words. Others understand “written of me” to mean “prescribed to me,” that is, the Torah is prescribed to the psalmist. 10: Great congregation, the psalmist’s community, participants in the thanksgiving ceremony (cf. Pss. 22.26; 35.18). Praise is only meaningful if it is public. 13: God’s deeds are too numerous to recount (v. 6) and the psalmist’s misfortunes are too many to list. 15–17: The psalmist prays that the enemy be repulsed and shamed, and that those who seek God join the psalmist in praise, a typical trope in Psalms. 18: The righteous are often called poor and needy (cf. Ps. 86.1). Do not delay, lit. “do not be late,” as though only a short time remains.

a-a Or “You, O LORD my God, have done many things—/the wonders You have devised for us; /none can equal You.”

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Or “my courage fails me.”

d With vv. 14–18, cf. Ps. 70.

You are my help and my rescuer;
my God, do not delay.

41 For the leader. A psalm of David.

² Happy is he who is thoughtful of the wretched;
in bad times may the LORD keep him from harm.
³ May the LORD guard him and preserve him;
and may he be thought happy in the land.
Do not subject him to the will of his enemies.
⁴ The LORD will sustain him on his sickbed; ^aYou shall wholly transform his bed of suffering.^a ⁵ I said, "O LORD, have mercy on me, heal me, for I have sinned against You."
⁶ My enemies speak evilly of me,
"When will he die and his name perish?"
⁷ If one comes to visit, he speaks falsely;
his mind stores up evil thoughts;
once outside, he speaks them.
⁸ All my enemies whisper together against me, imagining the worst for me.
⁹ "Something baneful has settled in him;
he'll not rise from his bed again."
¹⁰ My ally in whom I trusted, even he who shares my bread, ^ahas been utterly false to me.^a ¹¹ But You, O LORD, have mercy on me;
let me rise again and repay them.
¹² Then shall I know that You are pleased with me:
when my enemy cannot shout in triumph
over me.
¹³ You will support me because of my integrity, and let me abide in Your presence forever.
¹⁴ Blessed is the LORD, God of Israel,
from eternity to eternity.
Amen and Amen.

BOOK TWO

42 For the leader. A maskil of the Korahites.

² Like a hind crying for water,^b
my soul cries for You, O God;

Ps. 41: A prayer for healing, with similarities to Pss. 38 and 39.

2–4: God's protection of the ill.

5–9: The psalmist contrasts what he says to what the enemies have said. 5: The petitioner believes that sin is the cause of the illness

(39.12). 6–9: The psalmist's enemies are guilty of insincere and damaging speech (38.13). Whisper together suggests a curse or spell against the sick person, quoted in v. 9. 10: Cf. 35.11–16. 11: Let me rise, "raise me up," in contrast to the words of the enemies: "he'll not rise . . ." 12–13: In the context of a plea for healing, these vv. may suggest that, once prevented by his illness from coming to the Temple (cf. 2 Chron. 26.21), the psalmist is confident that he will be healed and readmitted to God's presence. 13: Integrity and being in God's presence forever are found elsewhere at the close of a psalm (e.g., 23; 26). 14: The doxology or blessing that closes Book I of the Psalter is not originally part of the psalm, but reflects the editing of the psalter into five books. Similar doxologies are found at the end of the other book divisions (72.19; 89.53; 106.48).

Ps. 42: Pss. 42–43 are a single psalm, as indicated by their shared refrain (42.6, 12; 43.5), and common theme of the desire to come to the Temple despite enemy persecution (42.3; 43.3–4; cf. Pss. 9–10, also thought to have been one psalm). Ps. 42 begins a collection called the Elohistic Psalter. Comprised of Pss. 42–83, this section much prefers the Heb "elohim," "God" (sometimes translated "god") to LORD (Hebrew "YHWH"), in sharp contrast to the rest of the Psalter. Phrases like (Ps. 43.4) "O God, my God" are awkward in Heb, and may reflect a revision of the more common and expected, "O LORD, my God" (e.g., Jonah 2.7). Likewise, the use of "God" throughout Ps. 82 is confusing, and is likely secondary (see 82.1 n.). Scholars suggest that most of the references to God in this grouping are secondary, and were originally LORD ("YHWH"); these a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Lit. "watercourses."

- 3 my soul thirsts for God, the living God;
O when will I come to appear before God!
- 4 My tears have been my food day and night;
I am ever taunted with, "Where is your God?"
- 5 When I think of this, I pour out my soul:
how I ^awalked with the crowd, moved with them,^a the festive throng, to the House of God with joyous shouts of praise.
- 6 Why so downcast, my soul,
why disquieted within me?
Have hope in God;
I will yet praise Him ^bfor His saving presence.^b
- 7 O my God, my soul is downcast;
therefore I think of You in this land of Jordan and Hermon, in Mount Mizar,
8 where deep calls to deep in the roar of ^aYour cataracts;^a all Your breakers and billows have swept over me.
- 9 By day may the LORD vouchsafe His faithful care,
so that at night a song to Him may be with me,
a prayer to the God of my life.
- 10 I say to God, my rock,
"Why have You forgotten me,
why must I walk in gloom,
oppressed by my enemy?"
- 11 ^aCrushing my bones,^a my foes revile me,
taunting me always with, "Where is your God?"

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Several ancient versions and Heb. mss. connect the first word in v. 7 with the end of 6, reading yeshu'ot panai we'Elohai, "my ever-present help, my God," as in vv. 12 and Ps. 43:5.

were changed by an editor who preferred to call the deity "elohim," God. A parallel phenomenon is the use of "elohim" in the E source in the Torah. Ps. 42 also introduces the collection of Korahite psalms. These are found in Pss. 42(–43); 44–49; 84–85; 87–88, in other words in two collections, one in the Elohist Psalter (42–49), one outside it (84–88). The separation of this collection in two sections of Psalms is one of many indications of the complexity of the editing of the Psalter. As indicated by 2 Chron. 20:19, "Levites of the sons of Kohath and of the sons of Korah got up to extol the LORD God of Israel at the top of their voices," the Korahites had a special role in

Temple singing. (Contrast the negative depiction of the Korahites in Num. ch 16.) There are some common phrases in the collection (e.g., Pss. 42.3 and 84.3, "the living God"; 42.3 and 84.8, "appear[ing] before God"), but attempts at finding strong thematic similarities between them are not compelling. Similarly unconvincing are attempts to read the Korahite collection as a whole, especially as stages of a ritual. 1: On maskil, see 32.1 n.; a disproportionate number of psalms with this word appear in the Elohist Psalter. 2–3: The imagery is very striking (see also 63.2). God is the basic nourishment for the psalmist. 3: On the living God, see 18.47 n. Some ancient biblical translations render to appear before God as "to see God"; the consonantal Heb text allows this translation. This may reflect an idea that God could actually be seen at a temple, manifest through an image (see 11.7 n.). Zion plays a disproportionately significant role in the Korah psalms; see esp. Ps. 48. 4: Instead of divine nourishment, the psalmist's food and drink is his tears. The taunt of the enemies is that his God is powerless to relieve his current predicament. 5–6: This psalm is remarkable for the inner dialogues it relates. Soul reflects the inner being; the Bible does not partake in the (Greek) notion of a bipartite being, comprised of body and soul. 6: A refrain (see also v. 12 and 43.6). God's saving presence refers back to seeing God in v. 3 (the word "face" [Heb "panim"] is used in both verses). 7: The northern geographical locations (Mount Mizar is probably near Hermon) mentioned suggest that the psalmist is distant from Jerusalem; some have suggested that this psalm, and perhaps all of the Korahite psalms, are northern in origin. 8: A mythological reference, perhaps also alluding to the sources of the Jordan River in northern Israel. 9: The God of my life refers back to v. 3; this psalm has an unusual number of refrains and cross-references. 10–11: Foes are finally revealed to be the main topic

12 Why so downcast, my soul,
 why disquieted within me?
 Have hope in God;
 I will yet praise Him,
 my ever-present help, my God.

43^aVindicate me, O God, champion my cause
 against faithless people;
 rescue me from the treacherous, dishonest
 man.

2 For You are my God, my stronghold;
 why have You rejected me?
 Why must I walk in gloom,
 oppressed by the enemy?
 3 Send forth Your light and Your truth;
 they will lead me;
 they will bring me to Your holy mountain,
 to Your dwelling-place,
 4 that I may come to the altar of God,
 God, my delight, my joy;
 that I may praise You with the lyre,
 O God, my God.
 5 Why so downcast, my soul,
 why disquieted within me?
 Have hope in God;
 I will yet praise Him,
 my ever-present help, my God.

44 For the leader. Of the Korahites. A maskil.

2 We have heard, O God,
 our fathers have told us
 the deeds You performed in their time, in days of old.
 3 With Your hand You planted them,
 displacing nations;
 You brought misfortune on peoples,
 and drove them out.
 4 It was not by their sword that they took the land,
 their arm did not give them victory, but Your right hand, Your arm, and Your goodwill,
 for You favored them.
 5 You are my king, O God; decree victories for Jacob!

of this petition. Taunting me always with, "Where is your God?" serves as a refrain with v. 4. 12: See v. 6 n.

Ps. 43: Pss. 42–43 form a single unit (see above). It is unclear when and how they became separated; perhaps the fact that Ps. 42 nostalgically focuses on the past, while Ps. 43 is more concerned with the future, promoted this division. In addition, Ps. 43 opens with the common initial elements of an individual petition (e.g., 5.2–3). 1–2: These reflect the typical features of a petition: invocation (O God), petition in the imperative or related forms (vindicate, champion, rescue), and motivation (For You . . .) 3–4: The main theme, the desire to visit the Temple, is reiterated (see 42.3 n.). Dwelling-place is the plural of the word used to express "Tabernacle" ("mishkan") in Priestly literature. It is not entirely clear how God's light and . . . truth will save the psalmist from his enemies. Ibn Ezra and Radak note that the light is a countermeasure to the gloom, lit. darkness, that the psalmist felt in v. 2. 5: A concluding refrain; see 42.6 n.

Ps. 44: This is a community petition; it begins with a hymn about God's past deliverance (vv. 2–9), followed by a complaint about the current situation (vv. 10–17). A protestation of innocence (vv. 18–23) and the petition itself (vv. 24–27) conclude the psalm. 2: On parents teaching children, see, e.g., Deut. 6.20–25. 3: On planting as a metaphor for possessing the land of Israel, see Exod. 15.17. 4: Even Rahab the foreign prostitute acknowledges that it is through divine help that Israel succeeds militarily (Josh. 2.9–11). 5: In the ancient Near Eastern world, the king led his people in battle; thus God's role as warrior is part of His role as king.

^a A continuation of Ps. 42.

6 Through You we gore our foes;
 by Your name we trample our adversaries;
 7 I do not trust in my bow;
 it is not my sword that gives me victory;
 8 You give us victory over our foes;
 You thwart those who hate us.
 9 In God we glory at all times, and praise Your name unceasingly. Selah.
 10 Yet You have rejected and disgraced us;
 You do not go with our armies.
 11 You make us retreat before our foe;
 our enemies plunder us at will.
 12 You let them devour us like sheep;
 You disperse us among the nations.
 13 You sell Your people for no fortune,
 You set no high price on them.
 14 You make us the butt of our neighbors,
 the scorn and derision of those around us.
 15 You make us a byword among the nations,
 a laughingstock^a among the peoples.
 16 I am always aware of my disgrace;
 I am wholly covered with shame 17 at the sound of taunting revilers, in the presence of the vengeful foe.
 18 All this has come upon us,
 yet we have not forgotten You,
 or been false to Your covenant.
 19 Our hearts have not gone astray,
 nor have our feet swerved from Your path, 20 though You cast us, crushed, to where the ^bsea monster^b is,
 and covered us over with deepest darkness.
 21 If we forgot the name of our God and spread forth our hands to a foreign god, 22 God would surely search it out,
 for He knows the secrets of the heart.
 23 It is for Your sake that we are slain all day long,
 that we are regarded as sheep to be slaughtered.
 24 Rouse Yourself; why do You sleep, O Lord?
 Awaken, do not reject us forever!
 25 Why do You hide Your face,
 ignoring our affliction and distress?

9: This is a typical case where Selah appears at a main division of a psalm (see 3.3 n.), in this case, demarcating the hymn from the complaint. 10: You do not go with our armies may be a play on God's role as LORD of hosts, who is supposed to lead his heavenly hosts or armies in Israel's defense. 12: The sheep metaphor illustrates dispersal of the defeated troops in battle; cf. 1 Kings 22.17: "I saw all Israel scattered over the hills like sheep without a shepherd."

18: Covenants are mutual obligations; the psalmist is saying that even though God has broken His side, the community continues to maintain its obligations. 20: For this myth, see 8.1 n. 21–22: See the similar self-imprecation at 7.4–6. Spread forth our hands refers to praying; this was the typical prayer position in the ancient Near East, and a stele from Hazor shows two upraised hands, representing the supplicant. On God knowing people's secret thoughts, see Jer. 17.10. 24–27: This section contains the typical elements of a petition: the invocation (O LORD), imperatives (rouse, awaken, arise, help), and a motivation (as befits Your faithfulness). This motivation goes beyond the ideas expressed in vv. 21–23, suggesting that even if the people are culpable, they must be forgiven. 24: On God sleeping, see 7.7 n. 25: On God hiding His face, see 6.4–5 n.

^a Lit. "a wagging of the head."

^{b-b} Heb. tannim = tannin, as in Ezek. 29.3 and 32.2.

- 26 We lie prostrate in the dust;
our body clings to the ground.
27 Arise and help us,
redeem us, as befits Your faithfulness.

45 For the leader; ^aon shoshannim. ^a Of the Korahites.
A maskil. A love song.

- 2 My heart is astir with gracious words;
I speak my poem to a king;
my tongue is the pen of an expert scribe.
3 You are fairer than all men;
your speech is endowed with grace;
rightly has God given you an eternal blessing.
4 Gird your sword upon your thigh, O hero, in your splendor and glory;
5 ^ain your glory, win success; ride on in the cause of truth and meekness and right;
and let your right hand lead you to awesome deeds.^a 6 Your arrows, sharpened,
^b[pierce] the breast of the king's enemies;
peoples fall at your feet.^b
7 Your ^cdivine throne^c is everlasting;
your royal scepter is a scepter of equity.
8 You love righteousness and hate wickedness;
rightly has God, your God, chosen to anoint
you
with oil of gladness over all your peers.
9 All your robes [are fragrant] with myrrh and aloes and cassia;

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Order of Heb. clauses inverted for clarity. c-c Cf. 1 Chron. 29.23.

26: These represent military subjugation (see Josh. 10.24). 27: Arise may have military connotations; see 7.7 n. On God's faithfulness, see 5.8 n.

Ps. 45: A unique psalm, commemorating a royal wedding. It mentions the name of neither king nor queen, and thus could be reused for other royal weddings. Scholars have speculated on the psalm's original setting. Ahab is a leading contender since he married Jezebel, a Phoenician princess (see v. 13), and built a palace inlaid with ivory (see v. 9 and 1 Kings 22.39); some have even suggested the verb (v. 8) You love ("ahavta") is a play on the name Ahab. Medievals read the psalm about David (Ibn Ezra, first opinion) or about the Messiah (Ibn Ezra, second opinion, Radak). In the Christian community, this was typically read Christologically, and Radak concludes his commentary with a long polemic against this reading. Although the psalm is singular as a royal wedding psalm, it shares the following motifs with Ps. 72, another royal psalm: the king's might, his justice, and a conclusion that all nations shall praise him.

1: A unique superscription with many attributes. Shoshannim (lilies?) predominate in the Song of Songs, and are seen as erotic (e.g., Song 5.13); this connects to the attribute A love song. 2: This too is unique—no other psalm has this type of introduction, speaking to an audience classifying the following psalm (my poem to a king).

3: Beauty was a royal attribute (see 1 Sam. 9.2 of Saul and 1 Sam. 16.12 of David); Egyptian kings are also described as very handsome.

4–6: Israelite kings led their nation in battle and were expected to be warriors; here the king is depicted as an ideal, successful warrior.

4: Splendor and glory are elsewhere divine attributes (e.g., 104.1); this raises the possibility that the king is here viewed as divine (see v. 7 n.). 7–8: Justice was an important royal quality; see esp. 1 Kings 3.4–14 (of Solomon) and the description of the ideal future king in Isa. 11.3–5. 7: This may also be translated "Your throne, O God ("elohim"), is everlasting" (so LXX), where the king is referred to as God. If this is taken literally, this psalm would be unique in the entire Bible in explicitly depicting the king as divine (see v. 4 and v. 18 n.), a notion that existed at times in other ancient Near Eastern cultures but is otherwise absent in biblical thought. Other modern scholars render the v. as "Your throne is like God's throne" (so already Ibn Ezra) or "Your throne is supreme." The Targum and Saadia add the words "will establish," reading "God will establish your throne," while Rashi understands "elohim" as judges (see Exod. 21.6, translators' note). These medieval and modern translations, including NJPS (Your divine throne), make this v. fit other texts, which do not view the biblical king as divine. 8: Anointing is the central ritual of kingship (see 2.2 n.). 9–10: A description of the pomp and cere-

from ivoried palaces lutes entertain you.

10 Royal princesses are your favorites;
the consort stands at your right hand,
decked in gold of Ophir.

11 Take heed, lass, and note, incline your ear:
forget your people and your father's house, 12 and let the king be aroused by your beauty;
since he is your lord, bow to him.

13 O Tyrian lass,
the wealthiest people will court your favor with gifts, 14 *goods of all sorts.

The royal princess,
her dress embroidered with golden mountings, 15 is led inside to the king;^a maidens in her train, her companions, are presented to you.

16 They are led in with joy and gladness;
they enter the palace of the king.
17 Your sons will succeed your ancestors;
you will appoint them princes throughout the land.

18 I commemorate your fame for all generations, so peoples will praise you forever and ever.

46 For the leader. Of the Korahites; ^aon alamoth.^a
A song.

2 God is our refuge and stronghold, a help in trouble, very near.

3 Therefore we are not afraid though the earth reels, though mountains topple into the sea—4 its waters rage and foam;
in its swell mountains quake. Selah.

5 There is a river whose streams gladden God's city,
the holy dwelling-place of the Most High.

mony of the wedding. 10: The psalmist avoids the usual word for queen, choosing consort ("shegal"), a rare loanword from Akkadian.

11-12: In the ancient Near East, wives were subservient to their husbands, and abandoned the practices and religion of their birth family for those of their husbands; even queens must do so. 13: Others assume that a Tyrian woman from Phoenicia was part of the wedding party, though not necessarily the bride. 14-17: A continuation of the description of the wedding ceremony. 14: The Heb is difficult; in classical Jewish sources, the first part of the v. is connected to notions of female modesty, and is understood as suggesting that a woman's place is in her house rather than in public (e.g., b. Yebam. 67a and b. Git. 12a).

18: A remarkable conclusion, where the king is praised in language typically reserved for God; the royal Ps. 72.17 offers a similar conclusion.

Ps. 46: This psalm expresses the community's confidence in God. It is unclear when and by whom such psalms were recited; perhaps they are to be connected to the demand of Ps. 62.9: "Trust in Him at all times, O people; pour out your hearts before Him; God is our refuge. Selah." Some modern commentators connect it to the deliverance of Jerusalem from Sennacherib in 701 (see 1 Kings chs 18-20), but there is nothing specific in the psalm to support this. Like Ps. 48, another Korahite psalm, its focus is on Jerusalem. 1: The meaning of alamoth is uncertain, though some connect it to the same word meaning "maidens." 2: Similar imagery is in 18.3. 3-4: Mythological language going back to Canaanite traditions (see 8.3 n.). Before these myths were recovered, the psalm was often connected to the eschatological battles (so Rashi and Radak). 5: As in 104.6-13, the waters of chaos are domesticated. This description might be imaginative, since the Gihon Spring, the main water source of Jerusalem, is too small to fit the depiction of the 6 God is in its midst, it will not be toppled;

^{a-a} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

by daybreak God will come to its aid.
7 Nations rage, kingdoms topple;
at the sound of His thunder the earth dissolves.
8 The LORD of hosts is with us;
the God of Jacob is our haven. Selah.

9 Come and see what the LORD has done,
how He has wrought desolation on the earth.
10 He puts a stop to wars throughout the earth, breaking the bow, snapping the spear, consigning wagons to the flames.
11 “Desist! Realize that I am God!
I dominate the nations;
I dominate the earth.”
12 The LORD of hosts is with us;
the God of Jacob is our haven. Selah.

47 For the leader. Of the Korahites. A psalm.

2 All you peoples, clap your hands, raise a joyous shout for God.
3 For the LORD Most High is awesome, great king over all the earth;
4 He subjects peoples to us, sets nations at our feet.
5 He chose our heritage for us,
the pride of Jacob whom He loved. Selah.
6 God ascends midst acclamation;
the LORD, to the blasts of the horn.
7 Sing, O sing to God;
sing, O sing to our king;

v.; others suggest that this psalm was originally northern (see the Korahite psalm 42.8 n.). In the Korahite 87.2, however, God's city clearly refers to Jerusalem. 6: As in Ps. 2.6, God is envisioned as dwelling in Jerusalem. Daybreak, when dangerous night ends, is traditionally seen as an auspicious time, a time when deliverance comes. 7: The kingdoms topple, matching the defeat of chaos (“mountains topple”) in v. 3. 8: LORD of hosts, associated with God as warrior (see 24.10 n.), is infrequent in Psalms, but is used here as contextually appropriate.

10: God is so great a warrior that He can end all war (see Isa. 2.4 || Mic. 4.3). 11: Most likely, some cultic official spoke this v. in God's name; in content and style (note the imperatives) it matches v. 9. 12: A refrain (see Ps. 42.6 n.) with v. 8.

Ps. 47: Pss. 47:93; 96–99 are called kingship psalms because they all explicitly refer to God as king. Ps. 47, in the Korahite collection, shares many elements with the other kingship psalms; it is uncertain if they all functioned together in a ritual commemorating God's kingship or enthronement. If such a ritual existed in the biblical period, it may have been associated with the new year (postbiblical Rosh Ha-Shanah, early biblical Sukkot; see Exod. 23.16 n.), which in the rabbinic period has the kingship of God as one of its major themes. (See also introduction to Ps. 93.) This understanding of the psalm developed in the early twentieth century, when an attempt was made to understand the ritual background of each psalm; most traditional Jewish interpreters understood the psalm eschatologically (see esp. Radak to v. 9, who connects the theme of universal acknowledgment of God to Zech. 14.9). In the Middle Ages, Ps. 47 began to be recited on Rosh Ha-Shanah before the blowing of the shofar (ram's horn), most likely under the influence of v. 6.

2: It is unclear how the nations are being invoked; v. 10 seems to suggest that their representatives were actually present. The theme is thus God's universal kingship. This psalm may then be seen as an actualization of the immediately preceding Ps. 46.11, “Desist! Realize that I am God! I dominate the nations; I dominate the earth.” Such close connections between adjacent psalms are unusual. Great noise and a joyous shout are part of the typical human coronation ritual (e.g., 1 Kings 1.39–40), here projected onto God. This suggests that this psalm may be viewed as an enthronement psalm, and that through a set of rituals, God was (re)enthroned annually. 3: The epithet great king, a popular epithet of Mesopotamian kings, is used of no Israelite king, perhaps because it was reserved for God as King. 4: The pride of Jacob seems to be a nickname of Israel or Jerusalem. 6: Ascends (“alah”) refers back to God as “Most High” (v. 3, “elyon”; the Heb root is the same). It most likely refers to God ascending the royal throne. 7–8: Sing is repeated five times; perhaps the human king had a group of singers who entertained him. Angelic singing, or at least chanting to God as king, is described in Isa.

8 for God is king over all the earth;
sing a hymn.^a 9 God reigns over the nations;
God is seated on His holy throne.
10 The great of the peoples are gathered together,
the retinue of Abraham’s God;
for the guardians of the earth belong to God;
He is greatly exalted.

48 A song. A psalm of the Korahites.

2 The LORD is great and much acclaimed in the city of our God,
His holy mountain—
3 fair-crested, joy of all the earth, Mount Zion, summit of Zaphon,^b city of the great king.
4 Through its citadels, God has made Himself known as a haven.
5 See, the kings joined forces;
they advanced together.
6 At the mere sight of it they were stunned,
they were terrified, they panicked;
7 they were seized there with a trembling, like a woman in the throes of labor, 8 as the Tarshish fleet was wrecked in an easterly gale.^c 9 The likes of what we heard we have now witnessed in the city of the LORD of hosts,
in the city of our God—
may God preserve it forever! Selah.
10 In Your temple, God,
we meditate upon Your faithful care.

on the usage of the root “-l-h” in vv. 3 and 6 (see v. 6 n.).

Ps. 48: This is a communal hymn with strong thematic connections to the previous two psalms: it too focuses on Jerusalem as God’s city, and is primarily concerned with a conflict between Israel and the nations, where God ultimately saves Israel. It reworks certain old myths (see v. 3 n.), but historicizes them. It most likely reflects an ideal rather than a real battle; this explains why several medievals read this eschatologically (see, e.g., Rashi and Radak). It also, however, contains hints of a ritual (see vv. 13–14 n.), suggesting that the psalm as a whole reflects a ritualized commemoration of a divine victory. 2: His holy mountain, a reference to Mount Zion (which is actually more like a hill), mirrors the previous psalm’s “holy throne” (47.9). 3: The centrality of Jerusalem is likewise expressed in the eschatological Isa. 23.2–3, but in this psalm, it is imagined as happening in the present. Zaphon refers to the mountain where Baal resided according to the Ugaritic myths (see, e.g., ANET, p. 136, “my mount Godly Zaphon”). Some believe that this psalm therefore originally referred to a northern city (see 42.8 and 46.6 n.); more likely, this is a remarkable reuse of old mythological material, where the Israelite God has absorbed qualities of Baal (see Ps. 29 n.), including even his place of residence! In this context, it is likely that the great king is God (see 47.3), rather than the Davidic king. 8: The identification of Tarshish is uncertain; biblical texts suggest that it is a faraway place in the western Mediterranean, reachable by boat (see esp. Jonah 1.3). Thus, the Tarshish fleet represents well-built boats, capable of long journeys. 9: It is God’s physical presence in Jerusalem (see Ps. 2.3 n.) that makes Jerusalem inviolable. The beginning of Ezekiel describes the divine presence leaving the Temple, which allows the city’s conquest (Ezek. 10.18; 11.23). 10: God’s faithful care (“l’nesed”; see 5.8 n.) is localized in the Temple, a Heb. maskil, a musical term of uncertain meaning.

b A term for the divine abode.
c See 1 Kings 22.49.

6.1–5. The structure of these vv., an imperative followed by for, mirrors vv. 2–3. 8: God is (or “has become”) king mirrors the human enthronement declaration; see, e.g., “Absalom has become king” (2 Sam. 15.10). God is seated on His holy throne describes God’s re-enthronement. In contrast to the human throne, only God’s is holy.

This throne may be in His heavenly or His earthly palace (see Ps. 2.4, 6 n.). 10: Most likely this reflects a wish rather than a reality; it is difficult to believe that at any time the great of the peoples gathered to acknowledge the universal sovereignty of God. The final word, exalted (“na’aleh”), reflects the theme of the psalm, and picks up

- 11 The praise of You, God, like Your name, reaches to the ends of the earth;
Your right hand is filled with beneficence.
- 12 Let Mount Zion rejoice!
Let the towns^a of Judah exult, because of Your judgments.
- 13 Walk around Zion,
circle it;
count its towers,
14 take note of its ramparts;
^bgo through^b its citadels, that you may recount it to a future age.
- 15 For God—He is our God forever;
He will lead us ^bevermore.^b

49 For the leader. Of the Korahites. A psalm.

- 2 Hear this, all you peoples;
give ear, all inhabitants of the world,
3 men of all estates,
rich and poor alike.
- 4 My mouth utters wisdom, my speech^c is full of insight.
- 5 I will turn my attention to a theme,
set forth my lesson to the music of a lyre.
- 6 In time of trouble, why should I fear the encompassing evil of those who would supplant me—
- 7 men who trust in their riches, who glory in their great wealth?
- 8 ^dAh, it^d cannot redeem a man, or pay his ransom to God;
9 the price of life is too high;
and so one ceases to be, forever.
- 10 Shall he live eternally, and never see the grave?

a Or "women." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Lit. "utterance of my heart"; on leb, cf. Ps. 19.15. d-d Or "A brother."

where God resides. 11: Names express essence in ancient Israel (see 1 Sam. 25.25). 12: Mount Zion rejoices at God's judgments of retribution against the assembled enemies. Either Mount Zion is personified (see Isa. 35.1), or the word "inhabitants of" is elided or assumed (Radak raises both options). 13–14: A ritual of circumambulating the city walls stands behind this description; see Neh. 12.27–43. 15: Evermore follows the tradition of the Septuagint, Menachem ben Saruq (quoted in Rashi), Ibn Ezra, Radak, and others; the Heb reads "over death" ("al mavet"). Most likely, this is a corruption of the word "'alamot" used in the superscription to Ps. 46; it probably was misplaced from the beginning of Ps. 49 to the end of Ps. 48.

Ps. 49: This is an unusual and difficult psalm. Unlike most psalms, it is addressed to the (human) community, and not to God. It also is very difficult textually; for example, it is unclear if the refrain in vv. 13 and 21 differs intentionally or as a result of error. In vocabulary (see v. 4 n.) and in theme the psalm, especially its first few vv., shares much with wisdom literature; most scholars therefore consider it a wisdom psalm. It is highly didactic, teaching that the wealthy should not be envied, a common theme of parts of Proverbs (e.g., 28.6) and Ecclesiastes (e.g., 10.6). 2: As elsewhere in the Korahite psalms, foreigners are the imagined audience (see 47.10 n.). 4–5: These vv. are full of wisdom terms (wisdom, insight, theme, lesson), but these are integrated into the psalm through the mention of the music of a lyre, a psalm formula. 6–13: The wealthy cannot take their wealth with them to Sheol, the biblical underworld. Proverbs often has a more positive, pragmatic attitude toward wealth (e.g., 14.20; 18.11); the attitude here more closely resembles Ecclesiastes (e.g., 2.1–11; 5.9, 12–13; 6.1–6). 8–9: In certain cases, according to various texts, a ransom might be taken by a human to redeem a person from a capital offense (see Exod. 21.30; Prov. 6.35), but even the great wealth of the rich cannot be used by them to attain eternal 11 For one sees that the wise die, that the foolish and ignorant both perish,

 leaving their wealth to others.
 12 Their grave^a is their eternal home,
 the dwelling-place for all generations of those once famous on earth.
 13 Man does not abide in honor;
 he is like the beasts that perish.
 14 Such is the fate of those who are self-confident, ^bthe end of those pleased with their own talk.^b
Selah.
 15 Sheeplike they head for Sheol, with Death as their shepherd.
 The upright shall rule over them at daybreak, ^band their form shall waste away in Sheol till its nobility be gone.^b 16 But God will redeem my life from the clutches of Sheol,
 for He will take me. Selah.
 17 Do not be afraid when a man becomes rich,
 when his household goods increase;
 18 for when he dies he can take none of it along;
 his goods cannot follow him down.
 19 Though he congratulates himself in his lifetime
 —^b“They must admit that you did well by yourself”^b—
 20 yet he must join the company of his ancestors, who will never see daylight again.
 21 Man does not understand honor;
 he is like the beasts that perish.

50 A psalm of Asaph.

^cGod, the LORD God^c spoke and summoned the world from east to west.

a Taken with ancient versions and medieval commentators as the equivalent of qibram.
b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c-c Heb. 'El 'Elohim YHWH.

life from God. 13: See Eccl. 3.19, “For in respect of the fate of man and the fate of beast, they have one and the same fate: as the one dies so dies the other, and both have the same lifebreath; man has no superiority over beast, since both amount to nothing.”

14: It is unclear if this refers to the wealthy, or if a new subject is being (briefly) introduced. 15: Textually very difficult. It is possible that Death (“Mot”) here recollects the Canaanite deity of the same name, known from Ugarit. 16: It is uncertain if the psalmist wishes to be saved (temporarily) from death (Ps 30.4 n.), or if he desires to be like Enoch or Elijah who do not die (Gen. 5.24; 2 Kings 2.11), or if this psalm partakes of the notion of personal resurrection, expressed clearly only in Dan. 12.2. The medieval period knew a much more developed notion of heaven and hell, and the v. is thus traditionally understood in reference to the afterworldly reward of the righteous. 20: Sheol, underground, is a dark place (88.13; Job 17.13). 21: A refrain; see v. 13.

Ps. 50: This is the first psalm of an Asaphite collection; it is distant from the other eleven Asaphite psalms, found in Pss. 73–83. The “sons (or guild) of Asaphites” were Levites who served as Temple singers in the Second Temple (Neh. 7.44), though in 1 Chron. 16.7 the connection between Asaph and Temple music is traced back to Davidic times. 2 Chron. 29.30 refers to “Asaph the seer,” suggesting that for some, the liturgical poetry produced by this clan was understood to be divinely inspired. More than other psalms, several of the Asaphite psalms have prophetic echos, refer to past historical events, and reflect northern Israel (see esp. Pss. 80; 81). The collection also often characterizes the relation between God and Israel as that between a shepherd and his flock, and it has an unusually large number of allusions to the Song of the Sea (Exod. ch 15). Ps. 50 is not addressed to God, but is an admonition from God. As such, it shares much with prophetic oracles, and it is unclear if this is modeled after such oracles, or reflects a prophetic utterance within a ritual context (a cultic prophet). After an introduction (vv. 1–6), the main admonition is addressed to the community (vv. 7–15), a special admonition is addressed to the wicked (vv. 16–21), and a general conclusion is offered (vv. 22–23). 1–6: God appears in a theophany, preceded by fire (50, e.g., 18.8; 97.3) and storm (see esp. Job 38.1; 40.6). As judge indicting

2 From Zion, perfect in beauty,
 God appeared 3 —let our God come and not fail to act!
 Devouring fire preceded Him;
 it stormed around Him fiercely.
 4 He summoned the heavens above, and the earth, for the trial of His people.
 5 “Bring in My devotees, who made a covenant with Me over sacrifice!”
 6 Then the heavens proclaimed His righteousness, for He is a God who judges. Selah.

7 “Pay heed, My people, and I will speak,
 O Israel, and I will arraign you.
 I am God, your God.
 8 I censure you not for your sacrifices,
 and your burnt offerings, made to Me daily; 9 I claim no bull from your estate,
 no he-goats from your pens.
 10 For Mine is every animal of the forest,
 the beasts on ^aa thousand mountains.^a 11 I know every bird of the mountains, the creatures of the field are subject to Me.
 12 Were I hungry, I would not tell you,
 for Mine is the world and all it holds.
 13 Do I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of he-goats?
 14 Sacrifice a thank offering to God, and pay your vows to the Most High.
 15 Call upon Me in time of trouble;
 I will rescue you, and you shall honor Me.”

16 And to the wicked, God said:
 “Who are you to recite My laws,
 and mouth the terms of My covenant, 17 seeing that you spurn My discipline,
 and brush My words aside?
 18 When you see a thief, you fall in with him,
 and throw in your lot with adulterers;
 19 you devote your mouth to evil,
 and yoke your tongue to deceit;
 20 you are busy maligning your brother, defaming the son of your mother.
 21 If I failed to act when you did these things, you would fancy that I was like you;
 so I censure you and confront you with charges.

His people in a “riv” (covenantal lawsuit), He calls upon heavens above, and the earth as witnesses (so, e.g., Isa. 1.2). 2: On Zion, Jerusalem, as beautiful, see Ps. 48.3. 5: Perhaps the heaven and earth (so, e.g., Rashi), or other divine beings are addressed. On devotees, translated elsewhere as “faithful ones” (Heb “ḥasid”), see 4.4 n. 7–15: Like the prophetic texts in Isa. 1.10–17 and Micah 6.6–8, these vv. polemicize against the Priestly notion that sacrifices by themselves are efficacious. The psalm does not object to sacrifices per se (see esp. vv. 14, 23), but insists that (1) they must be understood symbolically, rather than as food for the deity (contrast, e.g., Lev. 1.13), and (2) they are not sufficient, but must be accompanied by other activities (vv. 14–15, 22–23). A more negative attitude toward sacrifices is reflected in the following psalm (51.18–21). 7: I am God, your God may recall the opening of the Decalogue (Exod. 20.2; Deut. 5.6); see v. 18 n. The substitution of “elohim” for the Tetragrammaton, YHWH, is especially noticeable. 10–12: Of God as owner of all, see Deut. 10.14. In style and content, the psalm is similar to Deuteronomy. 13–14: The thank offering is partially eaten by the person who brings it, usually as a result of a vow (see Lev. 7.12–15; 2 Sam. 15.7). 16–17: The wicked is accused of hypocrisy. 18: Citing part of the Decalogue (Exod. 20.13; Deut. 5.17). 19–20: For the prohibition against slander, see, e.g., Lev. 19.16. 22–23: The conclusion is chiasmic, mentioning first the wicked (vv. 16–21), and then returning to the righteous (vv. 7–15).

Ps. 51: An individual complaint expressing an extreme sense of guilt. Although written in good classical Heb, internal evidence suggests that this psalm may be exilic or early postexilic (see vv. 5, 9, 11, 12, 20–21 n.). 2: See 2 Sam. ch 12, where Nathan rebukes David for two grave offences: committing adultery with Bathsheba, and having her husband, Uriah, murdered. Given the 22 Mark this, you who are unmindful of God, lest I tear you apart and no one save you.

^{a-a} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

23 He who sacrifices a thank offering honors Me, ^aand to him who improves his way^a
I will show the salvation of God.^a

51 For the leader. A psalm of David, ²when Nathan the prophet came to him after he had come to Bathsheba.^b

3 Have mercy upon me, O God, as befits Your faithfulness;
in keeping with Your abundant compassion, blot out my transgressions.

4 Wash me thoroughly of my iniquity,
and purify me of my sin;
5 for I recognize my transgressions, and am ever conscious of my sin.

6 Against You alone have I sinned, and done what is evil in Your sight;
so You are just in Your sentence,
and right in Your judgment.

7 Indeed I was born with iniquity; with sin my mother conceived me.

8 ^aIndeed You desire truth about that which is hidden;
teach me wisdom about secret things.^a

9 Purge me with hyssop till I am pure;
wash me till I am whiter than snow.

10 Let me hear tidings of joy and gladness;
let the bones You have crushed exult.

11 Hide Your face from my sins;
blot out all my iniquities.

12 Fashion a pure heart for me, O God;
create in me a steadfast spirit.

13 Do not cast me out of Your presence, or take Your holy spirit away from me.

14 Let me again rejoice in Your help;
let a vigorous spirit sustain me.

15 I will teach transgressors Your ways, that sinners may return to You.

16 Save me from bloodguilt,
O God, God, my deliverer, that I may sing forth Your beneficence.

tremendous guilt expressed in the psalm, and the specific request to be saved “from bloodguilt” (v. 16), it is understandable that tradition would explicitly connect this psalm to those events. 3–4: The complaint in a nutshell, containing four imperatives (Have mercy; blot out; purify; Wash me thoroughly, lit. “be thorough; wash me”), an invocation (O God), and the motivations (as befits Your faithfulness; in keeping with Your abundant compassion). God is asked to act according to His faithfulness, “hesed”; see 5.8 n. 5: Confessions are not typical of psalms, but are frequently mentioned in late biblical literature (see Dan. 9.4; Ezra 10.1; Neh. 9.2; 2 Chron. 30.22). 7: So extreme are the psalmist’s guilt feelings that he sees himself as sinful even before birth; in other words, he is, by nature, a sinful being. The idea of the inherent sinfulness of humans is rarely expressed in the Bible, except for Gen. 8.21: “the devisings of man’s mind are evil from his youth” (see also Job 25.4). Christianity developed the notion of original sin. 9: God, rather than the impure individual, uses the hyssop for the purification ritual (contrast Num. 19.6, 18), perhaps because the Temple is not standing and the Temple-bound purification ritual cannot be performed. 11: In a remarkable reversal of the standard idiom, the psalmist asks God to hide His face—not from the supplicant (see 6.4–5 n.), but from sins. Unlike 2 Sam. ch 12, the supplicant does not request that the sin and punishment be transferred (see 2 Sam. 12.13 n.), but rather that it be blotted out, an idea found in the exilic Deutero-Isaiah (Isa. 43.25; 44.22). 12: See similarly the exilic Ezek. 36.26. 13–14: A poetic request not to be killed by God. 15–16: The motivation for that request. Bloodguilt has severe consequences for the individual and the community (see Ezek. 9.9).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Cf. 2 Sam. 12.

- 17 O Lord, open my lips,
and let my mouth declare Your praise.
18 You do not want me to bring sacrifices;
You do not desire burnt offerings;
19 True sacrifice to God is a contrite spirit;
God, You will not despise
a contrite and crushed heart.
- 20 May it please You to make Zion prosper;
rebuild the walls of Jerusalem.
21 Then You will want sacrifices offered in righteousness,
burnt and whole offerings;
then bulls will be offered on Your altar.

52 For the leader. A maskil of David, ²when Doeg the Edomite came and informed Saul, telling him, "David came to Ahimelech's house."^a

- 3 Why do you boast of your evil, brave fellow?
God's faithfulness ^bnever ceases.^b 4 Your tongue devises mischief, like a sharpened razor that works treacherously.
5 You prefer evil to good,
the lie, to speaking truthfully. Selah.
6 You love all pernicious words, treacherous speech.
7 So God will tear you down for good,
will break you and pluck you from your tent,
and root you out of the land of the living. Selah.
8 The righteous, seeing it, will be awestruck;
they will jibe at him, saying, 9 "Here was a fellow who did not make God his refuge,
but trusted in his great wealth, relied upon his mischief."
10 But I am like a thriving olive tree in God's house;
I trust in the faithfulness of God forever and ever.
11 I praise You forever, for You have acted;
"I declare that Your name is good"
in the presence of Your faithful ones.

17–19: Prayer is more effective than sacrifices; this stands in stark contrast to the Priestly tradition, which emphasizes the efficacy of sacrifices, largely ignoring prayer. The content of v. 17 has made it appropriate for the introduction to the standard statutory prayer (the "Amidah"). 20–21: The psalm's conclusion suggests that the acceptability of prayer instead of sacrifices is due to a catastrophe, which has made access to the Temple impossible. Many modern scholars see these vv. as an addition, an opinion already cited in Ibn Ezra in the name of "one of the Spanish scholars."

Ps. 52: An atypical psalm, addressed not to God, but to a particular "brave fellow" (v. 3). 2: Given the tendency to identify psalms with events in David's life as recorded in Samuel, it is logical to equate the treacherous brave fellow of the psalm with Doeg the Edomite (see 1 Sam. 22.9–11). 3–5: The emphasis is on damaging speech (see 10.7 n.). 7: This sets up two contrasts with v. 10: the wicked will be removed from his tent, while the righteous will live "in God's house"; and the wicked will be rooted out, while the righteous psalmist is "like a thriving olive tree." 8: The Heb is punning: the righteous see ("veyir'u") and are awestruck ("veyira'u"). 10–11: The psalmist will express God's faithfulness ("hesed") in the presence of . . . faithful ones ("hasid"). 10: Olive trees were of great significance for the oil they produced, which was used in the Temple. It is uncertain if the psalmist is a religious official in the Temple (God's house), or is a lay Israelite who wants to enjoy God's proximity at the Temple (see Ps. 23.6 n.).

^a Cf. 1 Sam. 22.9 ff.

^{b-b} Lit. "is all the day."

^{c-c} Meaning of Heb. uncertain; others "I will wait for Your name for it is good."

53 ^aFor the leader; on mahalath. ^bA maskil of David.

- ² The benighted man thinks,
 ““God does not care.””^c
 Man’s wrongdoing is corrupt and loathsome;
 no one does good.
- ³ God looks down from heaven on mankind
 to find a man of understanding,
 a man mindful of God.
- ⁴ Everyone is dross,
 altogether foul;
 there is none who does good,
 not even one.
- ⁵ Are they so witless, those evildoers,
 who devour my people as they devour food,
 and do not invoke God?
- ⁶ There they will be seized with fright
 —^dnever was there such a fright—for God has scattered the bones of your besiegers;
 you have put them to shame,^d
 for God has rejected them.
- ⁷ O that the deliverance of Israel might come from Zion!
 When God restores the fortunes of His people,
 Jacob will exult, Israel will rejoice.

54 For the leader; with instrumental music. A maskil of David, ²when the Ziphites came and told Saul, “Know, David is in hiding among us.”^e

- ³ O God, deliver me by Your name;
 by Your power vindicate me.
- ⁴ O God, hear my prayer;
 give ear to the words of my mouth.
- ⁵ For strangers have risen against me,
 and ruthless men seek my life;
 they are unmindful of God. Selah.
- ⁶ See, God is my helper;
 the Lord is my support.
- ⁷ He will repay the evil of my watchful foes;
 by Your faithfulness, destroy them!

Ps. 53: This is the Elohistc Psalter’s (see introduction to Ps. 42) version of Ps. 14; see annotations there.

Ps. 54: A typical individual petition. It is stylistically simplistic, with standard parallelisms. 2: The psalm is secondarily connected to 1 Sam. 23.15–20; this is thematically appropriate, though not compelling. 3–5: The petition, with an invocation (O God), four imperatives expressing the urgent request of the supplicant, and a motivation (For strangers . . .). 3: On God’s name, see 48.11 n. 6–9: As in other such prayers, the tense and tone change, reflecting the psalmist’s certainty of salvation (see Ps. 6.9–11 n.).

^a Cf. Ps. 14. ^b Meaning of Heb. unknown.

^{c-c} Lit. “There is no God”; cf. Ps. 10.4. ^{d-d} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^e Cf. 1 Sam. 23.19.

8 Then I will offer You a freewill sacrifice;
I will praise Your name, LORD, for it is good,
9 for it has saved me from my foes,
and let me gaze triumphant upon my enemies.

55 For the leader; with instrumental music.
A maskil of David.

2 Give ear, O God, to my prayer;
do not ignore my plea;
3 pay heed to me and answer me.
I am tossed about, complaining and moaning 4 at the clamor of the enemy, because of the oppression of the wicked;
for they bring evil upon me
and furiously harass me.
5 My heart is convulsed within me;
terrors of death assail me.
6 Fear and trembling invade me;
I am clothed with horror.
7 I said,
“O that I had the wings of a dove!
I would fly away and find rest;
8 surely, I would flee far off;
I would lodge in the wilderness; selah
9 I would soon find me a refuge from the sweeping wind, from the tempest.”
10 O Lord, confound their speech, confuse it!
For I see lawlessness and strife in the city; 11 day and night they make their rounds on its walls;
evil and mischief are inside it.
12 Malice is within it;
fraud and deceit never leave its square.
13 It is not an enemy who reviles me
—I could bear that;
it is not my foe who vaunts himself against me
—I could hide from him;
14 but it is you, my equal,
my companion, my friend;
15 sweet was our fellowship;
we walked together in God’s house.
16 Let Him incite death against them;
may they go down alive into Sheol!
For where they dwell,
there evil is.

8: For the details of the freewill sacrifice, see Lev. 22.18–25; Num. 15.1–16.

Ps. 55: Although an individual petition like the previous psalm (cf. esp. 55.2 and 54.4), this psalm is as innovative as the previous one is standard. The structure of Ps. 55 is unusually complex; the psalmist’s complaint, for example, is found in three different sections (vv. 4–9, 11–12, 21–22), and the vocabulary of the psalm is unique and quite difficult. 5–9: The description of the psalmist’s troubles is unusually long and flowery, and functions to motivate God to heed his petition. 10–12: These vv. emphasize both the geographical and chronological (day and night) ubiquity of the evil. 10: On improper speech as a psalmist’s problem, see 10.7 n. 13–16: As in Job, the great tragedy is that friends have turned into enemies. 16: The phrase to go down alive into Sheol, also used in Num. 16.33, expresses sudden death.

- 17 As for me, I call to God;
the LORD will deliver me.
- 18 Evening, morning, and noon,
I complain and moan,
and He hears my voice.
- 19 He redeems me unharmed from the battle against me;
it is as though many are on my side.^a
- 20 God who has reigned from the first,
who will have no successor, hears and humbles those who have no fear of God. Selah.
- 21 He^b harmed his ally,
he broke his pact;
his talk was smoother than butter,
yet his mind was on war;
his words were more soothing than oil,
yet they were drawn swords.
- 23 Cast your burden on the LORD and He will sustain
you;
He will never let the righteous man collapse.
- 24 For You, O God, will bring them down to the nethermost Pit—
those murderous, treacherous men;
they shall not live out half their days;
but I trust in You.

56 For the leader; *on yonath elem rehokim.^a Of David. A nichtam; when the Philistines seized him in Gath.

- 2 Have mercy on me, O God, for men persecute me;
all day long my adversary oppresses me.
- 3 My watchful foes persecute me all day long;
many are my adversaries, O Exalted One.
- 4 When I am afraid, I trust in You,
in God, whose word I praise,
in God I trust;
I am not afraid;
what can mortals^c do to me?
- 6 All day long they cause me grief in my affairs,^a they plan only evil against me.
- 7 They plot, they lie in ambush;
they watch my every move, hoping for my death.

17: It is unclear if this and the following vv. express certainty of deliverance, as in other such prayers, or if instead of the LORD will deliver me, we should translate “may the LORD deliver me.” 18: This v. suggests that the liturgical day began at or after sunset, as in postbiblical Jewish practice. Prayer three times daily may be suggested here; this was normative in rabbinic times, and is already expressed in a late biblical text, Dan. 6.10. 21–24: As in vv. 13–16, the enemy is referred to in both the singular and the plural. 24: The psalm concludes with a return to the theme of v. 16.

Ps. 56: This individual petition emphasizes the great confidence or trust of the psalmist. In expressing his trust in God rather than humans, it shares certain phrases with Pss. 116–118 (see vv. 5, 14 n.). 1: An extremely long, multilayered and complex superscription. On nichtam, found in Pss. 56–60 and 16, see 16.1 n. A time when the Philistines seized him [David] in Gath is never recorded in Samuel; it might be inferred from 1 Sam. 21.11–16, or the superscription may reflect another story about David that was not preserved in the canonical Samuel (see introduction to Ps. 7). 2: The psalm proper begins with the typical imperative (Have mercy on me), invocation (O God), and motivation (for . . .). 4–5: The repetition of I trust highlights the psalm’s theme. 5: Cf. 118.6, “The LORD is on my side, I have no fear;

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b I.e., the friend of v. 14. c Lit. “flesh.”

- 8 Cast them out for their evil; subdue peoples in Your anger, O God.
- 9 ^aYou keep count of my wanderings;
put my tears into Your flask, into Your record.^a
- 10 Then my enemies will retreat when I call on You;
this I know, that God is for me.
- 11 In God, whose word I praise,
in the LORD, whose word I praise,
in God I trust;
I am not afraid;
what can man do to me?
- 13 I must pay my vows to You, O God;
I will render thank offerings to You.
- 14 For You have saved me from death,
my foot from stumbling,
that I may walk before God in the light of life.

57 For the leader; ^a*al tashheth*.^a Of David. A michtam;
when he fled from Saul into a cave.

- 2 Have mercy on me, O God, have mercy on me,
for I seek refuge in You,
I seek refuge in the shadow of Your wings,
until danger passes.
- 3 I call to God Most High,
to God who is good to me.
- 4 He will reach down from heaven and deliver me:
God will send down His steadfast love;
my persecutor reviles. Selah.
- 5 As for me, I lie down among man-eating lions whose teeth are spears and arrows, whose tongue is a sharp sword.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

what can man do to me?" 9: God's record may refer to divine ledgers, where He keeps track of human activities (see Exod. 32.32 and Mal. 3.16). These are well known from earlier Mesopotamia, and later rabbinic tradition, especially concerning the ledger books that are open and written on Rosh Ha-Shanah. The Heb has a wordplay on my wanderings, "nodi," and Your flask, "no'dekha." Additionally, the root "s-p-r" is repeated in

You keep count and into Your record. 11: This v., unusual in its repetition of two identical words in a parallelism, forms a quasi-refrain with v. 5. 12: The refrain continues; see v. 5. 13: See 50.14. 14: Cf. 116.8–9: "You have delivered me from death, my eyes from tears, my feet from stumbling. I shall walk before the LORD in the lands of the living." As is common in these petitions, the certainty of hearing is presented in the past tense, reflecting the supplicant's certainty of a positive divine answer.

Ps. 57: The psalmist's confidence in God's salvation is less prominent in this personal petition, which instead is full of urgent cries for divine help, including the refrain (vv. 6, 12), Exalt Yourself over the heavens, O God, let Your glory be over all the earth! 1: An unusually long, multi-part superscription, likely reflecting various layers of composition. Al tashheth means "do not destroy." It may be the incipit (first words) of a different song to whose melody this psalm was recited; alternately, Pss. 57; 58; 59; 75, all of which contain al tashheth, served together in a ritual petitionary context. (These four psalms, like the Asaph or the Korah psalms [see introductions to Pss. 42; 50], likely were once a mini-collection that was broken up in the process of editing of Psalms.) When he fled from Saul into a cave, probably the latest element in this superscription, reflecting the application of Psalms to the biography of David, may refer to events in 1 Sam. chs 24 or 26. This cannot be the original context of the psalm, which does not fit these chs precisely: In Samuel, David's main protagonist is Saul alone, while this psalm mentions many enemies. However, the Heb of v. 5 mentions a spear in the singular (translated here generically as "spears"); this may have reminded a creative editor, drawing on his traditions, of the story in 1 Sam. ch 26, which highlights the role of Saul's spear, taken by David while Saul slept "a deep sleep from the LORD" (v. 12; on the "spear" see vv. 7, 8, 11, 12, 16, 22). 2: The exact repetition of Have mercy on me (see also Ps. 123.3), rather than use of a synonym, is unusual, but may reflect the psalmist's desperation (see Radak), though exact verbal repetition characterizes this psalm in general. The shadow of Your wings is a standard Psalms image, of God as a large protective bird (17.8; 36.8; 63.8). 3: On Most High ("elyon"), see 7.18 n. 4: On God in

6 Exalt Yourself over the heavens, O God,
let Your glory be over all the earth!
7 They prepared a net for my feet^a to ensnare me;^a they dug a pit for me,
but they fell into it. Selah.

8^b My heart is firm, O God;
my heart is firm;
I will sing, I will chant a hymn.
9 Awake, O my soul!
Awake, O harp and lyre!
I will wake the dawn.
10 I will praise You among the peoples, O Lord;
I will sing a hymn to You among the nations;
11 for Your faithfulness is as high as heaven;
Your steadfastness reaches to the sky.
12 Exalt Yourself over the heavens, O God,
let Your glory be over all the earth!

58 For the leader; al tashheth. Of David. A michtam.

2 ^cO mighty ones,^c do you really decree what is just?
Do you judge mankind with equity?
3 In your minds you devise wrongdoing in the land;
^cwith your hands you deal out lawlessness.^c
4 The wicked are defiant from birth;
the liars go astray from the womb.
5 Their venom is like that of a snake,
a deaf viper that stops its ears 6 so as not to hear the voice of charmers or the expert mutterer of spells.
7 O God, smash their teeth in their mouth;
shatter the fangs of lions, O LORD;
8 let them melt, let them vanish like water;
let Him aim His arrows that they be cut down;
9 ^clike a snail that melts away as it moves;^c like a woman's stillbirth, may they never see the sun!
10 Before ^cthe thorns grow into a bramble, may He whirl them away alive in fury.^c 11 The righteous man will rejoice when he sees revenge;
he will bathe his feet in the blood of the wicked.

heaven, see 2.4 n. The Heb for God will send down His steadfast love, lit. "His faithfulness and His steadfastness," may retain echoes of God controlling minor deities who serve His will. 6: The psalmist wants God, though residing in the heavens (see v. 4), to be manifest on the earth. God is exalted and His glory is expressed by granting victory to the supplicant. 7: A fulfillment of Prov. 26.27, "He who digs a pit will fall in it." Nets appear in a surprising number of psalms (9; 10; 25; 31; 35; 37; 57; 140); this may simply reflect the realities of ancient Israelite trapping techniques, although others suggest that this refers to magical practices. 8–10: The psalmist is implying that he should be saved so that God will continue to hear his praises; see more explicitly 30.13. 8: The first half of the v. is a protestation of innocence, justifying divine intervention. 10: On the presence of nations, see Ps. 47. 11: A recasting of v. 4, returning to heaven, faithfulness, and steadfastness.

Ps. 58: The language of the psalm is very difficult, and it is likely that it has been imperfectly preserved. Though it does not begin with an address to God, and initially looks like a psalm of instruction (see Ps. 14), the second half of the psalm, including the long curse of the wicked (vv. 7–10), makes it clear that it is a petition, although it does not follow the typical form of that genre. The psalm is unusually rich in animal imagery. 2: Many scholars suggest that "'elem" (mighty ones) refers to minor deities, and that this psalm, like Ps. 82, originally referred to the demotion of these deities due to their malfeasance. 7–10: This may be a seven-fold curse, with seven functioning as a magical number. Petitions of the individual are characterized by imperatives, typically asking God to save the petitioners (e.g., 57.2 "have mercy on me"); here these are transformed with requests to punish the wicked. 11–12: Like v. 11, Isa. 63.1–6 similarly revels in bloody gore. But the

a-a Cf. Mishnaic Heb. kefishah, a wicker basket used in fishing.

b With vv. 8–12, cf. Ps. 108.2–6. c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

12 Men will say,
 "There is, then, a reward for the righteous;
 there is, indeed, divine justice on earth."

59 For the leader; al tashheth. Of David. A michtam;
 when Saul sent men to watch his house in order to put him to death.^a

2 Save me from my enemies, O my God; secure me against my assailants.
 3 Save me from evildoers;
 deliver me from murderers.
 4 For see, they lie in wait for me;
 fierce men plot against me
 for no offense of mine, for no transgression, O LORD;
 5 for no guilt of mine
 do they rush to array themselves against me.
 Look, rouse Yourself on my behalf!
 6 You, O LORD God of hosts, God of Israel,
 bestir Yourself to bring all nations to account;
 have no mercy on any treacherous villain.

Selah.

7 They come each evening growling like dogs,
 roaming the city.
 8 They rave with their mouths,
^bsharp words^b are on their lips;
 [they think,] "Who hears?"
 9 But You, O LORD, laugh at them;
 You mock all the nations.
 10 O my^c strength, I wait for You;
 for God is my haven.
 11 My faithful God will come to aid me;
 God will let me gloat over my watchful foes.
 12 Do not kill them lest my people be unmindful;
 with Your power make wanderers of them;
 bring them low, O our shield, the Lord, 13 because of their sinful mouths,
 the words on their lips.
 Let them be trapped by their pride, and by the imprecations and lies they utter.
 14 In Your fury put an end to them;
 put an end to them that they be no more;

point is not pure revenge, but highlighting the power of divine justice, thereby encouraging others to be righteous. 12: Divine justice translates the anomalous "Gods who judge" ("elohim shoftim"), perhaps a textual error.

Ps. 59: This individual petition has clearly grown over time, as it is quite diffuse in content and style; it suggests, for example, that the supplicant is hounded by both personal (vv. 2–4) and national (v. 6) enemies. As noted by Ibn Ezra and Radak, the psalm incorporates a significant number of words from the root "z-z," "strong, fierce": this helps to unify it. 1: To watch his house in order to put him to death is a near quotation of 1 Sam. 19.11, where Saul sent men to kill David, but David's wife Michal saved him. The content of the psalm, where the individual is surrounded and is worried about being killed (v. 3), suggests this context; it is also possible that the Heb for "fierce men" (v. 4 "azim") suggested the household idol covered with goat's hair (1 Sam. 19.13, "izim") that Michal used to impersonate David, fooling Saul's men. 3: On evildoers, see Ps. 56 n. 4–5: A protestation of innocence; see 7.4–6 n. 5: On rouse Yourself (Heb "urah"), see 7.7 n. 6: Hosts refers to God's role as leader of divine armies; see 46.8 n. 7: This serves as a refrain with v. 15; the reference is to packs of wild dogs (see Ps. 22.17). 9: Cf. 2.4. 12–14: Usually the petitioner requests the death of his persecutors (see esp. the immediately preceding 58.11); for punishment as vehicle for education, see Exod. 9.16.

^a Cf. 1 Sam. 19.11. ^{b-b} Lit. "swords." ^c With several mss.; cf. v. 18; lit. "His."

that it may be known to the ends of the earth that God does rule over Jacob. Selah.

- 15 They come each evening growling like dogs,
roaming the city.
16 They wander in search of food;
and whine if they are not satisfied.
17 But I will sing of Your strength, extol each morning Your faithfulness;
for You have been my haven,
a refuge in time of trouble.
18 O my strength, to You I sing hymns;
for God is my haven, my faithful God.

60 For the leader; on ^a*shushan eduth*.^a A michtam of David (to be taught),² when he fought with Aram-Naharaim and Aram-Zobah, and Joab returned and defeated Edom—[an army] of twelve thousand men—in the Valley of Salt.^b

- 3 O God, You have rejected us,
You have made a breach in us;
You have been angry;
restore us!
4 You have made the land quake;
You have torn it open.
Mend its fissures,
for it is collapsing.
5 You have made Your people suffer hardship;
^cYou have given us wine that makes us reel.^c
6 ^aGive those who fear You because of Your truth a banner for rallying.^a Selah.
7^d That those whom You love might be rescued,
deliver with Your right hand and answer me.
8 God promised ^ein His sanctuary^e
that I would exultingly divide up Shechem,
and measure the Valley of Sukkoth;

^{a-a} Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^b Cf. 2 Sam. 8; 1 Chron. 18.

^{c-c} Or "You have sated Your people with a bitter draft."

^d Cf. Ps. 108.7–14. ^{e-e} Or "by His holiness."

17–18: As in 57.8–10, the psalmist wants to be kept alive in order to praise God. 17: Perhaps morning was a standard time of prayer; alternately, the supplicant prayed after surviving the difficulties of the night. 18: This is an expanded reworking of v. 10. My haven ("misgav") returns to the opening of the psalm, "secure me" ("tesagveni"); on God as faithful, see 5.8 n.

Ps. 60: This communal petition is unusual in mentioning specific geographical locations (vv. 8–10).

1: In the superscription, on shushan eduth and to be taught are unique and obscure. 2: David's wars against Aram (Syria) are narrated in 2 Sam. 8.3–8; 10.6–18; it is likely that the editor who added this superscription was referring to ch 8, which opens with references to the Philistines and Moabites (see Ps. 60.10). The second half of the v. is based on 2 Sam. 8.13, "David gained fame when he returned from defeating Edom in the Valley of Salt, 18,000 in all." The number of casualties has changed in transmission, as has the city-state; in Heb, Edom ("dm") and Aram ("rm") are nearly identical, and in many cases the letters "dalet" and "resh" are confused due to their similarity in both the old and new Heb script. (Traditional attempts at reconciling these different accounts, as in Radak, are forced.) Although these historical superscriptions are not to be taken literally for dating the psalms, the content of the psalm suggests the Northern Kingdom did not exist as a separate entity, which would date the psalm to the period either before the development, or after the destruction, of the Northern Kingdom. 3: Divine anger leads to divine abandonment. Punishment as a result of divine anger is a common ancient Near Eastern idea; the Moabite Mesha Inscription describes Moab's military losses "because Chemosh [the Moabite national god] was angry at his land" (ANET, p. 320), using the same root for "angry" as this v. 5: On the poison cup of God, see esp. Jer. 25.15–29. 7: The motivation for God to act. Answer me may reflect a call for a divine oracle, which is delivered in the following vv. 8–10: In contrast to the surrounding vv., these are formed as tricola, vv. with three sections, instead of the typical two (bicola). 8: From His sanctuary, the Temple, God provides a positive answer (so Ibn Ezra, Radak), perhaps through a cultic prophet. Shechem and Sukkoth are two cities in cen-

9 Gilead and Manasseh would be mine,
Ephraim my chief stronghold,
Judah my scepter;
10 Moab would be my washbasin;
on Edom I would cast my shoe;
acclaim me, O Philistia!

11 Would that I were brought to the bastion!
Would that I were led to Edom!

12 But You have rejected us, O God;
God, You do not march with our armies.
13 Grant us Your aid against the foe,
for the help of man is worthless.
14 With God we shall triumph;
He will trample our foes.

61 For the leader; with instrumental music. Of David.

2 Hear my cry, O God,
heed my prayer.
3 From the end of the earth I call to You;
when my heart is faint,
You lead me to a rock that is high above me.
4 For You have been my refuge,
a tower of strength against the enemy.
5 O that I might dwell in Your tent forever, take refuge under Your protecting wings.

Selah.

6 O God, You have heard my vows;
grant the request^a of those who fear Your name.
7 Add days to the days of the king;
may his years extend through generations;
8 may he dwell in God's presence forever;
appoint^b steadfast love to guard him.
9 So I will sing hymns to Your name forever,
as I fulfill my vows day after day.

62 For the leader; on Jeduthun. A psalm of David.

2 Truly my soul waits quietly for God;
my deliverance comes from Him.
3 Truly He is my rock and deliverance, my haven; I shall never be shaken.

^a Taking the noun yršt as an alternate form of 'ršt; cf. Ps. 21.3.

^b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

tral Israel, to the west and east of the Jordan. 9: Gilead is treated as a tribe, as in the early Song of Deborah (Judg. 5.17). Judah my scepter recalls the enigmatic blessing of Jacob (Gen. 49.10), "The scepter shall not depart from Judah, Nor the ruler's staff from between his feet." 10: Casting a shoe may reflect ownership (Ruth 4.7). 11: Perhaps the human response to the divine oracle. 12: The psalmist is suggesting that God is not fulfilling His role as LORD of hosts (see 44.10 n.). 13–14: As often in historiographical and prophetic literature (e.g., Zech. 4.6), a single God is more effective than any number of human fighters.

Ps. 61: The beginning of the psalm is a personal petition (vv. 2–5), while the second half (vv. 6–9) is a prayer for the king; "Selah" divides the psalm in half (see 3.3 n.). It is unclear if two separate psalms have been combined, or if, as in Mesopotamia, an individual might incorporate a royal prayer into a petition. 2–5: The supplicant is hyperbolically at the end of the earth, distant from the Temple (Your tent; so Ibn Ezra and Radak; see 15.1 n.), where he wants to reside under divine protection (see 57.2 n.). This petition includes the typical elements: imperatives (Hear . . . heed), an invocation (O God), and a motivation (For you . . .). 6–9: This second unit is framed by the mention of the vow. 7–8: Similar hyperbolic language about the king is reflected in Pss. 21.5; 72.5, and reflects notions of the king being (close to) divine (see 45.7 n.). 9: Ps. 30.13 concludes in a similar fashion.

Ps. 62: This is an oblique form of an individual petition. It lacks that genre's usual pattern of invocation, imperatives, and motivation, but instead indirectly notes expected deliverance from God (vv. 2–3) and highlights God's great power. Except for the last v., it is addressed to the community rather than to God. The Heb is unique in its sixfold repetition of 4 How long will all of you attack^a a man, to crush^a him, as though he were a leaning wall, a tottering fence?

5 They lay plans to topple him from his rank;
they delight in falsehood;
they bless with their mouths,
while inwardly they curse.

Selah.

6 Truly, wait quietly for God, O my soul,
for my hope comes from Him.
7 He is my rock and deliverance,
my haven; I shall not be shaken.
8 I rely on God, my deliverance and glory,
my rock of strength;
in God is my refuge.
9 Trust in Him at all times, O people;
pour out your hearts before Him;
God is our refuge.

Selah.

10 Men are mere breath;
mortals, illusion;
placed on a scale all together,
they weigh even less than a breath.
11 Do not trust in violence, or put false hopes in robbery;
if force bears fruit pay it no mind.
12 One thing God has spoken;
two things have I heard:
that might belongs to God,
and faithfulness is Yours, O Lord, to reward each man according to his deeds.

63 A psalm of David, when he was in the Wilderness of Judah.

2 God, You are my God;
I search for You,
my soul thirsts for You,
my body yearns for You,
as a parched and thirsty land that has no water.
3 I shall behold You in the sanctuary, and see Your might and glory,

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

“akh,” “truly” (vv. 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, 10; NJPS does not translate all of them), expressing the petitioner’s great certainty. 1: On Jeduthun, see 39.1. 2–3: The repetition of deliver- ance and the surrounding imagery suggest persecution by enemies. 5: As in other contexts, this persecution is connected to false speech (see 10.7 n.). 6: A slight variant of v. 2, functioning as a refrain. 7: Nearly identical to v. 3. 9: The psalmist moves from his personal trust, exhorting the listeners to do the same: God moves from being “my refuge” to becoming our refuge. 10: This may reflect the weighing of people’s deeds or hearts, well attested in ancient Egypt, especially in illustrations accompanying the Book of the Dead. 12: Numbers are paralleled by X || X+1; this explains why one is paralleled by two. Thus, God has spoken, perhaps via an oracle answering the psalmist, one thing only: that might belongs to God. This is a direct answer to the psalmist’s indirect request for deliverance (see vv. 2–3). This parallelism is one of the classic texts expounded in rabbinic culture to mean that God’s word is multivalent and needs to be interpreted in a variety of special ways (see, e.g., b. Sanh. 34a). It is also used to explain why the Decalogue versions in Exod. ch 20 and Deut. ch 5 differ: God spoke once, but people heard two different utterances (Mek., In the Month, section 7 and parallels, cited by Rashi). 13: This is the psalmist’s response to the divine oracle; on divine faithfulness (“hesed”), see 5.8 n. It functions as an oblique request that he will be rewarded according to his deeds, in other words, saved from the enemies.

Ps. 63: This psalm defies classification; it is characterized by a deep spiritual, almost mystical sense. In theme and vocabulary Pss. 42–43; 73; 84 are similar. 1: The superscription is likely based on the “parched and thirsty land” described in v. 2. David was in the wilderness on various occasions when fleeing from Saul and Absalom. 2: Ps. 42 opens with a similar image. 3: This derives from the idea of seeing the cult statue at a temple; see 11.7 n. It is easy to imagine that such a statue could artistically express God’s might and glory, especially since glory may represent the glow so easy to depict in a metal image.

4 Truly Your faithfulness is better than life;
 my lips declare Your praise.
 5 I bless You all my life;
 I lift up my hands, invoking Your name.
 6 I am sated as with a ^arich feast,^a
 I sing praises with joyful lips
 7 when I call You to mind upon my bed, when I think of You in the watches of the night;
 8 for You are my help,
 and in the shadow of Your wings
 I shout for joy.
 9 My soul is attached to You;
 Your right hand supports me.

10 May those who seek to destroy my life enter the depths of the earth.
 11 May they be gutted by the sword;
 may they be prey to jackals.
 12 But the king shall rejoice in God;
 all who swear by Him shall exult,
 when the mouth of liars is stopped.

64 For the leader. A psalm of David.

2 Hear my voice, O God, when I plead; guard my life from the enemy's terror.
 3 Hide me from a band of evil men,
 from a crowd of evildoers, 4 who whet their tongues like swords;
 they aim their arrows—cruel words—5 to shoot from hiding at the blameless man;
 they shoot him suddenly and without fear.
 6 ^bThey arm themselves with an evil word;
 when they speak, it is to conceal traps;^b
 they think, "Who will see them?"
 7^c Let the wrongdoings ^dthey have concealed,^d each one inside him, his secret thoughts, be wholly exposed.
 8 God shall shoot them with arrows;
 they shall be struck down suddenly.
 9 Their tongue shall be their downfall;
 all who see them shall recoil in horror;

^{a-a} Lit. "suet and fat."

^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^c Meaning of verse uncertain.

^{d-d} Reading ʾamnu with some mss. (cf. Minḥat Shai) and Rashi; most printed editions amnu, traditionally rendered "they have accomplished."

4: Faithfulness reflects "hesed"; see 5.8 n. 5: On lifting up hands as the ancient prayer position, see 44.21-22 n. 6: This v. conceptually joins prayer and sacrifice (see the translators' note "suet and fat"), as in Pss. 50 and 51. 7: Night is a typical time for reflection and meditation (4.5; 16.7; 119.55). Nighttime was divided into three or four watches. 8: See 57.2 n. 9: The Heb for attached ("davkah") is very intense, showing close proximity and longing. 10-11: Such requests typify individual petitions. 12: Compare the ending of Ps. 61. It is uncertain if the people are swearing by God (this translation) or by the king (see, e.g., 1 Sam. 17.55), or possibly by both (see, e.g., 2 Sam. 15.21).

Ps. 64: A prayer for deliverance from evildoers, whose words are the means of their wickedness. Military metaphors make the wicked into enemies and their speech into weapons of war: swords, arrows, traps, and ambushes. 4: For the metaphor of tongues as swords (damaging speech), cf. Pss. 57.5; 59.8. 6: "Who will see them?," the confidence of the evildoers that their activity goes unnoticed (Pss. 10.11; 59.8). 7: The secret thoughts may be a reference to sorcery (see 10.7 n.); or it may simply be plotting in one's mind. 8: Just as the wicked shoot arrows at others, so will God shoot arrows at them (Ibn Ezra). Cf. Pss. 7.13-14; 38.3. The enemies are described at length while God's action is instantaneous. 9-11: Vengeance is not the motive; rather the defeat of the wicked causes all men (human beings) to stand in awe and proclaim the work of God, and causes the upright to exult.

10 all men shall stand in awe;
they shall proclaim the work of God and His deed which they perceived.
11 The righteous shall rejoice in the LORD, and take refuge in Him;
all the upright shall exult.

65 For the leader. A psalm of David. A song.

2 Praise befits You in Zion, O God;
vows are paid to You;
3 all mankind^a comes to You,
You who hear prayer.
4 When all manner of sins overwhelm me,
it is You who forgive our iniquities.
5 Happy is the man You choose and bring near to dwell in Your courts;
may we be sated with the blessings of Your house,
Your holy temple.
6 Answer us with victory through awesome deeds,
O God, our deliverer, in whom all the ends of the earth and the distant seas put their trust;
7 who by His power fixed the mountains firmly,
who is girded with might,
8 who stills the raging seas,
the raging waves,
and tumultuous peoples.
9 Those who live at the ends of the earth are awed
by Your signs;
You make the lands of sunrise and sunset shout for joy.
10 You take care of the earth and irrigate it;
You enrich it greatly,
with the channel of God full of water;
You provide grain for men;
for so do You prepare it.
11 Saturating its furrows,
leveling its ridges,
You soften it with showers,
You bless its growth.
12 You crown the year with Your bounty;
fatness is distilled in Your paths;

^a Lit. "flesh."

Ps. 65: The beginning of the psalm celebrates God and the Temple, the place where vows are paid (vv. 2–5). The psalmist is thankful for the privilege of entering the Temple—i.e., coming into God's presence—in order to pay his vow (present an offering). The payment is made possible by the bounteous harvest that God has provided. The vow may have been to bring a special offering for a good harvest. The body of the psalm praises God for His power over the sources of water and His beneficence in providing water for irrigation. It is possible that this psalm was sung during Sukkot, the Feast of Tabernacles, which marks the end of the summer harvest and the beginning of the rainy season. In postbiblical times it featured prayers for rain for the coming rainy season.

2: Zion, sometimes a synonym for Jerusalem or, as here, the site of the Temple. On the paying of vows at the Temple, see Ps. 66.13. 3: The translation reverses the clauses in this v. All mankind gives a more universal flavor to the psalm, as does v. 9, "Those who live at the ends of the earth." Zech. 14.17 envisions survivors of all nations making a pilgrimage to Jerusalem on Sukkot. 4: Divine forgiveness of sin is the precondition for winter rains and an abundant harvest (Deut. 11.13–17). 5: The blessings of Your house may refer to general prosperity, or specifically to the rain that God will send. Alternatively, it may refer to the sacrificial meal at the Temple. 6–10: The hope for adequate rainfall is couched in descriptions of God as the supreme power of the world, especially over the cosmic water: seas, waves, and water channel. Awesome deeds, God's acts of creation by His victory over the forces of primeval chaos (the . . . seas; Pss. 29; 93), and His provision of rain. 10: The channel of God, the conduit that brings rain to the earth (Job 38.25–26), perhaps associated with the Temple (see Ps. 36.9). 11–14: The potentially destructive cosmic water forces are tamed by God and become the gentle rain and run-off that irrigates the earth,

13 the pasturelands distill it;
the hills are girded with joy.
14 The meadows are clothed with flocks,
the valleys mantled with grain;
they raise a shout, they break into song.

66 For the leader. A song. A psalm.

Raise a shout for God, all the earth;
2 sing the glory of His name,
make glorious His praise.
3 Say to God,
"How awesome are Your deeds,
Your enemies cower before Your great strength;
4 all the earth bows to You,
and sings hymns to You;
all sing hymns to Your name." Selah.

5 Come and see the works of God, who is held in awe by men for His acts.
6 He turned the sea into dry land;
they crossed the river on foot;
we therefore rejoice in Him.
7 He rules forever in His might;
His eyes scan the nations;
let the rebellious not assert themselves.

Selah.

8 O peoples, bless our God,
celebrate His praises; 9 who has granted us life,
and has not let our feet slip.

10 You have tried us, O God, refining us, as one refines silver.
11 You have caught us in a net,
"caught us in trammels."^a 12 You have let men ride over us;
we have endured fire and water,
and You have brought us through to prosperity.

13 I enter Your house with burnt offerings,
I pay my vows to You,
14 [vows] that my lips pronounced,
that my mouth uttered in my distress.

a-a Lit. "put a trammel on our loins."

providing vegetation and flocks with their nourishment. All the creatures who are thus nourished join humankind in the praise of the beneficent God (Pss. 69.35; 96.11–12; 98.7–8). The picture of the harvest sounds eschatological; cf. Joel 4.18; Amos 9.13.

Ps. 66: The theme of this psalm is not obvious; some themes echo those in the previous psalm (victory through God's awesome deeds, universal blessing of God, bringing offerings to the Temple). It is unclear at times whether the psalmist is speaking of events in the past or the present. The psalm begins and ends with praise, surrounding passages of communal and individual thanksgiving. The date of the psalm is unknown and its context is quite general. It may be interpreted as praise to God for the return from exile and the rebuilding of the Temple. All peoples of the world witnessed this event, which redounds to God's praise. 1: This v. is formulaic; cf. 98.4; 100.1. 2–4: Universal acclamation for God for His deliverance of Israel (Josh. 2.9–11). 4: Selah (also vv. 7, 15), see Ps. 3.3 n. This term may divide sections of the psalm. 5–7: The world is invited to consider God's acts, which are epitomized by His splitting of the sea during the exodus and the drying up of the Jordan when the Israelites entered the promised land (Exod. 14.21–22; Josh. 4.23). The parallelism between sea and Jordan in Ps. 114.3–5 suggests that river refers to the Jordan. The exodus-conquest theme may hint at the theme of the return from exile and re-entrance to Judah (the exodus was a common symbol for the return in postexilic times, especially in Second Isaiah). 8–9: All peoples should praise Israel's God, who has not let His people perish. 10–12: A recent event in which Israel has been threatened but delivered from harm parallels the exodus. This may be a reference to the exile, expressed in terms of the exodus from Egypt, the arduous trek through the wilderness (fire), and the crossing of the Jordan

15 I offer up fatlings to You, with the odor of burning rams;
I sacrifice bulls and he-goats. Selah.

16 Come and hear, all God-fearing men, as I tell what He did for me.

17 I called aloud to Him, glorification on my tongue.

18 Had I an evil thought in my mind,
the Lord would not have listened.

19 But God did listen;
He paid heed to my prayer.

20 Blessed is God who has not turned away my prayer,
or His faithful care from me.

God-fearers that God hears people's prayers. 20: Final benediction (2 Sam. 7.15). On faithful care ("hesed"), see 5.8 n.

Ps. 67: A prayer that good harvests continue, with a refrain in vv. 4, 6. It bears some resemblance to Ps. 65 and continues the theme of blessing found in the conclusion of Ps. 66. All three psalms speak of the universal acknowledgment of God. 2: An echo of the Aaronic (priestly) blessing (Num. 6.24–26; Ps. 4.6). Show . . . favor, lit. "make His face shine." The shining face of God is the visible expression of His benevolence; the opposite is God's hiding His face. Selah (also vv. 4, 7), see Ps. 3.3 n. 5: See Pss. 96.10–13; 98.7–9. 7–8: May God . . . bless us, with copious winter rain (Lev. 26.4; Deut. 11.17; Ezek. 34.27). The hymn may be associated with the fall festival of Sukkot (Tabernacles). 8: The conclusion, like the entire psalm, balances particularistic (us) and universal (ends of the earth) concerns.

67 For the leader; with instrumental music.
A psalm. A song.

2 May God be gracious to us and bless us;
may He show us favor, selah

3 that Your way be known on earth,
Your deliverance among all nations.

4 Peoples will praise You, O God;
all peoples will praise You.

5 Nations will exult and shout for joy,
for You rule the peoples with equity,
You guide the nations of the earth. Selah.

6 The peoples will praise You, O God;
all peoples will praise You.

7 May the earth yield its produce;
may God, our God, bless us.

8 May God bless us,
and be revered to the ends of the earth.

Ps. 68: A hymn describing God's victory over His foes and His choice of Jerusalem as the place of His dominion. It draws on an ancient tradition, found also in the very old poem in Judg. ch 5, about the southern origins (Sinai) of Israel's God. It invokes themes from the exodus and the conquest. Because the psalm appears disjointed, some scholars see it as a combination of numerous psalms or a list of their opening lines. Its vocabulary includes fifteen words found nowhere else in the Bible, plus other rare words, adding to the difficulty of interpreting it. Indeed, much of it remains obscure, and many consider it to be the most difficult psalm in the Psalter. 2: Num. 10.35 is similar, suggesting that the psalm was perhaps associated with the Ark. The Ark was taken out to battle at the head of the troops (1 Sam. ch 4). 3: God will make the enemies (= the wicked) disappear in such a way that they will no longer exist; like smoke or melted wax, they will have no substance. For another 68 For the leader. Of David. A psalm. A song.

2 God will arise,
His enemies shall be scattered,
His foes shall flee before Him.

3 Disperse them as smoke is dispersed;

a The coherence of this psalm and the meaning of many of its passages are uncertain.

(water); cf. Isa. 43.2. 10: The refining process is arduous but purifies that which is refined. 13–15: Abundant thanksgiving sacrifices in the Temple. The psalmist can now deliver the sacrifices he vowed to bring if God would rescue him from his distress (cf. Ps. 65.2). 16–20: The psalmist's experience serves as proof to all as wax melts at fire,

so the wicked shall perish before God.

4 But the righteous shall rejoice;
they shall exult in the presence of God;
they shall be exceedingly joyful.

5 Sing to God, chant hymns to His name;
extol Him who rides the clouds;
the LORD is His name.

Exult in His presence—

6 the father of orphans, the champion of widows,
God, in His holy habitation.

7 God restores the lonely to their homes, sets free the imprisoned, safe and sound,
while the rebellious must live in a parched land.

8 O God, when You went at the head of Your army, when You marched through the desert,

selah

9 the earth trembled, the sky rained because of God,
yon Sinai, because of God, the God of Israel.

10 You released a bountiful rain, O God; when Your own land languished, You sustained
it.

11 Your tribe dwells there;

O God, in Your goodness You provide for the needy.

12 The Lord gives a command; the women who bring the news are a great host:

13 "The kings and their armies are in headlong flight;

14 housewives are sharing in the spoils;
even for those of you who lie among the sheepfolds
there are wings of a dove sheathed in silver, its pinions in fine gold."

15 When Shaddai scattered the kings, it seemed like a snowstorm in Zalmon.

16 O majestic mountain, Mount Bashan;
O jagged mountain, Mount Bashan;
17 why so hostile, O jagged mountains, toward the mountain God desired as His dwelling?

The LORD shall abide there forever.

smoke metaphor in connection with the wicked, see Ps. 37:20.

4: Joy is equated, in a ritual sense, with being in God's presence.

The enemies cannot be in God's presence. 5: Who rides the clouds, God's stormcloud chariot (v. 34; Ps. 65:12). The image and language are found in Ugaritic writings. 7: Restores the lonely to their homes, a difficult phrase, perhaps better translated "he sets individuals (who are not part of a family) in households"; cf. Ps. 113:7-9. It is parallel to the rest of the v., which is concerned with assigning befitting living-places to prisoners and to rebellious people. If this psalm is exilic, or the v. is a late addition, the imprisoned may refer to the captives of the exile (cf. Ps. 69:34), who will be returned home. 8-9:

An allusion, with changes, to Judg.
5:4-5. A reference to the exodus.

8: Selah (also vv. 20, 33), see Ps.
3:3 n. 9: One of the few references to Simai outside of the Torah; it is not, however, explicitly connected here to the giving of the Torah.

10-11: The mention of rain in the allusion provokes further description of God's bountiful rain, by which He cares for His people.
This is a major theme of the three previous psalms. 11: Needy, not simply the underprivileged mentioned in vv. 6-7 but all the people.
The community often calls itself
"needy" ("ani," or a synonym; cf. Ps. 18:28; 74:21). 12-15: God gives a command for war; women announce the good news of God's victory (Exod. 15:20; 1 Sam.
18:6-7). 13: Sharing in the spoils, Judg. 5:30. 14: Among the sheep-folds, Judg. 5:16. Wings of a dove . . . , presumably some treasure found among the spoil.

15: The specific incident referred to cannot be identified. Zalmon may be the same mountain mentioned in Judg. 9:48. Another possibility is Zalmonah, in the south (Num. 33:41-42). 16-24: God's move from Mount Sinai (v. 9) to Mount Zion, God's choice for his royal residence (Isa. 2:3). Mount Bashan looks upon this move with hostility. 16: Bashan, a region in northern Transjordan. The specific 18 God's chariots are myriads upon myriads, thousands upon thousands;

the Lord is among them as in Sinai in holiness.

19 You went up to the heights, having taken captives,
having received tribute of men,
even of those who rebel against the LORD God's abiding there.

20 Blessed is the Lord.

Day by day He supports us,
God, our deliverance. Selah.

21 God is for us a God of deliverance;
God the Lord provides an escape from death.
22 God will smash the heads of His enemies, the hairy crown of him who walks about in his guilt.

23 The Lord said, "I will retrieve from Bashan,
I will retrieve from the depths of the sea;
24 that your feet may wade through blood; that the tongue of your dogs may have its portion of your enemies."

25 Men see Your processions, O God, the processions of my God, my king,
into the sanctuary.
26 First come singers, then musicians, amidst maidens playing timbrels.
27 In assemblies bless God,
the LORD, O you who are from the fountain of Israel.

28 There is little Benjamin who rules them,
the princes of Judah who command them,
the princes of Zebulun and Naphtali.

29 Your God has ordained strength for you,
the strength, O God,
which You displayed for us 30 from Your temple above Jerusalem.
The kings bring You tribute.
31 Blast the beast of the marsh, the herd of bulls among the peoples, the calves,
till they come cringing with pieces of silver.
Scatter the peoples who delight in wars!
32 Tribute-bearers shall come from Egypt;
Cush shall hasten its gifts to God.

mountain referred to is unknown.
16–17: Mountain . . . His dwelling,
cf. Exod. 15.17; Ps. 132.13–14.
18: Cf. Deut. 33.2. 24: Feet . . .
blood, see 58.11. Dogs, for dogs lap-ping up the blood of the dead, cf.
1 Kings 21.19; 22.38. 25–28: Processions into the Temple (Ps. 24.7–10).
28: Cf. Judg. 5.14–18. Little Benjamin who rules them sounds like a reference to King Saul, who was from the tribe of Benjamin.
29–36: International praise for God and tribute from all the kings of the world—a theme of the three previous psalms, and a scene not unlike that pictured in Isa. 2.2–4 and Mic. 4.1–3, where Mt. Zion is the religious center of the world. Cf. Zeph.
3.9–10. 32: Cush, Ethiopia.

33 O kingdoms of the earth,
sing to God;
chant hymns to the Lord, selah 34 to Him who rides the ancient highest heavens,
who thunders forth with His mighty voice.
35 Ascribe might to God, whose majesty is over Israel,
whose might is in the skies.
36 You are awesome, O God, in Your holy places;
it is the God of Israel who gives might and power to the people.
Blessed is God.

69 For the leader. On shoshannim.^a Of David.

2 Deliver me, O God, for the waters have reached my neck;
3 I am sinking into the slimy deep and find no foothold;
I have come into the watery depths;
the flood sweeps me away.
4 I am weary with calling;
my throat is dry;
my eyes fail
while I wait for God.
5 More numerous than the hairs of my head are those who hate me without reason;
many are those who would destroy me,
my treacherous enemies.
Must I restore what I have not stolen?
6 God, You know my folly;
my guilty deeds are not hidden from You.
7 Let those who look to You,
O Lord, God of hosts,
not be disappointed on my account;
let those who seek You,
O God of Israel,
not be shamed because of me.
8 It is for Your sake that I have been reviled, that shame covers my face;
9 I am a stranger to my brothers,
an alien to my kin.
10 My zeal for Your house has been my undoing;
the reproaches of those who revile You have fallen upon me.

33–36: Cf. 29.1–3, 11. God's power at the end of the psalm forms an inclusio with its beginning.

Ps. 69: An individual complains that he is drowning, figuratively, from the hatred of his enemies: members of his own society and even his family. He calls to God for help, trusting that God will accept his prayer with favor. While this seems like a very general prayer by an individual hoping for the return to Zion and the rebuilding of Judah (v. 36), it is best interpreted as a petition by a person lamenting the destruction of the Temple—one of the "mourners for Zion" (v. 10). The psalmist's troubles stem from his public mourning for the lost Temple, acts for which his friends and family taunt him (vv. 10–13). The idea of exile and mourning is suggested at numerous points in the psalm.

1: Shoshannim, "lilies," perhaps a melody or a musical instrument; see Ps. 45.1. 2–3: The drowning metaphor is well developed (cf. Ps. 130.1). We can see the speaker sinking further and further into the water until he is swept away.

5–6: The friends' hatred for the psalmist takes the form of false accusations, which the psalmist denies. But he does not claim to be perfect; God knows his errors.

7–13: The psalmist is criticized by his society for what he considers his pious devotion, especially in regard to Jerusalem. 9: For similar language see Ps. 38.12; Job 19.13–15. 10: My zeal for Your house: Like the mourners for Zion in Isa. 61.2–3 and Zech. 7.3, the psalmist mourns for the destroyed Temple by weeping (that is, crying out in lament), fasting, and wearing sackcloth. This behavior causes everyone to revile him.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

11 When I wept and fasted,
 I was reviled for it.
 12 I made sackcloth my garment;
 I became a byword among them.
 13 Those who sit in the gate talk about me;
 I am the taunt of drunkards.
 14 As for me, may my prayer come to You, O LORD,
 at a favorable moment;
 O God, in Your abundant faithfulness,
 answer me with Your sure deliverance.
 15 Rescue me from the mire;
 let me not sink;
 let me be rescued from my enemies,
 and from the watery depths.
 16 Let the floodwaters not sweep me away;
 let the deep not swallow me;
 let the mouth of the Pit not close over me.
 17 Answer me, O LORD,
 according to Your great steadfastness;
 in accordance with Your abundant mercy
 turn to me;
 18 do not hide Your face from Your servant,
 for I am in distress;
 answer me quickly.
 19 Come near to me and redeem me;
 free me from my enemies.
 20 You know my reproach,
 my shame, my disgrace;
 You are aware of all my foes.
 21 Reproach breaks my heart,
 I am in despair;^a
 I hope for consolation, but there is none, for comforters, but find none.
 22 They give me gall for food, vinegar to quench my thirst.
 23 May their table be a trap for them,
 a snare for their allies.
 24 May their eyes grow dim so that they cannot see;
 may their loins collapse continually.
 25 Pour out Your wrath on them;
 may Your blazing anger overtake them;
 26 may their encampments be desolate;
 may their tents stand empty.

13: Those who sit in the gate: The gate was the main public meeting-place, where business and legal transactions took place. Those who sit in the gate are the leading officials of the city. At the other end of the spectrum of those who congregate publicly are the drunkards.

14: At a favorable moment, at a time when God is most disposed to accept his prayer. Human beings do not know when these times are.

16: The Pit: The usual word for the Pit is "bor," "cistern," and it symbolizes the grave, or death (cf. Pss. 28.1; 30.4; 88.5; 143.7), although the similar-sounding "be'er," "well," as here, can be used in the same sense (Ps. 55.24). The use of "be'er" in the context of the other water imagery is apt, for a cistern may be full or empty but a well always contains water. The picture of a person in a well or cistern brings to mind Joseph, who was held in a dry cistern (Gen. 37.24), and Jeremiah, who was in a muddy one (Jer. 38.6). A cistern or well is, then, a place of imprisonment. Cf. Lam. 3.53-54, which can be interpreted as an individual imprisoned in a full cistern with its lid being closed, and Lam. 3.55, a call to be saved from the Pit. See also Ps. 40.3. Exilic literature often uses prison (real or metaphoric) as a symbol of exile, and this v.—and indeed all the drowning imagery—symbolizes the exile in which the psalmist feels himself to be. 17-19: The psalmist prays that God will not hide His face (be inattentive to the psalmist's prayers). Answer me occurs in vv. 17 and 18, harking back to v. 14.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

27 For they persecute those You have struck; they talk about the pain of those You have felled.
28 Add that to their guilt;
let them have no share of Your beneficence; 29 may they be erased from the book of life,
and not be inscribed with the righteous.
30 But I am lowly and in pain;
Your help, O God, keeps me safe.
31 I will extol God's name with song,
and exalt Him with praise.
32 That will please the LORD more than oxen, than bulls with horns and hooves.
33 The lowly will see and rejoice;
you who are mindful of God, take heart!
34 For the LORD listens to the needy, and does not spurn His captives.
35 Heaven and earth shall extol Him,
the seas, and all that moves in them.
36 For God will deliver Zion and rebuild the cities of Judah;
they shall live there and inherit it;
37 the offspring of His servants shall possess it;
those who cherish His name shall dwell there.

70 For the leader. Of David. Lehazkir.^a

2^b Hasten, O God, to save me;
O LORD, to aid me!
3 Let those who seek my life
be frustrated and disgraced;
let those who wish me harm,
fall back in shame.
4 Let those who say, "Aha! Aha!"
turn back because of their frustration.
5 But let all who seek You be glad and rejoice in You;
let those who are eager for Your deliverance
always say,
"Extolled be God!"
6 But I am poor and needy;
O God, hasten to me!
You are my help and my rescuer;
O LORD, do not delay.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^b Cf. Ps. 40.14-18.

27: Those You have struck and those You have felled refer to the punishment of exile. The psalmist's friends make light of his sense of being in exile. 29: The book of life in which God inscribes the righteous; see 56.9 n. 32: The animal sacrifices could not take place without the Temple; prayer was the substitute for sacrifice until the Temple could be rebuilt (cf. Pss. 51.17-19; 141.2). 34: Captives, Heb. "asirim," is another reference to the exiles (as in Pss. 79.11; 102.21; 107.10, 14). 36: The psalmist derives comfort and the strength to persist in his mourning from his firm belief that God will rebuild the Temple, Jerusalem, and the country of Judah, and will return the exiles to it. They will not only live in Judah, but will inherit it, possess ownership that can be bequeathed as an inheritance to their children. Offspring of His servants are the descendants of those the Bible calls God's servants. Psalms applies this designation to Abraham (Ps. 105.6, 42), Jacob (Ps. 136.22), Moses (Ps. 105.26), and David (Ps. 78.70). The psalmist is underlining the continuity between the returnees from exile who cherish His name and their ancient ancestors.

Ps. 70: This psalm expresses a great sense of urgency in calling on God to save the speaker from those who threaten his life. It contrasts the disgrace that will come to the psalmist's opponents with the joy of those who trust in God. The psalm repeats with minor variations Ps. 40.14-18. "The LORD" in Ps. 40.14, 17 is here God (vv. 2, 5), typical of the Elohistic psalms. The translation inverts the order of the phrases in vv. 1-5. 3-4: The public shaming (shame is the opposite of honor) of the psalmist's opponents will prove God's power to protect His faithful ones. Aha! Aha! expresses derisive joy; cf. 35.21; 40.16. 6: Poor and needy, typical language of the psalmist and his community. The poor have no protector in society; the psalmist is figuratively poor in that he has no protector and calls on God to protect him.

71 I seek refuge in You, O LORD;
 may I never be disappointed.
 2 As You are beneficent, save me and rescue me;
 incline Your ear to me and deliver me.
 3 Be a sheltering rock for me to which I may always repair;
 decree my deliverance,
 for You are my rock and my fortress.
 4 My God, rescue me from the hand of the wicked, from the grasp of the unjust and the lawless.
 5 For You are my hope,
 O Lord God,
 my trust from my youth.
 6 While yet unborn, I depended on You;
 in the womb of my mother, You were my support;^a
 I sing Your praises always.
 7 I have become an example for many,
 since You are my mighty refuge.
 8 My mouth is full of praise to You, glorifying You all day long.
 9 Do not cast me off in old age;
 when my strength fails, do not forsake me!
 10 For my enemies talk against me;
 those who wait for me are of one mind, 11 saying, "God has forsaken him;
 chase him and catch him,
 for no one will save him!"
 12 O God, be not far from me;
 my God, hasten to my aid!
 13 Let my accusers perish in frustration;
 let those who seek my ruin be clothed in reproach and disgrace!
 14 As for me, I will hope always,
 and add to the many praises of You.
 15 My mouth tells of Your beneficence, of Your deliverance all day long,
 though I know not how to tell it.
 16 I come with praise of Your mighty acts, O Lord
 God;
 I celebrate Your beneficence, Yours alone.
 17 You have let me experience it, God, from my youth;
 until now I have proclaimed Your wondrous
 deeds,

Ps. 71: An individual, now aged and infirm (vv. 9, 18), who has been faithful to God all his life, even while in the womb (v. 6), prays that God not forsake him as he reaches the end of his life. Central is the idea that the purpose of human life is to offer praise to God, and that if one dies, that praise will cease. If praise for God is to continue (that is, if God is to be known throughout the world), God must keep people alive and in good health. The psalm has a number of refrainlike repetitions (vv. 9, 18; 8, 15, 24). The thematic similarity to Ps. 70 and the lack of superscription in Ps. 71 have led some to suggest that these two psalms were once one psalm. 3: Sheltering rock, "tzur ma'on," perhaps suggests the Temple (see 76.3), where the psalmist may be praying for healing. 5–9: Divine care for the psalmist, from birth to old age (Ps. 22.10–11). The psalmist has always depended on God and has not yet been disappointed. 7: Example, in a positive sense, that others see how God protects the psalmist. 9: Perhaps implied is that the psalmist wishes not to be abandoned even when he no longer has the strength to serve God. 10–11: When others see that God does not protect the psalmist, they take advantage of him. 12: See Ps. 22.2, 12, 20. 14–16: The psalmist looks forward to praising God, most likely in the Temple.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

18 and even in hoary old age do not forsake me,
 God,
 until I proclaim Your strength to the next generation,
 Your mighty acts, to all who are to come,
 19 Your beneficence, high as the heavens, O God,
 You who have done great things;
 O God, who is Your peer!
 20 You who have made me undergo many troubles and misfortunes will revive me again,
 and raise me up from the depths of the earth.
 21 You will grant me much greatness,
 You will turn and comfort me.
 22 Then I will acclaim You to the music of the lyre for Your faithfulness, O my God;
 I will sing a hymn to You with a harp,
 O Holy One of Israel.
 23 My lips shall be jubilant, as I sing a hymn to You,
 my whole being, which You have redeemed.
 24 All day long my tongue shall recite Your beneficent acts,
 how those who sought my ruin were frustrated and disgraced.

72 Of Solomon.

O God, endow the king with Your judgments,
 the king's son with Your righteousness;
 2 that he may judge Your people rightly,
 Your lowly ones, justly.
 3 Let the mountains produce well-being for the people,
 the hills, the reward of justice.
 4 Let him champion the lowly among the people, deliver the needy folk,
 and crush those who wrong them.
 5 Let them fear You as long as the sun shines, while the moon lasts, generations on end.
 6 Let him be like rain that falls on a mown field,
 like a downpour of rain on the ground,
 7 that the righteous may flourish in his time, and well-being abound, till the moon is no
 more.
 8 Let him rule from sea to sea,
 from the river to the ends of the earth.
 9 Let desert-dwellers kneel before him, and his enemies lick the dust.

18: The psalmist does not have many years of life left to praise God; he wants to perpetuate the praise of God beyond his own lifetime. 20: Depths of the earth, Sheol, the abode of the dead, where there is no praising God (Ps. 6.6). The psalmist prays that God will revive him (cure his malady). 22: When his illness is cured, the psalmist will perform a thanksgiving ritual in the Temple (Pss. 50.14; 56.13–14).

Ps. 72: A prayer for the success of the king, perhaps a coronation ode. Only Pss. 72 and 127 are headed by Of Solomon. Ps. 72 is probably ascribed to Solomon because it emphasizes qualities and events for which he was known: judicial wisdom (1 Kings 3.16–28), the great extent of the kingdom and the gifts and tribute he collected (1 Kings 5.1–3), including from Tarshish (cf. 1 Kings 10.22), and from Sheba (cf. 1 Kings 10.10); he is also the first king who may be called (v. 1) “the king’s son.” 1–2: The king’s responsibility to uphold and administer justice (2 Sam. 8.15; Jer. 22.15–16), with divine assistance. The king’s son, the dynastic successor, a reference to the Davidic covenant. Rashi attributes this psalm to David, who prayed it on behalf of his son Solomon when David foresaw that Solomon would ask God for wisdom. 3–4: Moral order (justice for the poor and oppressed) in the world brings about cosmic order (fertility and bounty). 5: Let the wrongdoers fear the king’s punishment; or, let the people fear, that is, respect, the king. 6: A good king ensures the prosperity of his people. 8: The extent of the king’s dominion from sea to sea, from the Mediterranean Sea to the Persian Gulf, and from the river, the Euphrates (1 Kings 5.4). This is hyperbolic court style; or, alternatively, the language is mythic, signifying that the king reigns over the entire universe (cf. Ps. 89.26; Zech. 9.10). 10–11: Homage to the Israelite monarch by distant kings (1 Kings 4.21); a reflection of the king’s great power. Tarshish,

- 10 Let kings of Tarshish and the islands pay tribute,
kings of Sheba and Seba offer gifts.
- 11 Let all kings bow to him,
and all nations serve him.
- 12 For he saves the needy who cry out,
the lowly who have no helper.
- 13 He cares about the poor and the needy;
He brings the needy deliverance.
- 14 He redeems them from fraud and lawlessness; ^athe shedding of their blood weighs heavily upon him.^a
- 15 So let him live, and receive gold of Sheba;
let prayers for him be said always,
blessings on him invoked at all times.
- 16 ^bLet abundant grain be in the land, to the tops of the mountains;
let his crops thrive like the forest of Lebanon;
and let men sprout up in towns like country grass.
- 17 May his name be eternal;
while the sun lasts, may his name endure;^b let men invoke his blessedness upon themselves;
let all nations count him happy.
- 18 Blessed is the LORD God, God of Israel, who alone does wondrous things;
- 19 Blessed is His glorious name forever;
His glory fills the whole world.
Amen and Amen.
- 20 End of the prayers of David son of Jesse.

BOOK THREE

73 A psalm of Asaph.

- God is truly good to Israel,
to those whose heart is pure.
- 2 As for me, my feet had almost strayed, my steps were nearly led off course,
for I envied the wanton;
- 3 I saw the wicked at ease.

the city of Tarsus on the southern coast of Turkey, or Tartessus in southern Spain; see 1 Kings 10.22. The islands, the islands of the eastern Aegean Sea. Sheba, in southwestern Arabia; cf. 1 Kings 10.1. Seba, probably also southwestern Arabia, or perhaps Ethiopia; cf. Isa. 43.3. 16: Extremely difficult; it apparently deals with agricultural bounty, as in v. 3. 17: The king's name means both his fame (1 Kings 3.14) and his progeny. All nations . . . happy, the promises to the ancestors (Gen. 12.3) fulfilled in the Davidic realm and dynasty. 18-19: Not a part of the psalm, but the concluding doxology of Book II of the Psalter (see 41.14; 89.53; 106.48). 20: Important evidence for the gradual editing of the psalter; contrast the "Davidic" psalms found later, e.g., 86; 101; 103.

Ps. 73: The psalm invokes typical wisdom themes (as in Prov. and Eccl.) about God's justice in the world and His punishment of evil. The psalmist, seeing how wicked people prosper and how they have no fear of punishment, almost abandoned his belief that God rewards the good and punishes the evil. But a visit to the Temple, with its aura of being in God's presence, caused the psalmist to reconsider. His faith was strengthened and he renews his praise of God. 1: This psalm begins a collection attributed to Asaph (Pss. 73-83), a Levite who established a guild of Temple singers (1 Chron. ch 25); see also Ps. 50 n. 1-3: The psalmist affirms a-a Or "their life is precious in his sight."

b-b Meaning of some Heb. phrases in these verses uncertain.

4 Death has no pangs for them;
their body is healthy.

5 They have no part in the travail of men;
they are not afflicted like the rest of mankind.

6 So pride adorns their necks, lawlessness enwraps them as a mantle.

7 ^aFat shuts out their eyes;
their fancies are extravagant.^a

8 They scoff and plan evil;
from their eminence they plan wrongdoing.

9 They set their mouths against heaven,
and their tongues range over the earth.

10 ^aSo they pound His people again and again, until they are drained of their very last tear.^a 11 Then they say, "How could God know?

Is there knowledge with the Most High?"

12 Such are the wicked;
ever tranquil, they amass wealth.

13 It was for nothing that I kept my heart pure and washed my hands in innocence, seeing that I have been constantly afflicted, that each morning brings new punishments.

14 Had I decided to say these things,
I should have been false to the circle of Your disciples.

15 So I applied myself to understand this, but it seemed a hopeless task till I entered God's sanctuary and reflected on their fate.

16 You surround them with flattery;
You make them fall through blandishments.

17 How suddenly are they ruined, wholly swept away by terrors.

18 ^aWhen You are aroused You despise their image, as one does a dream after waking, O Lord.^a 19 My mind was stripped of its reason, ^bmy feelings were numbed.^b

20 I was a dolt, without knowledge;
I was brutish toward You.

21 Yet I was always with You,
You held my right hand;

God's goodness to the upright, although he came close to rejecting this idea when he saw the good fortune of the wicked. 4-10: The prosperity and contentment of the wicked. The wicked are successful, arrogant, materialistic, and they doubt God's power. 4-5: Illness and early death were thought to be punishments for sin, yet the wicked do not suffer these things nor do they worry about suffering them. They seem to have it easy in life. 11: See Pss. 10.11; 64.6; 94.7. There was no atheism in ancient times, only the notion that God lacked knowledge and power. 13-15: The psalmist found no benefit in his righteousness. He hesitated to utter his doubts publicly, and sought to understand his observations. 16-17: Reason alone could not solve the psalmist's dilemma or quiet his doubts; a religious experience in God's sanctuary provided him with an answer. Sanctuary is plural in Heb, perhaps referring to the Temple, or, alternatively, to assembly-places of the wise. 18-20: The wicked may look successful but ruin will come upon them suddenly (cf. Ps. 37; Job 4.8-9). 21-22: The psalmist apologizes for his earlier doubts. 23-24: God has helped the psalmist in the past, and he looks forward to similar help now.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Lit. "I was pierced through in my kidneys."

24 You guided me by Your counsel and led me toward honor.^a 25 Whom else have I in heaven?
 And having You, I want no one on earth.
 26 My body and mind fail;
 but God is the stay^b of my mind, my portion forever.
 27 Those who keep far from You perish;
 You annihilate all who are untrue to You.
 28 As for me, nearness to God is good;
 I have made the Lord God my refuge, that I may recount all Your works.

74 A maskil of Asaph.

Why, O God, do You forever reject us, do You fume in anger at the flock that You tend?
 2 Remember the community You made Yours long ago,
 Your very own tribe that You redeemed,
 Mount Zion, where You dwell.
 3 ^cBestir Yourself^c because of the ^dperpetual tumult,^d
 all the outrages of the enemy in the sanctuary.
 4 Your foes roar inside Your meeting-place;
 they take their signs for true signs.
 5 ^dIt is like men wielding axes against a gnarled tree;
 6 with hatchet and pike
 they hacked away at its carved work.^d 7 They made Your sanctuary go up in flames;
 they brought low in dishonor the dwelling-place of Your presence.
 8 They resolved, "Let us destroy them altogether!"
 They burned all God's tabernacles in the land.
 9 No signs appear for us;
 there is no longer any prophet;
 no one among us knows for how long.
 10 Till when, O God, will the foe blaspheme, will the enemy forever revile Your name?
 11 Why do You hold back Your hand, Your right hand?
^dDraw it out of Your bosom!^d

25: God is his only help, in heaven or on earth. Having God, he has no need of another source of help. 26: My portion, see Ps. 16.5. 27: Untrue in Heb is "zoneh," the same word for "to prostitute oneself"; prostitution or infidelity was the common term for idolatry. 28: The psalmist favors nearness to God, as opposed to those who keep far from You (v. 27).

Ps. 74: An exilic lament for the destruction of Jerusalem. The psalmist calls upon God to end the exile. God, the creator of the world and the vanquisher of the mythic forces of chaos, is called upon to vanquish the Babylonians, who are identified with the forces of chaos. Vv. 3-18 resemble Lamentations in the way they make the destruction of Jerusalem vivid. 1: Asaph, see Ps. 73 n. 1-2: Experiencing disaster and exile, the psalmist recalls the early history of the relationship between God and Israel. This special relationship, the fact that God chose Judah and dwelled on Zion, are the reasons that He should restore Judah and Zion (cf. also v. 20). The flock that You tend, in the exodus (Exod. 15.13, 16-17). The community You made Yours, through the covenant at Sinai. Your very own tribe, Judah, the tribe in which Jerusalem was located. 5: For the Babylonians coming as woodcutters with axes, see Jer. 46.22-23. 9-10: There is no reliable prophet to tell them how long the exile will last (see Amos 8.11). 11: A plea to God to take action against the enemy.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain; others "And afterward receive me with glory."

b Lit. "rock." c-c Lit. "Lift up Your feet."

d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

12 O God, my King from of old, who brings deliverance throughout the land; 13 it was You who drove back the sea with Your might,
 who smashed the heads of the monsters in the waters;
 14 it was You who crushed the heads of Leviathan, who left him as food for ^athe denizens of the desert;^a 15 it was You who released springs and torrents, who made mighty rivers run dry;
 16 the day is Yours, the night also;
 it was You who set in place the orb of the sun;
 17 You fixed all the boundaries of the earth;
 summer and winter—You made them.

18 Be mindful of how the enemy blasphemes the
 LORD,
 how base people revile Your name.
 19 Do not deliver Your dove to the wild beast;
 do not ignore forever the band of Your lowly ones.
 20 Look to the covenant!
 For the dark places of the land are full of the haunts of lawlessness.
 21 Let not the downtrodden turn away disappointed;
 let the poor and needy praise Your name.
 22 Rise, O God, champion Your cause; be mindful that You are blasphemed by base men all day long.
 23 Do not ignore the shouts of Your foes, the din of Your adversaries that ascends all the time.

75 For the leader; al tashheth.
 A psalm of Asaph, a song.

2 We praise You, O God;
 we praise You;
 Your presence is near;
 men tell of Your wondrous deeds.
 3 “At the time I choose,
 I will give judgment equitably.
 4 Earth and all its inhabitants dissolve;
 it is I who keep its pillars firm.

Selah.

12–17: The classic example of God’s power is the creation of the world, here retold in a mythological way (different from Gen. chs 1–3) so as to emphasize God’s might over the forces of chaos. A God as powerful as this can certainly defeat the Babylonians. Cf. also Ps. 89.9–14. 14: Leviathan, the forces of chaos represented as a sea-monster (Job 3.8; 26.12–13; 41.1; Isa. 27.1), also mentioned in the myths from Ugarit. 16–17: Just as God fixed the spatial boundaries of the world, confining the waters and making them flow where he wanted, so he fixed the temporal boundaries, creating day and night, and the seasons. 19: Your dove, sacrificial animal of the poor (e.g., Lev. 5.7); here a metaphor for those slaughtered by Babylonia like sacrificed animals (Isa. 34.6–7). 20: Despite the destruction and exile, God’s covenant with Israel is still in force. The covenant implies that God must protect Israel. 23: Here the foes and adversaries are both the Babylonians and the forces of chaos (vv. 12–17). The Babylonians are made to look as dangerous as the forces of chaos, which God must destroy so that the world will continue to exist as God created it.

Ps. 75: Praise for God, who renders justice. The wicked should not be arrogant because God will judge them as they deserve. 1: Al tashheth, perhaps “do not destroy”; see Ps. 57.1. Asaph, see Ps. 73.1 n. 2: Your presence, Heb “Your name.” God is accessible. 3–5: The psalmist is quoting God in these vv. 3: At the time, the time God sets for judging. Humans do not know when God will render judgment but they should rest assured that the time will come. God’s justice is equitable. 4: Just as the earth has “pillars” to keep it firm, so justice keeps society firm. Pillars, see 1 Sam. 2.8. Selah, see Ps. 3.3 n. If God’s words continue in the next v., this does not seem to be the place for subdividing the psalm. Ibn Ezra suggests that v. 5 begins the words of the psalmist.

a-a Or “seafaring men”; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

5 To wanton men I say, 'Do not be wanton!'
to the wicked, 'Do not lift up your horns!' "

6 Do not lift your horns up high in vainglorious bluster.^a 7 For what lifts a man comes not from the east or the west or the wilderness;^b
8 for God it is who gives judgment;
He brings down one man, He lifts up another.

9 There is a cup in the LORD's hand with foaming wine fully mixed;
from this He pours;
all the wicked of the earth drink,
draining it to the very dregs.

10 As for me, I will declare forever,
I will sing a hymn to the God of Jacob.

11 "All the horns of the wicked I will cut;
but the horns of the righteous shall be lifted up."

76 For the leader; with instrumental music.
A psalm of Asaph, a song.

2 God has made Himself known in Judah,
His name is great in Israel;
3 Salem became His abode;
Zion, His den.
4 There He broke the fiery arrows of the bow,
the shield and the sword of war. Selah.

5 You were resplendent, glorious, on the mountains of prey.
6 The stout-hearted were despoiled;
they were in a stupor;
the bravest of men could not lift a hand.

a-a Lit. "with arrogant neck you speak."

b Reading midbār with many mss.

5: Lift up your horns, an idiom meaning to be victorious. The wicked lift their horns in arrogance, as if they have won, but ultimately their horns will be cut (they will be deprived of power) and the horns of the righteous will be lifted up in victory over evil (v. 11 and cf. Ibn Ezra on v. 11).

7: Wilderness: The v. is difficult. If the word "harim" is read, it may mean "mountains," signifying the north (the opposite of "wilderness," referring to the south), or it may be a verb, "to raise up."

9: The cup (Of the LORD's wrath in Isa. 51.17; Jer. 25.15) signifies punishment.

Ps. 76: A hymn praising God, the victorious warrior, who resides in Jerusalem. Attempts have been made to identify the specific battle that may have occasioned the psalm, but there is no consensus. An ancient tradition, reflected in the LXX, rabbinic midrashim, and Rashi, connects it with the defeat of Sennacherib (2 Kings 19.35). Others interpret the battle as eschatological. In either case, as elsewhere in the Bible, God is depicted as the divine warrior. The two aspects of God highlighted here are His strength as a warrior and as a judge—these are the attributes of successful kings; God is envisioned as the supreme king, known to Israel and Judah at the beginning of the psalm and acknowledged by all the kings of the earth at the end. The text is not well preserved and consequently interpreting it is difficult. 1: Asaph, see Ps. 73.1 n. 2: Judah . . . Israel: If Israel is the Northern Kingdom, this would date the psalm to the time of the divided monarchy. Alternatively, "Israel" may be a general designation that is used to parallel Judah. 3: Salem, variant name for Jerusalem (Gen. 14.18). His abode . . . His den: Heb "sukkah" and "ma'on" have two sets of associations, God's protective pavilion (the Temple or the sky) and a lion's den. For "sukkah" as the Temple, cf. Pss. 27.5; 31.21; cf. Exod. 40.3; for a lion's den, Ps. 10.9. For "ma'on" as the Temple, cf. Ps. 26.8; for a den, Amos 3.4; Nah. 2.12; Song 4.8. "Ma'on" and "sukkah" are used in parallelism for a lion's den in Job 38.39-40. God as a lion is an image of fearsome strength. Jer. 25.30 also invokes this association: God roars from his holy "ma'on." It may explain Amos 1.2 as well. 4: There, Some commentators see this as referring to David's conquest of Jerusalem. For the breaking of the (enemies') weapons, see Ps. 46.10. Selah (also v. 10), see Ps. 3.3 n. 5: Mountains of prey, A strange phrase, variously interpreted as "mountains of booty," "mountains rich with game," or, with an emendation,

7 At Your blast, O God of Jacob, horse and chariot lay stunned.
8 O You! You are awesome!
Who can withstand You when You are enraged?
9 In heaven You pronounced sentence;
the earth was numbed with fright 10 as God rose to execute judgment, to deliver all the lowly of the earth. Selah.

11 ^aThe fiercest of men shall acknowledge You, when You gird on the last bit of fury.^a 12 Make vows and pay them to the LORD your God; ^aall who are around Him shall bring tribute to the Awesome One.^a 13 He curbs the spirit of princes, inspires awe in the kings of the earth.

"everlasting mountains." If taken as mountains of prey it connects with the image of God as a lion (v. 3); for prey associated with a "ma'on" of a lion, cf. Amos 3.4; Nah. 2.13; Job 38.40. 7: At your blast ("roar"), God's war-cry. 9-10: As in Ps. 75, God is a powerful judge. When God pronounces and executes his judgment, the world is terrified. 11: Very difficult; the fiercest of men may be Israel's enemies. Some read "edom" (Edom, a kingdom south of Judah) instead of "adam," "men," and "hamat" (Hamath, a kingdom to the north) instead of fury, Heb "hemot." 12: Tribute is brought to God by the kings of the earth (Ps. 72.10-11), showing that God is recognized by all as the supreme king.

77 For the leader; on Jeduthun. Of Asaph. A psalm.

2 I cry aloud to God;
I cry to God that He may give ear to me.
3 In my time of distress I turn to the Lord, ^awith my hand [uplifted];
[my eyes] flow all night without respite;^a
I will not be comforted.
4 I call God to mind, I moan,
I complain, my spirit fails. Selah.

5 You have held my eyelids open;
I am overwrought, I cannot speak.
6 My thoughts turn to days of old,
to years long past.
7 I recall at night their jibes at me;
I commune with myself;
my spirit inquires,
8 "Will the Lord reject forever and never again show favor?
9 Has His faithfulness disappeared forever?
Will His promise be unfulfilled for all time?
10 Has God forgotten how to pity?
Has He in anger stifled His compassion?"
Selah.

11 And I said, ^a"It is my fault that the right hand of the Most High has changed."^a

Ps. 77: An individual calls upon God in his time of trouble, connecting his personal plight to the nation's past, specifically to the exodus, the paradigm for the return from the exile; like Rashi, we may see this psalm as lamenting the exile and hoping for a new exodus. The God of the exodus is known for His faithfulness and mercy, yet now God seems to have lost these characteristics. "Has God changed?" wonders the psalmist. "How long will he ignore me?" The psalm climaxes in a paean of praise in which the exodus, specifically the splitting of the sea, is couched in terms of the victory over chaos at the time of the creation. The implication is that the return from exile will not only be a new exodus, but also a new creation. 1: Jeduthun, see Ps. 39.1. Asaph, see Ps. 73.1 n. 2-4: Initial appeal for divine help (Ps. 142.2-4). 3: Night is the time when pain and trouble seem most unbearable; cf. Ps. 6.7; Lam. 1.2. Rashi equates night with the exile. 4: I call . . . to mind . . . moan . . . complain: These verbs connote uttering aloud. Selah (also vv. 10, 16), see Ps. 3.3 n. 5-7: The speaker, who cannot sleep at night, ponders the past and his present situation. 5: Eyelids open, watchful, as in night vigils (Rashi). 6: Days of old,

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

12 I recall the deeds of the LORD;
 yes, I recall Your wonders of old;
 13 I recount all Your works;
 I speak of Your acts.
 14 O God, Your ways are holiness;
 what god is as great as God?
 15 You are the God who works wonders;
 You have manifested Your strength among the peoples.
 16 By Your arm You redeemed Your people, the children of Jacob and Joseph. Selah.
 17 The waters saw You, O God,
 the waters saw You and were convulsed;
 the very deep quaked as well.
 18 Clouds streamed water;
 the heavens rumbled;
 Your arrows flew about;
 19 Your thunder rumbled like wheels;
 lightning lit up the world;
 the earth quaked and trembled.
 20 Your way was through the sea,
 Your path, through the mighty waters;
 Your tracks could not be seen.
 21 You led Your people like a flock in the care of Moses and Aaron.

78 A maskil of Asaph.

1 Give ear, my people, to my teaching, turn your ear to what I say.
 2 I will expound a theme,
 hold forth on the lessons of the past, the time of the exodus, the paradigmatic act of divine liberation (vv. 20–21). 7: Recall . . . commune: These are the same verbs, “z-k-r” and “s-y-h,” that occur in v. 4: call . . . to mind and complain. 8–10: God, who is known for His faithfulness, for keeping His promise, and for His mercy (cf. Exod. 34.6), is not manifesting these qualities. The psalmist wonders if God’s nature has changed. 12–21: The psalmist recalls (“z-k-r”) the classic demonstration of God’s power on behalf of Israel, the exodus and the splitting of the sea, which is likened to the mythical victory over the forces of chaos. 12: Just as he voiced his complaint in vv. 4 and 7, the psalmist voices praise for God here. 16: Jacob and Joseph, the ancestors immediately preceding the exodus, from whom Israel descended. Some see in Joseph a reference to the Northern Kingdom; perhaps an earlier version of the psalm derived from the North. 17–21: The sea of the exodus is identified with the waters of chaos, defeated by God (Isa. 51.9–10; cf. Pss. 18.8–16; 114.3–6). 18–19: Language of theophany; God appeared on Sinai amidst thunder and lightning. Your arrows are flashes of lightning and also the weapons God uses against the enemy, as in: “He let fly His shafts and scattered them; He discharged lightning and routed them” (Ps. 18.15). Your thunder rumbled like wheels: On the noise of chariot wheels, see Jer. 47.3; Ezek. 26.10. The mention of wheels may recall the chariots of the pursuing Egyptians (cf. Exod. 14.9, 23–25), the topic of this section.

Ps. 78: This is the second-longest psalm, after Ps. 119. It defies categorization; its opening is very wisdom-like, while much of the rest is a historical precis consisting of a reinterpretation of earlier biblical traditions. In the latter sense it is similar to Pss. 105 and 106, with which it is often compared. Perhaps it may be considered a didactic historical psalm in that it uses a narrative about the past to teach about the present. It is addressed to the public (v. 1 “Give ear, my people”) rather than to God. Its introduction suggests that its purpose is to encourage the listeners to be obedient, in contrast to previous generations (vv. 6–7). The psalm concludes, however, with a justification for the destruction of the Northern Kingdom (722 BCE), and praise for Davidic kingship centered in the chosen city of Zion. Thus, like many psalms, this one may have gone through a process of revision; in any case, it needs to be dated in its final form after the fall of the Northern Kingdom in 722, if not to exilic times. The narrative as recounted in the psalm differs from that found in the Torah. This is in part because of the specific focus of the psalm, which might explain why certain events are omitted and others are told in a particular fashion. It is based on non-Priestly narrative traditions (especially the source J) as well as traditions which were ultimately not canonized. Traditional Jewish interpretation, however, assumes that this psalm follows the authoritative Torah, and therefore expends much effort in reconciling these texts. 1–2: These vv. show affinities to wisdom literature, and to Deuteronomy, which itself is influenced by wisdom tra-

3 things we have heard and known, that our fathers have told us.
 4 We will not withhold them from their children, telling the coming generation the praises of the LORD and His might,
 and the wonders He performed.
 5 He established a decree in Jacob, ordained a teaching in Israel, charging our fathers
 to make them known to their children, 6 that a future generation might know —children yet to be born—and in turn tell their children 7 that they might put their confidence in God, and not forget God's great deeds,
 but observe His commandments, 8 and not be like their fathers,
 a wayward and defiant generation,
 a generation whose heart was inconstant, whose spirit was not true to God.
 9 Like the Ephraimite bowmen who played false in the day of battle, 10 they did not keep God's covenant,
 they refused to follow His instruction;
 11 they forgot His deeds and the wonders that He showed them.
 12 He performed marvels in the sight of their fathers,
 in the land of Egypt, the plain of Zoan.
 13 He split the sea and took them through it;
 He made the waters stand like a wall.
 14 He led them with a cloud by day,
 and throughout the night by the light of fire.
 15 He split rocks in the wilderness and gave them drink as if from the great deep.
 16 He brought forth streams from a rock and made them flow down like a river.
 17 But they went on sinning against Him, defying the Most High in the parched land.
 18 To test God was in their mind when they demanded food for themselves.
 19 They spoke against God, saying,
 "Can God spread a feast in the wilderness?
 20 True, He struck the rock and waters flowed, streams gushed forth;
 but can He provide bread?
 Can He supply His people with meat?"

ditions. 4: Traditions that reflect on the praises of the LORD and His might, and the wonders are emphasized.

5-7: Context suggests that decree and teaching refer to the following narrative, which is to be told generation to generation. This is not, however, the usual meaning of the terms, and the pair "covenant" and "instruction," used in v. 10, likewise suggests legal matters.

V. 7 might bridge these notions of law and history, by suggesting that recalling God's great acts for Israel leads to observance of the law (see also vv. 10-11). 9: This is very unclear; much traditional Jewish interpretation (so, e.g., Rashi, Radak) connects it to an abortive first exodus organized by the Ephraimites.

11: In contrast to wonders, deeds is not an important term of the exodus tradition. 12: Zoan, in the Nile Delta, is not mentioned in association with the exodus tradition in the Torah. 13: Like a wall quotes Exod. 15.8, suggesting that the Song of the Sea was among this psalmist's sources. 14: See Exod. 13.21 (J). 15-31: These traditions are similar to Exod. chs 17 (water from the rock) and 16 (manna and birds; see also Num. 11), but their order is reversed.

17: Similar notices (e.g., vv. 21, 32) create a type of refrain, emphasizing the main point: Israel's sinfulness. 19-20: Comparable sentiments are attributed to Moses in Num. 11.21-22.

21 The LORD heard and He raged;
 fire broke out against Jacob,
 anger flared up at Israel, 22 because they did not put their trust in God,
 did not rely on His deliverance.
 23 So He commanded the skies above,
 He opened the doors of heaven 24 and rained manna upon them for food, giving them heavenly grain.
 25 Each man ate a hero's meal;
 He sent them provision in plenty.
 26 He set the east wind moving in heaven, and drove the south wind by His might.
 27 He rained meat on them like dust, winged birds like the sands of the sea, 28 making them come down inside His camp, around His dwelling-place.
 29 They ate till they were sated;
 He gave them what they craved.
 30 They had not yet wearied of what they craved,
 the food was still in their mouths
 31 when God's anger flared up at them.
 He slew their sturdiest, struck down the youth of Israel.
 32 Nonetheless, they went on sinning and had no faith in His wonders.
 33 He made their days end in futility, their years in sudden death.
 34 When He struck^a them, they turned to Him and sought God once again.
 35 They remembered that God was their rock,
 God Most High, their Redeemer.
 36 Yet they deceived Him with their speech, lied to Him with their words;
 37 their hearts were inconstant toward Him;
 they were untrue to His covenant.
 38 But He, being merciful, forgave iniquity and would not destroy;
 He restrained His wrath time and again and did not give full vent to His fury;
 39 for He remembered that they were but flesh,
 a passing breath that does not return.
 40 How often did they defy Him in the wilderness,
 did they grieve Him in the wasteland!

25: Exod. 16.17-18, in contrast, emphasizes the moderate, though sufficient quantity of manna. Many scholars understand hero's meal as food of the angels, and so does ancient interpretation.
27-31: See Num. 11 (J), though the psalmist nowhere calls the meat quail. 38: This v., an important theological explanation for divine mercy, is reused in several later Jewish penitential contexts.
39: Clearly this author, as is typical of the biblical period, does not believe in resurrection.
41: Num. 14.22, which states that the people "have tried Me these many times and have disobeyed Me," has a similar understanding of the wilderness period.

^a Lit. "killed."

41 Again and again they tested God, vexed^a the Holy One of Israel.
42 They did not remember His strength, or the day He redeemed them from the foe;
43 how He displayed His signs in Egypt,
His wonders in the plain of Zoan.
44 He turned their rivers into blood;
He made their waters undrinkable.
45 He inflicted upon them swarms of insects to devour them,
frogs to destroy them.
46 He gave their crops over to grubs,
their produce to locusts.
47 He killed their vines with hail, their sycamores^b with frost.^b 48 He gave their beasts over to hail, their cattle to lightning bolts.
49 He inflicted His burning anger upon them, wrath, indignation, trouble,
a band of deadly messengers.
50 He cleared a path for His anger;
He did not stop short of slaying them,
but gave them over to pestilence.
51 He struck every first-born in Egypt,
the first fruits of their vigor in the tents of Ham.
52 He set His people moving like sheep, drove them like a flock in the wilderness.
53 He led them in safety; they were unafraid;
as for their enemies, the sea covered them.
54 He brought them to His holy realm,^c
the mountain His right hand had acquired.
55 He expelled nations before them, ^csettled the tribes of Israel in their tents, allotting them their portion by the line.^d 56 Yet they defiantly tested God Most High, and did not observe His decrees.
57 They fell away, disloyal like their fathers;
they played false like a treacherous bow.
58 They vexed Him with their high places;
they incensed Him with their idols.
59 God heard it and was enraged;
He utterly rejected Israel.
60 He forsook the tabernacle of Shiloh,
the tent He had set among men.

42-43: The terms redeemed from Egypt and signs and wonders are characteristic of Deuteronomy (e.g., 7.8, 19). 44-51: Rather than ten plagues, as in Exodus, seven plagues are described: blood (44), swarms of frogs (45), locusts (46), hail affecting agriculture (47), hail affecting livestock (48), pestilence (50), and death of the first-born (51). The missing plagues from the perspective of the Torah include darkness (contrast Ps. 105.28, where it is the first plague), and lice, which is only mentioned in the Priestly source. 45: The Heb is simply swarms ("arov"), and here refers to swarms of frogs. In Exod. 9.16-28, "arov" is a free-standing plague of either swarms of insects or animals. 49: This v. is an interlude, describing no plague in particular; it plays a major role in a midrash quoted in the Passover Haggadah, where it serves to multiply the number of plagues. For Radak, it alludes to the plagues mentioned in Exodus but not explicit in this psalm, so that Psalms may be reconciled with Exodus. 50: The expression gave them over to pestilence may suggest the pestilence was viewed as a minor deity (see also "a band of deadly messengers" in the previous v.). 52-53: The wanderings in the desert, alluded to earlier in the psalm, are glossed over here. 54: Another echo of the Song of the Sea (Exod. 15.17). 55: A remarkably concise summary of Joshua. 56-64: The destruction of Shiloh because of the idolatry of the Northern tribes. 58: This v. is suffused with the terminology of Deuteronomy and related books. 60: The destruction of Shiloh, the central site in the period of Samuel, is never narrated in Samuel, and is assumed to have been accomplished by the Philistines.

^a Or "set a limit to." ^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^c Or "hill" with Septuagint and Saadia. ^{d-d} Inverted for clarity.

61 He let His might^a go into captivity,
His glory into the hands of the foe.
62 He gave His people over to the sword;
He was enraged at His very own.
63 Fire consumed their young men, and their maidens^b remained unwed.^b 64 Their priests fell by the sword, and their widows could not weep.

65 The Lord awoke as from sleep, like a warrior^c shaking off^c wine.
66 He beat back His foes, dealing them lasting disgrace.
67 He rejected the clan of Joseph;
He did not choose the tribe of Ephraim.
68 He did choose the tribe of Judah,
Mount Zion, which He loved.
69 He built His Sanctuary like the heavens, like the earth that He established forever.
70 He chose David, His servant, and took him from the sheepfolds.
71 He brought him from minding the nursing ewes to tend His people Jacob, Israel, His very own.
72 He tended them with blameless heart;
with skillful hands he led them.

79 A psalm of Asaph.

0 God, heathens have entered Your domain, defiled Your holy temple,
and turned Jerusalem into ruins.
2 They have left Your servants' corpses as food for the fowl of heaven, and the flesh of Your faithful for the wild beasts.
3 Their blood was shed like water around Jerusalem,
with none to bury them.
4 We have become the butt of our neighbors,
the scorn and derision of those around us.

^a i.e., the Ark; cf. Ps. 132.8.

^{b-b} Lit. "had no nuptial song."

^{c-c} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

64: They did not weep due to the huge magnitude of the catastrophe. 65: On God awaking, see 7:7 n. 67: The clan of Joseph and the tribe of Ephraim refer to the Northern Kingdom as a whole: it is named after its most significant groups. 68–72: The choosing of Jerusalem as a royal city and of David as the first king are here tightly linked in what modern scholars call "the Royal Zion theology"; the order of these events here is the opposite of that narrated in Samuel, where first David, and then Jerusalem, was chosen. 70–72: This partakes in the common ancient Near Eastern image of the king as the shepherd of his people. 72: The depiction of David is highly idealized, more like Chronicles than Samuel.

Ps. 79: An exilic lament for the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple, like Ps. 74 and Lamentations. The psalm sees the destruction as an affront to God rather than to the people of Judah, and calls upon God to redress the heinous act for the sake of His name (v. 9). The psalm draws on a common stock of phrases and motifs of lament. This psalm is recited at the Western Wall on Friday evenings and on the 9th of Av.

1: Asaph, see Ps. 73.1 n. Heathens, Heb "goyim," is used in a neutral sense of other nations; here it refers to Babylonia and its allies (Ps. 137.7–8). Your domain, God's "nahalah," the land of Israel, or in this case, Judah. Ruins ("iyim") is a rare word, possibly alluding to the well-known prophecy of Mic. 3.12 (see Jer. 26.18), "Jerusalem shall become heaps of ruins ("iyim")." 2–3: To be left unburied and exposed to scavengers is in the ancient Near East a terrible disgrace (Josh. 10.27; 2 Kings 9.25–26). For variations on this image, see Ezek. 32.4–6; Zeph. 1.17. When sacrifices were brought to the Temple, or when meat was eaten, the blood was to be poured out like water (Deut. 12.24, 27), so there is an ironic element here, in that Judah was a sacrifice whose blood was poured out. In addition, blood defiles, as does a corpse. So the heathens have defiled Jerusalem not only by the simple act of entering God's holy precinct (which according to some views was off-limits to them; see Lam. 1.10), but further by contaminating it with blood and corpses. Concerning Your faithful, see Ps. 4.4 n. 4: Ps. 44.14. The scorn heaped upon the defeated Judah is a conventional motif.

5 How long, O LORD, will You be angry forever, will Your indignation blaze like fire?
6 Pour out Your fury on the nations that do not know You, upon the kingdoms that do not invoke Your name,
7 for they have devoured Jacob and desolated his home.
8 Do not hold our former iniquities against us;
let Your compassion come swiftly toward us,
for we have sunk very low.
9 Help us, O God, our deliverer, for the sake of the glory of Your name.
Save us and forgive our sin,
for the sake of Your name.
10 Let the nations not say, "Where is their God?"
Before our eyes let it be known among the nations that You avenge the spilled blood of Your servants.
11 Let the groans of the prisoners reach You;
relieve those condemned to death,
as befits Your great strength.
12 Pay back our neighbors sevenfold for the abuse they have flung at You, O Lord.
13 Then we, Your people,
the flock You shepherd,
shall glorify You forever;
for all time we shall tell Your praises.

80 For the leader; on shoshannim, eduth.
Of Asaph. A psalm.

2 Give ear, O shepherd of Israel who leads Joseph like a flock!
Appear, You who are enthroned on the cherubim,

5: Cf. Ps. 89:47. The question about the duration of divine wrath, which seems endless, is typical of laments (Ps. 74:9–10). 6–7: Jer. 25:10. These vv. were added to the end of the Passover Haggadah during the Middle Ages, reacting to Jewish persecution; they are part of the hope for the redemption of Israel. 8–9: One of the few laments that contains an admission of Israel's sins. Former iniquities may mean the earlier (pre-exilic) iniquities of the speakers that, according to the Deutero-nomie idea assumed here, led to the destruction. Another interpretation is "iniquities of former generations," which would refer to the idea of intergenerational punishment (see Exod. 34:7). The emphasis, however, is not on Israel's guilt, but on God's future actions. 10: Incremental movement from the admission of sins and the hope that they will not be held against the community (v. 8), to a plea that God forgive the sins (v. 9), to the idea that God avenge the spilled blood of Your servants, that is, punish the enemy for the destruction, which is an affront to God (also v. 12). 11: Prisoners, exiles. Those condemned to death: Being denied access to the Temple is like death, for one cannot praise God (cf. Ps. 137:4). When the restoration has taken place, the people will be able to praise God (v. 13). Cf. Ps. 142:8. 12: The psalmist appeals for sevenfold retribution on Babylonia's allies. Many laments end with a plea for retribution against the enemy; this is not to be taken as simple revenge, but as a way of expressing the hope for the return of the right world order, where evil has no place and all acknowledge God. Pay back . . . sevenfold, a stereotypical number that may evoke the vengeance of Cain (Gen. 4:15). Like Cain, Israel was banished from its land/soil and from God's presence. For the abuse they have flung at You: An attack on God's Temple and His people is an affront to God, as in v. 1. 13: Like Pss. 77 and 78, Ps. 79 ends with the image of the divine shepherd; Ps. 80 begins with the same image, thereby joining together this cluster of Asaphite psalms.

Ps. 80: Its references to the Northern Kingdom suggest that this may originally have been a lament for the fall of the Northern Kingdom (722 BCE), but its placement after Ps. 79, with which it shares phraseology, indicates that the psalm was reworked and in its present form serves as a lament for the destruction of Judah. In addition to the mention of the northern tribes (Joseph, Ephraim, Manasseh, Benjamin), there are echoes of the reign of Saul (cf. vv. 5, 18). A refrain occurs in vv. 4, 8, 20. 1: Shoshannim ("lilies"), see Ps. 45:1.; cf. Ps. 60:1. Asaph, see Ps. 73:1 n. 2: Shepherd of Israel: Pastoral imagery is found in other Asaph psalms (74:1; 78:52; 79:13). Cf. Gen. 48:14–15; 49:24. Appear (lit. "shine"), theophany (divine manifestation) language (Ps. 50:2; 94:1). 2–3: Israel . . . Joseph . . . Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh, the Northern Kingdom. More specifically, the sons of Rachel (Joseph and

3 at the head of Ephraim, Benjamin, and Manasseh!
Rouse Your might and come to our help!
4 Restore us, O God;
show Your favor that we may be delivered.

5 O LORD, God of hosts,
how long will You be wrathful toward the prayers of Your people?
6 You have fed them tears as their daily bread, made them drink great measures of tears.
7 You set us at strife with our neighbors;
our enemies mock us at will.
8 O God of hosts, restore us;
show Your favor that we may be delivered.

9 You plucked up a vine from Egypt;
You expelled nations and planted it.
10 You cleared a place for it;
it took deep root and filled the land.
11 The mountains were covered by its shade, mighty cedars by its boughs.
12 Its branches reached the sea,
its shoots, the river.
13 Why did You breach its wall
so that every passerby plucks its fruit, 14 wild boars gnaw at it,
and creatures of the field feed on it?

15 O God of hosts, turn again, look down from heaven and see;
take note of that vine,
16 the stock planted by Your right hand,
the stem^a you have taken as Your own.
17 For it is burned by fire and cut down, perishing before Your angry blast.
18 Grant Your help^b to the man at Your right hand,
the one You have taken as Your own.
19 We will not turn away from You; preserve our life that we may invoke Your name.
20 O LORD, God of hosts, restore us;
show Your favor that we may be delivered.

Benjamin), and grandsons (Joseph's sons: Ephraim and Manasseh). The tribes of Ephraim, Manasseh, and Benjamin were encamped under one banner according to the list in Num. 2.18–24. Benjamin's tribal territory lay just south of Ephraim. Benjamin joined Judah when the kingdom was divided; this psalm may predate that event, or may be an idealized retrojection to the time before the monarchy. Alternatively, Benjamin may symbolize the Southern Kingdom, making this a prayer for all Israel. 4: Show Your favor (Heb "light up your face"), expressing God's benevolence; see Num. 6.24–26; Pss. 4.7; 67.2. 5: These epithets of God along with enthroned on the cherubim (v. 2) suggest God's presence in the Ark that went out to battle (1 Sam. 4.4; 2 Sam. 6.2). Be wrathful toward the prayers: Reject the prayers, prevent them from reaching you. Cf. Lam. 3.44. 6: See Pss. 42.4; 102.10. 9–17: The pastoral imagery shifts to an agricultural metaphor in which Israel is a vine (cf. Isa. 5.1–7; Jer. 2.21; Ezek. 17.1–10), plucked from Egypt and planted in the Promised Land where it took root and flourished. But then God in His anger allowed its protecting wall to be breached, and the vine was destroyed by human and animal forces. 12: The river, the Euphrates. 17: See Ps. 74.5–7. 18: The man at Your right hand, a reference to the king (Ps. 110.1). If the psalm dates from, or is a retrojection to, the early monarchy, this may refer to Saul, a Benjaminite (1 Sam. 9.1). The one You have taken as Your own, a reference to the Davidic dynasty. The psalmist's main concern is not the north but Judah, threatened with defeat in the eighth century by the Assyrians and subsequently conquered by the Babylonians in 586 BCE.

^a Lit. "son." ^b Lit. "hand."

81 For the leader; on the gittith. Of Asaph.

- ² Sing joyously to God, our strength;
raise a shout for the God of Jacob.
- ³ Take up the song,
sound the timbrel,
the melodious lyre and harp.
- ⁴ Blow the horn on the new moon,
on the full moon for our feast day.
- ⁵ For it is a law for Israel, a ruling of the God of Jacob;
He imposed it as a decree upon Joseph when ^ahe went forth from ^athe land of Egypt;
I heard a language that I knew not.
- ⁷ I relieved his shoulder of the burden,
his hands were freed from the basket.
- ⁸ In distress you called and I rescued you;
I answered you from the ^bsecret place of thunder^b
I tested you at the waters of Meribah. Selah.
- ⁹ Hear, My people, and I will admonish you;
Israel, if you would but listen to Me!
- ¹⁰ You shall have no foreign god,
you shall not bow to an alien god.
- ¹¹ I the LORD am your God who brought you out of the land of Egypt;
open your mouth wide and I will fill it.
- ¹² But My people would not listen to Me,
Israel would not obey Me.
- ¹³ So I let them go after their willful heart that they might follow their own devices.
- ¹⁴ If only My people would listen to Me,
if Israel would follow My paths,
then would I subdue their enemies at once, strike their foes again and again.

a-a Or "He went forth against." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Ps. 81: A call to praise God with music; perhaps a hymn for the festivals (v. 4). God speaks in the first person in vv. 7–16, 17b, reviewing the exodus and wandering, with emphasis on Israel's disobedience. If Israel is obedient, God will subdue its enemies and grant agricultural abundance. This psalm shares themes with Ps. 95 but reflects a strong interest in the Northern Kingdom, as do Pss. 78 and 80. This psalm is recited in the morning service on Thursdays. 1: The gittith, see Ps. 8.1. Asaph, see Ps. 73.1 n. 2: The God of Jacob, repeated in v. 5; this epithet, along with "Israel" (vv. 5, 9, 12, 14) and "Joseph" (v. 6; a term for the Northern Kingdom) indicate northern provenance (seven uses in all). 4: New moon, observed as a holiday in ancient Israel; here it likely refers to the New Year, announced with loud blasts (Lev. 23.23–25; Num. 29.1). Full moon, when Passover and Sukkot begin. Our feast day, likely the festival of Sukkot (Lev. 23.33–34), also called "the feast," "he-hag" (1 Kings 8.2; Neh. 8.14; and in rabbinic literature). Rabbinic interpretation takes the second part of the v. as referring to Rosh Ha-Shanah, the New Year. This is based on a different understanding of "keseh": instead of full moon it is interpreted as "new moon," the time when the moon is covered (from Heb "k-s-h"). The "new moon" that is a "feast day" is Rosh Ha-Shanah. The practice of reciting this v. to introduce the daytime kiddush (blessing over wine) on Rosh Ha-Shanah derives from this rabbinic interpretation. 6: A language that I knew not, the language of Egypt; cf. Ps. 114.1. 7: Deliverance from slavery and oppression in Egypt (Exod. 6.6–7). The basket is the workbasket that symbolizes subjugated people (often captives of war). 8: Meribah, the place where Israel tested God (Exod. 17.7; Num. 20.13; Ps. 95.8–9), but here seen as a test of Israel (as in Deut. 33.8, where God tested the Levites); it epitomizes Israel's rebellion. Selah, see Ps. 3.3 n. 10–11: An allusion to the beginning of the Decalogue (Exod. 20.1–2; Deut. 5.6). It is cited in reverse order (You shall have no foreign God . . . I the LORD am your God). (Some scholars see this type of reversal as indicating a quotation—the ancient equivalent of quotation marks.) Instead of "other gods" as in the commandment, the psalm has "foreign . . . alien gods." Foreign god, see Deut. 32.12, where the reference is presumably to Egyptian gods. Cf. Ps. 44.21 where Babylonian gods are meant. The reference here is to Canaanite gods. 11: God fills the mouths of the people with food (v. 17). 12–13: The infidelity of the wilderness generation (Ps. 78.17, 40), a warning to the psalmist's contemporaries. 14–17: Is-

- 16 Those who hate the LORD shall cower before Him;
their doom shall be eternal.
17 He fed them^a the finest wheat;
I sated you with honey from the rock.

82 A psalm of Asaph.

- God stands in the divine assembly;
among the divine beings He pronounces
judgment.
2 How long will you judge perversely, showing favor to the wicked? Selah.
3 Judge the wretched and the orphan, vindicate the lowly and the poor, 4 rescue the wretched and the needy;
save them from the hand of the wicked.
5 They neither know nor understand,
they go about in darkness;
all the foundations of the earth totter.
6 I had taken you for divine beings, sons of the Most High, all of you;
7 but you shall die as men do, fall like any prince.
8 Arise, O God, judge the earth,
for all the nations are Your possession.

a Lit. "Iim," i.e., Israel.

rael's obedience would mean victory over foes and agricultural bounty. 17: The v. switches abruptly from third person to first person. Finest wheat, see Deut. 32.14; Ps. 147.14. Honey from the rock, see Deut. 32.13.

Ps. 82: A vision of a heavenly court scene where God condemns those who judge unfairly. The psalm plays on the word "elohim," which means "God" as well as "divine beings." The notion that other divine beings exist is found elsewhere in the Bible (see v. 1 n.). In later biblical thought these beings serve as ministering angels to God and are never equal to God (cf. Ps. 89.5–8). An earlier view is reflected, and then rejected, in this psalm, according to which the divine beings each represent one nation, serving as that nation's protector, a remnant of the idea that the world was populated by many gods, each assigned to a different nation (cf. Deut. 4.19 and 32.8, according to LXX and the Dead Sea Scrolls). This psalm forcefully rejects the idea of other gods; God deprives them of their divinity and He alone has dominion over all nations. In content and language, the psalm resembles prophetic criticisms of the oppression of the poor, including the denial of access to the judicial system and the disadvantages faced by the poor in obtaining just verdicts. Through the scenario of the heavenly tribunal, the psalm speaks to the issue of a just society, without which the world cannot exist. It also speaks to the universality of God, the supreme judge over all nations. 1: Asaph, see Ps. 73.1 n. God, "elohim," as is the preference in Pss. 42–83, rather than the Tetragrammaton (YHWH); this substitution creates some confusion in the Heb. Stands, rises to render a verdict. Cf. Isa. 3.13–14. Divine assembly, Heb "the assembly of El." El was the head of the Ugaritic pantheon. Perhaps originally a separate deity in early Israelite religion, the name "El" became synonymous with YHWH. Divine beings, the celestial council. Cf. Isa. ch 6; 1 Kings ch 22; Job 1.6. Some commentators prefer to interpret this use of "elohim" as human judges, but this is less likely. 2: Selah, see Ps. 3.3 n. 3: Let the cases of the poor be heard and, when they bring a case against the rich, make it possible for them to win it if they are in the right. Cf. Isa. 1.23. 5: Without justice the world is in danger of collapse (Jer. 4.23–26). Justice is a cornerstone of the cosmos. 6: Sons of the Most High, members of God's heavenly court. "Elyon" is an ancient Canaanite epithet, here applied to God (7.18 n.). 7: Divine beings are immortal but humans are subject to death. Unjust divine beings are unmasked as not being divine. The gods of the other nations are not real gods. 8: God alone is the true judge; He does not pervert justice. Cf. Isa. 3.13–14; Ps. 76.9. He is therefore called upon to judge the world, including the nations thought to belong to other gods or divine beings, which here are shown to be God's possessions. God's justice is universal.

83 A song, a psalm of Asaph.

² O God, do not be silent;
do not hold aloof;
do not be quiet, O God!

³ For Your enemies rage,
Your foes ^aassert themselves.^a

⁴ They plot craftily against Your people, take counsel against Your treasured ones.

⁵ They say, "Let us wipe them out as a nation;
Israel's name will be mentioned no
more."

⁶ Unanimous in their counsel
they have made an alliance against You—⁷ the clans of Edom and the Ishmaelites, Moab and the Hagrites,
⁸ Gebal, Ammon, and Amalek,
Philistia with the inhabitants of Tyre;
⁹ Assyria too joins forces with them;
they give support to the sons of Lot. Selah.

¹⁰ Deal with them as You did with Midian, with Sisera, with Jabin,
at the brook Kishon—¹¹ who were destroyed at En-dor, who became dung for the field.

¹² Treat their great men like Oreb and Zeeb,
all their princes like Zebah and Zalmunna, ¹³ who said, "Let us take the meadows of God as our possession."

¹⁴ O my God, make them like thistledown, like stubble driven by the wind.

¹⁵ As a fire burns a forest,
as flames scorch the hills, ¹⁶ pursue them with Your tempest, terrify them with Your storm.

¹⁷ Cover^b their faces with shame
so that they seek Your name, O LORD.

¹⁸ May they be frustrated and terrified, disgraced and doomed forever.

¹⁹ May they know that Your name, Yours alone, is the LORD,
supreme over all the earth.

Ps. 83: A plea to be saved from all the enemies surrounding Israel. Since psalms rarely contain historical information, it is doubtful that an actual military campaign provoked this psalm, and the list of hostile nations is better understood as a composite of all the traditional enemies encircling Israel. The list begins with countries to the east and south of Israel, and moves to the west and north, returning in v. 9 to the sons of Lot, Moab, and Edom (previously mentioned in v. 7). Vv. 10–13 allude to the defeat of enemies in the book of Judges, viewed as an idealized period of divine intervention, hoping that the current enemies will suffer the same fate.

1: Asaph, see Ps. 73.1 n. 2–5: The silence of God is contrasted with the rage and speech of the enemies against Israel and its God.

3: Israel's enemies are, according to this psalmist, by definition Your (God's) enemies. Cf. vv. 5–6. 5–6: The threat against Israel is a threat against God. If Israel's name is no longer mentioned, God's name will be forgotten. Cf. v. 19.

7–9: Enemies of Israel. Hagrites, descendants of Hagar; a tribe of pastoralists in northern Transjordan (1 Chron. 5.10, 18–22). Gebal, later Byblos, north of Beirut on the coast of Lebanon. Alternatively, a place near Edom. The sons of Lot, Moab and Edom (Gen. 19.36–38).

Selah, see Ps. 3.3 n. 10–13: See Judg. chs 4–8. 11: En-dor is not mentioned in Judges. 14–16: See Isa. 17.13–14. Thistledown and stubble are easily burnt up. 15–16:

Combining fire imagery and tempest imagery, the picture that emerges is of enemies being burnt up as if in a forest fire by God's powerful windstorm that will fan the flames into a huge conflagration. 17–19: The confounding of the enemies' plans will cause them to recognize God's name and His supremacy over the earth. As in Ps. 82, the theme of Ps. 83 is God's supremacy over all nations. Cf. Pss. 47.2; 97.9.

a-a Lit. "lift up the head."

b Lit. "Fill."

84 For the leader; on the gittith. Of the Korahites.
A psalm.

- 2 How lovely is Your dwelling-place,
O LORD of hosts.
- 3 I long, I yearn for the courts of the LORD;
my body and soul shout for joy to the living
God.
- 4 Even the sparrow has found a home, and the swallow a nest for herself in which to set her young, near Your altar, O LORD of hosts,
my king and my God.
- 5 Happy are those who dwell in Your house;
they forever praise You. Selah.
- 6 Happy is the man who finds refuge in You,
whose mind is on the [pilgrim] highways.
- 7 They pass through the Valley of Baca, °regarding it as a place of springs, as if the early rain had covered it with blessing.^a
- 8 They go from ^brampart to rampart,^b appearing before God in Zion.
- 9 O LORD, God of hosts,
hear my prayer;
give ear, O God of Jacob. Selah.
- 10 O God, behold our shield,
look upon the face of Your anointed.
- 11 Better one day in Your courts than a thousand [anywhere else];
I would rather stand at the threshold of God's house
than dwell in the tents of the wicked.
- 12 For the LORD God is sun^c and shield;
the LORD bestows grace and glory;
He does not withhold His bounty from those who live without blame.
- 13 O LORD of hosts,
happy is the man who trusts in You.

85 For the leader. Of the Korahites. A psalm.

- 2 O LORD, You ^dwill favor^d Your land, restore^e Jacob's fortune;

Ps. 84: A celebration of the pilgrimage to the Temple. The psalmist yearns to be in God's presence and rehearses every step of the way to Jerusalem. It is one of the psalms that glorify Zion (see also Pss. 46; 48; 76; 87; 122). 1: Gittith, see Ps. 8.1. Korahites, see Ps. 42.1. 2: Lovely, Heb "yedidot," is not just "beautiful" but "beloved." There is almost a mystical quality in the intensity of the psalmist's desire (with his entire being, v. 3) to be in God's presence. 3: The courts, the outer parts of the Temple complex. 4: The movement progresses from the courts to the altar, near which birds find a home, much as the psalmist wishes to find a home near God. 5: Selah (also v. 9), see Ps. 3.3. 6: Happy, in a fortunate state; cf. vv. 6, 13. 7: Valley of Baca is an unknown place on the way to the Temple. Some interpret this as the valley of Rephaim, where the bacia trees grow (2 Sam. 5.22–24). The early rain falls in the land of Israel at the beginning of winter. This reference suggests that the pilgrimage is for the festival of Sukkot, just before the start of the rainy season, when prayers for rain are offered. 9: God of Hosts is a substitute for "LORD of Hosts" (cf. v. 4). 10: Shield and anointed refer to the king, whom God is asked to look upon with favor. 11: The psalmist prefers to stand at God's threshold, merely setting his foot at the entrance and not fully entering the Temple, rather than to dwell, to reside fully, in the tents of the wicked (Heb "tents of wickedness"). 12: His bounty, rain; cf. v. 7.

Ps. 85: An exilic or postexilic psalm, praying for the restoration of Israel to its land. The land is mentioned in vv. 2, 10, 13. Depending on how the tense of the verbs in vv. 1–4 is interpreted, the Jews have already returned, or the return is in the future. If the former, the plea is for an additional favor of restoration, perhaps because of the problems encountered by the returnees. The hope is for a moral and prosperous society.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Others "strength to strength." c Or "bulwark," with Targum; cf. Isa. 54.12.

d-d Or "have favored." e Or "have restored."

3 You ^awill forgive^a Your people's iniquity, pardon^b all their sins; selah
 4 You ^cwill withdraw^c all Your anger, turn^d away from Your rage.
 5 Turn again, O God, our helper, revoke Your displeasure with us.
 6 Will You be angry with us forever, prolong Your wrath for all generations?
 7 Surely You will revive us again,
 so that Your people may rejoice in You.
 8 Show us, O LORD, Your faithfulness;
 grant us Your deliverance.

9 Let me hear what God, the LORD, will speak;
 He will promise well-being to His people, His faithful ones;
 may they not turn to folly.
 10 His help is very near those who fear Him,
 to make His glory dwell in our land.
 11 Faithfulness and truth meet;
 justice and well-being kiss.
 12 Truth springs up from the earth;
 justice looks down from heaven.
 13 The LORD also bestows His bounty;
 our land yields its produce.
 14 Justice goes before Him as He sets out on His way.

86 A prayer of David.

Incline Your ear, O LORD,
 answer me,
 for I am poor and needy.
 2 Preserve my life, for I am steadfast;
 O You, my God,
 deliver Your servant who trusts in You.
 3 Have mercy on me, O Lord,
 for I call to You all day long;
 4 bring joy to Your servant's life,
 for on You, Lord, I set my hope.
 5 For You, Lord, are good and forgiving, abounding in steadfast love to all who call on
 You.
 6 Give ear, O LORD, to my prayer;
 heed my plea for mercy.

a-a Or "have forgiven." b Or "have pardoned."

c-c Or "have withdrawn." d Or "have turned."

1: Korahites, see Ps. 42 n. 2: Restore Jacob's fortune, a common phrase for the return from exile (Jer. 30.3, 18; Amos 9.14). 3–7: Forgiveness of Israel's sin is necessary for the restoration. 3: Selah, see Ps. 3.3 n. 7: If the nation returns and the Temple is rebuilt, the people may rejoice in God, that is, be in His presence and in His favor. 8: God's faithfulness ("hesed"—see Ps. 5.8 n.) to his covenant with Israel remains constant despite the exile, and is invoked here. 13: Bounty, rain (Lev. 26.1–6; Deut. 28.12; Ps. 67.6).

Ps. 86: An individual calls on God's help. The "I" and "You" of the psalm is strongly felt. The psalm is anthological, reusing language and motifs occurring elsewhere in the Bible. 1: A prayer, cf. Pss. 90; 102. Poor and needy are common terms for the psalmist and his community. While these terms may refer to a low socioeconomic status, it is just as likely that they function as literary tropes to signify the absence of protection that the psalmist feels. 5: The first of two references (also v. 15) to Exod. 34.6–7. This v. is part of the High Holy Day liturgy. As in Jonah 4.2, only the "forgiveness" aspects of the divine attributes are cited in this psalm. 8: Divine incomparability is an expression of Israel's monotheism (Pss. 40.6 [see note a-a]; 71.19; cf. Exod. 15.11). 9: God created all the nations although they do not yet recognize

- 7 In my time of trouble I call You,
for You will answer me.
- 8 There is none like You among the gods, O Lord,
and there are no deeds like Yours.
- 9 All the nations You have made will come to bow down before You, O Lord, and they will pay honor to Your name.
- 10 For You are great and perform wonders;
You alone are God.
- 11 Teach me Your way, O LORD;
I will walk in Your truth;
let my heart be undivided in reverence for Your name.
- 12 I will praise You, O Lord, my God, with all my heart
and pay honor to Your name forever.
- 13 For Your steadfast love toward me is great;
You have saved me from the depths of Sheol.
- 14 O God, arrogant men have risen against me;
a band of ruthless men seek my life;
they are not mindful of You.
- 15 But You, O Lord, are a God compassionate and merciful, slow to anger, abounding in steadfast love and faithfulness.
- 16 Turn to me and have mercy on me;
grant Your strength to Your servant and deliver the son of Your maidservant.
- 17 Show me a sign of Your favor, that my enemies may see and be frustrated because You, O LORD, have given me aid and comfort.

87^{a1-2} Of the Korahites. A psalm. A song.

- ^bThe LORD loves the gates of Zion,
His foundation on the holy mountains,^b
more than all the dwellings of Jacob.
- 3 Glorious things are spoken of you,
O city of God. Selah.
- 4 I mention Rahab^c and Babylon among those who acknowledge Me;

that; but soon they will. See Ps. 22.28. 13: Sheol, the abode of the dead. 14: See Ps. 54.5. 16: Turn to me and have mercy on me, a paraphrase of the middle of the priestly blessing (Num. 6.25). Son of Your maidservant, parallel to Your servant but expressing even more humility. 17: Show me a sign: Give me an indication that You will help me; or, when You help me, that will be a sign to my enemies of Your power.

Ps. 87: A hymn celebrating Zion as God's specially chosen city, the center of the world, to which all nations will come (cf. Isa. 2.2–4). The psalm is structured around "(in) you/her" ("bakh, bah") = Zion and "there" ("sham") = the other nations. The nations are thereby contrasted with Zion and at the same time drawn into her orbit. There are numerous textual difficulties. 1–2: Korahites, see Ps. 42 n. All the dwellings of Jacob, the places in Israel that were considered holy sites before the Temple, like Shiloh. Another interpretation: the northern temples (Bethel, Dan) that God rejected in favor of Zion (Ps. 78.67–69). 3: Selah (also v. 6), see Ps. 3.3 n. 4–6: The LORD records the names of those from the Gentiles who have adopted Judaism; they are now part of God's people (Isa. 44.5). 4: Rahab, a mythical monster, here designates

^a The meaning of many passages in this psalm is uncertain.

^{b-b} Order of lines inverted for clarity.

^c A primeval monster; here, a poetic term for Egypt; cf. Isa. 30.7.

Philistia, and Tyre, and Cush—each was born there.

5 Indeed, it shall be said of Zion,
“Every man was born there.”

^aHe, the Most High, will preserve it.^a

6 The LORD will inscribe in the register of peoples that each was born there. Selah.

7 Singers and dancers alike [will say]:
“All my roots^b are in You.”

88 A song. A psalm of the Korahites. For the leader; ^con maḥalath leannoth.^c A maskil of Heman the Ezra-hite.

2 O LORD, God of my deliverance, ^dwhen I cry out in the night^d before You,
3 let my prayer reach You;
incline Your ear to my cry.

4 For I am sated with misfortune;
I am at the brink of Sheol.

5 I am numbered with those who go down to the Pit;

I am a helpless man
6 abandoned^e among the dead, like bodies lying in the grave of whom You are mindful no more,
and who are cut off from Your care.

7 You have put me at the bottom of the Pit,
in the darkest places, in the depths.

8 Your fury lies heavy upon me;
You afflict me with all Your breakers. Selah.

9 You make my companions shun me;
You make me abhorrent to them;
I am shut in and do not go out.

10 My eyes pine away from affliction;
I call to You, O LORD, each day;
I stretch out my hands to You.

11 Do You work wonders for the dead?
Do the shades rise to praise You? Selah.

12 Is Your faithful care recounted in the grave,
Your constancy in the place of perdition?

13 Are Your wonders made known in the netherworld,^f
Your beneficent deeds in the land of oblivion?

a-a Or “He will preserve it supreme.” b Lit. “sources.”

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d-d Or “by day I cry out [and] by night.”

e Lit. “released.” f Lit. “darkness.”

Egypt; see Isa. 30.7. Egypt and Babylonia were the great world powers after the fall of Assyria in 612 BCE. Philistia . . . Tyre . . . Cush, smaller countries to the west, north, and south of Judah. Cush is Ethiopia or Nubia. 5–7: Everyone will recognize Zion as the primary place in the world, the source of all nations; all peoples will think of themselves as citizens of Zion. 7: Roots (Heb “sources”; see note b) perhaps springs of water, the source of life. See Pss. 36.8; 46.4; Ezek. 47.1–12.

Ps. 88: A desperate complaint by a person mortally ill; perhaps to be interpreted as symbolizing the national catastrophe, the destruction and exile (Sheol may represent the exile), which could potentially sever the connection between Israel and God. Prolonged thoughts of death dominate, with many synonyms for the place of the dead: Sheol, Pit, grave, depths, place of perdition, darkness (the netherworld), land of oblivion. In the realm of the dead, humankind is cut off from God and completely forgotten; the sense of isolation and finality is overwhelming. The psalm ends without hope or resolution; there is no expectation that God will cure the psalmist and no promise to praise God upon recovery. 1: Korahites, see Ps. 42 n. Maḥalath leannoth, probably a melody. The term “maḥalath” may be related to the word “maḥalah,” “illness,” making this a sad melody or a melody for the sick (cf. Ps. 53.1). Alternatively, it may derive from “ḥalil,” “flute.” Heman, a famous Temple musician (1 Chron. 25.5–6), mentioned only here in the Psalter. 4–6: The psalmist is on the brink of Sheol, the abode of the dead, separated from and forgotten by God. 5: Helpless man, a man lacking the vigor to live. 6: Abandoned, or “released, freed.” Cf. Job 3.19. The dead are released from the socioeconomic hierarchy of the living. According to traditional Jewish interpretation, the dead are free of their obligation to God. 7–8: The psalmist’s troubles come from God. 8: Break-

14 As for me, I cry out to You, O LORD;
each morning my prayer greets You.
15 Why, O LORD, do You reject me,
do You hide Your face from me?
16 From my youth I have been afflicted and near death;
I suffer Your terrors ^awherever I turn.^a 17 Your fury overwhelms me;
Your terrors destroy me.
18 They swirl about me like water all day long;
they encircle me on every side.
19 You have put friend and neighbor far from me and my companions out of my sight.^b

89 A maskil of Ethan the Ezrahite.

2 I will sing of the LORD's steadfast love forever; to all generations I will proclaim Your faithfulness with my mouth.
3 I declare, "Your steadfast love is confirmed
forever;
there in the heavens You establish Your faithfulness."
4 "I have made a covenant with My chosen one;
I have sworn to My servant David:
5 I will establish your offspring forever,
I will confirm your throne for all generations."
Selah.
6 Your wonders, O LORD, are praised by the heavens,
Your faithfulness, too, in the assembly of holy beings.
7 For who in the skies can equal the LORD, can compare with the LORD among the divine
beings,

a-a Following Saadia; meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Lit. "into darkness."

ers, death (2 Sam. 22.5; Pss. 42.8; 69.2–3). Selah (also v. 11), see Ps. 3.3 n. 9: His illness made him a recluse, abandoned by friends. See v. 19; 31.12–14; Job 19.13; 30.10. 11: The psalmist feels himself already dead and therefore expects no wonders from God. 12–13: God does not take care of the dead (v. 11) and the dead cannot praise God (Pss. 6.6; 30.10). All links between God and humans are severed at death. 12: Place of perdition, Heb. "abaddon," "destruction, loss," another name for the abode of the dead. 14–19: A replay of previous thoughts at a higher pitch. 14: As for me: In contrast to the dead, the psalmist still can and does call out to God. Morning is the time God is expected to answer prayers (cf. Ps. 90.14). 16–17: His troubles are not recent; his entire life has been one of misery, a victim of God's fury (cf. v. 8); there is no admission that his own sin caused this punishment. 18: Like water, cf. breakers, v. 8. 19: The psalmist is shunned by his community (v. 9). Another interpretation of my companions out of sight is "my companions are (those of) darkness," i.e., the other residents of Sheol.

Ps. 89: An exilic or postexilic psalm praying for the restoration of the Davidic dynasty, that is, for the end of the exile and the restoration of the Jews to their land as an independent people, as they were before the exile. In the first part, God is proclaimed king (vv. 2–19); He then proclaims David and his dynasty king (vv. 20–38); the psalm ends with a lament for the loss of the Davidic dynasty and the hope for its return (vv. 39–52). The psalm consists largely of a poetic reinterpretation of the promise to David in 2 Sam. 7.11–17. But whereas 2 Sam. ch 7 is concerned with the building of the Temple and the establishment of the dynastic succession, Ps. 89 omits references to the Temple and focuses on the permanence of Davidic kingship. This is a striking departure from most exilic psalms, which are more concerned with the Temple than with the dynasty. Keywords connecting these chs include steadfast love, faithfulness, forever, covenant, throne. 1: Ethan, a Temple musician (1 Chron. 15.17, 19), mentioned only here in Psalms. 2–5: The psalmist's praise of God's steadfast love and faithfulness, his choice of David and his establishment of the Davidic dynasty, which is eternal and unconditional (cf. 2 Sam. 7.15–16; contrast Ps. 132.12). The faithfulness with which the dynastic promise was made is the main theme of the psalm. At the end (v. 50), the psalmist will remind God of it. 4: Cf. Ps. 132.11–12. 5: The wording of the covenant. Selah (also vv. 38, 46, 49), see Ps. 3.3 n. 6–9: The heavenly council, in whose presence God announces his decree, praises the incomparable and awesome God; cf.

8 a God greatly dreaded in the council of holy beings,
held in awe by all around Him?
9 O LORD, God of hosts,
who is mighty like You, O LORD?
Your faithfulness surrounds You;
10 You rule the swelling of the sea;
when its waves surge, You still them.
11 You crushed Rahab; he was like a corpse; with Your powerful arm You scattered Your enemies.
12 The heaven is Yours,
the earth too;
the world and all it holds—
You established them.
13 North and south—
You created them;
Tabor and Hermon sing forth Your name.
14 Yours is an arm endowed with might;
Your hand is strong;
Your right hand, exalted.
15 Righteousness and justice are the base of Your throne;
steadfast love and faithfulness stand before You.
16 Happy is the people who know the joyful shout;
O LORD, they walk in the light of Your presence.
17 They rejoice in Your name all day long;
they are exalted through Your righteousness.
18 For You are their strength in which they glory;
our horn is exalted through Your favor.
19 Truly our shield is of the LORD,
our king, of the Holy One of Israel.
20 Then^a You spoke to Your faithful ones in a vision and said, "I have conferred power upon a warrior;
I have exalted one chosen out of the people.
21 I have found David, My servant;
anointed him with My sacred oil.
22 My hand shall be constantly with him,
and My arm shall strengthen him.
23 No enemy shall^b oppress him,^b
no vile man afflict him.
24 I will crush his adversaries before him;
I will strike down those who hate him.

Pss. 29.1; 82.1; Exod. 15.11; Jer. 23.18, 21–22. 8: Holy beings, cf. Job 5.1. 10–14: Having defeated the mythical chaotic waters, God is the victorious creator of the universe, over which He has dominion (see Ps. 74.12–17). 11: Rahab, a name for the primeval chaos monster; Job 26.12; Isa. 51.9. 13: Tabor and Hermon, two prominent mountains; Tabor is south of the Sea of Galilee (Ps. 68; Hos. 5.1) and Hermon is to the north, in Syria (Pss. 42.6; 133.3). The mountains, like the heavenly court, sing praise to God. 15: God's reign is founded upon the principles of righteousness and justice; He is heralded by steadfast love and faithfulness. These abstract principles are personified as parts of God's heavenly installation and His servants. Mesopotamian tradition also associates justice and righteousness ("kittu" and "me-sharu") as attributes and as metaphorical guardians of gods and kings. The emphasis on the moral attributes of God's rule stresses that God does not break His promise; cf. vv. 34–35. 16–19: Like the cosmos, the people will also proclaim loudly that God is king. The psalm here moves from the cosmic to the national. 16: Joyful shout, Heb "teru'ah" is also a blast of the ram's horn, proclaiming God king. Vv. 16–18 are part of the Rosh Ha-Shanah liturgy, before the blowing of the shofar. 18–19: Horn, a metaphor for strength (also v. 25). Horn and shield, the king protects his people and leads them to victory. Depending on the interpretation, v. 19 is the climax of the expression of the kingship of God, or it is a transition to the idea of David as king. The first interpretation takes the Heb letter "lamed"—rendered as of in of the LORD and of the Holy One—to be an emphatic particle: "our shield is indeed the LORD . . . our king is indeed the Holy One." The second interpretation yields "our shield belongs to the LORD, our king to the Holy One" (so NRSV). 20–38: The covenant with David and his descendants ("David" represents the Davidic dynasty), which will be eternal

^a Referring to vv. 4–5; cf. 2 Sam. 7.1–17. ^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

25 My faithfulness and steadfast love shall be with
him;
his horn shall be exalted through My name.

26 I will set his hand upon the sea,
his right hand upon the rivers.

27 He shall say to Me,
'You are my father, my God, the rock of my deliverance.'

28 I will appoint him first-born, highest of the kings of the earth.

29 I will maintain My steadfast love for him always;
My covenant with him shall endure.

30 I will establish his line forever, his throne, as long as the heavens last.

31 If his sons forsake My Teaching and do not live by My rules; 32 if they violate My laws,
and do not observe My commands, 33 I will punish their transgression with the rod, their iniquity with plagues.

34 But I will not take away My steadfast love from
him;
I will not betray My faithfulness.

35 I will not violate My covenant, or change what I have uttered.

36 I have sworn by My holiness, once and for all;
I will not be false to David.

37 His line shall continue forever,
his throne, as the sun before Me, 38 as the moon, established forever,
an enduring witness in the sky." Selah.

39 Yet You have rejected, spurned, and become enraged at Your anointed.

40 You have repudiated the covenant with Your servant;
You have dragged his dignity in the dust.

41 You have breached all his defenses, shattered his strongholds.

42 All who pass by plunder him;
he has become the butt of his neighbors.

43 You have exalted the right hand of his adversaries,
and made all his enemies rejoice.

44 You have turned back the blade of his sword,
and have not sustained him in battle.

(vv. 29–30, 36–38) even in the face of human sin (vv. 31–35). This is a poetic reformulation of 2 Sam. 7.11–17, which like that text assumes an eternal, unbreakable Davidic covenant; contrast Ps. 132.11–12; 1 Kings 9.4–9. 20: In a vision, through a prophet. Cf. 2 Sam. 7.17. 26: The powers associated with God in vv. 10–11 are here bestowed upon David. 27–28: A widespread ancient Near Eastern tradition sees the king as the adopted son of a god who ordained that he should rule (Ps. 2.7; 2 Sam. 7.14). This king, however, is also the first-born, specially privileged. 28–30: The promise of a dynasty. 31–38: If the Davidic kings sin, they will be punished, but the dynasty will never come to an end. It will endure as long as the sun and the moon endure. These celestial bodies are an enduring witness testifying to God's promise. 39–52: The destruction of Jerusalem and the end of the Davidic dynasty is seen as a betrayal of God's promise, a repudiation of His covenant. These vv. echo many terms in vv. 2–38; at the same time, they share thoughts and language with Lamentations. 39: Anointed, the Davidic king (v. 21). The king symbolizes the kingship or the people in the following vv. 40: Dragged his dignity in the dust, lit. "deseccrated his crown [by making it fall] to the ground," signifying the besmirching of the kingship.

45 You have brought ^ahis splendor^a to an end and have hurled his throne to the ground.
46 You have cut short the days of his youth;
You have covered him with shame. Selah.
47 How long, O LORD; will You forever hide Your face,
will Your fury blaze like fire?
48 O remember ^ahow short my life is;^a why should You have created every man in vain?
49 What man can live and not see death,
can save himself from the clutches of Sheol?
Selah.
50 O Lord, where is Your steadfast love of old which You swore to David in Your faithfulness?
51 Remember, O Lord, the abuse flung at Your servants
^athat I have borne in my bosom [from] many peoples;^a 52 how Your enemies, O LORD, have flung abuse, abuse at Your anointed at every step.
53 Blessed is the LORD forever;
Amen and Amen.

BOOK FOUR

90 A prayer of Moses, the man of God.

O Lord, You have been our refuge in every generation.
2 Before the mountains came into being, before You brought forth the earth and the world,
from eternity to eternity You are God.
3 You return man to dust;^b
You decreed, "Return you mortals!"
4 ^aFor in Your sight a thousand years are like yesterday that has passed, like a watch of the night.
5 You engulf men in sleep;^a at daybreak they are like grass that renews itself;
6 at daybreak it flourishes anew;
by dusk it withers and dries up.

46: The kingship or nation has been cut off in its prime. This is not necessarily a reference to the age of a particular king. 49: Sheol, the abode of the dead and a metaphor for the exile. 53: A doxology closing Book III of the Psalter (cf. Pss. 41.14; 72.18–19; 106.48).

Ps. 90: Human mortality and God's eternity. Words for time figure prominently: years, day, watch of the night, span of our life, daybreak. They are used to contrast God's eternity and human beings' transience and fragility. Human life is perceived as, by its nature, difficult and sorrowful. The psalmist prays that, with God's help, life will be satisfying and joyful. This psalm and Ps. 91 are recited in the introductory prayers of the morning service on Shabbat and festivals. 1–2: God is eternal; He was a refuge even before there was a physical habitat. The language of birth, rather than the language of creating, is used of the world; God gave birth to the world. 1: This psalm alone is associated with Moses, perhaps because, on one hand, he died prematurely, before entering the land, and on the other hand, he lived until 120, the ideal life span, with eyes undimmed and vigor unabated (Deut. 34.7). The man of God, the prophet. 3: To dust, see Gen. 2.7; 3.19. 4: Human time is in a different scale from divine time. A watch of the night, less than one day. The night was divided into three or four watches of three to four hours each, depending on the time of year. 5: Grass grows and withers quickly (Ps. 102.25–28; Isa. 40.6–8).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Or "contrition."

7 So we are consumed by Your anger, terror-struck by Your fury.
8 You have set our iniquities before You,
our hidden sins in the light of Your face.
9 All our days pass away in Your wrath;
we spend our years like a sigh.
10 The span of our life is seventy years, or, given the strength, eighty years;
but the ^abest of them ^aare trouble and sorrow.
They pass by speedily, and we ^bare in darkness.^b 11 Who can know Your furious anger?
Your wrath matches the fear of You.
12 Teach us to count our days rightly, that we may obtain a wise heart.

13 Turn, O LORD!
How long?
Show mercy to Your servants.
14 Satisfy us at daybreak with Your steadfast love that we may sing for joy all our days.
15 Give us joy for as long as You have afflicted us, for the years we have suffered misfortune.
16 Let Your deeds be seen by Your servants,
Your glory by their children.
17 May the favor of the Lord, our God, be upon us;
let the work of our hands prosper,
O prosper the work of our hands!

91 O you who dwell in the shelter of the Most High and abide in the protection of Shaddai—2 I say of the LORD, my refuge and stronghold, my God in whom I trust,
3 that He will save you from the fowler's trap,
from the destructive plague.
4 He will cover you with His pinions;
you will find refuge under His wings;
His fidelity is an encircling shield.
5 You need not fear the terror by night, or the arrow that flies by day,

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Or "fly away."

8-10: Human lives are brief and troubled. Trouble was thought to result from sin, which God, in His anger, punished. Gen. chs 2-3 explains human mortality as a result of disobeying God. 10: Seventy years: Seventy (like seven) represents completion and perfection.

Most people in ancient times did not reach this age, but some did. The ideal life span of 120 years (Gen. 6.3) is not realistic; a life span of 70 is. 13-17: Darkness ends and daybreak comes; sorrow is mitigated by joy. 13: Turn . . . Show mercy: God is called upon to repent, or relent—to stop bringing punishment; and to be comforted—not to be angry any longer. The words are similar to Moses' plea after the golden calf incident (Exod. 32.12)—another reason that the psalm is called the prayer of Moses. 14: Daybreak: Morning is the time of renewal, the time that God answers prayers (Pss. 30.6; 46.6; 143.8). 15: The psalmist prays for parity between days of joy and days of affliction. 16-17: The limited "immortality" of human beings is in their children and their achievements, the work of our hands. The psalmist prays that his own generation and his children's will be able to rejoice in God's deeds and that their own deeds will prosper.

Ps. 91: God protects from all harm those who trust Him. The many terms for protection, shelter, refuge, and the like emphasize the theme. A speaker in the first person addresses an audience, encouraging them to trust God so no harm will befall them (vv. 1-13); God responds (vv. 14-16), reinforcing the speaker's words. According to some commentators, the shelter of the Most High (v. 1) is the Temple, and the psalm was part of the liturgy for entering or departing from the Temple. It is not clear how metaphorical the language is or whether it reflects popular religion and superstition; whether the dangers are from demons or from the ordinary dangers of plague, war, and wild animals. 1-2: Shelter . . . protection . . . refuge and stronghold: For the Temple as a place of protection see Pss. 27.5; 31.21. Most High ("elyon") and Shaddai are old epithets for God, borrowed from the Canaanites, who applied them to the head of their pantheon. 4: Wings may be a metaphor for divine protection, the outspread wings of a bird (Pss. 17.8; 36.8), or may refer to the wings of the cherubim on either side of the Ark (Exod. 25.17-22). 5-6: God protects at all times: night and day, darkness (when there is no light), and noon (the brightest light). Terror by night, perhaps an attack by de-

6 the plague that stalks in the darkness, or the scourge that ravages at noon.
7 A thousand may fall at your left side,
ten thousand at your right,
but it shall not reach you.
8 You will see it with your eyes,
you will witness the punishment of the wicked.
9 Because you took the LORD—my refuge,
the Most High—as your haven, 10 no harm will befall you,
no disease touch your tent.
11 For He will order His angels to guard you wherever you go.
12 They will carry you in their hands lest you hurt your foot on a stone.
13 You will tread on cubs and vipers;
you will trample lions and asps.
14 “Because he is devoted to Me I will deliver him;
I will keep him safe, for he knows My name.
15 When he calls on Me, I will answer him;
I will be with him in distress;
I will rescue him and make him honored;
16 I will let him live to a ripe old age,
and show him My salvation.”

92 A psalm. A song; for the sabbath day.

2 It is good to praise the LORD, to sing hymns to Your name, O Most High,
3 To proclaim Your steadfast love at daybreak,
Your faithfulness each night
4 With a ten-stringed harp, with voice and lyre together.
5 You have gladdened me by Your deeds, O LORD;
I shout for joy at Your handiwork.
6 How great are Your works, O LORD, how very subtle^a Your designs!
7 A brutish man cannot know,
a fool cannot understand this:

^a Or “profound.”

monic forces (Song 3.8). Plague and scourge may also be demons. 7–9: Even if all those who do not have God’s protection fall (and the numbers are exaggerated), the one who trusts in God will be safe. 8: The wicked, those who lack trust in God. 11–12: The psalmist’s “guardian angels” (Exod. 23.20; Pss. 34.8; 103.20); perhaps the protectors against the demonic forces mentioned in vv. 5–6. 14–16: God, speaking in the first person, responds to the psalmist, reassuring him of God’s protection. 16: A ripe old age, length of days is a sign of God’s favor, and is especially welcome after Ps. 90, which dwells on the shortness of human life.

Ps. 92: A hymn praising God; to be recited on the Sabbath, according to the superscription. According to early rabbinic tradition, particular psalms were recited each day of the week by the Levites at the Temple (m. Tamid 7.4 and parallels; see list in “The Bible in the Liturgy,” pp. 1947–48), but the Bible indicates a psalm only for the “sabbath day.” The psalm contains seven uses of the Tetragrammaton (יהוה), suggesting a link with the seventh day of creation (see b. Ber. 4.3 and parallels). It is uncertain when the psalm became connected with the Sabbath and when in the Sabbath liturgy in the Temple it was recited. Rabbinic and much medieval tradition understand the psalm eschatologically (b. Rosh Hash. 31a; Rashi).

1: An unusual superscription, with no ascription of authorship; mid-rabbinic tradition suggests that Adam recited it (Shoher Tov to Ps. 92). 2: A simple but profound religious expression; in contrast to many individual petitions, which contain specific requests from God, here it is simply good to praise the LORD. The praise may be related to the frequent liturgical formula: “Praise the LORD for He is good; His steadfast love is eternal” (see 106.1 n.) On Most High, see 7.18 n. 3: It is uncertain if this refers to two specific times (daybreak, night) at which God was praised in the Temple service, or is a merism for “always.” 4: The characteristics of a “mizmor” or psalm: a melody sung to the accompaniment of a stringed instrument (see 3.1 n.). 5: On handiwork referring to creation, see 8.4 n. 6: On works as the objects of creation, see 104.24. 8–9: A strong contrast between the temporary flourishing of the wicked and God’s permanence. 8: A variant on the imagery of Ps. 1: here the wicked may prosper, but only for a short time.

8 though the wicked sprout like grass, though all evildoers blossom,
it is only that they may be destroyed forever.

9 But You are exalted, O LORD, for all time.

10 Surely, Your enemies, O LORD, surely, Your enemies perish;
all evildoers are scattered.

11 You raise my horn high like that of a wild ox;
I am soaked in freshening oil.

12 I shall see the defeat of my watchful foes, hear of the downfall of the wicked who beset me.

13 The righteous bloom like a date-palm;
they thrive like a cedar in Lebanon;
14 planted in the house of the LORD,
they flourish in the courts of our God.

15 In old age they still produce fruit;
they are full of sap and freshness, 16 attesting that the LORD is upright,
my rock, in whom there is no wrong.

93 The LORD is king,
He is robed in grandeur;
the LORD is robed,
He is girded with strength.

The world stands firm;
it cannot be shaken.

2 Your throne stands firm from of old;
from eternity You have existed.

3 The ocean sounds, O LORD,
the ocean sounds its thunder,
the ocean sounds its pounding.

4 Above the thunder of the mighty waters, more majestic than the breakers of the sea is the LORD, majestic on high.

9: This v. is also an introduction to the following, since according to the Canaanite mythological tradition that Israel shared (see v. 10 n.), the high God ascended as king for all time only after his enemies had been vanquished. 10: A reuse and revision of the material known from the Baal epic, where Baal defeats the rebellious Sea, a myth that is reflected in much of the Bible (see 8.3 n.): “Now your enemy, O Baal, Now your enemy will you smite; Now will you cut off your adversaries” (ANET, p. 131, slightly modified). Here God’s enemies are not mythological creatures but human evildoers (cf. v. 8). 11: Symbols of victory; see 75.5 n. Others translate this and the following v. in the past tense, and view the psalm as having elements of thanksgiving. 13–15: The psalmist again uses agricultural imagery (cf. v. 8). 13: Cedars of Lebanon were known for strength; they were used in constructing the Temple, and thus offer a subtle segue into the following v. 14: For the desire to remain in the Temple, proximate to God, see 23.6; 27.5. 16: Attesting, lit. “to proclaim,” forming a frame with v. 3.

Ps. 93: This enthronement psalm (see introduction to Ps. 47) narrates God’s ascent to the throne after defeating the powers of chaos, represented in vv. 3–4 as the ocean. It is an Israelite adoption and transformation of the Canaanite myth about Baal’s kingship (see 92.10). In classical rabbinic (see b. Rosh Hash. 31a) and later liturgical tradition, it is recited on Friday nights. Like the previous psalm, it concerns creation, and thus is connected to the Sabbath, which commemorates the completion of creation; a superscription in the LXX also connects it to the Sabbath. The kingship psalms grouped together (93–99) may have been seen as a subcollection in antiquity; none has a Davidic superscription.

1: Heb may be translated as The LORD is king or “The LORD has become king”; context favors the latter, though in other psalms, which lack this psalm’s explicit mythological background, the former may be preferable. (This translation difference determines whether these should be called enthronement psalms, those commemorating God’s ascent to the throne, or kingship psalms that celebrate His ongoing role as king.) This v. narrates God’s creation after defeating His mythological enemies. Robed, an image of an enthronement ceremony; God becomes king. God enrobed in His creation is an image known also from 104.1–2, where God’s enthronement is by means of His creation. 2: From the time of creation (in mythological terms, from the time of the defeat of the mythological enemies) God’s throne stands firm. 3–4: God successfully vanquishes the rebellious oceans.

5 Your decrees are indeed enduring;
holiness befits Your house,
O LORD, for all times.

94 God of retribution, LORD,
God of retribution, appear!
2 Rise up, judge of the earth,
give the arrogant their deserts!
3 How long shall the wicked, O LORD,
how long shall the wicked exult, 4 shall they utter insolent speech, shall all evildoers vaunt themselves?
5 They crush Your people, O LORD,
they afflict Your very own;
6 they kill the widow and the stranger;
they murder the fatherless, 7 thinking, "The LORD does not see it,
the God of Jacob does not pay heed."

8 Take heed, you most brutish people;
fools, when will you get wisdom?
9 Shall He who implants the ear not hear,
He who forms the eye not see?
10 Shall He who disciplines nations not punish,
He who instructs men in knowledge?
11 The LORD knows the designs of men to be futile.

12 Happy is the man whom You discipline, O LORD,
the man You instruct in Your teaching, 13 to give him tranquillity in times of misfortune, until a pit be dug for the wicked.
14 For the LORD will not forsake His people;
He will not abandon His very own.
15 Judgment shall again accord with justice and all the upright shall rally to it.

16 Who will take my part against evil men?
Who will stand up for me against wrongdoers?
17 Were not the LORD my help,
I should soon dwell in silence.

5: This defeat has theological implications for the validity of the Temple (Your house) as the place of worship and for the validity of God's decrees.

Ps. 94: This psalm, a request for the destruction of evildoers, does not explicitly deal with God's kingship like the surrounding Pss. 93-99. The image of God as judge may, however, be subsumed under God's kingship (see esp. 96.13; 99.4), and it is possible that v. 20, which mentions a (human) throne, draws a contrast with the divine throne. There are additional thematic and lexical similarities to the surrounding psalms. The psalm has several affinities to wisdom literature, including interest in educating the fool (v. 8; see also vv. 11-12 n.). The destruction of the wicked is a major theme of prophetic eschatology, and thus Radak, citing Mal. 3.19, understands this psalm as a request for the arrival of the eschaton. 1: Retribution (Heb "nekamot"), some translate "vengeance," fostering a picture of a vengeful "Old Testament" deity (versus a loving God of the New Testament). Though "n-k-m" may have this sense elsewhere in the Bible, in this psalm fair retribution and not vengeance is being sought. Verbal repetition characterizes the opening (God of retribution; v. 3 "how long") and the closing (v. 23, "annihilate") of the psalm. 2: Rise up may reflect human institutions, where the judge may have stood up to offer his verdict (cf. 82.1 n.). 3-6: The focus here is on internal rather than external enemies; it is impossible to determine whether a specific group is meant. 6: Widow, stranger, fatherless are the defenseless in society; Deut. commands their protection (e.g., 10.18; 14.29). 7: Similar quotations are in 10.11 and 73.11. Heb uses the root "-m-r" to indicate both verbal and internal speech (thought); the translation could be thinking or "saying"; v. 11 suggests the former. 11: Although couched as a general statement, the v. refers to the wicked fools; perhaps a wisdom epigram is quoted here ("hevel," futile, is a characteristic term in Ecclesiastes, a wisdom text). 12: This v. shares the wisdom notion (see esp. Prov. 3.11-12; Job 5.17) that divine chastisement is beneficial. "Torah" likely here reflects general teaching, as in much wisdom literature (e.g., Prov. 1.8), though traditional Jewish commentary understands it as Torah on the assumption that the Mosaic Torah was canonical for David, the author of Psalms. 16: A protestation of innocence; the psalmist is opposed by the wrongdoers or evil

18 When I think my foot has given way,
Your faithfulness, O LORD, supports me.
19 When I am filled with cares,
Your assurance soothes my soul.
20 Shall the seat of injustice be Your partner, that frames mischief by statute?
21 They band together to do away with the righteous;
they condemn the innocent to death.
22 But the LORD is my haven;
my God is my sheltering rock.
23 He will make their evil recoil upon them, annihilate them through their own wickedness;
the LORD our God will annihilate them.

95 Come, let us sing joyously to the LORD, raise a shout for our rock and deliverer;
2 let us come into His presence with praise;
let us raise a shout for Him in song!
3 For the LORD is a great God,
the great king of all divine beings.
4 In His hand are the depths of the earth;
the peaks of the mountains are His.
5 His is the sea, He made it;
and the land, which His hands fashioned.
6 Come, let us bow down and kneel, bend the knee before the LORD our maker,
7 for He is our God, and we are the people He tends, the flock in His care.
O, if you would but heed His charge this day:
8 Do not be stubborn as at Meribah, as on the day of Massah, in the wilderness, 9 when your fathers put Me to the test, tried Me, though they had seen My deeds.
10 Forty years I was provoked by that generation;
I thought, "They are a senseless people;
they would not know My ways."
11 Concerning them I swore in anger,
"They shall never come to My resting-place!"

(vv. 1-3), focuses on God as creator of the world (vv. 4-5) and creator of Israel (vv. 6-7). Just as human kings were responsible for major building projects, God as king has created the world and Israel. Like Ps. 81, to which it is thematically similar, it concludes with a rebuke (vv. 8-11; cf. 81.9-17). The psalm can also be understood as having two calls to worship (vv. 1-2, 6), each followed by the impetus for that call, introduced by "ki," for; a similar structure is found in the early Song of the Sea recited by Miriam in Exod. 15.21, "Sing to the LORD, for ("ki") He has triumphed gloriously." This psalm (and those that follow through Ps. 99) is recited during the Friday night service. 1-2: The shout is modeled after the acclaim for the new king at his enthronement (see 47.2 n.; 98.4, 6). 1: Rock connects to the conclusion of the previous psalm (94.22). 3: God is incomparable. As in Exod. 15.11 and elsewhere, the existence of other, less powerful deities is acknowledged; they serve to show God's superiority even over other divine beings. Medieval interpreters understand the divine beings as "angels" (Ibn Ezra, Radak). 7: The image of God as shepherd is part of royal imagery; see 23.1-4 n. 8-11: This is a rare case where divine speech, perhaps spoken through a religious official, is quoted in psalms. The tradition offered stands in stark contrast with other traditions that see the wilderness period as ideal (esp. Jer. 2.2). The traditions about Meribah and Massah are in Exod. 17.7 and Deut. 33.8 (cf. Num. 20.1-13 about Meribah alone). This psalm connects the forty years of wandering to rebellion at these sites, in contrast to Num. 14.33-34; 32.13, which connect the forty years to the sin of the spies (but see Deut. 8.2; Josh. 5.6). These vv. function as an admonition, telling the people what to do if they want to remain in God's favor as His people. 9: Like Exod. 17.2, this v. explains the etymology of Massah by the root "n-s-h," to put to the test. 11: Resting-place refers to the land of Israel (Deut. 12.9).

men ("po'alei 'aven"; see 5.6 n.) of v. 4. 18: On God's "hesed," see 5.8 n. 22: Compare the extensive fortress language applied to God in 18.13. 23: As frequently occurs, especially at the end of personal petitions, the tenses are unclear;

the first verb is in the past ("he has"), while annihilate is in the future.

Ps. 95: A kingship psalm (see v. 3, the great king), which, after an introductory call to worship

96 ¹ Sing to the LORD a new song, sing to the LORD, all the earth.
² Sing to the LORD, bless His name, proclaim His victory day after day.
³ Tell of His glory among the nations,
 His wondrous deeds, among all peoples.
⁴ For the LORD is great and much acclaimed,
 He is held in awe by all divine beings.
⁵ All the gods of the peoples are mere idols,
 but the LORD made the heavens.
⁶ Glory and majesty are before Him;
 strength and splendor are in His temple.
⁷ Ascribe to the LORD, O families of the peoples,
 ascribe to the LORD glory and strength.
⁸ Ascribe to the LORD the glory of His name, bring tribute and enter His courts.
⁹ Bow down to the LORD majestic in holiness;
 tremble in His presence, all the earth!
¹⁰ Declare among the nations, "The LORD is king!"
 the world stands firm; it cannot be shaken;
 He judges the peoples with equity.
¹¹ Let the heavens rejoice and the earth exult;
 let the sea and all within it thunder,
¹² the fields and everything in them exult;
 then shall all the trees of the forest shout for joy ¹³ at the presence of the LORD, for He is coming,
 for He is coming to rule the earth;
 He will rule the world justly,
 and its peoples in faithfulness.

97 The LORD is king!
 Let the earth exult,
 the many islands rejoice!

a Cf. 1 Chron. 16.23–33.

Ps. 96: This kingship psalm is similar in structure to the previous one, also containing two calls to worship, beginning in vv. 1 and 7. Like Ps. 95, it emphasizes God as creator; like Ps. 94, it emphasizes God as judge. It is, however, more universal in outlook, demanding that all nations acknowledge God (vv. 1, 7); perhaps there is a progression or intensification as we move through the kingship psalms. A variant of this psalm appears in 1 Chron. 16.23–33, where it is combined with different psalms (see annotations there), and is used in connection with the installation of the Ark in Jerusalem. A similar tradition is related in the LXX superscription to Ps. 96: "when the house was being rebuilt after the captivity"; these pieces of evidence suggest a role for the psalm in the Second Temple. The psalm (and several other kingship psalms) shares significant elements with Deutero-Isaiah (see 4.5 n.); the psalm may be exilic or later. 1–3: It is unclear what song is meant—perhaps the psalm as a whole, or perhaps part of v. 10, "The LORD is king!" The rhetorical presence of other nations (see 47.10 n.) shows that God's glory is worldwide. 4–5: God is depicted as more incomparable than in 95.3. The depiction of other deities as mere idols is a major theme of Deutero-Isaiah (e.g., Isa. 40.18–20). 6: Glory and majesty (as well as strength) are typically royal attributes (21.6; 45.4), here shared by God as King. These qualities are localized with God at His temple. 7–8: A reworked citation of Ps. 29.1–2; there the "divine beings" offer the praise that here is to be offered by the families of the peoples. Ascribing to the LORD and bringing tribute (offerings) to His courts (at the Temple) may be a single action, or two coordinated actions of song and sacrifice. 10: The formula to be recited among the nations may either end with king, or may extend until the end of the v. In contrast to 93.1, this and the following psalms do not imagine a (re)enthronement of God, so the phrase "YHWH malakh" is best translated in these psalms as The LORD is king! 11–13: Here the entire natural world plays the role of the populace at the coronation, rejoicing loudly (see 47.2 n.). 13: The verb "ba" may be translated as is coming or "has come." The phrase is repeated, following a usage in Semitic poetry; Radak plausibly notes: "the second [is coming] explains the first, and the doubling functions to strengthen [the rhetoric]." The end of the v. returns to the theme of justice, a central royal task, paraphrasing the end of v. 10. Human kings did not always mete out justice fairly, so these psalms express a desire for an ideal, divine royal judge.

Ps. 97: Thematically, this is similar to the previous two kingship psalms, emphasizing God's justice and power (though not His role as creator). Structurally it is quite different; it contains no call to worship, and rather than beginning with imperatives, it concludes

2 Dense clouds are around Him, righteousness and justice are the base of His throne.

3 Fire is His vanguard, burning His foes on every side.

4 His lightnings light up the world;
the earth is convulsed at the sight;
5 mountains melt like wax at the LORD's presence,

at the presence of the Lord of all the earth.
6 The heavens proclaim His righteousness and all peoples see His glory.

7 All who worship images, who vaunt their idols,
are dismayed;
all divine beings bow down to Him.

8 Zion, hearing it, rejoices,
the towns^a of Judah exult,
because of Your judgments, O LORD.

9 For You, LORD, are supreme over all the earth;
You are exalted high above all divine beings.

10 O you who love the LORD, hate evil!
He guards the lives of His loyal ones, saving them from the hand of the wicked.

11 Light is sown for the righteous, radiance^b for the upright.

12 O you righteous, rejoice in the LORD and acclaim His holy name!

98 A psalm.

Sing to the LORD a new song,
for He has worked wonders;
His right hand, His holy arm,
has won Him victory.

2 The LORD has manifested His victory, has displayed His triumph in the sight of the nations.

^a Or "women." ^b Others "joy."

with them. It builds upon the earlier kingship psalms, moving the declaration The LORD is king! to the psalm's beginning. As in other kingship psalms, a utopian world is depicted; this motivates Radak to say: "many similar psalms were written to strengthen the hearts of people who despaired of redemption due to the length of the exile." 1: See 96.11–13. Islands are far-off places. 2–5: God appears as powerful in a theophany (see introduction to Ps. 29). 6: Both the natural and human world react. 7: This degrades the other deities even more than 96.4–5, showing progression in these psalms. 8: God's judgments, either against other nations, or in the sense of divine justice (see v. 2, "righteousness and justice are the base of His throne") are the cause for rejoicing. 9: Ps. 47.3, another kingship psalm, is similar. 10–12: A concluding call to the righteous. Calls seem to be part of this genre, though here the call itself is different from the surrounding psalms. 10: On loyal ones ("ḥasid"), see 12.2 n. 11–12: Heb "simḥah," the opening word of the second line, is a pun, meaning both radiance and joy. And acclaim His holy name, namely praise Him, may be a stock psalm phrase; see 30.5. The psalm concludes with a call to rejoice, echoing joy, a major theme of the psalm. It thus asserts that joy rather than fear is the proper reaction to God's great power—at least for those who are righteous.

Ps. 98: This kingship psalm highlights the military victory of God. It is closely related to Ps. 96: Both open with the same formula, Sing to the LORD a new song, and the conclusion of this psalm is a variant of the conclusion of 96. Both emphasize the role of nature in praising God, and both mention God's kingship in the middle rather than at the beginning. In fact, Ps. 98 can be seen as an actualized version of Ps. 96. Ps. 96.3 commands: "Tell of His glory among the nations, His wondrous deeds, among all peoples," and 98.3 claims (in the past): "all the ends of the earth beheld the victory of our God." 1: The short superscription, A psalm, is unique in Psalms; the LXX introduces all of the kingship psalms with "A psalm of David." This psalm collapses the typically longer summons to worship and motivation (introduced by "ki," for) into a single v.; see introductory note to Ps. 95. Like many of the other kingship psalms, this too shows affinities to Deutero-Isaiah; compare vv. 1–2 with Isa. 52.10: "The LORD will bare His holy arm / In the sight of all the nations, / And the very ends of earth

3 He was mindful of His steadfast love and faithfulness toward the house of Israel; all the ends of the earth beheld the victory of
our God.
4 Raise a shout to the LORD, all the earth, break into joyous songs of praise!
5 Sing praise to the LORD with the lyre, with the lyre and melodious song.
6 With trumpets and the blast of the horn raise a shout before the LORD, the King.
7 Let the sea and all within it thunder,
the world and its inhabitants;
8 let the rivers clap their hands,
the mountains sing joyously together 9 at the presence of the LORD,
for He is coming to rule the earth;
He will rule the world justly,
and its peoples with equity.

99^a The LORD, enthroned on cherubim, is king, peoples tremble, the earth quakes.^a 2 The LORD is great in Zion, and exalted above all peoples.
3 They praise Your name as great and awesome;
He is holy!
4 ^bMighty king^b who loves justice,
it was You who established equity,
You who worked righteous judgment in Jacob.
5 Exalt the LORD our God
and bow down to His footstool;
He is holy!
6 Moses and Aaron among His priests, Samuel, among those who call on His name—
when they called to the LORD,
He answered them.

a-a Clauses transposed for clarity. b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

shall see / The victory of our God." 3: Steadfast love and faithfulness are often connected to covenant obligations. 4–8: These mirror the noisy acclaim of the new king (see 47.2 n.), a common motif in the kingship psalms. 6: The mention of the horn ("shofar") is especially significant given 1 Kings 1.39, concerning the coronation of Solomon: "They sounded the horn ("shofar") and all the people shouted, 'Long live King Solomon!' " This and other affinities to the coronation ritual may suggest that these psalms celebrate the (re)enthronement of God, perhaps during an annual ritual. The central significance of the shofar or ram's horn in the Rosh Ha-Shanah (New Year) celebration may be a remnant of this biblical ritual.

7–8: See 96.11–12. These vv. possibly allude to the myth concerning the rebellion of the waters (see Ps. 93), in which case they suggest that the sea and rivers have been totally subdued, and are now paying homage to God. Thus, this v. may not merely be a personification of the sea (so Rashi, Radak), but may contain a recollection of the Sea as a deity. 8: Another strong connection to Deutero-Isaiah; see Isa. 55.12: "Yea, you shall leave in joy and be led home secure. / Before you, mount and hill shall shout aloud, / And all the trees of the field shall clap their hands." 9: A variant of 96.13.

Ps. 99: The final kingship psalm. Much of vv. 1–4 is similar to the previous kingship psalms, while vv. 5–9, framed by a refrain and focused on prophetic intercession and divine response, are unique. 1: Quaking of people and nature accompanies theophanies (Exod. 19.16, 18). Enthroned on cherubim refers to God's presence in the Temple, where the Ark serves as His throne (see 1 Sam. 4.4 n.). This kingship psalm, more than the others, focuses on God's presence in the Jerusalem Temple (vv. 5, 9) in Zion (v. 2). 2: God is exalted over all peoples, rather than greater than other gods, as in 95.3; 96.4; 97.9, though some LXX manuscripts here read "gods, divine beings" rather than peoples. 3: Great and awesome are also paired in the kingship psalms 47.3 and 96.4. He is holy! may be the actual words of praise; see Isa. 6.3, where the seraphs declare: "Holy, holy, holy! The LORD of Hosts! His presence fills all the earth!" 4: Similar themes and vocabulary are used in 97.2 and 98.9. 5: The typical call to worship. Several LXX manuscripts suggest that "ki," "for" has been lost before He is holy (see the parallel in v. 9); this would fit the typical pattern (see introduction to Ps. 95). The footstool is the Ark (see 1 Chron. 28.2); the phrase is only known in exilic and later literature (Isa. 66.1; Lam. 2.1). 6: In contrast to the Priestly tradition, Moses is viewed as a priest. The singling

- 7 He spoke to them in a pillar of cloud;
they obeyed His decrees,
the law He gave them.
- 8 O LORD our God, You answered them;
You were a forgiving God for them,
but You exacted retribution for their misdeeds.
- 9 Exalt the LORD our God,
and bow toward His holy hill, for the LORD our God is holy.

100 A psalm ^afor praise. ^a

- 1 Raise a shout for the LORD, all the earth;
2 worship the LORD in gladness;
come into His presence with shouts of joy.
- 3 Acknowledge that the LORD is God;
He made us and ^bwe are His, ^b
His people, the flock He tends.
- 4 Enter His gates with praise,
His courts with acclamation.
Praise Him!
Bless His name!
- 5 For the LORD is good;
His steadfast love is eternal;
His faithfulness is for all generations.

101 Of David. A psalm.

I will sing of faithfulness and justice;
I will chant a hymn to You, O LORD.

a-a Traditionally "for the thanksgiving offering."

b-b So qere; kethib and some ancient versions "not we ourselves."

out of Samuel as an intercessor is somewhat surprising, though he sometimes has that role in Samuel (e.g., 1 Sam. 19.5, 9). Priests and prophets, but no king is mentioned; perhaps this highlights the incomparable nature of God's kingship. 8: This v. is puzzling; it seems to telescope, with some changes, the traditions preserved elsewhere in the Bible. Moses and Samuel also appear together as intercessors in Jer. 15.1. God does not appear in a pillar of cloud to Samuel. Decrees in reference to Samuel may mean laws pertaining to the monarchy (1 Sam. 8.9, 11; 10.25). This v. seems to be an oblique request for a divine answer for the psalmist. It is one of many biblical reuses of the divine attributes of Exod. 34.6–7; specifically You were a forgiving God for them reflects "forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin," while but You exacted retribution for their misdeeds reworks "yet He does not remit all punishment." 9: Although the phrase holy hill is found in Psalms (e.g., 15.1), it predominates in Deutero-Isaiah (e.g., 56.7), offering a final connection between that prophet and the kingship psalms.

Ps. 100: This psalm is formally distinct from the kingship psalm collection (93–99): it nowhere mentions the kingship of God, and unlike 93–99, it has a typical superscription. Nevertheless, as noted below, it shares many themes and words with these psalms. The reference in v. 3 recalls the royal shepherd image. It even has the same structure as Pss. 95–97: a call to worship followed by a reason introduced by "ki," for. The many similarities between Ps. 100 and the previous ones suggest that Ps. 100 serves as an anthology or summary for the collection. It may also be understood as a general call to worship, and may have functioned as an introduction to larger liturgical works; it serves a similar role now when recited in the daily morning service. It is universalistic like Deutero-Isaiah in the sense that all the earth is expected to acknowledge that the LORD is God. 1: It is uncertain if "todah" should be translated for praise, specifying the genre of the psalm (see Radak), or if it refers to the thanksgiving offering (so Rashi; see 50.13–14 n.), suggesting a liturgy to be recited in conjunction with the sacrifice. On shouting, see 47.2 n., and 95.1–2; 98.4, 6. 2: On gladness, see 97.11; contrast 2.11: "Serve the LORD in awe; tremble with fright." 3: The LORD (YHVH) as sole or most powerful God is emphasized in Pss. 96–98. On the flock, see 95.7. 4: This type of call to worship typifies 95–99; on courts see 96.8. With praise may also be rendered "with a thanksgiving offering." 5: On the formula For the LORD is good; His steadfast love is eternal, see 106.1 n. For steadfast love and faithfulness, see 98.3.

Ps. 101: While any individual could have recited this psalm, the speaker sounds like a ruler (see esp. v. 8) and therefore many scholars consider it a royal psalm, perhaps sung at a coronation. Cf. Pss. 2 and 110. In the first part (vv. 1–4), the speaker promises to conduct himself with honesty and uprightness; compare this declaration with the instructions for a 2 I will study the way of the blameless;

when shall I attain it?
I will live without blame within my house.
3 I will not set before my eyes anything base;
I hate crooked dealing;
I will have none of it.
4 Perverse thoughts will be far from me;
I will know nothing of evil.
5 He who slanders his friend in secret I will destroy;
I cannot endure the haughty and proud man.
6 My eyes are on the trusty men of the land,
to have them at my side.
He who follows the way of the blameless shall be in my service.
7 He who deals deceitfully shall not live in my house;
he who speaks untruth shall not stand before my eyes.
8 Each morning I will destroy all the wicked of the land, to rid the city of the LORD of all evildoers.

102 A prayer of the lowly man when he is faint and pours forth his plea before the LORD.

2 O LORD, hear my prayer;
let my cry come before You.
3 Do not hide Your face from me
in my time of trouble;
turn Your ear to me;
when I cry, answer me speedily.
4 For my days have vanished like smoke and my bones are charred like a hearth.
5 My body is stricken and withered like grass;
too wasted^a to eat my food;
6 on account of my vehement groaning my bones^b show through my skin.^b 7 I am like a great owl in the wilderness, an owl among the ruins.
8 I lie awake; I am like a lone bird upon a roof.
9 All day long my enemies revile me;
my deriders use my name to curse.
10 For I have eaten ashes like bread and mixed my drink with tears,

king in Deut. 17.18–20 and the farewell speech of Samuel in 1 Sam. 12.2–5. In the second part (vv. 5–8) the speaker might be addressing his courtiers, explaining how he will ensure that his royal court will meet the highest moral standards. 1: Faithfulness and justice, a reference to God's loyalty to the Davidic monarchy. Cf. 89.2–5. This v. is interpreted in Jewish traditional sources (Targum, Rashi) to mean that whether God acts with favor ("hesed") or with justice ("mishpat"), the psalmist will always praise him. 2: My house may be "my palace" (also v. 7), another hint that this is a royal psalm. 3–5: The king's protestation of innocence (18.22–24); for nonassociation with evildoers, see 1.1; 26.4–5. 8: Each morning: Morning is the time that justice is rendered (Jer. 21.12) and the time that deliverance is expected (46.6; Isa. 37.36; Lam. 3.23). The city of the LORD, Jerusalem (Targum), the capital of the Davidic dynasty.

Ps. 102: A psalm lamenting the destruction of Jerusalem and praying for its restoration. Rabbinic tradition (m. Ta'an. 2.3) assigns this psalm to fast days. A prayer for personal restoration (vv. 2–12, 24–29) frames the prayer for the rebuilding of Zion (Jerusalem) after the exile (vv. 13–23). 1: The lowly man of the superscription is one of the exiles. 3: God's hiding His face ("hester panim"; see 6.4–5 n.) became a theological concept in later Jewish thought. It represents God's withdrawal of His presence from the world. 4–8: The psalmist describes his trouble as a physical illness; he is stricken with pain and weakness. 7–8: The bird similes suggest loneliness and shrieks of pain which are calls for help. The birds mentioned are unclean birds (Lev. 11.17–18) and are therefore perceived negatively. They inhabit ruins (Zeph. 2.14). 9: Taunting from enemies is a common usage in the psalms and need not be taken literally. The psalmist feels socially isolated as well as physically ill. 10: These actions indicate mourning and lamenting;

a-a Others "I forget." b-b Lit. "cling to my flesh."

11 because of Your wrath and Your fury;
for You have cast me far away.

12 My days are like a lengthening shadow;
I wither like grass.

13 But You, O LORD, are enthroned forever;
Your fame endures throughout the ages.

14 You will surely arise and take pity on Zion, for it is time to be gracious to her;
the appointed time has come.

15 Your servants take delight in its stones, and cherish its dust.

16 The nations will fear the name of the LORD,
all the kings of the earth, Your glory.

17 For the LORD has built Zion;
He has appeared in all His glory.

18 He has turned to the prayer ^aof the destitute^a and has not spurned their prayer.

19 May this be written down for a coming
generation,
that people yet to be created may praise the
LORD.

20 For He looks down from His holy height;
the LORD beholds the earth from heaven to hear the groans of the prisoner, to release those condemned to death;
that the fame of the LORD may be recounted in Zion,
His praises in Jerusalem,
when the nations gather together,
the kingdoms, to serve the LORD.

24 He drained my strength in mid-course,
He shortened my days.

25 I say, "O my God, do not take me away in the midst of my days,
You whose years go on for generations on end.

26 Of old You established the earth;
the heavens are the work of Your hands.

27 They shall perish, but You shall endure;
they shall all wear out like a garment;
You change them like clothing and they pass away.

28 But You are the same, and Your years never end.

29 May the children of Your servants dwell securely and their offspring endure in Your presence."

cf. 42.4; 80.6. 12-13: The transitory nature of humankind (grass; cf. Isa. 40.6) contrasted with the eternity of God (see Ps. 90.1-6). See also vv. 24-28. 12: The psalmist feels he is nearing the end of his life. Cf. v. 24. 13: Cf. Lam. 5.19: "But You, O LORD, are enthroned forever, Your throne endures through the ages." 14-17: The psalmist prays that God will rebuild Zion and that the divine glory will again appear there (Ezek. 43.1-5); foreign kings will come to acknowledge God's supremacy (Isa. 60.1-3; Jer. 30.18). 14: The appointed time may be unspecified or the psalmist may have known of a specific prophecy, like Jeremiah's prophecy (Jer. 25.11-12; 29.10-14) that Babylonia would be overthrown in seventy years. 20-21: God hears the groaning of the exiles (79.11), as he looks down from heaven (11.4-5; 14.2). 22-23: The reinstatement of Temple worship will lead to the further glorification of God. All peoples will gather there to serve God, an idea similar to Isa. 2.2-3; Micah 4.1-2. 24-25: The psalmist prays that he not suffer premature death (55.23; 89.45). Perhaps the psalmist is expressing regret that he will not live to see the restoration, but in v. 29 he hopes that his children will. 26: Job 38.4; Ps. 104.5; Prov. 8.29; Isa. 48.13. 27-29: The permanence of God is contrasted with the most permanent objects in the world, heaven and earth, usually thought of as existing forever (Eccl. 1.4). God created them and God will let them perish, but God will continue to exist for eternity, beyond all measure of time. The permanence of God gives hope that He will, at some time in the future, restore Israel. 28: This v. is part of the liturgy for Rosh Ha-Shanah and Yom Kippur. 29: There is hope of restoration for a future generation. To endure in God's presence is the opposite of God's hiding His face.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

103 Of David.

1 Bless the LORD, O my soul,
 all my being, His holy name.
 2 Bless the LORD, O my soul
 and do not forget all His bounties.
 3 He forgives all your sins,
 heals all your diseases.
 4 He redeems your life from the Pit, surrounds you with steadfast love and mercy.
 5 He satisfies you with good things in ^athe prime of life,^a
 so that your youth is renewed like the eagle's.
 6 The LORD executes righteous acts and judgments for all who are wronged.
 7 He made known His ways to Moses,
 His deeds to the children of Israel.
 8 The LORD is compassionate and gracious, slow to anger, abounding in steadfast love.
 9 He will not contend forever, or nurse His anger for all time.
 10 He has not dealt with us according to our sins, nor has He requited us according to our iniquities.
 11 For as the heavens are high above the earth, so great is His steadfast love toward those who fear Him.
 12 As east is far from west,
 so far has He removed our sins from us.
 13 As a father has compassion for his children, so the LORD has compassion for those who fear
 Him.
 14 For He knows how we are formed;
 He is mindful that we are dust.
 15 Man, his days are like those of grass;
 he blooms like a flower of the field;
 16 a wind passes by and it is no more,
 its own place no longer knows it.
 17 But the LORD's steadfast love is for all eternity toward those who fear Him, and His beneficence is for the children's children
 18 of those who keep His covenant and remember to observe His precepts.

Ps. 103: A hymn of praise for God's nature (divine attributes) and for His acts on behalf of Israel; it contains quotations from and allusions to Exodus and Isaiah.

1–2: A double self-invitation to praise God. Bless the LORD, O my soul was likely a stock introduction to a psalm (104.1). Soul means one's being. There is as yet no concept of the soul as distinct from the body. 3–4: Among God's blessings are the forgiveness of sin and the healing of mortal illness (32.1–5), which might have been thought of as punishment for sin.

3: He forgives all your sins, see Exod. 34.7. 4: The Pit, a poetic term for Sheol, the abode of the dead. 7–8: See Exod. 33.13; 34.6.

9–13: Interpreting or elaborating on the meaning and current application of Exod. 34.6, quoted in v. 8. 9: Cf. Isa. 57.16. 11: Cf. Isa. 55.9.

13: The relationship between God and his worshippers is here portrayed as that between a father and a son (cf. Mal. 3.16–17). The compassionate father also figures in Jer. 31.20. 14–17: The creaturely and ephemeral status of humanity (Gen. 2.7; Ps. 90.3–6), and the permanence of God's covenant with those who fear Him.

15–16: Cf. Isa. 40.6–8. 19–22: God is lauded by His heavenly council, and by all He has created (cf. Ps. 148); thus human praise of God mimics angelic praise, a significant theme of later Jewish prayer. The psalm ends as it began, forming an inclusio.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

19 The LORD has established His throne in heaven, and His sovereign rule is over all.

20 Bless the LORD, O His angels, mighty creatures who do His bidding,
ever obedient to His bidding;

21 bless the LORD, all His hosts,
His servants who do His will;

22 bless the LORD, all His works, through the length and breadth of His realm;
bless the LORD, O my soul.

104 Bless the LORD, O my soul;
O LORD, my God, You are very great;
You are clothed in glory and majesty,
wrapped in a robe of light;

2 You spread the heavens like a tent cloth.

3 He sets the rafters of His lofts in the waters, makes the clouds His chariot, moves on the wings of the wind.

4 He makes the winds His messengers, fiery flames His servants.

5 He established the earth on its foundations,
so that it shall never totter.

6 You made the deep cover it as a garment;
the waters stood above the mountains.

7 They fled at Your blast, rushed away at the sound of Your thunder, —mountains rising, valleys sinking—
to the place You established for them.

8 You set bounds they must not pass so that they never again cover the earth.

9 You make springs gush forth in torrents;
they make their way between the hills,
giving drink to all the wild beasts;
the wild asses slake their thirst.

10 The birds of the sky dwell beside them and sing among the foliage.

11 You water the mountains from Your^a lofts;
the earth is sated from the fruit of Your work.

12 You make the grass grow for the cattle, and herbage for man's labor that he may get food out of the earth—wine that cheers the hearts of men ^boil that makes the face shine,^b and bread that sustains man's life.

^a Lit. "His." ^{b-b} Lit. "to make the face shine from oil."

Ps. 104: In praise of the creator of a perfect world. The creation, an ecological harmony in which all are provided for, is an ideal world in which evil has no place. Structured on Gen. ch 1, but incorporating other creation traditions, the description is more poetic. It resembles both the divine catalogue of creation in Job chs 38–39 (which is more exotic and less idyllic) and the Egyptian "Hymn to Aten" (ANET 369–71), from which some scholars think it was adapted. This hymn is recited on the new moon.

1–4: God is clothed in the glory of His creation; He is housed in it; He is transported by it. 2: The creation of light and of the firmament. Spread the heavens, Job 9:8; Isa. 40:22; 42:5; Zech. 12:2. 3: Moves on . . . the wind, Pss. 18:11; 68:5. 4: See 148:8: "fire and hail, snow and smoke, storm wind that executes His command." 5: See 102:26. 6–9: God created the primordial waters (which Gen. says were there at the beginning of creation), and then separated them from the dry land. God's blast put the chaotic waters to flight (29:3; Jer 5:22). In their flight they ran up and down the mountains (v. 8), which had been submerged before (v. 6). Never again will the waters of chaos cover the earth. These vv. incorporate recollections of the Canaanite mythological tradition attested at Ugarit and also found elsewhere in the Bible (cf. Job 38:8–10; Prov. 8:29). 10–18: The emergence of the ordered, habitable world, where God provides water and food to all his creatures. 10–11: Instead of the waters of chaos, God made springs that meander among the hills so that animals would have drink. 12: Near the springs the birds live. 13–15: The mention of the sky leads to the mention of rain, which waters the vegetation and enables herding and agricultural production. 13: See 36:9; 65:10. 14: Cf. 147:9. Get food out of the earth: The blessing over bread before meals uses this wording to bless God for bringing bread out of the earth. Here it is humans, through God's planning, who get food from the earth. 15: The three main crops of

16 The trees of the LORD drink their fill,
 the cedars of Lebanon, His own planting, 17 where birds make their nests;
 the stork has her home in the junipers.
 18 The high mountains are for wild goats;
 the crags are a refuge for rock-badgers.
 19 He made the moon to mark the seasons;
 the sun knows when to set.
 20 You bring on darkness and it is night, when all the beasts of the forests stir.
 21 The lions roar for prey, seeking their food from God.
 22 When the sun rises, they come home and couch in their dens.
 23 Man then goes out to his work,
 to his labor until the evening.
 24 How many are the things You have made, O LORD;
 You have made them all with wisdom;
 the earth is full of Your creations.
 25 There is the sea, vast and wide, with its creatures beyond number,
 living things, small and great.
 26 There go the ships, and Leviathan that You formed to sport with.
 27 All of them look to You to give them their food when it is due.
 28 Give it to them, they gather it up;
 open Your hand, they are well satisfied;
 29 hide Your face, they are terrified;
 take away their breath, they perish
 and turn again into dust;
 30 send back Your breath, they are created,
 and You renew the face of the earth.
 31 May the glory of the LORD endure forever;
 may the LORD rejoice in His works!
 32 He looks at the earth and it trembles;
 He touches the mountains and they smoke.
 33 I will sing to the LORD as long as I live;
 all my life I will chant hymns to my God.
 34 May my prayer be pleasing to Him;
 I will rejoice in the LORD.
 35 May sinners disappear from the earth, and the wicked be no more.
 Bless the LORD, O my soul.
 Hallelujah.

the agricultural year: grain (for bread, May-June), grapes (for wine, August-September), and olives (for oil, October). Wine is associated with pleasure and oil with luxury (oil was a cosmetic). 16-18: The trees, also nourished by the water God provides, were created for birds to live in; mountains and caves were made to be homes for wild animals. 19-23: The creation of the celestial bodies (Gen. 1.14-18) sets in motion the diurnal cycle. Each creature has its place in this cycle. Predators seek their food at night, and people labor during the day. 19: Although the (full) moon marks the seasons—actually the celebration of the seasonal festivals (Sukkot and Passover)—it is better to render to mark the seasons as “to mark the set times,” that is, the time for day and night. Cf. Gen. 1.16. 21: Job 38.39. 24-26: Both the land and the sea are marvels of God’s creation. 26: Manmade ships are seen as part of God’s creations in the sea. They are accompanied by the Leviathan, elsewhere the great marine chaos monster (74.14; Job ch 41). In Ugaritic literature, Leviathan (Lotan) was also a “beloved” of the deity El, a plaything, and that idea may be reflected here. Another quite different interpretation, not mythological, understands “Leviathan” in its literal sense of “the escort”—the dolphins or large fish often found near ships. 27-30: God maintains His providential care of the world. According to Gen. 2.7 (cf. Ps. 103.14), God formed the human from dust and breathed life into him, but here God’s breath animates all living things and without it they return to dust. 29: Hide Your face, see 102.3. 31-32: The creation is a theophany, accompanied by convulsions of the earth (114.7) and the mountains surrounded with smoke (144.5). 35: There is no place in this harmonious creation for sinners. As in the previous psalm, this concludes as it began. Hallelujah, “Praise the LORD.” These words occur at the end and sometimes at the beginning of a number of psalms from this point on (see 105; 106; 111-113;

105 Praise the LORD;
 call on His name;
 proclaim His deeds among the peoples.
 2 Sing praises to Him;
 speak of all His wondrous acts.
 3 Exult in His holy name;
 let all who seek the LORD rejoice.
 4 Turn to the LORD, to His might;^a seek His presence constantly.
 5 Remember the wonders He has done,
 His portents and the judgments He has pronounced,
 6 O offspring of Abraham, His servant,
 O descendants of Jacob, His chosen ones.
 7 He is the LORD our God;
 His judgments are throughout the earth.
 8 He is ever mindful of His covenant,
 the promise He gave for a thousand generations, 9 that He made with Abraham, swore to Isaac,
 10 and confirmed in a decree for Jacob,
 for Israel, as an eternal covenant, 11 saying, "To you I will give the land of Canaan as your allotted heritage." 12 They were then few in number,
 a mere handful, sojourning there, 13 wandering from nation to nation,
 from one kingdom to another.
 14 He allowed no one to oppress them;
 He reprov'd kings on their account, 15 "Do not touch My anointed ones;
 do not harm My prophets."
 16 He called down a famine on the land, destroyed every staff of bread.

a I.e., the Ark; cf. Ps. 78.61; 132.8.

115–117; 135; 146–150); these may have been part of one or more sub-collections.

Ps. 105: Like 78, 106, 135, and 136, this psalm invokes selected authoritative Torah traditions along with exegetical comments on them in praise of God. The main theme is God's covenant with Abraham to give him the promised land.

This covenant, a popular theme in postexilic times (e.g., Isa. 41.8; 51.2; 63.16; Neh. 9.7), was eternal and unconditional, and therefore still in effect (v. 8) despite the exile and the fact that Jews both in and outside the land of Israel lived under Persian rule. It provides encouragement and assurance to the postexilic audience (most likely those who had returned to the land of Israel) that they are entitled to the land of Israel by divine right. Vv. 1–15 are quoted in 1 Chron. 16.8–22. 1: God's deeds and wondrous acts are those recorded in the Torah, which the psalmist goes on to recite and reinterpret. The psalmist knew some form of the Torah traditions, which had already become authoritative. 4: Seek His presence, in the Temple. 5: Portents recalls the wonders in Egypt and judgments He has pronounced recalls the giving of the law at Sinai (Exod. 21.1). 6: The audience is addressed as the offspring (seed) of Abraham, thereby making them the fulfillment of God's promise to give Abraham many offspring (Gen. 15.3–6). Descendants of Jacob (lit. "children of Jacob") again emphasizes the continuity between the patriarchs and the audience. His chosen ones, the present generation is just as "chosen" as the forefathers. 9–11: The covenant with Abraham was reiterated for Isaac and Jacob (Gen. 15; 17.7–8; 28.13–14). The wording of v. 11 is similar to Gen. 17.8, with the addition of "your allotted heritage" from Deut. 32.9, further strengthening the bond between Israel and its land. 12–15: The story of the ancestors before they possessed the land highlights their wanderings in and out of Canaan, making them "exiles" just like the audience. The use of allusions and phrases associated with exile strengthen this theme that the patriarchs experienced exile like the contemporary audience. 12: The wording alludes to Deut. 4.27; 28.62, and most closely to Deut. 26.5. In all these cases "few in number" is associated with being in exile. 14–15: Cf. Gen. 20, where God reprov'd King Abimelech, and where Abraham is called a prophet. Cf. also Gen. 12.10–20; 26.1–2. Anointed ones, a synonym for "prophets," who were sometimes anointed (1 Kings 19.16; Isa. 61.1). Cf. Damascus Document 2.12; 6.1 (a Dead Sea Scroll text). 16–22: The Joseph story (Gen. 37–50) retold with interpretive additions, ending with Joseph as a wisdom teacher (Gen. 41.39). 16: Staff of 17 He sent ahead of them a man,

 Joseph, sold into slavery.
 18 His feet were subjected to fetters;
 an iron collar was put on his neck.
 19 Until his prediction came true
 the decree of the LORD purged him.
 20 The king sent to have him freed;
 the ruler of nations released him.
 21 He made him the lord of his household, empowered him over all his possessions, 22 to discipline his princes at will,
 to teach his elders wisdom.
 23 Then Israel came to Egypt;
 Jacob sojourned in the land of Ham.
 24 He made His people very fruitful, more numerous than their foes.
 25 ^aHe changed their heart^a to hate His people, to plot against His servants.
 26 He sent His servant Moses, and Aaron, whom He had chosen.
 27 They performed His signs among them,
 His wonders, against the land of Ham.
 28 He sent darkness; it was very dark;
 ^bdid they not defy His word?^b
 29 He turned their waters into blood and killed their fish.
 30 Their land teemed with frogs,
 even the rooms of their king.
 31 Swarms of insects came at His command, lice, throughout their country.
 32 He gave them hail for rain, and flaming fire in their land.
 33 He struck their vines and fig trees, broke down the trees of their country.
 34 Locusts came at His command, grasshoppers without number.
 35 They devoured every green thing in the land;
 they consumed the produce of the soil.
 36 He struck down every first-born in the land,
 the first fruit of their vigor.
 37 He led Israel^c out with silver and gold;
 none among their tribes faltered.
 38 Egypt rejoiced when they left,
 for dread of Israel^c had fallen upon them.

bread, a phrase used in connection with the famine that results from enemy sieges (Lev. 26.26; Ezek. 4.16; 5.16; 14.13), forming another link between the forefathers' experience and that of the exiles.

18: This treatment is not recounted in Genesis; it is an exegetical addition making Joseph into a prisoner of war, like the deportees after the destruction. 23–38: The exodus story. Its telling emphasizes the destruction of the land of Egypt, showing God's power over that land. The exodus is a common metaphor for the return from captivity. 23–25: Israel in Egypt, oppressed yet fruitful (Exod. ch 1). Ham, Egypt; see 78.51. 26–36: The plagues (Exod. chs 7–12). The number and order of plagues differs from the Exodus account (see Ps. 78.43–51). 30: Their king, Heb "kings" (plural), reflecting an ancient tradition that also appears in Wisdom of Solomon 10.16 and Sirach 45.3. 33: Vines and fig trees, an exegetical comment elaborating on the hail plague. Cf. 78.47 for a similar elaboration. 37: Exod. 12.33–36. None among their tribes, an interpretation of Exod. 6.26 and 12.51, where God took out the Israelites "troop by troop." This interpretation is found in Josephus (Ant. 14.6) and in traditional Jewish commentaries. 37: Exegetical additions justify the taking of the gold and silver; this episode has a long history of interpretation, going back at least to this psalm. 39–44: The wandering in the wilderness and the coming to the promised land. 39: The pillar of cloud that led the Israelites (Exod. 13.21) takes on a protective function (Exod. 14.19) and is easily conflated with the cloud of the theophany that protects the people from direct contact with the divine (which would be fatal); cf. Exod. 33.1–10; Lev. 16.2; Num. 14.14. Isa. 4.5–6 applies the image to Mt. Zion. 40: The provision of Israel with food (Exod. 16.1–17.7). No mention is made of the people's complaints (Exod. ch 16 and Num. ch 11); the point is that God takes care of Israel's needs. 44: An inclusio returns a-a Or "Their heart changed." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Lit. "them."

39 He spread a cloud for a cover, and fire to light up the night.
40 They asked and He brought them quail, and satisfied them with food from heaven.
41 He opened a rock so that water gushed forth;
it flowed as a stream in the parched land.
42 Mindful of His sacred promise to His servant Abraham, 43 He led His people out in gladness,
His chosen ones with joyous song.
44 He gave them the lands of nations;
they inherited the wealth of peoples, 45 that they might keep His laws and observe His teachings.
Hallelujah.

106 Hallelujah.
Praise the LORD for He is good;
His steadfast love is eternal.
2 Who can tell the mighty acts of the LORD, proclaim all His praises?
3 Happy are those who act justly, who do right at all times.
4 Be mindful of me, O LORD, when You favor Your
people;
take note of me when You deliver them,
5 that I may enjoy the prosperity of Your chosen ones,
share the joy of Your nation,
glory in Your very own people.
6 We have sinned like our forefathers;
we have gone astray, done evil.
7 Our forefathers in Egypt did not perceive Your wonders;
they did not remember Your abundant love,
but rebelled at the sea, at the Sea of Reeds.
8 Yet He saved them, as befits His name, to make known His might.
9 He sent His blast against the Sea of Reeds;
it became dry;
He led them through the deep as through a wilderness.
10 He delivered them from the foe, redeemed them from the enemy.
11 Water covered their adversaries; not one of them was left.

to the promise to Abraham.

45: The community is enjoined to obey the Torah traditions, the same traditions that the psalmist has utilized and reinterpreted to give the community encouragement.

Ps. 106: This postexilic psalm presents a history of Israel's sins that culminates in idolatrous practices that polluted the land of Israel and led to the destruction and exile. The catalogue of sins shows how forbearing and forgiving God has been throughout the past, and, by implication, how forgiving He will continue to be, since He maintains His covenant and is merciful (vv. 43–45). The past history of God and Israel is the model for the future. The exile of 586 BCE, says the psalmist, is no different from earlier punishments, after which God took Israel back into His favor. The psalm is both a praise to God and a request to be gathered from among the nations, that is, returned from exile. Like Ps. 105, this psalm invokes Torah traditions along with interpretive comments. It adopts the Deuteronomic view that the exile was caused by Israel's sins. 1: Praise the LORD for He is good; His steadfast love is eternal was a ritual exclamation in the exilic period; see 107.1; 118.1, 29; 136.1; 1 Chron. 16.41; 2 Chron. 7.6. 4–5: The psalmist wishes to be included in the national favor that God will grant. 6: The present generation joins itself to past generations of sinners, implicitly suggesting that it should be forgiven, as they were. Cf. Lam. 5.7. 8–12: God's rescue of Israel at the sea and Israel's initial obedience (Exod. 14.26–15.19).

12 Then they believed His promise, and sang His praises.
 13 But they soon forgot His deeds;
 they would not wait to learn His plan.
 14 They were seized with craving in the wilderness, and put God to the test in the wasteland.
 15 He gave them what they asked for,
 then made them waste away.
 16 There was envy of Moses in the camp,
 and of Aaron, the holy one of the LORD.
 17 The earth opened up and swallowed Dathan, closed over the party of Abiram.
 18 A fire blazed among their party,
 a flame that consumed the wicked.
 19 They made a calf at Horeb and bowed down to a molten image.
 20 They exchanged their glory for the image of a bull that feeds on grass.
 21 They forgot God who saved them, who performed great deeds in Egypt,
 wondrous deeds in the land of Ham,
 awesome deeds at the Sea of Reeds.
 22 He would have destroyed them had not Moses His chosen one confronted Him in the breach to avert His destructive wrath.
 23 They rejected the desirable land,
 and put no faith in His promise.
 24 They grumbled in their tents and disobeyed the LORD.
 25 So He raised His hand in oath to make them fall in the wilderness, to disperse^a their offspring among the nations and scatter them through the lands.
 26 They attached themselves to Baal Peor, ate sacrifices offered to the dead.
 27 They provoked anger by their deeds,
 and a plague broke out among them.
 28 Phinehas stepped forth and intervened, and the plague ceased.
 29 It was reckoned to his merit for all generations, to eternity.
 30 They provoked wrath at the waters of Meribah and Moses suffered on their account, because they rebelled against Him and he spoke rashly.

13-33: Rebellion in the wilderness.
14-15: The feeding of Israel and their testing of God (Exod. 16-17; Num. ch 11). 15: Then made them waste away, see Num. 11.33.
16-18: The rebellion of Dathan and Abiram (Num. 16). 19-20: The making of the golden calf (Exod. 32.1-10). 19: Horeb, an alternate name for Sinai favored by Deuteronomy. 20: Their glory, God. That feeds on grass, an interpretive comment belittling the molten calf.
22: Ham, Egypt; see 78.51. 23: The intercession of Moses (Exod. 32.11-14). 24-27: The Israelites' wish to return to Egypt rather than to enter Canaan, God's anger at them, and Moses' plea on their behalf (Num. 14.1-35). 28-31: The worship of Baal of Peor and the episode of the Midianite woman (Num. 25.1-9). 28: Ate sacrifices offered to the dead, the sacrifices of foreign gods (Ibn Ezra). Some modern scholars associate Canaanite worship with worship of the dead—the "marzeah" feast.
30-31: Num. 25.6-9. The Zadokite priests, who ministered during the Judean monarchy, traced themselves to Phinehas (1 Chron. 5.30-41). 32-33: The waters of Meribah, Num. 20.2-13 (cf. Exod. 17.1-7). 34-36: Because they left the holy war (extermination of their enemies) incomplete, the Israelites learned their practices (Deut. 20.18), and the land was polluted with idolatry.

^a Cf. Targum, Kimhi.

34 They did not destroy the nations
 as the LORD had commanded them, 35 but mingled with the nations and learned their ways.
 36 They worshiped their idols, which became a snare for them.
 37 Their own sons and daughters they sacrificed to demons.
 38 They shed innocent blood,
 the blood of their sons and daughters,
 whom they sacrificed to the idols of Canaan;
 so the land was polluted with bloodguilt.
 39 Thus they became defiled by their acts, debauched through their deeds.
 40 The LORD was angry with His people and He abhorred His inheritance.
 41 He handed them over to the nations;
 their foes ruled them.
 42 Their enemies oppressed them and they were subject to their power.
 43 He saved them time and again,
 but they were deliberately rebellious, and so they were brought low by their iniquity.
 44 When He saw that they were in distress,
 when He heard their cry, 45 He was mindful of His covenant and in His great faithfulness relented.
 46 He made all their captors kindly disposed toward
 them.
 47 Deliver us, O LORD our God, and gather us from among the nations,
 to acclaim Your holy name,
 to glory in Your praise.
 48 Blessed is the LORD, God of Israel,
 From eternity to eternity.
 Let all the people say, "Amen."
 Hallelujah.

BOOK FIVE

107 "Praise the LORD, for He is good;
 His steadfast love is eternal!"
 2 Thus let the redeemed of the LORD say, those He redeemed from adversity,
 3 whom He gathered in from the lands,

37–39: The passing of children through fire as a form of sacrifice to foreign gods is often condemned in the Bible (Deut. 12.31; 2 Kings 16.3; 21.6; Jer. 19.5; Ezek. 20.31; 23.37). 37: No mention is made here of passing the children through fire; rather, the pagan practice is called sacrificing to demons—a later interpretation of a practice that was no longer current (and which remains incompletely understood by modern scholars). 40–42: The destruction and exile resulted from the people's accumulated sins of idolatry, which God could no longer leave unpunished. 44–47: As God saved the people in the past, the exiles ask for a new act of deliverance, the regathering of the people from their captivity (v. 27; 1 Chron. 16.35–36). 48: The doxology ending Book IV of the Psalter (cf. 41.14; 72.18–19; 89.53). Amen, an affirmation of the words just spoken.

Ps. 107: The division between Books IV and V of the Psalter is late and improperly placed: Ps. 107, with its allusions to earlier traditions, belongs with Pss. 103–107. Furthermore, the opening of Ps. 107, "Praise the LORD, for He is good; His steadfast love is eternal!" connects it to Pss. 105 and 106; the connection is even more striking if the word "Hallelujah" is restored at the beginning of the psalm, following the LXX. The last v. clarifies the psalm's purpose: The wise man will take note of these things; he will consider the steadfast love of the LORD, namely that these beneficent events reflect God's steadfast love or "hesed" (see 5.8 n.). The psalm may be divided from east and west, from the north and from the sea.

- 4 Some lost their way in the wilderness,
in the wasteland;
they found no settled place.
- 5 Hungry and thirsty,
their spirit failed.
- 6 In their adversity they cried to the LORD,
and He rescued them from their troubles.
- 7 He showed them a direct way to reach a settled place.
- 8 Let them praise the LORD for His steadfast love,
His wondrous deeds for mankind;
9 for He has satisfied the thirsty, filled the hungry with all good things.
- 10 Some lived in deepest darkness,
bound in cruel irons,
11 because they defied the word of God,
spurned the counsel of the Most High.
- 12 He humbled their hearts through suffering;
they stumbled with no one to help.
- 13 In their adversity they cried to the LORD,
and He rescued them from their troubles.
- 14 He brought them out of deepest darkness, broke their bonds asunder.
- 15 Let them praise the LORD for His steadfast love,
His wondrous deeds for mankind,
16 For He shattered gates of bronze,
He broke their iron bars.
- 17 There were fools who suffered for their sinful way,
and for their iniquities.
- 18 All food was loathsome to them;
they reached the gates of death.
- 19 In their adversity they cried to the LORD
and He saved them from their troubles.
- 20 He gave an order and healed them;
He delivered them from the pits.^a
- 21 Let them praise the LORD for His steadfast love,
His wondrous deeds for mankind.
- 22 Let them offer thanksgiving sacrifices, and tell His deeds in joyful song.
- 23 Others go down to the sea in ships,
ply their trade in the mighty waters;

^a Viz., of death.

into two large units: vv. 1–32 and 33–43; several scholars believe that two originally separate psalms have been combined. In contrast to the latter unit, the former, after an introduction (vv. 1–3), is divided into stanzas (vv. 4–9; 10–16; 17–22; 23–32), each of which has the double refrain In their adversity they cried to the LORD, / and He rescued them from their troubles (vv. 6, 13, 19, 28) and Let them praise the LORD for His steadfast love, / His wondrous deeds for mankind (vv. 8, 15, 21, 31), followed in each stanza by a single, concluding v. This section shares many motifs with Job. The psalm shows some signs of late biblical Heb, and vv. 1–2 are likely influenced by Isa. 62.12 and 43.5; it is thus a postexilic psalm. The Rabbis used this psalm as the basis for requiring a special blessing thanking God from those who survived the desert, those released from prison, seafarers, and those who were seriously ill (b. Ber. 54b). 1–2: Compare the opening of Ps. 118. 2–3: A reference to the return from the Babylonian exile. 4–9: Deliverance in the wilderness, symbolizing the difficulties of the exile and the return. The theme of God’s care in the wilderness became particularly important in the early postexilic period as the return from Babylonia was viewed by Deutero-Isaiah as a second exodus (see Isa. 43.16–21 n.). The Targum through its additions (v. 4, “He [David, author of Psalms] is prophesying concerning His nation Israel”; cf. v. 10, “concerning Zedekiah . . .”) makes it clear that this psalm is to be read in reference to specific events in Israel’s past. 10–16: V. 10 is a reference to the exile; v. 14 to a release from exile. 17–22: Two general descriptions of those who are being punished for misdeeds; they too will be forgiven. 21–26, 40: Each of these vv. begins with an inverted Heb letter “nun,” adapted from a sign used in Greek manuscript editing, to indicate that lines are isolated or separated from the surrounding material (the same indication occurs at Num. 10.35–36), but their use here is enigmatic.

24 they have seen the works of the LORD and His wonders in the deep.
 25 By His word He raised a storm wind that made the waves surge.
 26 Mounting up to the heaven, plunging down to the depths,
 disgorging in their misery, 27 they reeled and staggered like a drunken man,
 all their skill to no avail.
 28 In their adversity they cried to the LORD,
 and He saved them from their troubles.
 29 He reduced the storm to a whisper;
 the waves were stilled.
 30 They rejoiced when all was quiet,
 and He brought them to the port they desired.
 31 Let them praise the LORD for His steadfast love,
 His wondrous deeds for mankind.
 32 Let them exalt Him in the congregation of the people,
 acclaim Him in the assembly of the elders.
 33 He turns the rivers into a wilderness, springs of water into thirsty land, 34 fruitful land into a salt marsh, because of the wickedness of its inhabitants.
 35 He turns the wilderness into pools, parched land into springs of water.
 36 There He settles the hungry;
 they build a place to settle in.
 37 They sow fields and plant vineyards that yield a fruitful harvest.
 38 He blesses them and they increase greatly;
 and He does not let their cattle decrease, 39 after they had been few and crushed by oppression, misery, and sorrow.
 40 He pours contempt on great men and makes them lose their way in trackless deserts;
 41 but the needy He secures from suffering, and increases their families like flocks.
 42 The upright see it and rejoice;
 the mouth of all wrongdoers is stopped.
 43 The wise man will take note of these things;
 he will consider the steadfast love of the LORD.

23-32: This stanza, longer than the others, deals with the dangers of sailing (see Jonah chs 1-2).
32: This clarifies that "praise" must be public; although the Temple is a natural site for this, an assembly of the elders is not elsewhere associated with the Temple.
33-36: These vv., concerning the return to Israel, hark back to vv. 4-9, and show close affinities to Deutero-Isaiah. 37-39: Blessings in the land. 40-42: A qualifier, using typical psalmic language, noting that only the needy and upright prosper. 43: In several places, the steadfast love of the LORD seems to be a technical term for the past beneficent acts of God in history (89.2; Isa. 63.7).

108

A song. A psalm of David.

- 2^a My heart is firm, O God;
I will sing and chant a hymn with all my soul.
- 3 Awake, O harp and lyre!
I will wake the dawn.
- 4 I will praise You among the peoples, O LORD,
sing a hymn to You among the nations;
5 for Your faithfulness is higher than the heavens;
Your steadfastness reaches to the sky.
- 6 Exalt Yourself over the heavens, O God;
let Your glory be over all the earth!
- 7^b That those whom You love may be rescued,
deliver with Your right hand and answer me.
- 8 God promised ^cin His sanctuary^c
that I would exultingly divide up Shechem,
and measure the Valley of Sukkoth;
9 Gilead and Manasseh would be mine,
Ephraim my chief stronghold,
Judah my scepter;
- 10 Moab would be my washbasin;
on Edom I would cast my shoe;
I would raise a shout over Philistia.
- 11 Would that I were brought to the bastion!
Would that I were led to Edom!
- 12 But You have rejected us, O God;
God, You do not march with our armies.
- 13 Grant us Your aid against the foe,
for the help of man is worthless.
- 14 With God we shall triumph;
He will trample our foes.

109

For the leader. Of David. A psalm.

- O God of my praise,
do not keep aloof,
2 for the wicked and the deceitful open their mouth against me;
they speak to me with lying tongue.
- 3 They encircle me with words of hate;
they attack me without cause.
- 4 They answer my love with accusation ^dand I must stand judgment.^d a With vv. 2–6, cf. Ps. 57.8–12. b With vv. 7–14, cf. Ps. 60.7–14.

c-c Or “by His holiness.”

d-d Or “but I am all prayer”; meaning of Heb. uncertain, but see v. 7.

Ps. 108: After a unique superscription, vv. 2–6 duplicate 57.8–12 and vv. 7–14 duplicate 60.7–14. As in other cases (see Ps. 13, intro.), there are slight variations in these duplicates, suggesting that there was some flexibility in the transmission of passages. It is not clear why these two passages should be joined in this fashion, but it is noteworthy that v. 7, the first v. from the second passage, serves as a logical continuation of v. 6; v. 6 is a request, and in its new home, v. 7 offers the motivation or justification for that request. The result of the join fits the structure of communal petitions. The reuse of sections from one passage to create a new passage was accepted practice in the ancient world (see Isa. 2.2–4 n.). For medieval commentators, the problem of repeated passages was more severe. Radak, for example glosses: “and he [David] repeated it here, and we do not know why.” On specific vv., see the notes to Pss. 57 and 60.

Ps. 109: This individual petition has the expected structure: it opens with an invocation (O God of my praise), followed by a petition in the imperative (Do not keep aloof), and it contains a variety of motivations, reasons why this petition should be answered (esp. vv. 30–31). In other ways, however, it is unusual: the wording of the invocation is unique, and the center of the psalm, vv. 6–19, is a long vituperative curse of the enemies. The psalm, particularly this section, resembles the Mesopotamian “namburbi,” lit. “untying,” a type of prayer intended to undo a magical spell. It is thus noteworthy that vv. 2–4 emphasize the harmful words of the enemy (see 10.7 n.).

1: The invocation, O God of my praise, here functions as a motivation, alluding to the psalm’s conclusion (vv. 30–31): God must save the supplicant so He will continue to be praised (see 6.6). Do not keep aloof, lit. “do not be silent,” fitting the psalm’s context of evil words.

2–5: The complaint focuses on the evil words rather than the actions of the enemies; for this reason,

5 They repay me with evil for good,
 with hatred for my love.

6 Appoint a wicked man over him;
 may an accuser stand at his right side;
 7 may he be tried and convicted;
 may he be judged and found guilty.

8 May his days be few;
 may another take over ^ahis position.^a 9 May his children be orphans, his wife a widow.

10 May his children wander from their hovels, begging in search of [bread].

11 May his creditor seize all his possessions;
 may strangers plunder his wealth.

12 May no one show him mercy;
 may none pity his orphans;
 13 may his posterity be cut off;
 may their names be blotted out in the next generation.

14 May God be ever mindful of his father's iniquity, and may the sin of his mother not be blotted out.

15 May the LORD be aware of them always and cause their names to be cut off from the earth,
 16 because he was not minded to act kindly,
 and hounded to death the poor and needy man,
 one crushed in spirit.

17 He loved to curse—may a curse come upon him!
 He would not bless—may blessing be far from
 him!

18 May he be clothed in a curse like a garment, may it enter his body like water,
 his bones like oil.

19 Let it be like the cloak he wraps around him, like the belt he always wears.

20 May the LORD thus repay my accusers, all those who speak evil against me.

21 Now You, O GOD, my Lord, act on my behalf as befits Your name.
 Good and faithful as You are, save me.

22 For I am poor and needy,
 and my heart is pierced within me.

23 I fade away like a lengthening shadow;
 I am shaken off like locusts.

many scholars posit that here and elsewhere the enemies are magicians. 6–20: Although other psalms have short and powerful curses (see esp. 139.9), this is by far the longest curse in the Psalter. Some scholars understand this to be the curse of the enemy, and understand v. 20 as a declarative statement, rather than a wish: "This is the action of my accusers." The curses themselves are rather typical of the Bible and the ancient Near East. 14: An allusion to intergenerational punishment; see Exod. 34.7 and 2 Sam. 12.13–14. 16: Concern for the poor and needy mam is a major concern of the Psalter. 21–29: This section, marked off from what precedes by Now You, O GOD, highlights the reasons that God should respond positively. The psalmist does not claim to be innocent (contrast, e.g., Pss. 7; 17), but offers a wide variety of arguments meant to motivate God. These are all found elsewhere in Psalms and in other biblical literature: God should act for the sake of his name (v. 21; see 23.3 n.), for his "hesed" (vv. 21, 26; see 5.8 n.), because of the supplicant's lowly status (v. 22; see also v. 16) and pain (vv. 23–24), and so that the enemies will appreciate God's power (v. 27; see, e.g., 1 Sam. 17.46; 2 Kings 19.19; Isa. 41.20).

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

24 My knees give way from fasting;
my flesh is lean, has lost its fat.
25 I am the object of their scorn;
when they see me, they shake their head.
26 Help me, O LORD, my God;
save me in accord with Your faithfulness, 27 that men may know that it is Your hand,
that You, O LORD, have done it.
28 Let them curse, but You bless;
let them rise up, but come to grief,
while Your servant rejoices.
29 My accusers shall be clothed in shame, wrapped in their disgrace as in a robe.
30 My mouth shall sing much praise to the LORD;
I will acclaim Him in the midst of a throng, 31 because He stands at the right hand of the needy,
to save him from those who would condemn
him.

110 Of David. A psalm.

The LORD said to my lord,
"Sit at My right hand
while I make your enemies your footstool."

2 The LORD will stretch forth from Zion your mighty scepter;
hold sway over your enemies!

3 ^aYour people come forward willingly on your day of battle.

In majestic holiness, from the womb,
from the dawn, yours was the dew of youth.^a 4 The LORD has sworn and will not relent,

"You are a priest forever, ^ba rightful king by My decree."^b

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Or "after the manner of Melchizedek."

28: Curses are not self-effectuating, but are affected by God, who can subvert them (see Deut. 23.6).

30–31: A final reason why God should save this needy person: so He will be praised. This type of argument concludes the individual petitions 7.18 and 52.11 as well.

Ps. 110: A royal psalm (see Ps. 2 intro.). It is quite difficult because v. 3 is totally obscure, and the psalm changes speakers often. In Christian interpretation, it is understood as a reference to Jesus, as a messianic and sometimes eschatological psalm; Radak polemicizes against this view. 1: Here, God is speaking to the king, called my lord; perhaps these are the words spoken by a prophet. The king is very proximate to God, in a position of privilege, imagined as being on His right in the divine council. The second-in-command was seated to the right of the king in the ancient Near East. Such images are rare in Psalms, but see 45.7 n. If the king trods on the back of his enemies (see Josh. 10.24), they poetically become his footstool. 2: In contrast to v. 1, God is spoken of in the third person. The Zion tradition (see Isa. 2.1–4; 60.1–22) and royal tradition are here connected. While vv. 1–2 express the great power of the king, they also emphasize that it comes from God. 3: Though extremely obscure and likely corrupt, this verse, like 2.7, may refer to the king as the child of God. Some find in the dawn, Heb "shaḥar," a reference to the deity Shaḥar known from Ugarit and elsewhere, also the morning star (thus dawn). 4: A second divine quotation, mirroring v. 1; this, however, is likely a citation of an old oracle; note 1 Sam. 15.11, where God repents that he made Saul king. David and Solomon often perform priestly roles (e.g., 2 Sam. 6.14; 1 Kings 8), and 2 Sam. 8.18 concludes: "David's sons were priests." The translation of the second half of the v. (see translators' note) depends on whether "malki-tzedek" is understood as two common nouns (a rightful king) or a personal name (Melchizedek). If the latter is correct, this is likely an allusion to Gen. 14.18: "And King Melchizedek of Salem [most likely an abbreviated form of Jerusalem] brought out bread and wine; he was a priest of God Most High." (This verse influences some classical rabbis [b. Ned. 32b], followed by Rashi, to interpret this psalm in relation to Abraham.) Melchizedek, having the double role of priest and king at Jerusalem, is seen as offering precedent for the similar roles of Davidic kings. Melchizedek played a significant role in a Dead Sea Scroll and in early Jewish and 5 The Lord is at your right hand.

He crushes kings in the day of His anger.

6 He works judgment upon the nations, heaping up bodies,
crushing heads far and wide.

7 He drinks from the stream on his way;
therefore he holds his head high.

111 Hallelujah.
κ I praise the LORD with all my heart
⊖ in the assembled congregation of the upright.

2 γ The works of the LORD are great,
⊖ ^awithin reach of all who desire them.^a

3 η His deeds are splendid and glorious;
γ His beneficence is everlasting;

4 ζ He has won renown for His wonders.

η The LORD is gracious and compassionate;
5 ο He gives food to those who fear Him;
⊖ He is ever mindful of His covenant.

6 ⓐ He revealed to His people His powerful works, ⓑ in giving them the heritage of nations.

7 ⓓ His handiwork is truth and justice;
ⓔ all His precepts are enduring,
8 ⓖ well-founded for all eternity, ⓗ wrought of truth and equity.

9 ς He sent redemption to His people;
ⓙ He ordained His covenant for all time;
ⓚ His name is holy and awesome.

10 γ The beginning^b of wisdom is the fear of the LORD;
ⓜ all who practice it gain sound understanding.
ⓝ Praise of Him is everlasting.

112 Hallelujah.
κ Happy is the man who fears the LORD,
⊖ who is ardently devoted to His commandments.

^{a-a} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^b Or "chief part."

Christian literature, and it is likely that a variety of stories no longer preserved in the Bible circulated about him in the biblical period. 5: The Lord is at your right hand, a reversal of places with v. 1. Here the idea is that God stands ready to assist the king, or, more specifically, is the king's weapon (the right hand held the weapon); cf. 16.8; 18.36; 109.31. 7: Perhaps this reflects part of the coronation ritual, held near the Gihon Spring (1 Kings 1.38–40); alternately, it refers to the king and army drinking water from faraway streams, a practice often mentioned in Mesopotamian royal inscriptions. In the words of Ibn Ezra: "The enemies were so afraid of them because when they went along the roads they would drink from their streams, and they were powerless to stop them." Holding one's head high is a symbol of triumph, the opposite of being a footstool (v. 1).

Ps. 111: This is the first of two acrostic psalms introduced by "Hallelujah," comprised of short lines that often quote traditional expressions (see some examples below), and containing wisdom ideas. They are somewhat disjointed, and look like very successful answers to the following (possibly student) exercise: Compose a logical, complete acrostic of short lines using traditional statements. Perhaps the simple style suggests that these were didactic poems for children. Stylistically, the two are so similar that they have been characterized as "twins." Yet, the two psalms are of different genres and have different foci. In the words of Rashi (to 111.1): "The first tells of the praise of God [i.e., it is a hymn], while the second tells of the praise of the righteous individual." V. 2 suggests that Ps. 111 was a hymn recited publicly, in the assembled congregation of the upright. 1: Cf. Ps. 9.2: "I will praise You, LORD, with all my heart." 3: Splendid and glorious are a frequent pair concerning God (e.g., 96.6). His beneficence is everlasting is a refrain joining Pss. 111–112 (see 112.3, 9). 4: Gracious and compassionate are a common pair of divine epithets; see Exod. 34.6 (in the opposite order). The word order here is common in late texts (e.g., Neh. 9.17). 5: Such an eternal covenant (see also v. 9) typifies Priestly thinking (see Gen. 17.7) and is found elsewhere in Psalms (105.8, 10). 9: Holy and awesome are found in the opposite order in 99.3. 10: See Prov. 1.7: "The fear of the LORD is the beginning of knowledge"; this line serves as a bridge to the following psalm, which focuses on the righteous individual. Sound understanding ("sekhel tov"), a wisdom phrase, is in the Heb of Prov. 3.4 and 13.15.

Ps. 112: A didactic poem, actually more of a catalogue, about the righteous man; see the intro. to

- 2 א His descendants will be mighty in the land, 7 א a blessed generation of upright men.
- 3 ה Wealth and riches are in his house,
 7 א and his beneficence lasts forever.
- 4 7 א^a "A light shines^a for the upright in the darkness;
 8 א he is gracious, compassionate, and beneficent.
- 5 8 א All goes well with the man who lends generously, 9 א who conducts his affairs with equity.
- 6 9 א He shall never be shaken;
 10 א the beneficent man will be remembered forever.
- 7 10 א He is not afraid of evil tidings;
 11 א his heart is firm, he trusts in the LORD.
- 8 11 א His heart is resolute, he is unafraid;
 12 א in the end he will see the fall of his foes.
- 9 12 א He gives freely to the poor;
 13 א his beneficence lasts forever;
 14 א his horn is exalted in honor.
- 10 14 א The wicked man shall see it and be vexed;
 15 א he shall gnash his teeth; his courage shall fail.
- 11 15 א The desire of the wicked shall come to nothing.

- 113 Hallelujah.
 O servants of the LORD, give praise;
 praise the name of the LORD.
- 2 Let the name of the LORD be blessed
 now and forever.
- 3 From east to west
 the name of the LORD is praised.
- 4 The LORD is exalted above all nations;
 His glory is above the heavens.

a-a Or "He shines as a light."

Ps. 111. The poem's subject, the "tzadik," the "righteous" or beneficent man, appears at the center of the poem in v. 6. 1: Compare the opening of Ps. 1, and esp. 128.1, "Happy are all who fear the LORD." The fear of the LORD is a major wisdom theme in Proverbs; see Prov. 1.7. 2–4: These vv. outline the recompense of the righteous man. 3: Wealth is a major concern of wisdom literature. And his beneficence lasts forever (see also v. 6) ties this together with Ps. 111 (see v. 3); this refrain equates God's and the righteous man's beneficence. 4: On he is gracious, compassionate, see 111.4. 5: Lending generously is a major theme of wisdom literature.

6: Compare the conclusion of the catalogue of qualities of the individual who may enter the Temple precincts in 15.5: "The man who acts thus shall never be shaken." 7: His heart is firm, see 57.8 and 108.2. 10: Like Ps. 1, the depiction of the righteous gains force through comparison with the wicked, though here even less attention is given to the wicked than in Ps. 1. This v. in particular is based on other sources; see 37.12, "The wicked man schemes against the righteous, and gnashes his teeth at him" and Prov. 10.28, "But the hope of the wicked is doomed" (the Heb of these vv. differs by one letter only). Radak's paraphrase clarifies this v.: "When the wicked sees the honor accorded to the righteous, he will be vexed from jealousy . . . and if he had the power to kill him, he would."

Pss. 113–118 are known in Jewish liturgy as the Egyptian Hallel, or just Hallel (praise), named for the reference to the exodus from Egypt in Ps. 114.1. The Egyptian Hallel is recited in the synagogue at the end of the morning service on the three pilgrimage festivals (Passover, Shavuot, Sukkot), and on Hanukkah, and it has been incorporated into the Passover Seder. In many synagogues it is also recited on Yom Ha'atzma'ut, Israel Independence Day. Beginning with the second day of Passover, and on Rosh Hodesh (the new moon) the Half Hallel, omitting the first parts of Pss. 115 and 116, is recited. These psalms lack superscriptions and most, but not all, begin or end with Hallelujah, "Praise the LORD" (cf. also Pss. 111–112), but it is not certain that these were an ancient collection prior to the compilation of the Psalter. While praise for God is the dominant theme, other themes or genres of psalms are represented.

Ps. 113: Praise for God, who is exalted above all in the cosmos, should extend throughout the world because God is everywhere in the world. The psalm is pure praise; there is no hint of petition. It was perhaps recited antiphonally, at least in part. V. 1 calls on the worshippers to praise God; v. 2 may contain their response. Various word repetitions form a kind of echo throughout the psalm: praise (vv. 1, 3), name of the LORD (vv. 1, 2, 3), heaven (vv. 4, 6), enthroned/sets ("lashevet," v. 5; "lehoshev," v. 8; "moshiv," v. 9), exalted/lifts up ("ram," "yarim"). 1: Servants, worshippers. The idea of worshipping is serving God, as a servant serves a master. 2–3: Praise for God at all times and in all places. 3: From east to west (Heb "from sun's rising to setting"), globally. 4–6: God is above the cosmos, above the sky, and

5 Who is like the LORD our God, who, enthroned on high,
 6 sees what is below,
 in heaven and on earth?
 7 He raises the poor from the dust, lifts up the needy from the refuse heap 8 to set them with the great,
 with the great men of His people.
 9 He sets the childless woman among her household as a happy mother of children.
 Hallelujah.

114 When Israel went forth from Egypt, the house of Jacob from a people of strange
 speech,

2 Judah became His ^aholy one,^a Israel, His dominion.
 3 The sea saw them and fled,
 Jordan ran backward,
 4 mountains skipped like rams,
 hills like sheep.
 5 What alarmed you, O sea, that you fled,
 Jordan, that you ran backward,
 6 mountains, that you skipped like rams,
 hills, like sheep?
 7 Tremble, O earth, at the presence of the Lord,
 at the presence of the God of Jacob, 8 who turned the rock into a pool of water,
 the flinty rock into a fountain.

115 Not to us, O LORD, not to us but to Your name bring glory for the sake of Your love and Your faithfulness.

2 Let the nations not say,
 "Where, now, is their God?"

a-a Or "sanctuary."

looks down to see it. Cf. v. 6 and Ps. 18.10. 7–9: The extremes on the vertical axis are brought together as God, the highest being imaginable, raises up the lowest human beings. Vv. 7–8 echo 1 Sam. 2.8 and v. 9 bears a resemblance to 1 Sam. 2.5. 7: Poor and needy are terms often used of the psalmist's group, i.e., righteous Israelites, although in this instance the description may suggest the more literal meaning of those with low social status. The refuse heap is where the homeless live; cf. Lam. 4.5. 9: Like the poor, a woman without children had no social standing.

Ps. 114: The exodus and its aftermath is celebrated not only as the liberation of Israel, but as an event through which all of nature came to see the power of God. The exodus is a cosmic theophany that alters the course of nature. The poem is structured on events involving water: the splitting of the sea, the crossing of the Jordan, and the supplying of water in the wilderness. 1–2: In v. 1, Israel is the entire nation, the house of Jacob; in v. 2, Judah and Israel refer to the Southern and Northern Kingdoms. 1: Strange speech, ancient peoples were categorized not by race but by language; cf. Gen. 10. Foreignness is conveyed in similar, but not identical, terms in Deut. 28.49; Isa. 33.19; Jer. 5.15. 2: His holy one . . . His dominion: The parallelism breaks up a single thought and distributes it over two lines; the meaning is that Judah and Israel are His holy dominion. Cf. Exod. 19.6; Jer. 2.3. 3–6: The passage through the sea (Exod. 14.29) is paralleled by the crossing of the Jordan (Josh. 3.14–17), the beginning and end of the exodus. These waters are personified and their splitting is imagined as their flight from the awe of God. The mountains and hills remind one of Mount Sinai (so Radak), but here the theophany takes on cosmic proportions. Compare the sea fleeing in terror from God (104.7), and the theophany quaking of the earth (68.9; Judg. 5.4–5). 8: Water in the desert (Exod. 17.6; Num. 20.11). On the cosmic level, God has power over all the material of the earth and can alter it as He wishes.

Ps. 115: The power of God is contrasted with the impotence of idols. Pss. 114–115 are written as one psalm in the LXX, the Aleppo Codex and the Leningrad Codex, and in R. Saadia Gaon's translation. Understood as one unit, Ps. 114 speaks of God's past acts of deliverance and Ps. 115 asks for God's help in the present. 1: God is not asked to do favors for Israel on account of their merit, but in order to glorify His name; a typical thought in Psalms. 1: God's love ("hesed") and faithfulness to Israel are often connected in Psalms and elsewhere; they bring Him glory. Let the nations not say, Heb is phrased as a rhetorical question: "Why should the nations say, 'Where, now, is their God?' While Israel glorifies the divine name, the

3 when our God is in heaven and all that He wills He accomplishes.
 4^a Their idols are silver and gold,
 the work of men's hands.
 5 They have mouths, but cannot speak,
 eyes, but cannot see;
 6 they have ears, but cannot hear,
 noses, but cannot smell;
 7 they have hands, but cannot touch, feet, but cannot walk;
 they can make no sound in their throats.
 8 Those who fashion them,
 all who trust in them,
 shall become like them.
 9 O Israel, trust in the LORD!
 He is their help and shield.
 10 O house of Aaron, trust in the LORD!
 He is their help and shield.
 11 O you who fear the LORD, trust in the LORD!
 He is their help and shield.
 12 The LORD is mindful of us.
 He will bless us;
 He will bless the house of Israel;
 He will bless the house of Aaron;
 13 He will bless those who fear the LORD,
 small and great alike.
 14 May the LORD increase your numbers, yours and your children's also.
 15 May you be blessed by the LORD,
 Maker of heaven and earth.
 16 The heavens belong to the LORD,
 but the earth He gave over to man.
 17 The dead cannot praise the LORD, nor any who go down into silence.
 18 But we will bless the LORD
 now and forever.
 Hallelujah.

116 ^bI love the LORD
 for He hears^b my voice, my pleas;
 2 for He turns His ear to me whenever I call.
 3 The bonds of death encompassed me;
 the torments of Sheol overtook me.

^a With vv. 4–11, cf. Ps. 135.15–20.

^{b-b} Heb. transposed for clarity; others "I would love that the LORD hear," etc.

nations question God's effective presence (42.4; Ezek. 36.22–32).
3–7: The existence of Israel's God is contrasted with the gods of the nations. Israel's God dwells in the heavens (that is, He is real but invisible), while the nations' gods are not real at all but are visible as impotent representations. 4: Silver and gold, elsewhere idols are called "wood and stone." The idol-worshippers adorned their idols with precious metals, making them into a valuable commodity; this is ironic mockery since the idols are worthless. The work of men's hands, the idols are no different from other objects of human manufacture; there is nothing divine about them. 5–7: Unlike the God of Israel, who has no physical representation but can act in the world, the idols have physical features but cannot act. 8–9: Those who make and worship idols will be as powerless as their idols (Deut. 4.28; 2 Kings 17.15); cf. Ps. 135.15–18. By contrast, Israel believes in the true God who has the power to help them. 10: House of Aaron, the priestly leaders of the postexilic community. 11: You who fear the LORD, non-Jews who attached themselves to the Jewish community (cf. Ezra 6.21; Neh. 10.28; Rashi: "proselytes"). Some modern scholars think the LORD-fearers here refer to special champions of ὕμνη over all other gods; others suggest they were a subset of the priests (cf. 135.19–20). 14: A blessing of prosperity and progeny. 15: Maker of heaven and earth, the idols are made by people; God made the world. 16–17: The cosmos is envisioned as having three levels: heaven is the abode of God, earth is the domain God assigned to human beings, and Sheol, below the earth, is the realm of the dead. Those who go down into silence are the dead, for in Sheol one cannot praise God. By implication, those who do not praise God, that is, the idolatrous nations, are like the dead. Israel, ever alive, continues its vocal praise of God (cf. 30.13).

Ps. 116: Thanksgiving for healing. A thanksgiving psalm of antholog-

4 I came upon trouble and sorrow and I invoked the name of the LORD, “O LORD, save my life!”

5 The LORD is gracious and beneficent;
our God is compassionate.
6 The LORD protects the simple;
I was brought low and He saved me.
7 Be at rest, once again, O my soul,
for the LORD has been good to you.
8 You^a have delivered me from death,
my eyes from tears,
my feet from stumbling.
9 I shall walk before the LORD in the lands of the living.
10 ^bI trust [in the LORD];
out of great suffering I spoke^b 11 and said rashly,
“All men are false.”

12 How can I repay the LORD for all His bounties to me?
13 I raise the cup of deliverance and invoke the name of the LORD.
14 I will pay my vows to the LORD
in the presence of all His people.
15 The death of His faithful ones is grievous in the LORD’s sight.

16 O LORD,
I am Your servant,
Your servant, the son of Your maidservant;
You have undone the cords that bound me.
17 I will sacrifice a thank offering to You and invoke the name of the LORD.
18 I will pay my vows to the LORD
in the presence of all His people, 19 in the courts of the house of the LORD,
in the midst of^c Jerusalem.
Hallelujah.

117 Praise the LORD, all you nations;
extol Him, all you peoples, 2 for great is His steadfast love toward us;
the faithfulness of the LORD endures forever.
Hallelujah.

ical character, quoting from other psalms (e.g., 18.2–7; 56.13–14). 1–4: God has answered the psalmist’s cry for help in the past, and now he calls on God’s help again. 3: Sheol, the abode of the dead. A common symbol for dire sickness or trouble. 5: An echo of God’s attributes in Exod. 34.6. 6–7: Expressions of trust, characteristic of laments and thanksgivings. 8–9: To remain alive is to have the opportunity to be in God’s presence; the dead are cut off from God. See 56.14. 12–14: The psalmist vows a public thanksgiving offering if God will help him. 13: Cup of deliverance, a libation celebrating the psalmist’s deliverance. This may be taken literally, as referring to the libation accompanying the thanksgiving offering, or metaphorically, as a kind of “toast” to God invoking His name to publicize His great deeds. Just as the psalmist invoked God’s name when asking for His help (v. 4), he invokes His name when offering thanks. 14: The vow made in time of trouble was not fulfilled earlier but can now be paid (cf. Jonah 2.10). The psalmist cannot truly repay God for all His bounties (v. 12); the thank offering (v. 17) is a token of this payment. 15: Grievous, Heb “yakar,” “precious,” is difficult but is traditionally interpreted as here. As Radak says, “Their blood is precious in his sight” (72.14). God does not wish His adherents to die; therefore, the psalmist is reassured that God will keep him alive. 16: Servant . . . maidservant, an epithet of extreme humility; see 86.16. Cords that bound me, perhaps a reference to an illness; or a general description of being constricted, being in trouble. Cf. bonds of death (v. 3). 17–19: The thank offering will be offered in the Temple in Jerusalem.

Ps. 117: The shortest hymn in the Psalter, calling on all the nations to praise God (Pss. 67; 100). 2: God’s steadfast love and faithfulness (the same terms as in 115.1) to Israel are divine attributes—what gives God His special identity in the world—and are worthy of univer-

a I.e., God. b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Others “of you.”

118 Praise the LORD, for He is good,
 His steadfast love is eternal.
 2 Let Israel declare,
 "His steadfast love is eternal."
 3 Let the house of Aaron declare,
 "His steadfast love is eternal."
 4 Let those who fear the LORD declare,
 "His steadfast love is eternal."
 5 In distress I called on the LORD;
 the LORD answered me and brought me relief.
 6 The LORD is on my side,
 I have no fear;
 what can man do to me?
 7 With the LORD on my side as my helper,
 I will see the downfall of my foes.
 8 It is better to take refuge in the LORD
 than to trust in mortals;
 9 it is better to take refuge in the LORD
 than to trust in the great.
 10 All nations have beset me;
 by the name of the LORD I will surely ^acut them down.^a 11 They beset me, they surround me;
 by the name of the LORD I will surely cut them
 down.
 12 They have beset me like bees;
 they shall be extinguished like burning thorns;
 by the name of the LORD I will surely cut them
 down.
 13 You^b pressed me hard,
 I nearly fell;
 but the LORD helped me.
 14 The LORD is my strength and might;
 He has become my deliverance.
 15 The tents of the victorious^d resound with joyous shouts of deliverance,
 "The right hand of the LORD is triumphant!
 16 The right hand of the LORD is exalted!
 The right hand of the LORD is triumphant!"
 17 I shall not die but live and proclaim the works of the LORD.

a-a Meaning of 'amilam in this and the following two verses uncertain.

b I.e., the enemy. c Others "song." d Or "righteous."

sal praise. God is not expected to work on behalf of other nations, but only on behalf of Israel. This, in turn, demonstrates to the other nations God's fidelity to His people, and for that they will praise Him. For great . . . toward us: Heb "gavar 'alenu," "prevailed over us" in the sense that God's faithfulness to Israel is manifest in His heroic acts ("gevurah"), which usually refers to His saving Israel from its enemies. There is a certain irony in universal praise deriving from God's particularistic acts. Radak, who sees this psalm as applying to the future, at the time of the coming of the messiah, explains that the other nations will feel compelled to praise God when He frees Israel from their control, in recognition of God's fidelity to Israel throughout the long period of the Diaspora.

Ps. 118: The mention of the nations and the battle imagery (vv. 10–16) suggest that this is a victory song, possibly reformulated to celebrate the return from exile and the rebuilding of the Temple. The psalm gives the impression that it was recited in a ceremony upon entering the Temple. It is anthological (like Pss. 116 and 135) with numerous allusions to other texts; v. 1 is quoted in 1 Chron. 16.34. 1–4: Praise from Israel, the Aaronic priesthood, and the LORD-fearers (possibly proselytes); see 115.9–11. 5: Distress, lit. a narrow, constricted space; correspondingly, a "relief," Heb "a broad space," connotes deliverance, release (4.2; 18.20). 6–8: No human can harm the psalmist as long as God is on his side; conversely, no human is as reliable as God. 6: See 56.5, 12. 8–9: See 146.3. 10–13: The attack of the nations, cf. v. 7; the one praying is perhaps a kingly persona, or the psalmist on behalf of the nation. 11–12: Perhaps a siege image. Military imagery recurs in v. 15, tents of the victorious. The enemy swarms around the psalmist like bees, numerous and about to attack. Note the involvement of sound in the buzzing bees and the crackling thorns.

- 18 The LORD punished me severely, but did not hand me over to death.
- 19 Open the gates of victory^a for me that I may enter them and praise the LORD.
- 20 This is the gateway to the LORD—
the victorious^b shall enter through it.
- 21 I praise You, for You have answered me,
and have become my deliverance.
- 22 The stone that the builders rejected has become the chief cornerstone.
- 23 This is the LORD's doing;
it is marvelous in our sight.
- 24 This is the day that the LORD has made—let us exult and rejoice on it.
- 25 O LORD, deliver us!
O LORD, let us prosper!
- 26 May he who enters be blessed in the name of the LORD;
we bless you from the House of the LORD.
- 27 The LORD is God;
He has given us light;
“bind the festal offering to the horns of the altar with cords.”^c
- 28 You are my God and I will praise You;
You are my God and I will extol You.
- 29 Praise the LORD for He is good,
His steadfast love is eternal.

119 κ Happy are those whose way is blameless, who follow the teaching of the LORD.

² Happy are those who observe His decrees, who turn to Him wholeheartedly.

a Or “righteousness.” b Or “righteous.” c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

12: Thorns are easily consumed by fire. 14–16: See Exod. 15.2, 6; Isa. 12.2. 16: The right hand with which God defends Israel against the enemy. 19–20: An allusion to entrance rituals whereby the righteous gain admittance to the Temple (Pss. 15; 24.3–6). 22: A metaphor of reversal of expectations (cf. 113.7–9); once rejected, Israel is now the keystone. The architectural imagery links with gates and gateway in vv. 19–20. 23–28: A thanksgiving ritual in the Temple amid the psalmist's friends and family (us . . . we in vv. 23–26). The shift to first-person plural suggests that vv. 23–27 may have been recited by all those assembled. Certainly vv. 25–26 sound like public proclamations. 27: Bind the festal . . ., likely the instructions for a ritual accompanying the sacrifice that entered the text of the psalm. 29: This v. forms a frame or inclusio with v. 1. The second part of the v., or perhaps the entire v., was recited by the congregation. Cf. 136.1.

Ps. 119: This is the longest Psalm, indeed the longest ch in the Bible. It is comprised of an eight-fold alphabetic acrostic. Comparable to it is an Akkadian text, the “Babylonian Theodicy,” an eleven-fold acrostic of 297 lines, not alphabetic—Akkadian had no alphabet—but spelling out the author's name and occupation. Many earlier critical scholars considered this psalm monotonous and devalued its emphasis on “law.” More recently, the skill of the poet in composing this tour de force has been appreciated. For example, there are eight main words used for “torah” (their English translations include: word, law, commandment, rules, decree, precepts, teaching), corresponding to the eight-fold acrostic; approximately 176 of these synonyms are found in the 176 vv. of the psalm (noted as early as Ibn Ezra and Radak). Why the author chose eight, rather than a more common number like seven, is unknown. It is difficult to know exactly how to translate “torah” and its synonyms in this psalm. The psalm is postexilic (even Ibn Ezra hints that it is non-Davidic in authorship), and certainly may know a canonized Torah; on the other hand, it is closely connected to wisdom texts, where “torah” often means the teaching of the wise (see, e.g., Prov. 28.7, “An intelligent son heeds instruction [‘torah’]”). Neither of these understandings of “torah” quite fits: the origin of torah in the psalm is clearly with God, yet it does not come from Sinai, and Moses as intermediary is never mentioned.

The psalm is often seen as anthropological, i.e., quoting earlier verses (see Pss. 111–112), especially from Jeremiah, Isaiah, Proverbs, and Job. In echoing Torah texts and ideas, it is much closer to Deuteronomy than to the Priestly tradition, yet certain core ideas of 3 They have done no wrong, but have followed His ways.

 4 You have commanded that Your precepts be kept diligently.
 5 Would that my ways were firm in keeping Your laws;
 6 then I would not be ashamed
 when I regard all Your commandments.
 7 I will praise You with a sincere heart as I learn Your just rules.
 8 I will keep Your laws;
 do not utterly forsake me.
 9 ב How can a young man keep his way pure?—
 by holding to Your word.
 10 I have turned to You with all my heart;
 do not let me stray from Your commandments.
 11 In my heart I treasure Your promise;
 therefore I do not sin against You.
 12 Blessed are You, O LORD;
 train me in Your laws.
 13 With my lips I rehearse
 all the rules You proclaimed.
 14 I rejoice over the way of Your decrees as over all riches.
 15 I study Your precepts;
 I regard Your ways;
 16 I take delight in Your laws;
 I will not neglect Your word.
 17 ג Deal kindly with Your servant,
 that I may live to keep Your word.
 18 Open my eyes, that I may perceive the wonders of Your teaching.
 19 I am only a sojourner in the land;
 do not hide Your commandments from me.
 20 My soul is consumed with longing for Your rules at all times.
 21 You blast the accursed insolent ones who stray from Your commandments.
 22 Take away from me taunt and abuse,
 because I observe Your decrees.

Deuteronomy—the centrality of Moses, the Torah as a book, and covenant—are lacking. It also shows certain affinities to the nonbiblical wisdom book of Ben Sirach.

The psalmist's depiction of "torah" is unique and verges on the mystical. He clings ("d-b-k") to it—a very strong term, often with sexual connotations (see, e.g., Gen. 2.24; 34.3, and compare the later Jewish conception of "deveikut," "clinging" to God). What is most remarkable is that a close relationship to Torah replaces a close relationship with God, and that in general, "torah" as a manifestation of the deity supplants God. For example, the "torah" rather than God is the source of life (vv. 50, 93). In Ps. 18.29 and its parallel in 2 Sam. 22.29, God is the psalmist's "light" ("ner"), but in v. 105, "Your word is a lamp to my feet, a light for my path." God's "deliverance" is not understood as coming from divine intervention to save the psalmist, but from God's words (v. 123): "My eyes pine away for Your deliverance, for Your righteous words" (author's translation). Other examples of this transformation from God to "torah" are noted below. V. 135 captures the psalm's unique and innovative understanding of Torah. Like the priestly blessing (Num. 6.25), it is interested in having God shine His face, but this is expressed not through God's shining face, but through Torah (v. 135): "Show favor to Your servant [lit. "shine Your Face upon Your servant"], and teach me Your laws."

The celebration of "torah" ends with a final stanza in which the psalmist petitions to be granted understanding of the very "torah" that he has been extolling throughout the poem. Though they predominate at the end, petitionary elements are interspersed throughout the psalm (vv. 8, 10, 17, etc.).

1: Happy are, common in Psalms, is sometimes used to open a psalm (e.g., 1; 41; 112). It declares the blameless to be in a fortunate state.

8: The plea do not . . . forsake me typifies individual petitions (27.9; 38.22; 71.9, 18). 12: The formula Blessed are You, O LORD, a postexilic phrase (see 1 Chron. 29.10), is later expanded with "our God, king of the universe" to become the standard rabbinic blessing formula.

14: Comparison of wisdom or "torah" to riches typifies wisdom literature (cf. v. 72). 19: In contrast to the conventional request that God not hide His face (see Ps. 10.1 n.), the psalmist requests do

23 Though princes meet and speak against me,
Your servant studies Your laws.

24 For Your decrees are my delight, my intimate companions.

25 ^γ My soul clings to the dust;
revive me in accordance with Your word.

26 I have declared my way, and You have answered me;
train me in Your laws.

27 Make me understand the way of Your precepts, that I may study Your wondrous acts.

28 I am racked with grief;
sustain me in accordance with Your word.

29 Remove all false ways from me;
favor me with Your teaching.

30 I have chosen the way of faithfulness;
I have set Your rules before me.

31 I cling to Your decrees;
O LORD, do not put me to shame.

32 I eagerly pursue Your commandments, for You broaden my understanding.

33 ^π Teach me, O LORD, the way of Your laws;
I will observe them ^ato the utmost.^a

34 Give me understanding, that I may observe Your teaching
and keep it wholeheartedly.

35 Lead me in the path of Your commandments, for that is my concern.

36 Turn my heart to Your decrees and not to love of gain.

37 Avert my eyes from seeing falsehood;
by Your ways preserve me.

38 Fulfill Your promise to Your servant, which is for those who worship You.

39 Remove the taunt that I dread, for Your rules are good.

40 See, I have longed for Your precepts;
by Your righteousness preserve me.

41 ^γ May Your steadfast love reach me, O LORD,
Your deliverance, as You have promised.

42 I shall have an answer for those who taunt me, for I have put my trust in Your word.

43 Do not utterly take the truth away from my mouth,

not hide Your commandments from me. 30: Compare I have set Your rules before me ("shiviti") with the more typical "I am ever mindful ("shiviti") of the LORD's presence" (16.8). 33: Teach me, O LORD, the way of Your laws is a revision of 27.11 and 86.11: "Show me Your way, O LORD." Once again, God is replaced by His laws. 39: God's rules, rather than God, are good.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

44 for I have put my hope in Your rules.
 I will always obey Your teaching,
 forever and ever.
 45 I will walk about at ease,
 for I have turned to Your precepts.
 46 I will speak of Your decrees, and not be ashamed in the presence of kings.
 47 I will delight in Your commandments, which I love.
 48 I reach out for Your commandments, which I love;
 I study Your laws.

49 ^r Remember Your word to Your servant through which You have given me hope.
 50 This is my comfort in my affliction, that Your promise has preserved me.
 51 Though the arrogant have cruelly mocked me,
 I have not swerved from Your teaching.
 52 I remember Your rules of old, O LORD, and find comfort in them.
 53 I am seized with rage because of the wicked who forsake Your teaching.
 54 Your laws are ^aa source of strength to me^a wherever I may dwell.
 55 I remember Your name at night, O LORD,
 and obey Your teaching.
 56 This has been my lot,
 for I have observed Your precepts.

57 ⁿ The LORD is my portion;
 I have resolved to keep Your words.
 58 I have implored You with all my heart; have mercy on me, in accordance with Your promise.
 59 I have considered my ways,
 and have turned back to Your decrees.
 60 I have hurried and not delayed to keep Your commandments.
 61 Though the bonds of the wicked are coiled round
 me,
 I have not neglected Your teaching.
 62 I arise at midnight to praise You for Your just rules.
 63 I am a companion to all who fear You,
 to those who keep Your precepts.

48: Lit. "I will stretch out my palms," an allusion to the prayer position of outstretched arms to God (see 44.21-22 n.), but here God has been replaced by commandments. 52: Again, rules replace God; compare 77.4: "I call God to mind (z-k-r)." 62: The mystical custom of offering special prayers at midnight ("tikun hatzot") derives from this v.

a-a Or "songs for me."

64 Your steadfast love, O LORD, fills the earth;
teach me Your laws.

65 v You have treated Your servant well, according to Your word, O LORD.

66 Teach me good sense and knowledge,
for I have put my trust in Your commandments.

67 Before I was humbled I went astray, but now I keep Your word.

68 You are good and beneficent;
teach me Your laws.

69 Though the arrogant have accused me falsely,
I observe Your precepts wholeheartedly.

70 Their minds are thick like fat;
as for me, Your teaching is my delight.

71 It was good for me that I was humbled, so that I might learn Your laws.

72 I prefer the teaching You proclaimed to thousands of gold and silver pieces.

73 v Your hands made me and fashioned me;
give me understanding that I may learn Your commandments.

74 Those who fear You will see me and rejoice, for I have put my hope in Your word.

75 I know, O LORD, that Your rulings are just;
rightly have You humbled me.

76 May Your steadfast love comfort me in accordance with Your promise to Your servant.

77 May Your mercy reach me, that I might live, for Your teaching is my delight.

78 Let the insolent be dismayed, for they have wronged me without cause;
I will study Your precepts.

79 May those who fear You, those who know Your decrees,
turn again to me.

80 May I wholeheartedly follow Your laws
so that I do not come to grief.

81 v I long for Your deliverance;
I hope for Your word.

82 My eyes pine away for Your promise;
I say, "When will You comfort me?"

83 Though I have become like a water-skin dried in smoke,
I have not neglected Your laws.

68: God's goodness and beneficence are not expressed through His compassion, as elsewhere (e.g., 145.9), but through teaching of laws. 72: Comparison to gold and silver typify wisdom literature (e.g., Prov. 22.1). The order "silver and gold" is more common in earlier biblical books, while gold and silver is often found in later texts (compare 2 Sam. 8.10 and 1 Chron. 18.10). 75: The emphasis is on just rulings, rather than on a just God. 81: Hoping or longing ("y-h-l") for God's word (see also vv. 43, 81, 114, 147) rather than for God (e.g., 31.25; 38.16) typifies the psalmist's attitude.

84 How long has Your servant to live?
 when will You bring my persecutors to judgment?
 85 The insolent have dug pits for me,
 flouting Your teaching.
 86 All Your commandments are enduring;
 I am persecuted without cause; help me!
 87 Though they almost wiped me off the earth,
 I did not abandon Your precepts.
 88 As befits Your steadfast love, preserve me,
 so that I may keep the decree You proclaimed.

89 ♪ The LORD exists forever;
 Your word stands firm in heaven.
 90 Your faithfulness is for all generations;
 You have established the earth, and it stands.
 91 They stand this day to [carry out] Your rulings, for all are Your servants.
 92 Were not Your teaching my delight
 I would have perished in my affliction.
 93 I will never neglect Your precepts, for You have preserved my life through them.
 94 I am Yours; save me!
 For I have turned to Your precepts.
 95 The wicked hope to destroy me,
 but I ponder Your decrees.
 96 I have seen that all things have their limit, but Your commandment is broad beyond measure.

97 ♫ O how I love Your teaching!
 It is my study all day long.
 98 Your commandments make me wiser than my enemies;
 they always stand by me.
 99 I have gained more insight than all my teachers, for Your decrees are my study.
 100 I have gained more understanding than my elders,
 for I observe Your precepts.
 101 I have avoided every evil way
 so that I may keep Your word.
 102 I have not departed from Your rules, for You have instructed me.
 103 How pleasing is Your word to my palate,
 sweeter than honey.
 104 I ponder Your precepts;
 therefore I hate every false way.

84-88: Typical themes concerning persecutors from the individual petition are mixed with praise for the "torah." 94: This expresses the essence of the psalm's theology: Devotion to God is expressed by following his precepts. 97: The Deuteronomic ideal of loving God (e.g., Deut. 6.5) is replaced by loving His teaching. 99-100: He is wisest since, unlike his teachers, only divine teaching, as opposed to secular wisdom, is his guide.

105 ׀ Your word is a lamp to my feet,
 a light for my path.
 106 I have firmly sworn to keep Your just rules.
 107 I am very much afflicted; O LORD, preserve me in accordance with Your word.
 108 Accept, O LORD, my freewill offerings; teach me Your rules.
 109 Though my life is always in danger,
 I do not neglect Your teaching.
 110 Though the wicked have set a trap for me,
 I have not strayed from Your precepts.
 111 Your decrees are my eternal heritage;
 they are my heart's delight.
 112 I am resolved to follow Your laws
 ^ato the utmost^a forever.

113 ׀ I hate men of divided heart,
 but I love Your teaching.
 114 You are my protection and my shield;
 I hope for Your word.
 115 Keep away from me, you evildoers, that I may observe the commandments of my God.
 116 Support me as You promised, so that I may live;
 do not thwart my expectation.
 117 Sustain me that I may be saved, and I will always muse upon Your laws.
 118 You reject all who stray from Your laws,
 for they are false and deceitful.
 119 You do away with the wicked as if they were dross;
 rightly do I love Your decrees.
 120 My flesh creeps from fear of You;
 I am in awe of Your rulings.

121 ׀ I have done what is just and right;
 do not abandon me to those who would wrong
 me.
 122 Guarantee Your servant's well-being;
 do not let the arrogant wrong me.
 123 My eyes pine away for Your deliverance, for Your promise of victory.
 124 Deal with Your servant as befits Your steadfast love;
 teach me Your laws.

110: Traps are mentioned elsewhere in personal petitions (e.g., 140.6). 117: In contrast to those who bless God always (34.2), or always hope for Him (71.14), this psalmist will always muse upon Your laws.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

- 125 I am Your servant;
give me understanding,
that I might know Your decrees.
- 126 It is a time to act for the LORD,
for they have violated Your teaching.
- 127 Rightly do I love Your commandments more than gold, even fine gold.
- 128 Truly ^aby all [Your] precepts I walk straight;^a
I hate every false way.
- 129 ^bYour decrees are wondrous;
rightly do I observe them.
- 130 ^bThe words You inscribed give^b light, and grant understanding to the simple.
- 131 I open my mouth wide, I pant, longing for Your commandments.
- 132 Turn to me and be gracious to me, as is Your rule with those who love Your name.
- 133 Make my feet firm through Your promise;
do not let iniquity dominate me.
- 134 Redeem me from being wronged by man,
that I may keep Your precepts.
- 135 Show favor to Your servant,
and teach me Your laws.
- 136 My eyes shed streams of water
because men do not obey Your teaching.
- 137 ^xYou are righteous, O LORD;
Your rulings are just.
- 138 You have ordained righteous decrees;
they are firmly enduring.
- 139 I am consumed with rage over my foes' neglect of Your words.
- 140 Your word is exceedingly pure, and Your servant loves it.
- 141 Though I am belittled and despised,
I have not neglected Your precepts.
- 142 Your righteousness is eternal;
Your teaching is true.
- 143 Though anguish and distress come upon me,
Your commandments are my delight.
- 144 Your righteous decrees are eternal;
give me understanding, that I might live.

126: In postbiblical legal literature, this v. is decontextualized and translated as "When it is time to act for the LORD, you may abrogate the Torah," in other words in extremis, one may violate a precept to preserve the Torah as a whole. 136: The same image is used about the destruction in 586 (Lam. 3.48): "My eyes shed streams of water / Over the ruin of my poor people." "Torah" is thus equated with Temple, monarchy, and the land of Israel, all of which were lost in 586. 141: It is doubtful that this can be taken literally, suggesting that the psalmist is young, as some have suggested.

a-a Or "I declare all [Your] precepts to be just."

b-b With Targum; or "The exposition of Your words gives"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

145 פ I call with all my heart;
 answer me, O LORD,
 that I may observe Your laws.
 146 I call upon You; save me, that I may keep Your decrees.
 147 I rise before dawn and cry for help;
 I hope for Your word.
 148 My eyes greet each watch of the night,
 as I meditate on Your promise.
 149 Hear my voice as befits Your steadfast love;
 O LORD, preserve me, as is Your rule.
 150 Those who pursue intrigue draw near;
 they are far from Your teaching.
 151 You, O LORD, are near,
 and all Your commandments are true.
 152 I know from Your decrees of old that You have established them forever.

 153 נ See my affliction and rescue me,
 for I have not neglected Your teaching.
 154 Champion my cause and redeem me;
 preserve me according to Your promise.
 155 Deliverance is far from the wicked,
 for they have not turned to Your laws.
 156 Your mercies are great, O LORD;
 as is Your rule, preserve me.
 157 Many are my persecutors and foes;
 I have not swerved from Your decrees.
 158 I have seen traitors and loathed^a them, because they did not keep Your word in mind.
 159 See that I have loved Your precepts;
 O LORD, preserve me, as befits Your steadfast
 love.
 160 Truth is the essence of Your word;
 Your just rules are eternal.

 161 ש Princes have persecuted me without reason;
 my heart thrills at Your word.
 162 I rejoice over Your promise as one who obtains great spoil.
 163 I hate and abhor falsehood;
 I love Your teaching.
 164 I praise You seven times each day
 for Your just rules.
 165 Those who love Your teaching enjoy well-being;
 they encounter no adversity.

146: Contrast other individual petitions that plea for deliverance so that the supplicant may praise God (e.g., 57.10). 153: Typical psalmic language; see 9.14; 25.18. 161-169: At least by late medieval times, the twenty-first letter of the alphabet was pronounced in two ways, distinguished by a dot over the left or right side of that letter ("sin" and "shin," pronounced "s" and "sh"). These two sounds are mixed in these vv., as in the biblical period this difference was not marked. 163, 167: As in v. 97, and elsewhere in this psalm, love of "torah" replaces love of God.

^a Or "have contended with."

- 166 I hope for Your deliverance, O LORD;
I observe Your commandments.
- 167 I obey Your decrees and love them greatly.
- 168 I obey Your precepts and decrees;
all my ways are before You.
- 169ⁿ May my plea reach You, O LORD; grant me understanding according to Your word.
- 170 May my petition come before You;
save me in accordance with Your promise.
- 171 My lips shall pour forth praise,
for You teach me Your laws.
- 172 My tongue shall declare Your promise, for all Your commandments are just.
- 173 Lend Your hand to help me,
for I have chosen Your precepts.
- 174 I have longed for Your deliverance, O LORD;
Your teaching is my delight.
- 175 Let me live, that I may praise You;
may Your rules be my help;
- 176 I have strayed like a lost sheep;
search for Your servant,
for I have not neglected Your commandments.

120 A song of ascents.^a

- In my distress I called to the LORD
and He answered me.
- 2 O LORD, save me from treacherous lips,
from a deceitful tongue!
- 3 What can you profit,
what can you gain,
O deceitful tongue?
- 4 A warrior's sharp arrows,
with hot coals of broom-wood.

^a A term of uncertain meaning.

169–176: As noted, elements of the personal petition predominate here. 175: Consistent with the psalm's focus, the psalmist wishes that God's rules rather than God will be his help. 176: It is God's commandments, the embodiment of "torah," that must not be neglected or forgotten (sh-k-h); contrast 44.18: "yet we have not forgotten (sh-k-h) You."

Ps. 120: Pss. 120–134 all begin "A song of [or 'for'] ascents," forming the clearest collection of psalms in the Psalter; while other collections do exist, they are not found in a single block (see introductions to Pss. 42 and 50 on the Asaphite and Korahite psalms), but are identified by common ascription. It is likely that these fifteen psalms were already a unit when they were incorporated into the Psalter, though it is uncertain what this superscription means and what function the collection served. The word "ma'alah," typically translated "ascent," may refer to a step (see, e.g., Ezekiel 40.26). Early rabbinic tradition thus connects these fifteen psalms to the fifteen steps of the Temple, according to Ezek. 40.26, 31, where the Levites sang (m. Mid. 2.5; b. Sukkah 51b). "Ma'alah" is also used to express the "journey up from Babylon" in Ezra 7.9, and thus some modern scholars connect these psalms to the return from exile. Others see them as pilgrimage psalms (so Radak); the first-century allegorist Philo understood them as expressing the ascent of the individual to God, while some scholars see "ma'alah" as referring to some technical poetic aspect of these psalms. No single interpretation is compelling. These psalms comprise a variety of genres, and were written over a long period of time; some, but not all, show clear linguistic or other signs of being postexilic (see esp. 126). Certain phrases such as "May it be well with Israel!" are found in this collection only (125.5; 128.6), and the Songs of Ascents share certain linguistic and stylistic oddities, reinforcing the notion that there is some sort of unity to this collection. Nevertheless, the opinion of some scholars that they comprise a complex ritual is not compelling. In addition, with the exception of Ps. 132, they are all relatively short (3–9 vv.). Ps. 120, the first of the collection, is an individual petition. It is characterized by repetitions of the same phrase in contiguous vv. ("deceitful tongue" in 2, 3; "dwell/dwelt" in 5, 6; "peace" in 6, 7), a frequent stylistic aspect of this collection. 1: A unique introduction to the individual petition, saying at the beginning that it was effective. 2–4: Two of the typical elements of the petition are the invocation (O LORD), and the petition itself in the imperative (save me). As in many other psalms, the emphasis is on the danger of speech, here ex-

5 Woe is me, that I live with Meshech, that I dwell among the clans of Kedar.
6 Too long have I dwelt with those who hate peace.
7 I am all peace;
but when I speak,
they are for war.

121 A song for ascents.

I turn my eyes to the mountains;
from where will my help come?
2 My help comes from the LORD,
maker of heaven and earth.
3 He will not let your foot give way;
your guardian will not slumber;
4 See, the guardian of Israel neither slumbers nor sleeps!
5 The LORD is your guardian, the LORD is your protection at your right hand.
6 By day the sun will not strike you,
nor the moon by night.
7 The LORD will guard you from all harm;
He will guard your life.
8 The LORD will guard your going and coming
now and forever.

pressed through the strong metaphors of v. 4 (see 10.7 n.). The typical motivation—why God should hear this petition—is absent here. 5: This is very enigmatic, since Meshech is near the Caspian Sea, while the clans of Kedar are in the Arabian Peninsula; either one of these names should be emended so that the locations are proximate, or the psalmist has intentionally chosen two faraway places to express the notion of distance. For scholars who read the Songs of Ascents as a group, it is this initial distance (see also Ps. 121) that is crucial, since the psalms express overcoming this distance, concluding with praying at the Temple. 6–7: The residents of Meshech and Kedar are stereotyped as barbaric warmongers.

Ps. 121: This psalm expresses great confidence in God as a guardian; the root “sh-m-r,” “to guard,” appears six times. In many contemporary Jewish communities, it is recited at times of trouble as a way of offering comfort and assurance. As in the previous psalm, words are often repeated in adjacent vv. (vv. 1–2, “my help”; vv. 3–4, “slumber”; vv. 7–8, “guard”). 1: Uniquely, the opening is A song for ascents rather than “to ascents.” It is unclear why the psalmist is looking to the mountains; some have suggested that this is a polemic against deities on the mountains (see esp. Ezek. 18.6), or this expresses the pilgrim as he moves toward Jerusalem in the Judean hills; more likely “it is the custom of anyone in straits to lift his eyes to see if help will come to repel the enemy” (Ibn Ezra). 2: This psalm is remarkable for recounting the psalmist’s inner dialogue. The psalmist answers himself confidently either “through prophecy or expressing hope” (Ibn Ezra). The epithet maker of heaven and earth is found three times in the Songs of Ascents (here, 124.8; 134.3), and twice outside them (115.5; 146.6). It is likely that this epithet became popular in postexilic times (see 2 Chron. 2.11). In this context, raising the eyes to the mountains, as if to appreciate the heaven and the earth, takes on additional meaning. 3–4: This is polemicizing against the notion often expressed in psalms that God does sleep; see, e.g., 44.24, “Rouse Yourself; why do You sleep, O LORD? Awaken, do not reject us forever!” (see 7.7 n.). 5: Protection (“tzel”) refers to shade or refuge from the hot sun (see v. 6); note the biblical personal name (e.g., Exod. 31.2) Bezalel, “in the protection of God.” Right hand expresses proximity (cf. 110.5). 6: It is unclear how the moon by night might afflict a person: the notion of being moonstruck is postbiblical. Most likely this half verse is a type of filler, resulting from the use of parallelism, where by night formally parallels by day, and moon parallels sun. 8: Going and coming means daily work (Deut. 31.2; 2 Kings 11.8). If this is a pilgrimage song, it may refer more specifically to setting out on the journey to the Temple and returning home. The psalm concludes with a temporal reference; as a whole, then, the psalm says that God guards the individual at all times everywhere. The expression now and forever is found disproportionately in the Songs of Ascents (here; 125.2; 131.3, and outside them in the Psalter only in 115.8).

122

A song of ascents. Of David.

- I rejoiced when they said to me,
 “We are going to the House of the LORD.”
 2 Our feet stood inside your gates, O Jerusalem,
 3 Jerusalem built up, a city knit together,
 4 to which tribes would make pilgrimage,
 the tribes of the LORD,
 —as was enjoined upon Israel—
 to praise the name of the LORD.
 5 There the thrones of judgment stood, thrones of the house of David.
 6 Pray for the well-being of Jerusalem;
 “May those who love you be at peace.
 7 May there be well-being within your ramparts, peace in your citadels.”
 8 For the sake of my kin and friends,
 I pray for your well-being;
 9 for the sake of the house of the LORD our God,
 I seek your good.

123

A song of ascents.

- To You, enthroned in heaven,
 I turn my eyes.
 2 As the eyes of slaves follow their master’s hand, as the eyes of a slave-girl follow the hand of her mistress,

Ps. 122: This psalm is a pilgrim’s ode to Jerusalem. This is the only Song of Ascents that clearly describes the ritual of ascending to Jerusalem. Various linguistic clues (e.g., the spelling of David, “dvyd” with a “yod” rather than “dvd” in v. 5) as well as its nostalgic attitude toward the preexilic past (v. 5, “there”) suggest that the psalm is postexilic. The psalm is full of echoes of the sounds in the name “Yerushalayim,” “Jerusalem”—the letter “resh” (corresponding to “r”) is overrepresented, along with the word “shalom” (peace) and “sham” (there), esp. in vv. 4–8. Jerusalem is thus etymologized as the city of peace. 1: Like Pss. 124, 131, and 133, A song of ascents is augmented with Of David, though as noted above, Davidic authorship is most unlikely. Radak glosses; “This psalm quotes the exiles, who in their great desire to build the Temple remembered Israel’s pilgrimages, and spoke about their ancestors at the time that the Temple was standing.” The psalm is probably even later, since Jerusalem is depicted as built up (v. 3), and this was likely only accomplished by Nehemiah in the mid-fifth century. We are going to the House of the LORD is likely formulaic; cf. Isa. 2.3, “Come, Let us go up to the Mount of the LORD.” 1–2: The psalmist moves from the singular to the plural (v. 1, I, to v. 2, our); in both vv., it is unclear who is addressed. 4: The period of the united monarchy, when various tribes made pilgrimages, is recalled with nostalgia. The first half of the v. alliteratively recalls Jerusalem (Heb “Yerushalayim”): “sheshan ’alu shevatim shivtei yah.” The end of the v., where the name of the LORD rather than God Himself is praised, follows the norms of Deuteronomy (see Deut. 12.5 n.). 5: Administration of justice was a significant function of the king, as highlighted in the stories about Solomon as a just king (1 Kings 3.16–28) and prophecies such as Jer. 21.12, “O House of David, thus said the LORD: Render just verdicts Morning by morning.” 6: The alliteration of the first four words is striking: “sha’alu shelom Yerushalayim yishlayu.” The v. is a reversal of Jer. 29.7, “And seek the welfare of the city to which I have exiled you,” insisting that one must pray for Babylon, not for Jerusalem. 7: Well-being (“shalom”) and peace (“shalvah”) both play on the name Jerusalem. “Yerushalayim.” 8: The psalmist identifies himself with his community (see v. 2). 9: The climax refers to the Temple, the house of the LORD our God, which makes Jerusalem so significant; this forms an inclusion with v. 1.

Ps. 123: An expression of dependence on God (vv. 1–2) serves as an introduction to a communal petition. An individual perspective (v. 1) quickly shifts to the plural (vv. 2–4), as in Ps. 122. Like Pss. 120 and 121, adjacent vv. use the same words (vv. 1–2, “eyes”; vv. 2–3, “favor”; vv. 3–4, “contempt, enough”). 1: On God in heaven, see 2.4 n. 2: A tricolon, i.e., a v. divided into three rather than two parallel segments. The imagery expresses the dependence of both men and women on God. 3: A typical communal petition, with an imperative request (Show us favor), an invocation (O LORD), and a motivation ([For we have . . .]). 4: The complaint may be the upper classes who abuse the lower classes, as in Amos 6.1.

Ps. 124: The beginning of this psalm, expressing the congregation’s confidence in God, contains repetition of lines, like many of the other Songs of Ascents. 1: Alternately, this may be understood as “May Israel now declare [or, ‘sing’] the song that begins with so our eyes are toward the LORD our God, awaiting His favor.

3 Show us favor, O LORD, show us favor!

We have had more than enough of contempt.

4 Long enough have we endured the scorn of the complacent, the contempt of the haughty.

124 A song of ascents. Of David.

Were it not for the LORD, who was on our side,
let Israel now declare,

2 were it not for the LORD, who was on our side
when men assailed us,

3 they would have swallowed us alive
in their burning rage against us;

4 the waters would have carried us off,
the torrent would have swept over us;

5 over us would have swept the seething waters.

6 Blessed is the LORD, who did not let us be ripped apart by their teeth.

7 We are like a bird escaped from the fowler's trap;
the trap broke and we escaped.

8 Our help is the name of the LORD,
maker of heaven and earth.

125 A song of ascents.

Those who trust in the LORD are like Mount Zion that cannot be moved, enduring forever.

2 Jerusalem, hills enfold it, and the LORD enfolds His people
now and forever.

3 ^aThe scepter of the wicked shall never rest upon the land allotted to the righteous, that the righteous not set their hand to wrongdoing.^a

4 Do good, O LORD, to the good,
to the upright in heart.

5 ^aBut those who in their crookedness act corruptly,^a let the LORD make them go the way of evildoers.
May it be well with Israel!

^{a-a} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

the words "Were it not for the LORD, who was on our side" — namely the song that begins in v. 2. In ancient Semitic cultures, compositions were typically known by their first words, so, e.g., what we call The Epic of Gilgamesh was known as He who Saw Everything. The same is now true for the books of the Torah, whose Heb names are the opening words of each. 2: The referents are vague (men, Heb "adam," "human beings"), so the psalm could be applied to many new situations. 3–7: The mixture of images—swallowing, waters, teeth, and traps—is odd to modern sensibilities, but biblical poems often use a variety of intersecting images to strengthen their point. 8: This is similar to 121.2, "My help comes from the LORD, maker of heaven and earth," with a change from singular to plural and a slight difference in "help is the name" and "help comes from the LORD."

Ps. 125: This psalm, about the exalted status of "those who trust in the LORD" (v. 1), is difficult; it does not cohere and does not flow well (see, e.g., the change of perspective about God from second to third person between vv. 4–5). 1: Trusting in the LORD is a significant biblical theme in many genres; it implies action and is not merely an abstract notion. On Mount Zion, see Ps. 48. The stability of Jerusalem, and by extension those who trust in the LORD, is expressed through the doubling of cannot be moved, enduring forever. 2: The order of the nouns in vv. 1–2 (LORD, Zion, Jerusalem, LORD) is reversed as the same point is emphasized: the stability of Jerusalem and Israel. Forever repeats v. 1. 3: The Heb here is difficult. 4: Only God can determine who is upright in heart. 5: The way of evildoers is destruction, as in 1.4; the ultimate result of their annihilation is the end of the conflict between those who are good and those who are evil; thus the concluding expression, which became popular in postexilic times: "Peace/well-being over Israel." This expression is found in

126 A song of ascents.

When the LORD restores the fortunes of Zion

—^awe see it as in a dream^a—

our mouths shall be filled with laughter, our tongues, with songs of joy.

Then shall they say among the nations,
“The LORD has done great things for them!”

The LORD will do great things for us and we shall rejoice.

Restore our fortunes, O LORD,
like watercourses in the Negeb.

They who sow in tears shall reap with songs of joy.

Though he goes along weeping, carrying the seed-bag,
he shall come back with songs of joy,
carrying his sheaves.

127 A song of ascents. Of Solomon.

Unless the LORD builds the house, its builders labor in vain on it;
unless the LORD watches over the city,
the watchman keeps vigil in vain.

In vain do you rise early and stay up late,
you who toil for the bread you eat;
^bHe provides as much for His loved ones while they sleep.^b

Sons are the provision^c of the LORD;
the fruit of the womb, His reward.

a-a Lit. “we are veritable dreamers.”

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Lit. “heritage.”

the famous Byzantine (sixth- to seventh-century CE) synagogue at Jericho, where it is incorporated into a mosaic below a menorah (candelabrum) flanked by a shofar (ram’s horn) and a lulav (palm frond).

Ps. 126: Two problems make this psalm difficult to interpret: it is unclear how to reconcile vv. 1–3, which speak in the past, and vv. 4–6, which speak of hopes for the future; and it is uncertain how v. 1, restores the fortunes, should be understood. This psalm is recited before grace after meals on Sabbath and festivals. 1: Restores the fortunes may be a specific reference to the return from Babylonian exile (so, e.g., Rashi), or may be a general term for improvement of one’s lot (see 14.7 n.). Perhaps the dream-like nature of this vision explains how this restoration is both realized (vv. 1–3) and hoped for (vv.

4–6). 2–3: These vv. are framed by laughter and rejoicing, with the LORD doing great things doubled in the middle. That expression is otherwise only found in Joel (2.20, 21), which has other affinities to this psalm (see v. 1 and Joel 4.1). 4: V. 1 is recapitulated, but as an imperative. Negeb watercourses or wadis (seasonal streams) fill suddenly and completely after winter storms. 5–6: Perhaps ritual weeping is alluded to, which was meant to bring about rainfall through sympathetic magic. As here, agricultural imagery is entwined with and represents the restoration of the people to their land in Amos 9.11–15.

Ps. 127: This psalm is didactic, teaching that God is the source of all. It divides into two parts: vv. 1–2, with the focus on “house” and “city,” and vv. 3–5, with the focus on sons. The two are connected, however, since “house” may be a metaphor for family (see esp. 2 Sam. 7.11), and the “quiver” of v. 5 is likely a metaphor for the “house” that is filled with “arrows,” namely “sons” (Radak). Like Pss. 128 and 131, the images are familial. 1–2: The attribution of Solomon is due to the understanding of the house as the Temple, but more likely the psalm is addressed to Israelites in general, and “house” and “city” have no specific referent (cf. 128.5–6 n.). Many medievals (including Rashi, Ibn Ezra, and Radak) assume that this is a Davidic psalm, recited about (of) Solomon. The second half of v. 2 is hopelessly difficult and probably poorly preserved, yet as a whole, these vv. express an idea especially common in wisdom texts, that God ultimately controls all (e.g., Prov. 21.31: “The horse is readied for the day of battle, But victory comes from the LORD”). 3–5: The view is very military and masculine. The term “gever” (man) in v. 5 is clearly male. The importance of a large family is a major theme of the ancestral narratives in Genesis. By using phrases such as “the LORD opened her womb” or “the LORD remembered her”

- 4 Like arrows in the hand of a warrior are sons born to a man in his youth.
5 Happy is the man who fills his quiver with them;
they shall not be put to shame
when they contend with the enemy in the gate.

128 A song of ascents.

- Happy are all who fear the LORD, who follow His ways.
2 You shall enjoy the fruit of your labors;
you shall be happy and you shall prosper.
3 Your wife shall be like a fruitful vine within your house;
your sons, like olive saplings around your table.
4 So shall the man who fears the LORD be blessed.
5 May the LORD bless you from Zion;
may you share the prosperity of Jerusalem
all the days of your life,
6 and live to see your children's children.
May all be well with Israel!

129 A song of ascents.

- Since my youth they have often assailed me,
let Israel now declare,
2 since my youth they have often assailed me,
but they have never overcome me.
3 Plowmen plowed across my back;
they made long furrows.
4 The LORD, the righteous one,
has snapped the cords of the wicked.
5 Let all who hate Zion
fall back in disgrace.
6 Let them be like grass on roofs that fades before it can be pulled up,

(see esp. Gen. 30.22), those narratives emphasize the same point as these vv.: These (male) children are God's gift.

Ps. 128: This is thematically similar to the previous psalm, emphasizing that God is the source of blessing to those who "fear the LORD." 1: The structure of this v. makes it clear that fearing the LORD is not an abstract attitude, but involves following His ways. Although it seems to be addressed to all, vv. 3-4 make it clear that the addressees are male. 2: Contrast Gen. 3.19, "By the sweat of your brow / Shall you get bread to eat." 3: Lit. "Your wife shall be like a fruitful vine in the depths/corner/innermost parts of your house," perhaps a reference to the kitchen, typically located in the back corner of the ancient Israelite house. (See Radak: "Even in her house she should be modest . . . she should be in the corner of the house so that only her husband and household will see her.") 4: A summary v. 5-6: These vv. extend the original blessing to all Israel, and note that this blessing comes from God's dwelling-place, Zion. The psalmist may here be using traditional formulae; on May the LORD bless you from Zion, see 134.3 (and possibly 135.21); on May all be well with Israel!, see 125.5. Children's children signifies a blessing of long life and great progeny—the ideal in ancient Israel. Given average life expectancy, living to see grandchildren was a special blessing; seeing great-grandchildren was an exceptional blessing (see Job 42.16). With this psalm in its present position, after Ps. 127, it is easy to understand how "city" in 127.1 came to be understood as Jerusalem.

Ps. 129: This psalm has two parts: vv. 1-4 tell of the psalmist's past persecution by enemies, and his deliverance by God, and vv. 5-8 are an imprecation against "all who hate Zion" (v. 5). It is uncertain how the two parts fit together; perhaps the psalmist's past salvation gives power to this imprecation. 1-2: The enemies are referred to by the pronoun they; not until v. 4 does the wicked appear. As usual, the referents are vague, allowing the psalm to apply to a wide variety of situations. 1: See 124.1; this v. may also be translated "May Israel now declare [or, 'sing'] the song that begins with the words 'Since my youth they have often assailed me.'" 3: A unique and graphic biblical metaphor, sharing the agricultural world of the previous psalm and several other Songs of Ascents. 4: A new metaphor is introduced with cords; such mixing of metaphors is common in biblical poetry (see 124.3-7 n.). 5: Zion is disproportionately mentioned in the Songs of Ascents (125.1; 126.1; 128.5; 129.5; 132.13; 133.3; 134.3). 6-7: The image, again taken from the agricultural world (see v. 3), 7 that affords no handful for the reaper,

no armful for the gatherer of sheaves,
8 no exchange with passersby:
“The blessing of the LORD be upon you.”
“We bless you by the name of the LORD.”

130 A song of ascents.

Out of the depths I call You, O LORD.
2 O Lord, listen to my cry;
let Your ears be attentive to my plea for mercy.
3 If You keep account of sins, O LORD,
Lord, who will survive?
4 Yours is the power to forgive
so that You may be held in awe.
5 I look to the LORD;
I look to Him;
I await His word.
6 I am more eager for the Lord than watchmen for the morning, watchmen for the morning.
7 O Israel, wait for the LORD;
for with the LORD is steadfast love and great power to redeem.
8 It is He who will redeem Israel from all their iniquities.

131 A song of ascents. Of David.

O LORD, my heart is not proud nor my look haughty;
I do not aspire to great things
or to what is beyond me;
2 ^abut I have taught myself to be contented like a weaned child with its mother; like a weaned child am I in my mind.^a

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

is of the insubstantial grass that grows on roofs that are covered with a small coating of soil.

8: This is a continuation of the image of the preceding v., since blessings were part of the reaping process (see Ruth 2.4, cited by Radak). It is uncertain whether The blessing of the LORD be upon you.

We bless you by the name of the LORD is a single blessing, or a blessing and its response, as in Ruth 2.4: “He greeted the reapers, ‘The LORD be with you!’ And they responded, ‘The LORD bless you!’” Like Pss. 128 and 134, this Song of Ascents also ends with a blessing.

Ps. 130: The main part of the psalm is a personal petition (vv. 1–6); this is followed by an address to the wider community (vv. 7–8), which builds upon this petition, explaining why it is good to petition God. This address mirrors the vocabulary and expressions of vv. 1–6. It is thus possible that an editor, the author of vv. 7–8, has taken up and expanded an older psalm. 1: Depths, elsewhere in Psalms only in 69.3, 15; perhaps here a reference to the underworld, of being in a state near death (see Jonah 2.3–7). 2: A stereotypical v. in personal petitions; see, e.g., 86.6: “Give ear, O LORD, to my prayer; heed my plea for mercy.” 3–4: The theological notion expressed is that God must forgive since all people sin (see Job ch 7), and forgiveness rather than punishment causes people to hold God in awe. No ritual is necessary for this forgiveness, and the sin is completely erased as in Jer. 50.20, “The iniquity of Israel shall be sought, / And there shall be none; / The sins of Judah, / And none shall be found; / For I will pardon those I allow to survive.” 5: Perhaps the psalmist is awaiting an oracle of deliverance (see 3.5–7 n.). 6: The psalmist waits expectantly for God’s deliverance, which elsewhere comes in the morning (56.6). 7: On steadfast love (“hesed”), see 5.8 n. 8: Sinners or their descendants normally need to be punished (see Exod. 34.7), but here God redeems, that is, forgives, so no one is punished. As in many psalms, the personal becomes the communal.

Ps. 131: Like the previous psalm, this too starts in the singular (vv. 1–2) and moves to concerns about the community (v. 3); in fact, the last vv. of these two psalms share the phrase, “O Israel, wait for the LORD.” 1: An initial protestation of innocence (see Pss. 7; 17; 26). The psalmist claims to be “lowly,” an ideal in Psalms (e.g., 10.17). As such, he does not aspire to great things, or what is beyond; these are, as Radak notes, “divine concerns” (e.g., Pss. 86.10; 136.4; Job 5.9). 2: Once weaned, the child can no

³ O Israel, wait for the LORD
now and forever.

132 A song of ascents.

¹ O LORD, remember in David's favor
his extreme self-denial, ² how he swore to the LORD, vowed to the Mighty One of Jacob, ³ "I will not enter my house,
nor will I mount my bed,
⁴ I will not give sleep to my eyes, or slumber to my eyelids^a ⁵ until I find a place for the LORD, an abode for the Mighty One of Jacob."

⁶ We heard it was in Ephrath;
we came upon it in the region of Jaar.^b

⁷ Let us enter His abode, bow at His footstool.

⁸ Advance, O LORD, to Your resting-place,
You and Your mighty Ark!

⁹ Your priests are clothed in triumph;
Your loyal ones sing for joy.

¹⁰ For the sake of Your servant David do not reject Your anointed one.

¹¹ The LORD swore to David a firm oath that He will not renounce,
"One of your own issue I will set upon your throne.

¹² If your sons keep My covenant and My decrees that I teach them, then their sons also,
to the end of time,
shall sit upon your throne."

¹³ For the LORD has chosen Zion;
He has desired it for His seat.

¹⁴ "This is my resting-place for all time;
here I will dwell, for I desire it.

¹⁵ I will amply bless its store of food,

ers. Its focus is on various promises made by and to David, and thus exhibits the same reciprocity seen in 134. It may recreate a ritual involving the Ark; according to 2 Chron. 6.41–42, vv. similar to 132.8–9 were used in connection with Solomon's dedication of the Temple. It is impossible, however, to reconstruct this ritual. Like Psalm 89, it does not exactly agree with the book of Samuel as it reinterprets earlier traditions about David. 1–2: This self-denial is not found in Samuel, nor is David's desire to build a Temple expressed as an oath there. The Mighty One of Jacob is an old divine epithet, used only here and in v. 5 in the Psalter (e.g., Gen. 49.24). 3–5: An exaggerated poetic rendition of 2 Sam. 7.2: "Here I am dwelling in a house of cedar, while the Ark of the LORD abides in a tent!" 6: The referent of it (feminine in Heb) is uncertain, though it likely refers to traditions about the Ark (masculine!) wandering; it is unclear if these agree exactly with Samuel. 7: On abode ("mishkanot") and footstool, see 43.3–4 and 99.5. 8–9: See 2 Chron. 6.41–42 (no parallel in 1 Kings ch 8); as noted by Radak, "there are slight changes between these verses, but they have the same meaning"; these vv. appear to have been used somehow in an ancient ritual. Advance (lit. "Arise," "kumah"), is often used to rouse God into battle—note Your mighty Ark (see 7.7 n.). 10: On David as God's servant, see 18.1 n.; on anointed one, see 2.2 n. 11: The divine oath is a response of David's oath (v. 2), creating symmetry in the psalm. In 2 Sam. ch 7, "oath" is not used: the promise is called "words" and "prophecy" (2 Sam. 7.17). One of your own issue is a poetic restatement of 2 Sam. 7.12. 12: In 2 Sam. ch 7 and related literature (see esp. Ps. 89), the promise is of an eternal ("olam") dynasty; here, as in 1 Kings 9.4–9, the promise is conditional (see annotations to 1 Kings ch 9 and intro. to that book). 13: For connects the choosing of David and of Zion (see 78.68–72 n.). 14: Resting-place: See v. 8, of the Ark, God's throne or longer depend on its mother for its milk. Only here in Psalms is God viewed as a mother, though this image is found elsewhere in the Bible (e.g., Isa. 49.14–16). 3: See 130.7; 121.8; 125.2.

^a Lit. "eyes." ^b Cf. 1 Sam. 7.1–2; 1 Chron. 13.5–6.

Ps. 132: Like several other Songs of Ascents, this psalm emphasizes the significance of Zion, but in other ways it differs from this group: it is significantly longer, and stylistically unlike all the oth-give its needy their fill of bread.

- 16 I will clothe its priests in victory, its loyal ones shall sing for joy.
17 There I will make a horn sprout for David;
I have prepared a lamp for My anointed one.
18 I will clothe his enemies in disgrace, while on him his crown shall sparkle.”

133 A song of ascents. Of David.

How good and how pleasant it is that brothers dwell together.
2 It is like fine oil on the head running down onto the beard,
the beard of Aaron,
that comes down over the collar of his robe;
3 like the dew of Hermon that falls upon the mountains of Zion.
There the LORD ordained blessing, everlasting life.

134 A song of ascents.

- Now bless the LORD,
all you servants of the LORD who stand nightly
in the house of the LORD.
2 Lift your hands toward the sanctuary and bless the LORD.
3 May the LORD,
maker of heaven and earth,
bless you from Zion.

footstool. 15: The needy are a frequent concern of Psalms. 16: On loyal ones (“ḥasid”), see 4.4 n. 17: Horn often expresses military victory. In 2 Sam. 21.17, David is called “the lamp of Israel.” 18: Shame is the gravest punishment; ancient Israel was a shame-oriented society. This image reverses v. 16, “I will clothe its priests in victory” (Radak). The crown is a symbol of royalty (2 Sam. 1.10; 2 Kings 11.12).

Ps. 133: A short psalm, difficult to interpret; its precise point is uncertain, since the meaning of its images, and their connection, are debated. Its focus on Zion, however, is common in the Songs of Ascents. Like several other of these poems, phrases in one line are repeated in the next (vv. 1–2 “toṽ,” good, fine; vv. 2–3 “y-r-d,” running down, comes down, falls). The images used combine to produce a picture of great blessing in Zion. This psalm, together with the previous one, mentions rituals concerning the king and high priest, who shared power in the post-exilic period (see Zech. 6.13).

1: While often taken to refer to brotherly harmony in a general sense, the v. is better understood as a hope for the reunification of the Northern and Southern Kingdoms (see Ezek. 37.15–28). 2–3: It is uncertain if the oil and dew are being compared to the dwelling together, as this translation suggests, or if they are only being compared to each other (Like fine oil . . . is the dew of Hermon). On the oil used for anointing Aaron, see Exod. 30.22–33; the depiction of the overflowing, effulgent nature of this anointing is lacking in the Torah. Mount Hermon, on the northern tip of Israel, was very high, and therefore received much dew. This is the only reference to mountains (plural!) of Zion—perhaps the hills surrounding Jerusalem are meant, though the Dead Sea Psalms scroll reads the more usual “mountain.” Zion might here be associated with Mount Hermon, as one of the northern mountains, as in 48.3 (see n. there). Blessing refers to fertility, as in Lev. 25.21; the word blessing anticipates the theme of the following psalm. Everlasting life is hyperbolic; the Dead Sea Psalms scroll instead concludes this psalm; “There the LORD ordained blessing forever; May all be well with Israel!” (see Pss. 125.5; 128.6).

Ps. 134: This psalm, the last of the Songs of Ascents, is about blessing; the people’s blessing of God (vv. 1–2) and God’s blessing of the people (v. 3). The root “b-r-k,” “to bless,” occurs in every v. 1: This v. shows clear affinities to the contiguous 135.2. Servants of the LORD may refer to those present in the Temple (see 135.1–2 n.), or they may be a special group of Temple functionaries. The Heb for stand also has a technical sense of “minister,” which may be its sense here. It is uncertain what activity is performed nightly, other than guard duty by the Levites (1 Chron. 9.23–27). 2: Lifting of hands typically accompanies prayer (see 44.21–22 n.), though here it may indicate blessing, as in Lev. 9.22. Since God rather than the people is being blessed, the hands are lifted in the direction of the sanctuary. 3: These are formulae from elsewhere in this collection: see

135 Hallelujah.

Praise the name of the LORD;
 give praise, you servants of the LORD who stand in the house of the LORD,
 in the courts of the house of our God.
 Praise the LORD, for the LORD is good;
 sing hymns to His name, for it is pleasant.
 For the LORD has chosen Jacob for Himself,
 Israel, as His treasured possession.

For I know that the LORD is great,
 that our Lord is greater than all gods.
 Whatever the LORD desires He does in heaven and earth,
 in the seas and all the depths.
 He makes clouds rise from the end of the earth;
 He makes lightning for the rain;
 He releases the wind from His vaults.
 He struck down the first-born of Egypt,
 man and beast alike;
 He sent signs and portents against^a Egypt, against Pharaoh and all his servants;
 He struck down many nations and slew numerous kings—
 Sihon, king of the Amorites,
 Og, king of Bashan,
 and all the royalty of Canaan—
 and gave their lands as a heritage, as a heritage to His people Israel.

O LORD, Your name endures forever,
 Your fame, O LORD, through all generations;
 for the LORD will champion His people,
 and obtain satisfaction for His servants.

The idols of the nations are silver and gold,
 the work of men's hands.
 They have mouths, but cannot speak;
 they have eyes, but cannot see;
 they have ears, but cannot hear,
 nor is there breath in their mouths.
 Those who fashion them,
 all who trust in them,
 shall become like them.

O house of Israel, bless the LORD;
 O house of Aaron, bless the LORD;

128.5; 121.2; 124.8. Their juxtaposition emphasizes that a universal God is centered at Zion. The collection's conclusion emphasizes Zion, a major theme of the Songs of Ascents, and also shows close connections with the conclusion of the following psalm (135.21). Perhaps an editor placed together psalms that shared certain similarities, or phrases moved from one psalm to an adjacent one, making the Psalter into a more coherent book.

Ps. 135: The greatness of God—as demonstrated by His creation of the world, freeing His people from Egypt, and leading them safely to the promised land—is contrasted with the impotent gods of other nations. This psalm resembles others that review the traditions found in the Torah in order to show God's power (Pss. 78; 105; 106; 136). Here the traditions are more abbreviated. The psalm is an anthology of several other psalms and reworks some Torah traditions. This psalm appears in the liturgy for the introductory morning service for Sabbath and festivals. 1–2: Servants of the LORD are all those who show allegiance to Him. The psalm is directed to those who have come to the Temple (cf. 113.1 and 134.1). 3: Cf. 136.3. 4: All gods have their peoples and Israel is the LORD's special people (cf. Deut. 32.8–9). 5: Israel's God is superior to all other gods (cf. Exod. 18.11; Ps. 96.4–5). 6: As elsewhere in the Bible (cf. 115.16–17), the cosmos is perceived as having three strata: the sky, the earth, and the water below the earth. 7: Either a poetic rendering of the first stages of creation or a portrait of God's power over the natural world. 8–12: A shortened version of 136.10–22. 8: The poet skips to the last plague against Egypt, the one that finally convinced Pharaoh to let the Israelites leave. 11: Sihon and Og were the first Canaanite kings defeated by Israel (Num. 21.21–35). 13: A reuse of Exod. 3.15. 15–18: Similar to 115.4–8 (with the omission of 115.7). 19–20: Cf. 115.11 (omitting "house of Levi").

^a Others "against you." ^b With vv. 15–20, cf. Ps. 115.4–11.

20 O house of Levi, bless the LORD;
you who fear the LORD, bless the LORD.
21 Blessed is the LORD from Zion,
He who dwells in Jerusalem.
Hallelujah.

136 Praise the LORD; for He is good,
His steadfast love is eternal.
2 Praise the God of gods,
His steadfast love is eternal.
3 Praise the Lord of lords,
His steadfast love is eternal;
4 Who alone works great marvels,
His steadfast love is eternal;
5 Who made the heavens with wisdom,
His steadfast love is eternal;
6 Who spread the earth over the water,
His steadfast love is eternal;
7 Who made the great lights,
His steadfast love is eternal;
8 the sun to dominate the day,
His steadfast love is eternal;
9 the moon and the stars to dominate the
night,
His steadfast love is eternal;
10 Who struck Egypt through their first-born,
His steadfast love is eternal;
11 and brought Israel out of their midst,
His steadfast love is eternal;
12 with a strong hand and outstretched arm,
His steadfast love is eternal;
13 Who split apart the Sea of Reeds,
His steadfast love is eternal;
14 and made Israel pass through it,
His steadfast love is eternal;
15 Who hurled Pharaoh and his army into the Sea of Reeds,
His steadfast love is eternal;
16 Who led His people through the wilderness,
His steadfast love is eternal;
17 Who struck down great kings,
His steadfast love is eternal;
18 and slew mighty kings—
His steadfast love is eternal;
19 Sihon, king of the Amorites,
His steadfast love is eternal;
20 Og, king of Bashan—
His steadfast love is eternal;

Ps. 136: This psalm is known in Jewish liturgy as the Great Hallel and has been incorporated into the Passover Seder. Like 135, it is part of the introductory prayers to the morning service on Sabbath and festivals. The psalm is probably written to be chanted responsively, with the assembly chanting the refrain after each line. His steadfast love, Heb “hesed” means a favor done out of loyalty (see 5.8 n.). God’s “hesed” to Israel is eternal. The word “ki,” left untranslated in NJPS, does not here mean “because” but rather “indeed”; thus the meaning is “Indeed his steadfast love is eternal.” The psalm recounts in chronological order the many acts of “hesed” that God did for Israel in the past, and the refrain confirms that these acts of “hesed” will continue. Like 78, 105, 106, and 135, this psalm utilizes Torah traditions for its recitation of the mighty acts of God that constitute praise of God. The division of heaven and earth and the creation of the celestial bodies (vv. 5–9) is followed by the tenth plague against the Egyptians (cf. 135.8), the exodus from Egypt, the splitting of the Reed Sea, and the travels in the wilderness (vv. 10–20). The recitation of past marvels concludes with the acquisition of the promised land (vv. 21–22). Since God took note of us in our degradation and rescued us from our enemies in the past (vv. 23–24), there is assurance that He will do so again. These vv. bespeak the exilic condition, the probable time of this psalm’s composition. The psalm ends on a note of the universality of God’s care. 2–3: God of gods . . . Lord of lords, an allusion to Deut. 10.17. This is a superlative form, like “Song of Songs.” 4: Any notion of the presence of other gods in vv. 2–3 is banished by the fact that God alone works great marvels. 6: Compare Gen. 1.6 where the firmament separates the waters above it from the waters below it, and Gen. 1.9 where the waters below the firmament are gathered together so as to expose the dry land. The psalm has a more mythological conception,

21 and gave their land as a heritage,
 His steadfast love is eternal;
 22 a heritage to His servant Israel,
 His steadfast love is eternal;
 23 Who took note of us in our degradation,
 His steadfast love is eternal;
 24 and rescued us from our enemies,
 His steadfast love is eternal;
 25 Who gives food to all flesh,
 His steadfast love is eternal.
 26 Praise the God of heaven,
 His steadfast love is eternal.

137 By the rivers of Babylon,
 there we sat,
 sat and wept,
 as we thought of Zion.
 2 There on the poplars
 we hung up our lyres, 3 for our captors asked us there for songs,
 our tormentors,^a for amusement,
 "Sing us one of the songs of Zion."
 4 How can we sing a song of the LORD on alien soil?
 5 If I forget you, O Jerusalem, let my right hand wither;^b 6 let my tongue stick to my palate
 if I cease to think of you,
 if I do not keep Jerusalem in memory even at my happiest hour.
 7 Remember, O LORD, against the Edomites
 the day of Jerusalem's fall;
 how they cried, "Strip her, strip her to her very foundations!"

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^b Others "forget its cunning."

like that in 24.2, in which the earth is set upon the waters (forces of chaos), which are thereby immobilized. The word for "spreads" is "roka'," the same root as "rakia'," "firmament," in Gen. ch 1. 12: A strong hand and outstretched arm: cf. Deut. 4.34; 5.15; 7.19. 19: Cf. Num. 21.21-35 and Ps. 135.11. 23-25: A recapitulation of the exodus theme: God took note of the people (Exod. 2.24), rescued them (Exod. chs 14-15), and fed them bread from heaven (Exod. 16.4, 15). 26: The phrase God of heaven is unique, and comports with an exilic date, when God was not imagined as localized at the Temple.

Ps. 137: A lament for Jerusalem, in its final form from the postexilic era; the Babylonian captivity (vv. 1, 2, 4, 8) is there (v. 1 n.). The main theme is remembering Zion. This psalm is often recited on the 9th of

Av, the day that commemorates the destruction of the Temple, and before the grace after meals on weekdays. 1: Rivers of Babylon: Babylonia was known for its network of irrigation canals, in contrast to Israel where the seasonal rainfall provided irrigation. There we sat: "There" indicates that the speaker is now somewhere else; not in Babylonia but (most likely) in the land of Israel. There, along with alien soil (v. 4), stresses the otherness of the place of exile. 2-4: The Babylonian captors demand musical entertainment but the captives, who can only cry, hang up their instruments and refuse to make music. They cannot express joy as long as they are in exile. Joy, which is synonymous with being in God's presence, is no longer possible when the Temple is destroyed. Exile is equated with descent into the world of the dead; like the dead, the exiles are unable to praise God (30.10; 88.11-13). 2: The poplars, or willows, grow along the canals. 3-4: Songs of Zion, some scholars identify Zion songs as specific types of hymns about the Temple (46; 48) or as the pilgrimage psalms (84; 120-134). More likely, the Babylonians are asking for any native Judean song. The psalmist equates them with a song of the LORD, that is, any song sung in the Temple, and therefore they can no longer be sung. 5-6: An oath never to forget Jerusalem. This is a central idea in Jewish tradition, enshrined in the liturgy, in the practice of leaving an interior wall facing Jerusalem undecorated or with a "mizrah" (plaque indicating the east), and in the breaking of the glass at the conclusion of the wedding ceremony (which symbolizes, according to one explanation, placing the memory of the destruction of Jerusalem above one's greatest joy, that of being wed). Right hand wither, or become useless, paralyzed. My tongue stick to my palate, be unable to utter a sound (Ezek. 3.26; Lam. 4.4). The paralysis of the right hand and tongue make it impossible to play the lyre and to sing (Radak). 7: Just as Israel must remember Je-

8 Fair Babylon, you predator,^a a blessing on him who repays you in kind what you have inflicted on us; 9 a blessing on him who seizes your babies and dashes them against the rocks!

138 Of David.

I praise You with all my heart,
 sing a hymn to You before the divine beings;
 2 I bow toward Your holy temple and praise Your name for Your steadfast love and faithfulness, because You have exalted ^bYour name, Your word, above all. ^b
 3 When I called, You answered me, ^bYou inspired me with courage. ^b
 4 All the kings of the earth shall praise You, O LORD, for they have heard the words You spoke.
 5 They shall sing of the ways of the LORD,
 "Great is the majesty of the LORD!"
 6 High though the LORD is, He sees the lowly; lofty, He perceives from afar.
 7 Though I walk among enemies,
 You preserve me in the face of my foes;
 You extend Your hand;
 with Your right hand You deliver me.
 8 The LORD will settle accounts for me.
 O LORD, Your steadfast love is eternal;
 do not forsake the work of Your hands.

139 For the leader. Of David. A psalm.

O LORD, You have examined me and know me.
 2 When I sit down or stand up You know it;
 You discern my thoughts from afar.
 3 ^bYou observe ^bmy walking and reclining, and are familiar with all my ways.
 4 There is not a word on my tongue
 but that You, O LORD, know it well.
 5 You hedge me before and behind;
 You lay Your hand upon me.
 6 It is beyond my knowledge;
 it is a mystery; I cannot fathom it.
 7 Where can I escape from Your spirit?
 Where can I flee from Your presence?

Jerusalem, God must remember who destroyed it. The Edomites, who joined Babylonia in the attack on Jerusalem (Obad. 11–14) are cursed. 8–9: Thoughts of retribution are commonly found in laments (5.11; 35.4–8; 69.23–28; 79.10; Lam. 1.21–22; 3.64–66; 4.21–22). On dashing babies against rocks, see 2 Kings 8.12; Isa. 13.16; Hos. 14.1; Nah. 3.10. Against the rocks, Heb "ha-sela," "the Rock" (possibly Petra), the fortress-city of Edom and also an epithet for Edom (2 Kings 14.7). The gist of this pun is that the rock-fortress protecting Edom will become the vehicle for Edom's punishment.

Ps. 138: This is the first of a collection of hymns (138–145) that concludes the Psalter. Petitions characterize the Psalter's opening, and many see an intentional movement from petitions to hymns as part of the structure that the editor tried to convey. The book of Psalms would then reflect a movement from lament to praise. The psalmist praises God, certain that God protects individuals and will not fail to protect the psalmist.

1: Before the divine beings, the divine council (82.1; 89.7–8; 95.3). 2: In Deuteronomic theology, the name of the LORD resides in the Temple (Deut. 12.11). The Temple is the place where humans come into ritual contact with God, but God is not contained within the Temple. 4–5: Human kings praise God because they have seen how God protects those who call upon Him (cf. 67.4–6; 126.2). 7–8: See 23.4. The work of Your hands, creation and deliverance (Your hand . . . Your right hand in v. 7).

Ps. 139: God knows all that can be known; He is present in all places; no one can escape His reach. These attributes of God (vv. 1–18) become the basis for the psalmist's plea for God to destroy his enemies, who are also God's enemies (vv. 19–24). The text is difficult in vv. 3, 11, 16, and 20. 1–18: An exquisitely detailed and poetic description of divine omniscience.

^a With Targum; others "who are to be destroyed." ^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

8 If I ascend to heaven, You are there;
if I descend to Sheol, You are there too.

9 If I take wing with the dawn to come to rest on the western horizon, 10 even there Your hand will be guiding me,
Your right hand will be holding me fast.

11 If I say, "Surely darkness^a will conceal me, night will provide me with cover,"^a 12 darkness is not dark for You;
night is as light as day;
darkness and light are the same.

13 It was You who created my conscience;^b
You fashioned me in my mother's womb.

14 I praise You,
for I am awesomely, wondrously made;
Your work is wonderful;
I know it very well.

15 My frame was not concealed from You when I was shaped in a hidden place, knit together in the recesses of the earth.

16 Your eyes saw my unformed limbs; they were all recorded in Your book;
in due time they were formed,
17 ^cto the very last one of them.^c

18 How weighty Your thoughts seem to me, O God, how great their number!

19 I count them—they exceed the grains of sand;
I end—but am still with You.

20 O God, if You would only slay the wicked—you murderers, away from me!—
21 ^cwho invoke You for intrigue,
Your enemies who swear by You falsely.^c

22 O LORD, You know I hate those who hate You, and loathe Your adversaries.

23 I feel a perfect hatred toward them;
I count them my enemies.

24 Examine me, O God, and know my mind;
probe me and know my thoughts.

25 See if I have vexatious ways, and guide me in ways everlasting.

2: Sit down . . . stand up, an expression comprising the whole of one's life and activity (Deut. 6.7). 5: The hand of the LORD is an expression for divine control and assistance (v. 10). 8: Sheol, the abode of the dead, below the ground; here it is the nadir of the earth. Unlike other usages of Sheol, to signify being cut off from God, here the psalmist says, perhaps in a rhetorical overstatement, that one cannot escape from God even in Sheol. 9: V. 8 gives the vertical axis, from apex to nadir; v. 9 gives the horizontal axis, from east to west. 11–12: Darkness, where humans can hide from each other, is no hiding place from God. 13–16: The mysteriously wonderful process of gestation. God saw the psalmist even in the womb (cf. Jer. 1.5). 16: Recorded in Your book: According to Rashi, this is the book containing a list of all people ever to be born, which God showed to Adam. According to Ibn Ezra, it is the blueprint according to which the person is formed. No such book is mentioned in Genesis, though a common rabbinic tradition imagines that the Torah served as the divine blueprint during creation. 17–18: God's thoughts are unfathomable (cf. Isa. 55.8–9). 21–22: The psalmist shows his solidarity with God by declaring hatred for God's enemies. 23–24: A return to the theme of knowledge: An all-knowing God surely knows the psalmist's righteousness.

a-a Cf. Rashi, Ibn Ezra; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Lit. "kidneys."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

140 For the leader. A psalm of David.

- ² Rescue me, O LORD, from evil men;
save me from the lawless,
³ whose minds are full of evil schemes, who plot war every day.
⁴ They sharpen their tongues like serpents;
spiders' poison is on their lips. Selah.
- ⁵ O LORD, keep me out of the clutches of the wicked;
save me from lawless men who scheme to ^amake me fall.^a ⁶ Arrogant men laid traps with ropes for me;
they spread out a net along the way;
they set snares for me. Selah.
- ⁷ I said to the LORD: You are my God;
give ear, O LORD, to my pleas for mercy.
⁸ O GOD, my Lord, the strength of my deliverance,
You protected my head on the day of battle.^b ⁹ O LORD, do not grant the desires of the wicked;
do not let their plan succeed, ^celse they be exalted. Selah.
- ¹⁰ May the heads of those who beset me be covered with the mischief of their lips.^c ¹¹ may coals of fire drop down upon them, and they be cast into pits, never to rise again.
¹² Let slanderers have no place in the land;
let the evil of the lawless man drive him into corrals.
¹³ I know that the LORD will champion the cause of the poor, the right of the needy.
¹⁴ Righteous men shall surely praise Your name;
the upright shall dwell in Your presence.

141 A psalm of David.

- I call You, O LORD, hasten to me;
give ear to my cry when I call You.
² Take my prayer as an offering of incense, my upraised hands as an evening sacrifice.
³ O LORD, set a guard over my mouth,
a watch at the door of my lips;
⁴ let my mind not turn to an evil thing,
to practice deeds of wickedness

Ps. 140: A prayer for deliverance from enemies. 4: Sins of speech of the psalmist's foes (v. 12). For the metaphor of tongues and poison used of damaging speech, see 57:5; 58:5–7. Selah (also vv. 6, 9), see 3:3 n. 5–6: The psalmist is hunted down by his foes; the metaphors come from the realm of warfare. 10–12: The evildoers will suffer retribution equal to their deeds ("lex talionis"): They will be overcome by their own venomous words (v. 3) and will be hunted and entrapped (v. 4–5). 13–14: The psalmist's assurance of divine justice. For poor and needy, see 86:1 n.

Ps. 141: A prayer requesting that prayer be efficacious. The psalm asks for deliverance from enemies in a way that emphasizes the importance of words and speaking. The text of vv. 5–7 is difficult. 2: Prayer is seen metaphorically as sacrifice, with the hope that the prayer will rise up to God and be accepted just like incense and offerings. This does not mean that the psalmist sees prayer as a replacement for sacrifice, as was the case in post-Temple rabbinic times and afterwards, though it may suggest that prayer accompanied the evening incense offering. 3–4: The psalmist wants God to prevent him from wrongful speech and from association with the wicked (1:1; 26:4). The ideas in these vv. are similar to those in Proverbs, where there is also concern with proper speech, with avoiding evildoers, and with the contrast between the righteous and the wicked. 7: A graphic picture of Sheol, the abode of the dead. 9–10: Retribution. As in the previous psalm, planning to entrap the psalmist, the evildoers are themselves entrapped (35:7–8; 140:5), an idea especially common in wisdom literature.

a-a Lit. "push my feet." b Lit. "arms." c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

with men who are evildoers;
let me not feast on their dainties.

- 5^a Let the righteous man strike me in loyalty,
let him reprove me;
let my head not refuse such choice oil.
My prayers are still against their^b evil deeds.
6 May their judges slip on the rock,
but let my words be heard, for they are sweet.
7 As when the earth is cleft and broken up our bones are scattered at the mouth of Sheol.
8 My eyes are fixed upon You, O God my Lord;
I seek refuge in You, do not put me in jeopardy.
9 Keep me from the trap laid for me,
and from the snares of evildoers.
10 Let the wicked fall into their nets while I alone come through.

142 A maskil of David, while he was in the cave.^c A prayer.

- 2 I cry aloud to the LORD;
I appeal to the LORD loudly for mercy.
3 I pour out my complaint before Him;
I lay my trouble before Him
4 when my spirit fails within me.
You know my course;
they have laid a trap in the path I walk.
5 Look at my right and see—
I have no friend;
there is nowhere I can flee,
no one cares about me.
6 So I cry to You, O LORD;
I say, "You are my refuge,
all I have in the land of the living."
7 Listen to my cry, for I have been brought very low;
save me from my pursuers,
for they are too strong for me.
8 Free me from prison,
that I may praise Your name.
The righteous ^dshall glory in me^d
for Your gracious dealings with me.

Ps. 142: 1: For a similar superscription see 57.1. The incident referred to is in 1 Sam. 24.3–4, when David was fleeing from Saul. These superscriptions are the ancient editor's interpretations of the context in which the psalm was to be read. Some modern commentators see the cave as a reference to prison (see v. 8) and attribute the psalm to a person confined in a prison. 4: See 140.6; 141.9–10. 8: Prison, a metaphor for Sheol, the abode of the dead, where praising God is not possible (30.4–5; 115.17–18).

^a Meaning of vv. 5–7 uncertain.

^b I.e., the evildoers of v. 4.

^c Cf. 1 Sam. 24.3–4.

^{d-d} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

143 A psalm of David.

O LORD, hear my prayer;
 give ear to my plea, as You are faithful;
 answer me, as You are beneficent.

2 Do not enter into judgment with Your servant, for before You no creature is in the right.

3 My foe hounded me;
 he crushed me to the ground;
 he made me dwell in darkness
 like those long dead.

4 My spirit failed within me;
 my mind was numbed with horror.

5 Then I thought of the days of old;
 I rehearsed all Your deeds, recounted the work of Your hands.

6 I stretched out my hands to You, longing for You like thirsty earth. Selah.

7 Answer me quickly, O LORD;
 my spirit can endure no more.
 Do not hide Your face from me,
 or I shall become like those who descend into the Pit.

8 Let me learn of Your faithfulness by daybreak, for in You I trust;
 let me know the road I must take,
 for on You I have set my hope.

9 Save me from my foes, O LORD;
^ato You I look for cover.^a

10 Teach me to do Your will,
 for You are my God.
 Let Your gracious spirit lead me on level ground.

11 For the sake of Your name, O LORD, preserve me;
 as You are beneficent, free me from distress.

12 As You are faithful, put an end to my foes;
 destroy all my mortal enemies,
 for I am Your servant.

144 Of David.

Blessed is the LORD, my rock, who trains my hands for battle,
 my fingers for warfare;

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Ps. 143: This psalm contrasts the dead, who have no access to God, with the living, who do. The psalmist pleads to remain among the living. “Enemies” and “illness” are typical threats to the psalmist’s well-being. There are thematic and verbal connections with the previous psalm; see especially v. 4. 2: For before You no creature is in the right is an idea also expressed by Job’s friends (Job 4.17–21). 3: Darkness, the realm of the dead. Long dead, better “eternally dead.” The idea is that the dead can never live again. 5–6: In his darkest days, the psalmist remembers God’s past deeds. In a move that is the opposite of being dead, he stretches out his hand in prayer, seeking access to God. See 63.2; 77.12–13. 6: Selah, see 3.3 n. 7: Hide Your face, see 102.1. The Pit, a poetic term for Sheol, the abode of the dead.

8: Daybreak, in contrast to the darkness of death, morning brings a response from God. See 101.8 n. 10: Your gracious spirit, an expression for divine power, contrasted with the weakness of the psalmist (vv. 4, 7). 11: A common theme in Psalms is that God should preserve the life of the psalmist not because the psalmist is worthy but so that others may see God’s power and beneficence and so that the psalmist can offer praise. For the sake of Your name, so that the psalmist can praise God, which he cannot do if he dies (see e.g., 6.6). 11: You are beneficent, God’s beneficence, “tzedakah,” frames the psalm and contrasts with the fact that “no human is in the right” (“yitzdak”).

Ps. 144: A royal psalm, perhaps recited on the eve of battle by a king who lived after David and who looks to him and other Judean kings as precedents of kings who were saved from danger by God (v. 10). The psalm is anthological, containing language found in a number of other psalms, esp. 18 and 143. It concludes with a prayer for blessings on the people (vv. 12–15). 1–2: The king as warrior (18.2–3). God is portrayed in military terms as a strong sheltering

2 my faithful one, my fortress,
my haven and my deliverer,
my shield, in whom I take shelter,
who makes peoples^a subject to me.

3 O LORD, what is man that You should care about
him,
mortal man, that You should think of him?

4 Man is like a breath;
his days are like a passing shadow.

5 O LORD, bend Your sky and come down;
touch the mountains and they will smoke.

6 Make lightning flash and scatter them;
shoot Your arrows and rout them.

7 Reach Your hand down from on high;
rescue me, save me from the mighty waters,
from the hands of foreigners,
whose mouths speak lies,
and whose oaths^b are false.

8

9 O God, I will sing You a new song, sing a hymn to You with a ten-stringed harp,
to You who give victory to kings, who rescue His servant David from the deadly sword.

10

11 Rescue me, save me from the hands of foreigners,
whose mouths speak lies,
and whose oaths^b are false.

12c For our sons are like saplings, well-tended in their youth;
our daughters are like cornerstones trimmed to give shape to a palace.

13 Our storehouses are full, supplying produce of all kinds;
our flocks number thousands,
even myriads, in our fields;
our cattle are well cared for.

14 There is no breaching and no sortie, and no wailing in our streets.

15 Happy the people who have it so;
happy the people whose God is the LORD.

fortress. 3: See 8.5; Job 7.7, 17.
4–7: Humans are transient and weak; God is an all-powerful cosmic force (39.6, 7; 109.23). 3: The language resembles 8.5, but the emphasis is different. Here humans are helpless without God. 7: Mighty waters, of the cosmos. Foreigners, the human foes, perhaps the Babylonians (if this is an exilic psalm) or the non-Judeans living in Judah at the time of the return (if the psalm is postexilic). 10: David is paralleled with kings, suggesting that David represents the Davidic dynasty. 12–14: The picture is of a well-structured society, youthful and vigorous, with abundance of food and wealth. This is the psalm's wish for the people.

^a So Targum, Saadia; others "my people."

^b With Rasli; lit. "right hand."

^c The meaning of several phrases in vv. 12–14 is uncertain.

145

A song of praise. Of David.

1 I will extol You, my God and king, and bless Your name forever and ever.
 2 Every day will I bless You and praise Your name forever and ever.
 3 Great is the LORD and much acclaimed;
 His greatness cannot be fathomed.
 4 One generation shall laud Your works to another and declare Your mighty acts.
 5 The glorious majesty of Your splendor
^aand Your wondrous acts^a will I recite.
 6 Men shall talk of the might of Your awesome deeds, and I will recount Your greatness.
 7 They shall celebrate Your abundant goodness, and sing joyously of Your beneficence.
 8 The LORD is gracious and compassionate, slow to anger and abounding in kindness.
 9 The LORD is good to all,
 and His mercy is upon all His works.
 10 All Your works shall praise You, O LORD, and Your faithful ones shall bless You.
 11 They shall talk of the majesty of Your kingship, and speak of Your might,
 12 to make His mighty acts known among men and the majestic glory of His kingship.
 13 Your kingship is an eternal kingship;
 Your dominion is for all generations.
 14 The LORD supports all who stumble, and makes all who are bent stand straight.
 15 The eyes of all look to You expectantly, and You give them their food when it is due.
 16 You give it openhandedly, feeding every creature to its heart's content.
 17 The LORD is beneficent in all His ways and faithful in all His works.
 18 The LORD is near to all who call Him,
 to all who call Him with sincerity.
 19 He fulfills the wishes of those who fear Him;
 He hears their cry and delivers them.
 20 The LORD watches over all who love Him,
 but all the wicked He will destroy.
 21 My mouth shall utter the praise of the LORD, and all creatures^b shall bless His holy name
 forever and ever.

Pss. 145–150: The Daily Hallel, recited every day in the preliminary morning service.

Ps. 145: An alphabetic acrostic (see Pss. 9–10), with the “nun” (between vv. 13 and 14) omitted (it is supplied, most likely secondarily, in the LXX, the Peshitta, and the Qumran Psalter). The psalm focuses on praise for the kingship of God. This psalm is recited in the three daily prayer services (cf. b. Ber. 4b). 1–2: Eternal blessing of the divine name recurs in v. 21.

3: See 147.5 4: God is known through His acts, and proclaiming them is a form of praise. 5: See 77.13; 105.2; 119.27. 8: The creed of Exod. 34.6 (Ps. 86.5). 10: The things that God has created will offer praise to Him (cf. v. 21 and Ps. 148); or, by their very existence they serve as praise of Him.

14–16: As the ideal king, God sustains the oppressed and starving (104.27–28; 146.7–8). 18–19: True prayer is efficacious. 20: Many psalms end with the destruction of the wicked (cf. 1; 146.9). 21: An inclusio joins the praise of the first-person speaker (vv. 1–2) with that of all creatures, all human beings.

a-a A Qumran Pss. scroll reads: “they will speak of, and Your wonders.”

b Lit. “flesh.”

146 Hallelujah.

Praise the LORD, O my soul!

2 I will praise the LORD all my life, sing hymns to my God while I exist.

3 Put not your trust in the great,
in mortal man who cannot save.

4 His breath departs;
he returns to the dust;
on that day his plans come to nothing.

5 Happy is he who has the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the LORD his God, 6 maker of heaven and earth,
the sea and all that is in them;
who keeps faith forever;
7 who secures justice for those who are wronged, gives food to the hungry.

The LORD sets prisoners free;
8 The LORD restores sight to the blind;
the LORD makes those who are bent stand straight;

9 the LORD loves the righteous;
The LORD watches over the stranger;
He gives courage to the orphan and widow,
but makes the path of the wicked tortuous.

10 The LORD shall reign forever, your God, O Zion, for all generations.
Hallelujah.

147 Hallelujah.

It is good to chant hymns to our God;
it is pleasant to sing glorious praise.

2 The LORD rebuilds Jerusalem;
He gathers in the exiles of Israel.

3 He heals their broken hearts, and binds up their wounds.

4 He reckoned the number of the stars;
to each He gave its name.

5 Great is our Lord and full of power;
His wisdom is beyond reckoning.

6 The LORD gives courage to the lowly,
and brings the wicked down to the dust.

7 Sing to the LORD a song of praise, chant a hymn with a lyre to our God,

Ps. 146: Pss. 146–150 form the concluding doxology of the Psalter.

Ps. 146 praises God as creator (v. 6) and redeemer (vv. 7–9). Its style is anthological; many of the thoughts and phrases appear elsewhere in the Psalter. 1: Praise the LORD, O my soul, cf. “Bless the LORD, O my soul” (103.1). 3–4: Mortal man, even a prince (the great), cannot be relied upon because his life is limited, but God reigns forever (v. 10). 4: An allusion to the second creation story (Gen. 3.19; Ps. 104.29). 6–8: God relieves oppression and hunger. 7: Sets prisoners free, as a reference to the exiles, cf. Isa. 49.9. 9: Stranger . . . orphan and widow, those in society who lack human family protectors. See Deut. 24.17; 27.19; Ps. 94.6; Jer. 7.5–6; Zech. 7.10. 10: The eternal kingship of God. The conclusion recalls and supplements Exod. 15.18. Zion, Jerusalem.

Ps. 147: A postexilic psalm in which praise for God the creator alternates with praise for God the redeemer of Israel, who restored the exiles and rebuilt Jerusalem. The restoration is like the creation in that it shows God’s great power over the world, and for it God is worthy of praise. Implicit logic leads to the conclusion that, just as God continues to care for the natural world, so He will not cease to care for Israel. 3: God heals those broken in spirit and in body, that is, the exiles. Broken hearts, those who are contrite or penitent (51.19). 4: That God remembers each and every one of the stars is proof of His power and wisdom (cf. Isa. 40.26). Just as God pays attention to all the stars, so does He attend to all His people.

8 who covers the heavens with clouds, provides rain for the earth, 9 makes mountains put forth grass;
who gives the beasts their food, 10 to the raven's brood what they cry for.
He does not prize the strength of horses,
nor value the fleetness^a of men;
11 but the LORD values those who fear Him,
those who depend on His faithful care.

12 O Jerusalem, glorify the LORD;
praise your God, O Zion!
13 For He made the bars of your gates strong,
and blessed your children within you.
14 He endows your realm with well-being,
and satisfies you with choice wheat.

15 He sends forth His word to the earth;
His command runs swiftly.
16 He lays down snow like fleece, scatters frost like ashes.
17 He tosses down hail like crumbs—who can endure His icy cold?
18 He issues a command—it melts them;
He breathes—the waters flow.
19 He issued His commands to Jacob,
His statutes and rules to Israel.
20 He did not do so for any other nation;
of such rules they know nothing.
Hallelujah.

148 Hallelujah.
Praise the LORD from the heavens;
praise Him on high.
2 Praise Him, all His angels, praise Him, all His hosts.
3 Praise Him, sun and moon, praise Him, all bright stars.
4 Praise Him, highest heavens, and you waters that are above the heavens.
5 Let them praise the name of the LORD, for it was He who commanded that they be created.
6 He made them endure forever, establishing an order that shall never change.

^a Lit. "thighs."

8–9: God created an ecologically harmonious world in which creatures are cared for (cf. 104.10–16); the psalm stresses God's ongoing care for His creatures. 10–11: Those who survive are not necessarily the swiftest or most powerful, but those who fear the LORD (see esp. Prov. 21.31). Fear of the LORD, i.e., respect for God that leads to following His ways, is a major principle in wisdom teachings. 12: Jerusalem is personified as a mother praising God (cf. Lam. ch 1 where she is personified as a widow, mourning and lamenting). 13–14: The bars of your gates, protection against enemies. God brings to Jerusalem security and prosperity. 15–18: God's commands are always carried out. He creates the ice and hail through His command, and then orders them to melt. The terms word and command occur four times in these vv. God's command to nature in v. 15 becomes His commands to Jacob, His statutes and rules to Israel in v. 19. Just as the world is operated by God's command, so Israel should conduct itself by God's commandments, which are a special gift to Israel.

Ps. 148: God is praised for His creation by all that He created, from celestial beings to all the world's rulers and people, including the animate and inanimate (mountains, trees). Praise emanates from the sky and its creations (vv. 1–6) and from the earth (including the sea) and its creations (vv. 7–12), for God's splendor is over earth and sky (v. 13). The psalm echoes part of the story of creation in Gen. ch 1 but includes exotic meteorological phenomena (cf. Job ch 38). 2: The word translated as "angel" is "mal'akh," "messenger." This may refer to the idea that God is surrounded by an entourage of angels or divine beings (8.6; Job 1.6), or that the celestial bodies are God's messengers (cf. 104.4). 4: For wa-

7 Praise the LORD, O you who are on earth, all sea monsters and ocean depths, 8 fire and hail, snow and smoke,
 storm wind that executes His command, 9 all mountains and hills,
 all fruit trees and cedars, 10 all wild and tamed beasts, creeping things and winged birds, 11 all kings and peoples of the earth,
 all princes of the earth and its judges, 12 youths and maidens alike,
 old and young together.
 13 Let them praise the name of the LORD,
 for His name, His alone, is sublime;
 His splendor covers heaven and earth.
 14 He has exalted the horn of His people for the glory of all His faithful ones,
 Israel, the people close to Him.
 Hallelujah.

149 Hallelujah.
 Sing to the LORD a new song,
 His praises in the congregation of the faithful.
 2 Let Israel rejoice in its maker;
 let the children of Zion exult in their king.
 3 Let them praise His name in dance;
 with timbrel and lyre let them chant His praises.
 4 For the LORD delights in His people;
 He adorns the lowly with victory.
 5 Let the faithful exult in glory;
 let them shout for joy upon their couches,
 6 with paeans to God in their throats and two-edged swords in their hands, 7 to impose retribution upon the nations, punishment upon the peoples, 8 binding their kings with shackles, their nobles with chains of iron,
 9 executing the doom decreed against them.
 This is the glory of all His faithful.
 Hallelujah.

150 Hallelujah.
 Praise God in His sanctuary;

ters that are above the heavens, cf. Gen. 1.7. 6–7: A reference to the mythological destruction of the sea-monster (cf. 74.13–14; Isa. 51.9–10), suppressed and neutralized, as it is in Gen. 1.21, to which this is an allusion. For ocean depths, that is, “creatures of the deep,” cf. Isa. 42.10. 6: For God’s setting limits to the water, cf. Jer. 5.22. 8: For *hail and snow, cf. Job 38.22–30. For wind and fire as God’s messengers, cf. 104.4. 9: Cedars are the statelyst of trees and were used in the construction of the Temple. 13–14: These vv. are included in the liturgy for returning the Torah to the Ark since the Torah may be seen as representing God. They proclaim that God alone is sublime and that He raises the horn, the power, of His people Israel. God’s name is His essence. The entire world is to praise God for the victory He has given to His people. Cf. 117.2.*

Ps. 149: An exilic or postexilic psalm, depending on whether the event envisioned has already taken place or is yet to come. The event is God’s deliverance of His people from exile and their restoration to Judah. The psalm envisions a reversal whereby Israel is the victor and its enemies the vanquished. The threefold repetition of the faithful (“ḥasid,” vv. 1, 5, 9; see 4.4 n.) emphasizes loyalty to God. 1: A new song, in the eschatological future. Cf. Isa. 42.10; Pss. 96.1; 144.9. 2: Their king, God. Judah is no longer independent and therefore has no human king. 3: Cf. 150.3–5; Exod. 15.20; 2 Sam. 6.5. 5: Upon their couches, at night in private (Ibn Ezra). Some emend to “their clans.” 7: The idea of retribution against those who harmed Israel is common (Lam. 3.34–66; 4.22). It signifies that God maintains power over the enemy and that His relationship with Israel is still in force. 8: The treatment received by prisoners of war. The kings who were victorious over Israel are, in turn, defeated and taken captive. 9: God has already decreed the fate of the enemy.

Ps. 150: Resounding praise for God. The command to praise, “hal-lelu,” occurs in every v. This psalm concludes the section and the book of Psalms as a whole, capturing the essence of the book. Instead of closing with a doxological v., the book closes with an entire ch that serves as a doxology. 1: His sanctu-

2 praise Him in the sky, His stronghold.
 Praise Him for His mighty acts;
 praise Him for^a His exceeding greatness.
 3 Praise Him with blasts of the horn;
 praise Him with harp and lyre.
 4 Praise Him with timbrel and dance;
 praise Him with lute and pipe.
 5 Praise Him with resounding cymbals;
 praise Him with loud-clashing cymbals.
 6 Let all that breathes praise the LORD.
 Hallelujah.

ary, lit. "His holy (place)," which may mean the Temple—where formal or ritual praise took place and where psalms were sung—or, as the following line suggests, the heavens. The sky, His stronghold, the site of praise is enlarged to include the whole world. God does not dwell in the Temple; He dwells in the sky (Isa. 66.1), so heaven is His Temple. For similar thought and language see 11.4: "The LORD is in His holy palace; the LORD—His throne is in heaven." His stronghold, Heb "'uzo" sometimes refers to the Ark (78.61; 105.4; 132.8) or is an attribute of God or His Temple (29.2; 63.3; 96.6). 2: His mighty acts, all the great deeds He did for His people. Praising God for His deeds is not a reward for God but a tribute to His nature. God is known by His deeds. Another way to understand this phrase is "Praise Him 'with' (the recitation of) His mighty acts." The preposition "b-" before His mighty acts is the same preposition as before with harp (v. 3) and the other musical instruments, and may be construed as the means by which God is to be praised: with words of His deeds and with music. 3-5: A symphony of praise. Psalms were accompanied by music played on various instruments: stringed, wind, and percussion. 6: All that breathes, all creatures in the world. Universal praise for God is a common theme (e.g., 145.21). Here, it climactically concludes the psalm and the Psalter as a whole.

^a Or "as befits."

Proverbs

Setting and Major Themes

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS opens a window to a realm of ancient Israelite experience little seen elsewhere in the Bible: everyday life. Proverbs guides individuals (not the nation) in how to do what is wise in their day-to-day lives. It teaches the attitudes and courses of actions that are right, just, and pious, and the ways of behavior that facilitate and strengthen personal relationships, the forms of communication and commerce that make the life of the community congenial and secure, and the types of prudence and industry that help one achieve financial security.

The English title of the book, Proverbs, is a misnomer, since the book contains more than proverbs. The Hebrew word mashal, of which mishlei, proverbs, is a form of the plural, can also mean a comparison. The book, however, contains a variety of genres beyond the short proverb and comparison, incorporating a diversity of material that reflects on daily life.

Proverbs is a paean to the power of the human mind. Its authors are convinced that everyone who attends to the wisdom of the past and employs his powers of rational thinking has the ability to know what to do and what to avoid. These powers and the knowledge that goes with them are called wisdom. Wisdom—Heb hokhmah—is the great virtue that, for Proverbs, entails all others. No divine revelation is necessary, for God gave humanity the faculty of wisdom, and people need only listen to her call (ch 8). Thus, there is a certain tension between Proverbs and Torah books, which insist on the significance of revealed law.

Authorship

THE BOOK OF PROVERBS, HEBREW mishlei (for Mishlei Shlomo, “Proverbs of Solomon”), is one of three biblical books ascribed to Solomon. According to tradition, he wrote the love lyrics of the Song of Songs when he was young, the wisdom of Proverbs in his midlife, and the disillusioned complaints of Ecclesiastes when he was old (Song Rab. §10). Some sections of the book are ascribed to other sages (24.23; 30.1–14; 31.1–9; and probably 22.17—see the note to that verse). In fact, actual Solomonic authorship of any part of the book is doubtful. Neither the language nor the content fits Solomon’s time. Proverbs is a collective work, holding the wisdom of mostly anonymous wise men (and women, who could make up sayings as well as men; see 31.1) from many walks of life and different periods.

Wisdom Literature

THE WISDOM TEXTS IN THE BIBLE are Proverbs, Job, and Ecclesiastes, which need to be read within the framework of an international Near Eastern wisdom tradition (see intro. to Kethuvim, pp. 1276–77). Proverbs and the postbiblical book of Sirach belong to the genre of didactic wisdom. They offer instructions and observations directing the reader in the formation of ethical character and in leading a successful and happy life. Ecclesiastes, in spite of its sometimes unorthodox ideas, belongs in this group. Books very similar in character and content were written in Egypt and Mesopotamia, starting in the late third millennium BCE and extending to the Hellenistic period, as late as the third century BCE.

Egyptian wisdom books in particular are close in form and content to Proverbs. Most important is the Instruction of Amenemope (probably dating from the 13th or 12th century), which is the source of much of Proverbs 22.17–23.11 (see 22.17–23.11 n.). Foreign wisdom books provide the intellectual context of Proverbs and clarify its ideas and goals. In the annotations, reference will be made primarily to the translations of Egyptian wisdom in Miriam Lichtheim's Ancient Egyptian Literature (AEL), vols. 1–3 (Berkeley: University of California).

Proverbs in Jewish Thought

THE HEBREW WORD TORAH MEANS “instruction.” In Proverbs, this torah is human wisdom, the wise man's teachings. Likewise hokhmah (“wisdom”) is human wisdom. Later Jewish sages would understand torah as the Torah of Moses and equate “wisdom” with this Torah. All that is said about “torah” and “wisdom” in Proverbs was understood in this way. For example, Proverbs 8.22 was read to mean that Torah was created before the rest of the world, and 3.17–18, which refer to wisdom, became incorporated in the Torah service in the synagogue.

Proverbs is widely quoted in the midrash and in subsequent homiletic literature, such as medieval sermons. It was a foundational text of the Musar movement, a pietistic movement among European Jews in the 18th to 19th centuries.

Reading Proverbs

THE BOOK IS BEST READ WITH ATTENTION to the different genres it contains. Collection I, chs 1–9, is made up of fifteen relatively long, carefully structured and interrelated poems. Collection VI, chs 30 and 31, holds four relatively long poems. Collection I should be read as a unit, and each of the four poems in Collection VI should be read as a unit. Very different are the four middle collections, in chs 10–29. These are composed of short sayings, mostly of two lines, though there are occasionally epigrams of several lines, such as 24.30–34. There is no overall organization, and few literary units extend beyond the single-verse couplet. Often, however, one saying continues the general theme of the preceding one or repeats its key terms, thus producing proverb strings. Here it does not matter much in what order they are read. One way of reading them is sequentially, with an attempt to grasp the ideas that unite them all. Another valid approach is to dip into them at random, reading a few at a time and thinking about the ones with striking ideas, metaphors, or imagery.

Finally, it should be remembered that Proverbs is an anthology, and the sayings in it should be judged individually. Not all sayings will speak to every reader, but everyone should find many sayings and poems that pack insight and good sense into brief and memorable forms.

Major Units of the Book and Their Titles

I	1.1–9.18	“The proverbs of Solomon son of David, king of Israel” (1.1)
II	10.1–22.16	“The proverbs of Solomon” (10.1)
III	22.17–24.22	“Words of the Sages” (22.17, emended)
IV	24.23–34	“These also are by the sages” (24.23)
V	25.1–29.27	“These too are proverbs of Solomon, which the men of King Hezekiah of Judah copied” (25.1)
VI	30.1–31.31	Appendices
	a 30.1–14	“The words of Agur”
	b 30.15–33	Numerical epigrams
	c 31.1–9	“The words of Lemuel”
	d 31.10–31	The Woman of Strength

[MICHAEL V. FOX]

1 The proverbs of Solomon son of David, king of Israel:

- 2 For learning wisdom and discipline;
For understanding words of discernment;
- 3 For acquiring the discipline for success,
Righteousness, justice, and equity;
- 4 For endowing the simple with shrewdness,
The young with knowledge and foresight.

the conclusion is missing. Of the five Interludes, C is a collection of four epigrams that stands apart from the rest of the unit, while A, B, D, and E are interpretive additions in praise of wisdom, which portray wisdom as a nearly divine woman who represents a power transcending the individual teachings (see 1.20–33 n.).

1.1–9.18: Collection I. Though chs 1–9 serve as an introduction to the book, the section was probably written later as a guide to interpreting the old sayings in chs 10–29. After the prologue (1.1–7), there are two distinct series of poems, the ten “Lectures” (I–X) and the five “Interludes” (A–E). The Lectures are formulated as father-to-son instruction, and each develops a single topic in a three-part structure: (1) A Call to Attention, in which the speaker exhorts his son to hear his wisdom and remember it, because thus he will receive great rewards; e.g., 1.8–9. (2) A Lesson, which is the main body of the teaching; e.g., 1.10–18. (3) A Conclusion, which is a statement of the general principle underlying the Lesson; e.g., 1.19. Sometimes

1.1–7: The prologue, added at a late stage in the book’s growth, explains the use of the book and commends it to readers. 1: The title ascribes the book to King Solomon, the archetypal wise man. See 1 Kings 3.4–28; 5.10–14. On the historical veracity of this inscription, see intro. 2–6: The statement of purpose defines the twofold purpose of the book: to inculcate the basic virtues of wisdom

5 —The wise man, hearing them, will gain more wisdom;
The discerning man will learn to be adroit;
6 For understanding proverb and epigram,
The words of the wise and their riddles.

7 The fear of the LORD is the beginning^a of knowledge;
Fools despise wisdom and discipline.

8 My son, heed the discipline of your father,
And do not forsake the instruction of your mother;
9 For they are a graceful wreath upon your head,
A necklace about your throat.

10 My son, if sinners entice you, do not yield;
11 If they say, "Come with us,
Let us set an ambush to shed blood,
Let us lie in wait for the innocent
(Without cause!)
12 Like Sheol, let us swallow them alive;
Whole, like those who go down into the Pit.
13 We shall obtain every precious treasure;
We shall fill our homes with loot.
14 Throw in your lot with us;
We shall all have a common purse."
15 My son, do not set out with them;
Keep your feet from their path.
16 For their feet run to evil;
They hurry to shed blood.
17 In the eyes of every winged creature
The outspread net means nothing.
18 But they lie in ambush for their own blood;
They lie in wait for their own lives.
19 Such is the fate of all who pursue unjust gain;
It takes the life of its possessor.

^a Or "best part."

and ethical behavior in the young, and to enable the mature wise man to increase his wisdom and hone his skills in interpreting literary wisdom. In both cases, the assumed audience is male. 7: Fear of the LORD is the ground for wisdom to grow in; it is essentially conscience. In its most basic form, in the untutored child, it is unreflective fear of consequences. As wisdom develops, fear of God becomes a cognitive awareness of what God wants and does, and this type of fear is equivalent to knowledge of the LORD (2.5). Fear of God is effective in keeping one from evil even in secret deeds and even in spheres of behavior where the law does not apply. Beginning of knowledge: The commentators debated whether "re'shit" (here translated "beginning") means first in time or first in quality, that is, the best part. The variant of this verse in 9.10 uses a word that definitely means "beginning."

1.8–19: Lecture I: Avoid gangs. In vv. 8–9, the father, who speaks throughout the Lectures in chs 1–9, identifies the instruction he is about to deliver as both his own and his wife's (similarly 6.20), even though the specific words are his. Elsewhere in wisdom literature there is occasional allusion to mothers as teachers. For example, the Egyptian Duachety concludes his instruction with the words, "Praise God for your father and your mother, who set you on the way of life!" (AEL 2.191). Also, 31.1–9 is spoken by a woman.

10–14: My son, many scholars understand the "son" to be a student in a school and "father" to be a schoolteacher, but there is no evidence for this. Egyptian instructions are consistently presented as a father's words to his actual son, and the mention of the mother in 1.8; 4.3; 6.20 points to a family context, at least as the fictional setting of wisdom instruction. The texts could secondarily be used in schools, as they were in Egypt. In the following annotations, "pupil" means the youth to whom the teaching is directed, without presumption of a school setting. Come with us, the invitation a gang of thugs might use to entice a young man to join them in plotting a murderous mugging. They have grandiose notions of their power. They think that they are as powerful as Sheol, the netherworld. They hold out promises of comradeship and a share of the wealth. 15–18: Even a bird has enough sense to avoid a trap laid out in plain sight, but the criminals are too stupid for that. They hurry to shed blood, not realizing that it is their own. 19: Conclusion: Evil-doers destroy themselves by means of the evil that they themselves create. Cf. 5.21–23.

1.20–33: Interlude A: Lady Wisdom chastises the foolish. In Interludes A, D, and E, wisdom is described as if she were a woman.

20 Wisdom^a cries aloud in the streets,
 Raises her voice in the squares.
 21 At the head of the busy streets she calls;
 At the entrance of the gates, in the city, she speaks out:
 22 “How long will you simple ones love
 simplicity,
 You scoffers be eager to scoff,
 You dullards hate knowledge?
 23 You are indifferent to my rebuke;
 I will now speak my mind to you,
 And let you know my thoughts.
 24 Since you refused me when I called,
 And paid no heed when I extended my hand,
 25 You spurned all my advice,
 And would not hear my rebuke,
 26 I will laugh at your calamity,
 And mock when terror comes upon you,
 27 When terror comes like a disaster,
 And calamity arrives like a whirlwind,
 When trouble and distress come upon you.
 28 Then they shall call me but I will not answer;
 They shall seek me but not find me.
 29 Because they hated knowledge,
 And did not choose fear of the LORD;
 30 They refused my advice,
 And disdained all my rebukes,
 31 They shall eat the fruit of their ways,
 And have their fill of their own counsels.
 32 The tranquillity of the simple will kill them,
 And the complacency of dullards will destroy
 them.
 33 But he who listens to me will dwell in safety, Untroubled by the terror of misfortune.”

2 My son, if you accept my words
 And treasure up my commandments;
 2 If you make your ear attentive to wisdom
 And your mind open to discernment;
 3 If you call to understanding
 And cry aloud to discernment,
 4 If you seek it as you do silver
 And search for it as for treasures,
 5 Then you will understand the fear of the LORD
 And attain knowledge of God.

^a In Proverbs, wisdom is personified as a woman.

(In Heb, the word for wisdom, “hokhmah,” is a feminine abstract noun.) Such personification is briefly suggested in 2.3; 3.13–20; 4.8–9; 7.4. There are various theories to account for the origins of the wisdom personification. Some commentators believe that it derives from a goddess, such as a Canaanite wisdom goddess (though no such deity is known) or the Egyptian Ma’at, goddess of truth and justice, or the Egyptian Isis, goddess of wisdom. Lady Wisdom does bear some similarities to ancient Near Eastern goddesses, but in Proverbs she is a literary figure created as a vivid and memorable way of speaking about human wisdom. 20–21: Wisdom is by no means secret or esoteric. She is public, frequenting the busiest parts of the town (the gates of a city were the location of much public and private business) and calling to all to accept her. Cf. 8.1.

1.22–30: Wisdom castigates fools. They spurned her warning, in other words, ignored the teachings and warnings of their elders. In return, Wisdom will scorn the fools when they most need her, when they find themselves in trouble and are in desperate need of clear and effective thinking. 31–33: The punishment threatened here, as so often in Proverbs, is the natural consequence of the evil action.

2.1–22: Lecture II: The path to wisdom. The entirety of ch 2 is a single Lecture. The extended Call to Attention (vv. 1–11) says that if you (the pupil) attend to my (the father’s) words and seek for wisdom diligently, you will, with God’s help, gain true wisdom and piety. The Lesson says that wisdom will protect you from the wicked man (vv. 12–15) and the wicked woman (vv. 16–20). The Conclusion (vv. 21–22) recapitulates the two paths that people must choose between. 5: The fear of the LORD is both the starting point of wisdom (1.7; 9.10) and its goal. The wise man attains a deeper, cognitive conscience, and this is linked to knowledge of God. This is

6 For the LORD grants wisdom; Knowledge and discernment are by His decree.
 7 He reserves ability for the upright
 And is a shield for those who live blamelessly,
 8 Guarding the paths of justice,
 Protecting the way of those loyal to Him.
 9 You will then understand what is right, just,
 And equitable—every good course.
 10 For wisdom will enter your mind
 And knowledge will delight you.
 11 Foresight will protect you,
 And discernment will guard you.
 12 It will save you from the way of evil men,
 From men who speak duplicity,
 13 Who leave the paths of rectitude
 To follow the ways of darkness,
 14 Who rejoice in doing evil
 And exult in the duplicity of evil men,
 15 Men whose paths are crooked
 And who are devious in their course.
 16 It will save you from the forbidden^a woman,
 From the alien woman whose talk is smooth,
 17 Who forsakes the companion of her youth
 And disregards the covenant of her God.
 18 Her house sinks down to Death,
 And her course leads to the shades.
 19 All who go to her cannot return
 And find again the paths of life.
 20 So follow the way of the good
 And keep to the paths of the just.
 21 For the upright will inhabit the earth,
 The blameless will remain in it.
 22 While the wicked will vanish from the land
 And the treacherous will be rooted out of it.

^a Lit. "strange."

not theological knowledge, but rather a constant awareness of God's will. 6: God is the ultimate source of the faculty of wisdom, though not the specific words. 12–15: One grave danger facing a youth is evil men. These men are inherently corrupt and crooked. Their values are perverted, so that they do not merely do evil as a means, they positively rejoice in it. 16–20: The second danger is the wicked woman, the sexually predatory female, lit. "the strange woman." Warnings against the "strange woman" appear in 2.16–22; 5.1–23; 6.20–35; 7.1–27, and more briefly in 22.14; 23.27. She is in some ways contrasted with Dame Wisdom and she provides the traits for the personification of Lady Folly in 9.13–18. The "strange woman" has been interpreted in various ways, including:

(1) a symbol of folly and wicked counsels; (2) a figure for heresy, in medieval Jewish interpretation, and particularly Christianity; (3) foreign wisdom, such as Greek philosophy; (4) a foreign love goddess (Aphrodite-Ishtar); (5) a devotee of the love goddess; (6) a prostitute; (7) the "Other," the repository or symbol of lust, chaos, and evil; (8) a human adulteress, another man's wife. The last is most likely. 16: "Strange" (see translators' note ^a) means an outsider, in this case, one who does not belong in the context of a particular marriage. Alien has the same meaning. The strange woman in Proverbs is married to another man (see 2.17; 6.26, 29, 34; 7.19; possibly 5.10 as well). The strange woman's allure lies less in her looks (mentioned only in 6.25) than in her words (5.3; 6.24; 7.5, 21; cf. 22.14). Her speech is smooth, lit. "slippery"—flattering, tricky, and ingratiating. Ch 7 is an extended demonstration of her verbal powers.

17: The covenant of her God is often understood (esp. by traditional Jewish commentators) as the covenant at Sinai, whose law forbids adultery, but this is unlikely in wisdom contexts. It probably means the covenant of marriage, which is made before God. See Mal. 2.14 and Hos. 2.18–22. 18: Going to the strange woman's house puts one on the slopes to the underworld; the equation between the foreign woman and death is a common theme of these poems. 21–22: Many traditional Jewish interpreters understood earth ("ereẓ") to refer to eternal life, a postbiblical notion. Others explained it as the land of Israel. More likely, earth is this world. The righteous will inhabit it insofar as they will be blessed with a long life, while the wicked will die prematurely.

3.1–12: Lecture III: The wisdom of piety. The Lesson (vv. 5–12), composed of distinct sayings, teaches humility, faith in God, fulfillment of cultic duties, and submission to divine chastisement. Unusually for Proverbs, it does not insist on the importance of wis-

3 My son, do not forget my teaching,
 But let your mind retain my commandments;
2 For they will bestow on you length of days,
 Years of life and well-being.
3 Let fidelity and steadfastness not leave you;
 Bind them about your throat,
 Write them on the tablet of your mind,
4 And you will find favor and approbation
 In the eyes of God and man.
5 Trust in the LORD with all your heart,
 And do not rely on your own understanding.
6 In all your ways acknowledge Him,
 And He will make your paths smooth.
7 Do not be wise in your own eyes;
 Fear the LORD and shun evil.
8 It will be a cure for your body,^a
 A tonic for your bones.
9 Honor the LORD with your wealth,
 With the best of all your income,
10 And your barns will be filled with grain,
 Your vats will burst with new wine.
11 Do not reject the discipline of the LORD, my son;
 Do not abhor His rebuke.
12 For whom the LORD loves, He rebukes,
 As a father the son whom he favors.
13 Happy is the man who finds wisdom,
 The man who attains understanding.
14 Her value in trade is better than silver,
 Her yield, greater than gold.
15 She is more precious than rubies;
 All of your goods cannot equal her.
16 In her right hand is length of days,
 In her left, riches and honor.
17 Her ways are pleasant ways,
 And all her paths, peaceful.
18 She is a tree of life to those who grasp her,
 And whoever holds on to her is happy.
19 The LORD founded the earth by wisdom;
 He established the heavens by understanding;
20 By His knowledge the depths burst apart,
 And the skies distilled dew.
21 My son, do not lose sight of them;
 Hold on to resourcefulness and foresight.

^a Lit. "navel."

dom, nor does it equate wisdom and religious virtues. 3: Wear the teachings close to your body so that you will always have them with you (1.9; 4.9; 6.21 n.). Write them on the tablet of your mind ("heart"), hold them permanently in memory. 9: Honor the LORD by bringing sacrificial donations to the Temple. 11–12: Sometimes suffering can be interpreted as divine discipline, a warning intended to spare one greater punishments. On the basis of vv. 11–12 and Ps. 94.12, the Talmud develops the concept of "afflictions of love" (b. Ber. 8a, etc.).

3.13–20: Interlude B: In praise of wisdom. 14–15: Wisdom is precious beyond price. 16: In the background of this passage may be the Egyptian practice of depicting gods holding the symbols of their powers and blessings (particularly "life" and "prosperity"). 17–18: These verses are recited in the Torah service, when the Torah is returned to the Ark. The subject of the sentences is wisdom, which is consistently understood in Jewish interpretation to designate Torah. 18: The tree of life was a widespread ancient Near Eastern mythological symbol, which is especially popular in Mesopotamian palace reliefs. It represented a divine source of well-being and life, sometimes meaning eternal life. In Proverbs, the symbol has lost its mythological connections and is simply a metaphor for a source of life and health. Based on the present verse, the Rabbis identified the tree of life with Torah. 19–20: The highest praise of wisdom is that God Himself possesses it, used it in creating the world, and continues to use it. The welling up of springs and the descent of dew belong to both original creation and ongoing providence.

3.21–35: Lecture IV: The wisdom of honesty. The Lesson, vv. 27–31, comprises five admonitions, all beginning with do not. The general theme of the Lecture is the importance of honesty in social relations. 21: Them: "My words" may have

22 They will give life to your spirit
 And grace to your throat.
 23 Then you will go your way safely
 And not injure your feet.
 24 When you lie down you will be unafraid;
 You will lie down and your sleep will be sweet.
 25 You will not fear sudden terror
 Or the disaster that comes upon the wicked,
 26 For the LORD will be your trust;
 He will keep your feet from being caught.

27 Do not withhold good from one who deserves it
 When you have the power to do it [for him].
 28 Do not say to your fellow, "Come back again;
 I'll give it to you tomorrow," when you have it with you.
 29 Do not devise harm against your fellow
 Who lives trustfully with you.
 30 Do not quarrel with a man for no cause,
 When he has done you no harm.
 31 Do not envy a lawless man,
 Or choose any of his ways;
 32 For the devious man is an abomination to the
 LORD,
 But He is intimate with the straightforward.
 33 The curse of the LORD is on the house of the wicked,
 But He blesses the abode of the righteous.
 34 At scoffers He scoffs,
 But to the lowly He shows grace.
 35 The wise shall obtain honor,
 But dullards get disgrace as their portion.

4 Sons, heed the discipline of a father;
 Listen and learn discernment,
 2 For I give you good instruction;
 Do not forsake my teaching.
 3 Once I was a son to my father,
 The tender darling of my mother.
 4 He instructed me and said to me,
 "Let your mind hold on to my words;
 Keep my commandments and you will live.
 5 Acquire wisdom, acquire discernment;
 Do not forget and do not swerve from my words.
 6 Do not forsake her and she will guard you;
 Love her and she will protect you.

once stood in the Heb, or perhaps there was once a couplet like 4.20a before this verse. 22: Grace to your throat suggests the necklace metaphor, used in 1.9 and 3.3b. 24: God will protect you when you sleep (Ps 4.9) and spare you nightmares (such as Job suffered; see Job 7.14). 25: Cf. 1.27. 28: When someone comes to claim something rightly his—a loan, for example, or property left in your safekeeping—do not dawdle in restoring it to him. 29: It is especially unethical to scheme to injure someone who trusts you. 30: You may not quarrel for no cause. Sometimes, however, a quarrel is justifiable and unavoidable; see 25.9. 31: Do not envy or imitate a prospering sinner, because his downfall is inevitable. This is the message of Pss. 37 and 73 as well. 32: Abomination refers to something that causes disgust. In Proverbs, it is used particularly with reference to falsity in thought and words. It is most often used with regard to sins which are not easily detected or which are not formally illegal. 33-35: The Conclusion consists of three aphorisms contrasting the consequences of wisdom and folly.

4.1-9: Lecture V: Loving wisdom, hating evil. 1-4: The speaker recounts how he received instruction from his own father and quotes his teaching (vv. 4bc-9). The message is: get wisdom. 6: It is not enough to obey wisdom. One must love it, just as one must love God (Deut. 6.5, etc.). 7: The first step in attaining wisdom is to acquire (absorb) the teachings of wisdom, to hear and assimilate them, even before one can properly understand and apply them.

7 The beginning^a of wisdom is—acquire wisdom;
 With all your acquisitions, acquire discernment.
 8 Hug her to you and she will exalt you;
 She will bring you honor if you embrace her.
 9 She will adorn your head with a graceful wreath;
 Crown you with a glorious diadem.”

10 My son, heed and take in my words,
 And you will have many years of life.
 11 I instruct you in the way of wisdom;
 I guide you in straight courses.
 12 You will walk without breaking stride;
 When you run, you will not stumble.
 13 Hold fast to discipline; do not let go;
 Keep it; it is your life.
 14 Do not enter on the path of the wicked;
 Do not walk on the way of evil men.
 15 Avoid it; do not pass through it;
 Turn away from it; pass it by.
 16 For they cannot sleep unless they have done evil;
 Unless they make someone fall they are robbed of sleep.
 17 They eat the bread of wickedness
 And drink the wine of lawlessness.
 18 The path of the righteous is like radiant sunlight,
 Ever brightening until noon.
 19 The way of the wicked is all darkness;
 They do not know what will make them stumble.

20 My son, listen to my speech;
 Incline your ear to my words.
 21 Do not lose sight of them;
 Keep them in your mind.
 22 They are life to him who finds them,
 Healing for his whole body.
 23 More than all that you guard, guard your mind,
 For it is the source of life.
 24 Put crooked speech away from you;
 Keep devious talk far from you.
 25 Let your eyes look forward,
 Your gaze be straight ahead.
 26 Survey the course you take,
 And all your ways will prosper.
 27 Do not swerve to the right or the left;
 Keep your feet from evil.

4.10–19: Lecture VI: The two paths. One who chooses the right course of behavior will naturally find himself going in the right direction and will prosper and be safe. One must avoid the twisted and murky path of the wicked, for the wicked live in turmoil and anxiety. 13: Discipline, Heb “musar,” is one way wisdom is conveyed. It generally implies physical chastisement of some sort. Even this kind of teaching must be embraced passionately. 17: The values of the wicked are twisted. They live on wickedness and lawlessness; see 2.12–15.

4.20–27: Lecture VII: The straight path. Whereas Lecture VI spoke of the two paths of life, good and evil, this one pictures a single path, which is a person’s mode of behavior, for better or worse. One must walk straight, for evil and dangers lurk on either side, and look straight ahead, because temptations beckon all around. In biblical literature, “straight” is a common metaphor for correct behavior.

^a Or “best part.”

5 My son, listen to my wisdom;
 Incline your ear to my insight,
 2 That you may have foresight,
 While your lips hold fast to knowledge.
 3 For the lips of a forbidden^a woman drip honey;
 Her mouth is smoother than oil;
 4 But in the end she is as bitter as wormwood,
 Sharp as a two-edged sword.
 5 Her feet go down to Death;
 Her steps take hold of Sheol.
 6 She does not chart a path of life;
 Her course meanders for lack of knowledge.
 7 So now, sons, pay heed to me,
 And do not swerve from the words of my mouth.
 8 Keep yourself far away from her;
 Do not come near the doorway of her house
 9 Lest you give up your vigor to others,
 Your years to a ruthless one;
 10 Lest strangers eat their fill of your strength,
 And your toil be for the house of another;
 11 And in the end you roar,
 When your flesh and body are consumed,
 12 And say,
 "O how I hated discipline,
 And heartily spurned rebuke.
 13 I did not pay heed to my teachers,
 Or incline my ear to my instructors.
 14 Soon I was in dire trouble
 Amidst the assembled congregation."
 15 Drink water from your own cistern,
 Running water from your own well.
 16 Your springs will gush forth
 In streams in the public squares.
 17 They will be yours alone,
 Others having no part with you.
 18 Let your fountain be blessed;
 Find joy in the wife of your youth—
 19 A loving doe, a graceful mountain goat.
 Let her breasts satisfy you at all times;
 Be infatuated with love of her always.

^a Lit. "strange."

5.1–23: Lecture VIII: Stick to your own wife. This is the first of three Lectures on the "strange woman" (5.1–23; 6.20–35; 7.1–27). See 2.16–20 n. The adulteress is deadly (vv. 3–6), and every man must keep away from her, or he will pay a severe price (vv. 7–14). Instead, a man should take his sexual pleasures with his own wife (vv. 15–20). God sees everything and sin is inevitably punished (6.21–23). 3–6: The strange woman's words are sweet and seductive (2.16), but they leave a bitter aftertaste, and her dulcet speech turns out to be deadly. 9–10: Vigor and strength may refer to the adulterer's property, which he will waste on the woman, or to his sexual potency (see 31.3), which he will give up in the sense that the son he begets will be reckoned as belonging to the cheated husband, who will benefit from the adulterer's "labor." The ruthless one is the enraged husband (see vv. 34–35). The others may be his family. 11–14: The fornicator will be forced to publicly confess his folly. V. 11 seems to refer to venereal disease. The assembled congregation may be a judicial tribunal, or more likely, the community. Public shaming is a powerful means of social control, especially in Proverbs. 15–19: This is the only passage in the Bible that explicitly celebrates the pleasures of marital sex. Your wife alone (the father tells his son) is yours, and she is more attractive than anyone else. The author is seeking to dissuade young men from following a fierce and anarchic urge and so depicts the delights of sanctioned sex as no less intense than those of "stolen waters" (9.17). The metaphors in vv. 15–18 speak of a man's wife as his well, a source of refreshment that slakes (sexual) thirst. Compare the "well" and "drinking" metaphors in 7.18; 9.17, and Song of Songs 4.12, 15. V. 16 may be a deliberate riddle. As translated here, it seems to promise a reward—many progeny—for sexual fidelity. 17–18: Enjoy erotic pleasures with your wife alone. Then her "fountain"—i.e., her womb—will be fruitful (vv. 16–17). 19: The doe connotes grace, tenderness, and affection in the Song of Songs. Loving (Heb "ahavim") has strong sexual connotations. Breasts (Heb "dadim") should probably be vocalized "dodim," "lovemaking," as in 7.18, yielding better parallelism with love; but there may be a play on the two words. 20: Infatuated (Heb "tishgeh"), lit. "go astray," a negative value judgment. Rather than going astray with a forbidden woman, the 20 Why be infatuated, my son, with a forbidden^a woman?^c

Why clasp the bosom of an alien woman?
21 For a man's ways are before the eyes of God;
He surveys his entire course.
22 The wicked man will be trapped in his iniquities;
He will be caught up in the ropes of his sin.
23 He will die for lack of discipline,
Infatuated by his great folly.

6 My son, if you have stood surety for your fellow,
Given your hand for another,^b 2 You have been trapped by the words of your mouth,
Snared by the words of your mouth.
3 Do this, then, my son, to extricate yourself,
For you have come into the power of your fellow:
Go grovel—and badger your fellow;
4 Give your eyes no sleep,
Your pupils no slumber.
5 Save yourself like a deer out of the hand [of a hunter],
Like a bird out of the hand of a fowler.

6 Lazybones, go to the ant;
Study its ways and learn.
7 Without leaders, officers, or rulers,
8 It lays up its stores during the summer,
Gathers in its food at the harvest.
9 How long will you lie there, lazybones;
When will you wake from your sleep?
10 A bit more sleep, a bit more slumber,
A bit more hugging yourself in bed,
11 And poverty will come “calling upon you,”^c
And want, like a man with a shield.

12 A scoundrel, an evil man
Lives by crooked speech,
13 Winking his eyes,
Shuffling his feet,
Pointing his finger.

a Lit. “strange.” b Or “a stranger.” c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

young man should “lose himself” in his wife's love.

6.1–19: Interlude C: Four Epigrams on folly and evil. This four-part passage does not follow the structure of the Lectures and differs in subject matter. It was probably added later. Epigrams i and ii (vv. 1–5 and 6–11) concern folly, and iii and iv (vv. 12–15 and 16–19) concern evil. Notice the humorous and facetious tone of the first two Epigrams.

6.1–5: Epigram i. Do not go surety for another's loan. If you have done so, do your best to get released from your promise. (20.16 tells what happens to one who gets himself into this mess.) Rather than putting up his own property as collateral, a borrower could have the loan underwritten by someone else, whose possessions would then be liable to seizure.
Going surety is always risky, but doing so for a stranger (which one might do for a fee) is tantamount to loss; see 27.13. See also 11.15; 17.18; 22.26–27. The tone and practical main message of this epigram differs significantly from the emphasis on helping the poor found in some Torah texts (e.g., Deut.
15.9).

6.6–11: Epigram ii: Sloth and industry. Cf. 24.30–34. In vv. 6–8, the ant is held up as a model of industry and self-motivation. (Cf. 30.25.)
In vv. 9–11, the lazy man is rebuked in humorous tones. 11: Better, “and penury will come upon you like a vagabond, and poverty like a man of arms.” In this vivid trope, a poor man is used as a metaphor for poverty. We should picture the vagabond not as an indigent begging for alms, but as a potentially dangerous armed wanderer.

6.12–15: Epigram iii: The good-for-nothing. The scoundrel's speech is crooked and dishonest.
He betrays his nature by certain body gestures. The enumeration of the outward signs of villainy implies a warning to avoid people thus marked. The passage draws together phrases and ideas from 16.27–30, 24.22b, and 29.1b. 13: Winking (more precisely, squinting) the eye was considered a symptom of secretive, hostile thoughts; see Ps 35.19. Shuffling
the feet was probably considered symptomatic of an unquiet soul. Pointing his finger seems to be a sign of derision (Isa.
58.9).

14 Duplicity is in his heart;
 He plots evil all the time;
 He incites quarrels.
 15 Therefore calamity will come upon him without warning;
 Suddenly he will be broken beyond repair.

16 Six things the LORD hates;
 Seven are an abomination to Him:
 17 A haughty bearing,
 A lying tongue,
 Hands that shed innocent blood,
 18 A mind that hatches evil plots,
 Feet quick to run to evil,
 19 A false witness testifying lies,
 And one who incites brothers to quarrel.

20 My son, keep your father's commandment;
 Do not forsake your mother's teaching.
 21 Tie them over your heart always;
 Bind them around your throat.
 22 When you walk it will lead you;
 When you lie down it will watch over you;
 And when you are awake it will talk with you.
 23 For the commandment is a lamp,
 The teaching is a light,
 And the way to life is the rebuke that disciplines.
 24 It will keep you from an evil woman,
 From the smooth tongue of a forbidden^a woman.
 25 Do not lust for her beauty
 Or let her captivate you with her eyes.
 26 The last loaf of bread will go for a harlot;
 A married woman will snare a person of honor.
 27 Can a man rake embers into his bosom
 Without burning his clothes?
 28 Can a man walk on live coals
 Without scorching his feet?
 29 It is the same with one who sleeps with his fellow's wife;
 None who touches her will go unpunished.
 30 A thief is not held in contempt
 For stealing to appease his hunger;
 31 Yet if caught he must pay sevenfold;
 He must give up all he owns.
 32 He who commits adultery is devoid of sense;
 Only one who would destroy himself does such a thing.

^a Lit. "alien."

6.16–19: Epigram iv: What God loathes. Seven abominable things are described. Like Epigram iii, Epigram iv makes the incitement of quarrels the ultimate offense. The use of ascending numbers ("six and seven" or "three and four") for listing items serves a didactic and rhetorical purpose. See 30.15–31 n. and Amos 1.3, 6, 9, 11, 13; 2.1, 4, 6.

6.20–35: Lecture IX: Adultery kills. Even though an adulterer might think that his is the most secretive of sins, he cannot evade punishment. The speaker argues the point in a logical fashion, using analogies to other kinds of self-inflicted harm. The message is blunt and memorable: Keep away from another man's wife or he'll kill you. 20: Mother, see 1.8–19 n. 21: Bind the teachings (figuratively) like a pendant on a cord about your neck, so that they will rest over your heart. These are metaphors for keeping a valuable object close to oneself always, and they stress the beauty and worth of the teachings. Cf. 3.3; Exod. 28.29; and Song 8.6. Possibly the pendant originally was a protective amulet. 22–23: The relationship between these two verses is clearer when they are read in reverse order. 23: The commandment ("mitzvah") and the teaching ("torah") are here the parental teachings, or perhaps wisdom teachings generally. In the traditional Jewish reading, they are God's commandments and his Torah. 24: The forbidden woman's first means of seduction is speech; see 2.16; 5.3–6. 25–33: The punishment for adultery is inherent in the crime. It comes naturally, without any direct intervention by God or a court. 26: Better, "For a harlot costs but a loaf of bread, but a married woman hunts for a precious life." Harlotry costs money (29.3); adultery kills. 27–29: As surely as burning coals will scorch the clothes of the man who holds them or the feet of one who walks on them, so too will the man who fools with the fire of adultery inevitably suffer his punishment.

33 He will meet with disease and disgrace;
His reproach will never be expunged.
34 The fury of the husband will be passionate;
He will show no pity on his day of vengeance.
35 He will not have regard for any ransom;
He will refuse your bribe, however great.

7 My son, heed my words;
And store up my commandments with you.
2 Keep my commandments and live,
My teaching, as the apple of your eye.
3 Bind them on your fingers;
Write them on the tablet of your mind.
4 Say to Wisdom, "You are my sister,"
And call Understanding a kinswoman.
5 She will guard you from a forbidden^a woman;
From an alien woman whose talk is smooth.

6 From the window of my house,
Through my lattice, I looked out 7 And saw among the simple,
Noticed among the youths,
A lad devoid of sense.
8 He was crossing the street near her corner,
Walking toward her house
9 In the dusk of evening,
In the dark hours of night.
10 A woman comes toward him
^bDressed like a harlot, with set purpose.^b 11 She is bustling and restive;
She is never at home.
12 Now in the street, now in the square,
She lurks at every corner.
13 She lays hold of him and kisses him;
Brazenly she says to him,
14 "I had to make a sacrifice of well-being;
Today I fulfilled my vows.

^a Lit. "strange."

^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

30–33: If even he who steals out of necessity, and therefore deserves some public sympathy, is forced to pay heavy penalties when caught, how much more will an adulterer, who lacks any excuse for his crime, be severely punished. Unlike the thief, he will not be able to buy his way out of trouble (v. 35).

"Sevenfold" in the present verse may be a way of saying "greatly," though some LXX manuscript readings at 2 Sam. 12.6 suggest that sevenfold compensation for theft was known in ancient Israel. The maximum compensation stipulated in the Torah is fivefold, for an animal that is stolen and killed (Exod. 21.37). The adulterer will suffer "wounds" (not disease), namely those inflicted on him by the enraged husband. No such punishment by the husband is known in Torah legislation. 34–35: The conclusion. Sometimes, the payment of ransom—monetary gifts and compensation—can appease the wronged party (21.14; Exod. 21.30), but not in the case of adultery.

7.1–27: Lecture X: Beware the seductress. On the forbidden or "strange" woman, see 2.16–20 n. In this lecture, the speaker tells how he once witnessed a woman approaching a young man in the dark street and luring him to her house for a night of sex. Her words were silky, brazen, and lewd, and the dupe followed after her like an animal going to slaughter. 3: These are metaphors for memory, though traditionally Jews have given the reminders concrete form in the practice of tefilin. 4: My sister, some commentators say that "sister" is a term of (erotic) affection, as in the Song of Songs. But "sister" and "kinswoman" may just connote intimacy. 6: Window . . . lattice: The window was enclosed with a lattice or trelliswork, through which one could peer without being seen. 10: Dressed like a harlot: Harlots may have worn a heavy veil (Gen. 38.14). The strange woman is dressed as if she were a harlot, perhaps to conceal her identity, but she does not offer herself for money. With set purpose, better, "with hidden intent," lit. "with guarded heart." 11–13: Rather like the scoundrel with his nervous gesticulations (6.13), this woman is afflicted by a constant disquiet. She lurks or "lies in ambush" at every corner, like a beast of prey—or the muggers in 1.11. Then she pounces. 14: The woman explains why she has meat available for a fine meal. Meat was very costly and was eaten mostly on special occasions, as when bringing a sacrifice to the Temple (most of the meat would be kept by the worshiper, the rest given to the 15 Therefore I have come out to you,

 Seeking you, and have found you.
 16 I have decked my couch with covers
 Of dyed Egyptian linen;
 17 I have sprinkled my bed
 With myrrh, aloes, and cinnamon.
 18 Let us drink our fill of love till morning;
 Let us delight in amorous embrace.
 19 For the man of the house is away;
 He is off on a distant journey.
 20 He took his bag of money with him
 And will return only at mid-month.”

21 She sways him with her eloquence,
 Turns him aside with her smooth talk.
 22 Thoughtlessly he follows her,
 Like an ox going to the slaughter,
^aLike a fool to the stocks for punishment^a—
 23 Until the arrow pierces his liver.
 He is like a bird rushing into a trap,
 Not knowing his life is at stake.
 24 Now, sons, listen to me;
 Pay attention to my words;
 25 Let your mind not wander down her ways;
 Do not stray onto her paths.
 26 For many are those she has struck dead,
 And numerous are her victims.
 27 Her house is a highway to Sheol
 Leading down to Death’s inner chambers.

8 It is Wisdom calling,
 Understanding raising her voice.
 2 She takes her stand at the topmost heights,
 By the wayside, at the crossroads,
 3 Near the gates at the city entrance;
 At the entryways, she shouts,
 4 “O men, I call to you;
 My cry is to all mankind.
 5 O simple ones, learn shrewdness;
 O dullards, instruct your minds.
 6 Listen, for I speak noble things;
 Uprightness comes from my lips;
 7 My mouth utters truth;
 Wickedness is abhorrent to my lips.
 8 All my words are just,
 None of them perverse or crooked;

priest) or when repaying vows.
15: This seems to be a parodic reversal of the woman in the Song of Songs (3.1–4), who goes forth at night in search of her beloved, finds him, and embraces him.
16–18: These verses share much language with the Song of Songs (see esp. 4.14). In them, the sexual innuendo becomes clear, then explicit. 19–20: She reassures the boy that her husband is away. Since the scene takes place in the deep darkness, when the moon has waned (v. 9), the full moon (mid-month) is two weeks off. 22–23: The teacher does not have to witness the results. He knows what this must be: death. 22: By a minor emendation the end of the verse reads, “like a stag bounding to bonds.” 23: This verse makes better sense if we place the third line at the beginning of the verse. Its sexual imagery is transparent. 24–27: The speaker warns all young men (sons) to avoid the path to the strange woman’s house, for it is really the way to death.

8.1–36: Interlude D: Wisdom’s self-praise. Whereas the strange woman of ch 7 is to be shunned, (personified) wisdom is to be pursued and embraced. The structure of this well-designed chapter is as follows: I. Introduction: the setting and call (1–3); II. Call to Attention (4–11); III. Wisdom’s present state (12–21); IV. Wisdom’s past (22–31); V. Call to Attention renewed (32–36). Wisdom is personified as a woman of nearly divine stature; see 1.20–33 n. There may be subtle erotic connotations (e.g., vv. 17, 35) that suggest the power of Wisdom’s attractiveness. Wisdom calls to human beings, praises herself, promises rewards to her devotees, and tells mankind to listen to her, that is to say, to the wisdom in this book and wherever it may be found. 1–5: Wisdom calls for attention. In naturalistic terms, this is the voice of reason, heard in wisdom teachings and in the individual mind. Wisdom calls to people in the most prominent public places, including the city gates, where many of the city’s

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

9 All are straightforward to the intelligent man,
 And right to those who have attained knowledge.
 10 Accept my discipline rather than silver,
 Knowledge rather than choice gold.
 11 For wisdom is better than rubies;
 No goods can equal her.

12 "I, Wisdom, live with Prudence;
 I attain knowledge and foresight.
 13 To fear the LORD is to hate evil;
 I hate pride, arrogance, the evil way,
 And duplicity in speech.
 14 Mine are counsel and resourcefulness;
 I am understanding; courage is mine.
 15 Through me kings reign
 And rulers decree just laws;
 16 Through me princes rule,
 Great men and all the ^arighteous judges.^a 17 Those who love me I love,
 And those who seek me will find me.
 18 Riches and honor belong to me,
 Enduring wealth and success.
 19 My fruit is better than gold, fine gold,
 And my produce better than choice silver.
 20 I walk on the way of righteousness,
 On the paths of justice.
 21 I endow those who love me with substance;
 I will fill their treasuries.

22 "The LORD created me at the beginning of His course
 As the first of His works of old.
 23 In the distant past I was fashioned,
 At the beginning, at the origin of earth.
 24 There was still no deep when I was brought forth,
 No springs rich in water;
 25 Before [the foundation of] the mountains were sunk,
 Before the hills I was born.
 26 He had not yet made earth and fields,
 Or the world's first clumps of clay.

a-a According to some Heb. mss. and printed editions, "judges of the earth."

commercial and legal transactions take place. Wisdom is international, offering her teachings to all mankind. She is even available to the simple and dullards, if they would just listen to her. 6–9: Just as the father in the Lectures extols the wisdom he is teaching, so does Lady Wisdom praise her own teachings. 10–11: Cf. 3.14–15 and 16.16. 12–14: Prudence . . . knowledge and foresight, better, "cunning

. . . knowledge of shrewdness." The virtues in question are practical savvy and good sense. These useful faculties come with wisdom, as do resourcefulness and courage. 15–16: Insofar as rulers govern justly, they do so through wisdom. 17: To gain wisdom, one must love it, eagerly desiring to grasp its message. Without this love, even superficial learning is unlikely, and knowledge cannot be translated into action. Later, this was interpreted as love of Torah study, a principle inculcated in the postexilic Ps 119. 18–21: Wisdom promises material rewards, but she also emphasizes that she is superior to gold and silver (as in 3.14–15) and that she bestows wealth only in honest ways. 22–26: Wisdom recounts her creation and her presence during the creation of the world. She was the very first of God's creations. An important Jewish interpretation, starting with Gen. Rab. 1.2, 5 and found in the Rashi to Gen 1.1, uses Prov. ch 8 to argue that the Torah (identified with wisdom) was created before the world and was used by God in creating it. 22: Created me: Since ancient times, interpreters have disputed whether the verb "kanah" means "created" or "acquired." The latter allows for the possibility that wisdom existed from eternity and was coeval with God. Some Christian groups preferred this, since they identified wisdom with the Logos, which was in turn identified with the Christ. It is, however, clear from v. 23 that wisdom is a created being. In fact, "kanah" refers to acquisition by any means, including creation, as here. 24: According to Gen. 1.2, the deep (the primordial sea) existed before creation began. Wisdom insists that she preceded in existence even this most primordial of entities. I was brought forth: This word is usually used of birth. The background metaphor of divine parenthood is reinforced by v. 30. 25: The mountains were thought to rest on foundations or on pillars set (miraculously, see Job 38.6) in the abyss or the underworld.

27 I was there when He set the heavens into place;
 When He fixed the horizon upon the deep;
 28 When He made the heavens above firm,
 And the fountains of the deep gushed forth;
 29 When He assigned the sea its limits,
 So that its waters never transgress His command;
 When He fixed the foundations of the earth,
 30 I was with Him as a confidant,
 A source of delight every day,
 Rejoicing before Him at all times,
 31 Rejoicing in His inhabited world,
 Finding delight with mankind.
 32 Now, sons, listen to me;
 Happy are they who keep my ways.
 33 Heed discipline and become wise;
 Do not spurn it.
 34 Happy is the man who listens to me,
 Coming early to my gates each day,
 Waiting outside my doors.
 35 For he who finds me finds life
 And obtains favor from the LORD.
 36 But he who misses me destroys himself;
 All who hate me love death."

9 Wisdom has built her house,
 She has hewn her seven pillars.
 2 She has prepared the feast,
 Mixed the wine,
 And also set the table.
 3 She has sent out her maids to announce
 On the heights of the town,

27-31: Wisdom declares that she was present when God produced the inhabited world. 27: The horizon is pictured as a circle engraved at the join of heaven and earth, as appears to be the case when one is at sea. 28: Heavens, actually, "clouds." The paradox of God "firming up" the clouds (so that they stay in the sky) heightens the miraculousness of His deed. 29: In several creation traditions found outside of Genesis, the sea is ever trying to break forth and flood the earth, but God set its boundary (Ps 104.9), namely the beach (Jer. 5.22), which may also be imagined as a barred door (Job 38.8, 10). These mythological conceptions have Canaanite antecedents. 30: This is one of the most disputed verses in the Bible and has weighty theological implications. The word translated confidant is "amon." There are three basic ways of interpreting this word: (1) "Artisan" (which is elsewhere "oman"). This translation implies that wisdom aided God in creation. In a similar vein, a midrash likens wisdom (equated with Torah) to a tool God used in creation, as an architect looks at a blueprint when constructing a palace (Gen. Rab. 1.2). (2) "Constant(ly), faithful(ly)"; "confidant." (3) "Ward" or "nursling" (or as a verb, "growing up"). Wisdom was with God as His ward, like a child He was caring for. This fits the context best. Nowhere does the chapter imply that Lady Wisdom helped God create the earth. On the contrary, vv. 30-31 emphasize that she played while God worked. Wisdom's playing before God represents the "play" of the wise, which is study. Cf. Ps. 119.92. 31: Just as God gets pleasure from wisdom, so does she delight in humankind. 32-36: Having established her unparalleled credentials, Lady Wisdom speaks as a mature lady and addresses her "sons." Fortunate is he who obeys wisdom and eagerly goes to her house, which is any place where wisdom is taught. 35-36: The vital importance of loving wisdom. The finding of wisdom recalls the finding of a beloved woman; cf. 18.22. V. 36 states the principle that the evildoer is harmed by the evil he creates; cf. 1.19. Those who hate wisdom are not just stupid, they are depraved. Their values are twisted. They may not realize it, but the things they love are really deadly.

9.1-18: Interlude E: Two banquets. This poem elaborates the motif of Wisdom's invitation to her house (8.34) into a figure of two contrary invitations: Lady Wisdom's (vv. 1-6, 11) and Lady Folly's (vv. 13-18). Life offers two "feasts": one is rich yet prudent, the other is enticing but poisonous. Vv. 7-10 and v. 12 do not fit in either vignette and are probably later insertions. It is best to first read the chapter without them, then to consider them separately. 1-6, 11: Lady Wisdom builds a house (v. 1), prepares a feast (v. 2), and issues an open invitation (vv. 3-5). She then explains the meaning of her invitation (v. 6) and reinforces her exhortation (v. 11). 1: Some consider wisdom's house to be a mythological allusion, but this identification is uncertain. Seven connotes completeness or expansiveness. 2-3: Like a noble woman, Wisdom prepares a rich banquet and sends out her maids to invite guests.

4 "Let the simple enter here";
 To those devoid of sense she says,
 5 "Come, eat my food
 And drink the wine that I have mixed;
 6 Give up simpleness and live,
 Walk in the way of understanding."
 7 To correct a scoffer,
 *Or rebuke a wicked man for his blemish,
 Is to call down abuse on oneself.^a 8 Do not rebuke a scoffer, for he will hate you;
 Reprove a wise man, and he will love you.
 9 Instruct a wise man, and he will grow wiser;
 Teach a righteous man, and he will gain in learning.
 10 The beginning of wisdom is fear of the LORD,
 And knowledge of the Holy One is understanding.
 11 For through me your days will increase,
 And years be added to your life.
 12 If you are wise, you are wise for yourself;
 If you are a scoffer, you bear it alone.
 13 The stupid woman bustles about;
 She is simple and knows nothing.
 14 She sits in the doorway of her house,
 Or on a chair at the heights of the town,
 15 Calling to all the wayfarers
 Who go about their own affairs,
 16 "Let the simple enter here";
 And to those devoid of sense she says,
 17 "Stolen waters are sweet,
 And bread eaten furtively is tasty."
 18 He does not know that the shades are there,
 That her guests are in the depths of Sheol.

10 The proverbs of Solomon:

A wise son brings joy to his father;
 A dull son is his mother's sorrow.

a-a Clauses transposed for clarity.

4–6: Wisdom is the sustenance of the soul. (Cf. Deut. 8.3.) Wisdom's wine is mixed, probably with fragrant spices. 7–10: Someone has inserted these verses in a cautionary reaction to Wisdom's invitation to the simple. The insert says that there are some people who are constitutionally unable to learn wisdom. Wisdom requires the right attitude, namely the fear of God. See 1.7. 11: The continuation of v. 6. 12: This seems to be an addition identifying the recipient of wisdom's benefits. Wisdom profits its holder while impudence and arrogance hurt their possessor alone. 13–18: Lady Folly's "feast."

13: The stupid woman, lit. "woman of folly." In this chapter, where the

"woman of folly" is contrasted with personified Lady Wisdom, the "woman of folly" is best understood as a personification as well. Bustles about is better translated "is boisterous" (cf. her human counterpart, 7.11a), for unlike Lady Wisdom, Folly does not put effort into the feast. She just sits at her door or in a public place calling out to passers-by. The underlying picture may reflect the deportment of a prostitute. 16: Folly mimics Wisdom's call, but to opposite effect. 17: Lady Folly is telling the truth. The wise recognize in her invitation an unintended warning to beware of her. The foolish hear it as an inducement to enjoy the forbidden, titillating sweets of illegitimate pleasures. Waters can allude to sexual pleasures, as in 5.15–20, but the statement applies to other pleasures as well. 18: The nitwits who take Folly's bait are blithely unaware that they are about to enter the domain of death, the netherworld, where the shades (ghosts) reside. Like the previous two units, death of the fool ends the passage, effecting closure (7.26–27; 7.36).

10.1–22.16: Collection II. This collection holds mostly antithetical poetic couplets, in which the second line restates basically the same idea in reversed terms (e.g., wise son . . . joy is echoed by dull son . . . sorrow). Although they are mostly similar stylistically, they reflect a wide variety of situations and attitudes. They differ from many popular proverbs embedded in other biblical books, which do not have the same poetic structure (e.g., 1 Sam. 24.14, "Wicked deeds come from wicked men"). The proverbs in 10.1–15.33 typically contrast two character types: the wise and the foolish, or the righteous and the wicked. These pairs should not be identified, as they typically are in postbiblical literature; the wise are versed in applying secular wisdom, while being righteous is a religious value. As a whole, the proverbs create a paradigm of the wise and the righteous person, on

2 Ill-gotten wealth is of no avail,
 But righteousness saves from death.
 3 The LORD will not let the righteous go hungry,
 But He denies the wicked what they crave.
 4 Negligent hands cause poverty,
 But diligent hands enrich.
 5 He who lays in stores during the summer is a capable son,
 But he who sleeps during the harvest is an incompetent.
 6 Blessings light upon the head of the righteous,
 But lawlessness covers the mouth of the wicked.
 7 The name of the righteous is invoked in blessing,
 But the fame of the wicked rots.
 8 He whose heart is wise accepts commands,
 But he whose speech is foolish comes to grief.
 9 He who lives blamelessly lives safely,
 But he who walks a crooked path will be found out.
 10 He who winks his eye causes sorrow;
 He whose speech is foolish comes to grief.
 11 The mouth of the righteous is a fountain of life,
 But lawlessness covers the mouth of the wicked.
 12 Hatred stirs up strife,
 But love covers up all faults.
 13 Wisdom is to be found on the lips of the intelligent,
 But a rod is ready for the back of the senseless.
 14 The wise store up knowledge;
 The mouth of the fool is an imminent ruin.
 15 The wealth of a rich man is his fortress;
 The poverty of the poor is his ruin.
 16 The labor of the righteous man makes for life;
 The produce of the wicked man makes for want.
 17 He who follows discipline shows the way to life,
 But he who ignores reproof leads astray.
 18 He who conceals hatred has lying lips,
 While he who speaks forth slander is a dullard.
 19 Where there is much talking, there is no lack of transgressing,
 But he who curbs his tongue^a shows sense.
 20 The tongue of a righteous man is choice silver,
 But the mind of the wicked is of little worth.
 21 The lips of the righteous sustain many,
 But fools die for lack of sense.
 22 It is the blessing of the LORD that enriches,
 And no toil can increase it.

^a Lit. "lips."

which the pupil (and reader) can model his own actions. Like proverbs in any language, the proverbs that follow are extremely terse and dense, and often ambiguous, and their full meaning cannot be explained in translation.

10.1–12.15: Contrasts between the wise and the foolish, the upright and the wicked. Several proverbs speak about a son's merits or faults in terms of the effect they have on his parents. The same message is addressed to the son in 27.11a. Cf. 15.20; 17.21, 25; 19.13; 23.24–25; 28.7. 10.2: The ill-gotten wealth or "treasures of wickedness" are riches gained by wicked means. Saves from death does not suggest immortality but rather (as comparison with 11.4 shows) protection in the day of general disaster. In such circumstances, wealth will not help. 3: This proverb is not a statement of fact but a declaration of faith in a principle: Eventually people will receive the material rewards due them. Cf. Ps. 37.25. 4: The Sages believed that negligence causes poverty and diligence brings wealth. They did not, however, interpret poverty as a sign of negligence or wealth as a sign of diligence, since these conditions can have other causes as well. 5: The word translated incompetent means, more precisely, "disappointing [one]" or "disgraceful [one]." This proverb is concerned with the effects of diligence and laziness on one's parents. Cf. 10.1. 6: As translated here, the second line means that the evildoer's own lawlessness, which he covers up, destroys him. 7: For examples of these two fates, see Gen. 48.20; Jer. 29.22. 9: Lives, lit. "walks." There are two ways of walking through life: straight and honestly, or crookedly and deviously. 10: See 6.13 and 16.30. 12: Love can and should cover up others' offenses against oneself, but not one's own offenses. 13: The rod here is probably the intelligent man's verbal rebukes. 15: This is a blunt observation of social realities (contrast v. 2). But by stating the misery of the desti-

23 As mischief is sport for the dullard,
 So is wisdom for the man of understanding.
 24 What the wicked man plots overtakes him;
 What the righteous desire is granted.
 25 When the storm passes the wicked man is gone,
 But the righteous is an everlasting foundation.
 26 Like vinegar to the teeth,
 Like smoke to the eyes,
 Is a lazy man to those who send him on a mission.
 27 The fear of the LORD prolongs life,
 While the years of the wicked will be shortened.
 28 The righteous can look forward to joy,
 But the hope of the wicked is doomed.
 29 The way of the LORD is a stronghold for the blameless,
 But a ruin for evildoers.
 30 The righteous will never be shaken;
 The wicked will not inhabit the earth.
 31 The mouth of the righteous produces wisdom,
 But the treacherous tongue shall be cut off.
 32 The lips of the righteous know what is pleasing;
 The mouth of the wicked [knows] duplicity.

11 False scales are an abomination to the LORD;
 An honest^a weight pleases Him.
 2 When arrogance appears, disgrace follows,
 But wisdom is with those who are unassuming.
 3 The integrity of the upright guides them;
 The deviousness of the treacherous leads them to ruin.
 4 Wealth is of no avail on the day of wrath,
 But righteousness saves from death.
 5 The righteousness of the blameless man smooths his way,
 But the wicked man is felled by his wickedness.
 6 The righteousness of the upright saves them,
 But the treacherous are trapped by their malice.
 7 At death the hopes of a wicked man are doomed,
 And the ambition of evil men comes to nothing.
 8 The righteous man is rescued from trouble
 And the wicked man takes his place.
 9 The impious man destroys his neighbor through
 speech,
 But through their knowledge the righteous are rescued.

tute the observation teaches a moral lesson, stated explicitly elsewhere: the need of the poor for special protection. Cf. 14.20–21, 31; 19.17; 22.22–23; 23.10–11; 28.27. 18–21: Wise speech and foolish speech. 22: This proverb reminds a person to give credit for his successes to God, not to his own talents. It also teaches that, although diligence and energetic work are prized, excessive straining for wealth is useless. 23: The fool enjoys causing trouble. The sensible man gets his pleasure from wisdom. Wisdom is a source of delight to God Himself (8.30). 24: Cf. 1.27. 26: Messengers—meaning anyone who is sent out on a task for someone else—were crucial in the ancient world. Communication at a distance, including business and diplomatic dealings, required sending messengers on one's behalf. See also 13.17; 22.21; 25.13; 26.6. 28: Cf. 10.24. 29: God's way—His characteristic behavior—has a two-pronged effect, protecting the innocent and ruining evildoers (cf. Hos. 14.10). 30: See 2.21–22. 11.1: By nicking off a bit of the balance stone when measuring grain, a merchant could inflate the payment he was receiving, and by using a heavier stone when measuring the silver, he could make the payment seem less than it was really worth. The stability of commerce depends on reliable weights. God demands them (20.10). In fact, He is the source of the standards of weights and measures (16.11). Cf. Lev. 19.36; Deut. 25.15; Mic. 6.11; Amemope §§16, 17 (AEL 2.156–57). 2: Cf. 13.10; 16.6, 18; 29.23. 4: Cf. 10.2 and Ezek. 7.19a. 7: Ambition of evil men, rather, “expectation of (procreative) strength.” The threat implied in this proverb, then, is the loss of family continuity and the sort of permanence this was thought to provide. 8: This returns to the theme of vv. 4–6. The traditional Jewish commentators often adduce Haman (Esth. 7.10; 9.24–25) as a satisfying instance of this doctrine.

^a Lit. “whole.”

10 When the righteous prosper the city exults;
 When the wicked perish there are shouts of joy.
 11 A city is built up by the blessing of the upright,
 But it is torn down by the speech of the wicked.
 12 He who speaks contemptuously of his fellowman is devoid of sense;
 A prudent man keeps his peace.
 13 A base fellow gives away secrets,
 But a trustworthy soul keeps a confidence.
 14 For want of strategy an army falls,
 But victory comes with much planning.
 15 Harm awaits him who stands surety for another;^a
 He who spurns pledging shall be secure.
 16 A graceful woman obtains honor;
 Ruthless men obtain wealth.
 17 A kindly man benefits himself;
 A cruel man makes trouble for himself.
 18 The wicked man earns illusory wages,
 But he who sows righteousness has a true reward.
 19 Righteousness is a prop of life,
 But to pursue evil leads to death.
 20 Men of crooked mind are an abomination to the
 LORD,
 But those whose way is blameless please Him.
 21 Assuredly,^b the evil man will not escape,
 But the offspring of the righteous will be safe.
 22 Like a gold ring in the snout of a pig
 Is a beautiful woman bereft of sense.
 23 What the righteous desire can only be good;
 What the wicked hope for [stirs] wrath.
 24 One man gives generously and ends with more; Another stints on doing the right thing and incurs
 a loss.
 25 A generous person enjoys prosperity;
 He who satisfies others shall himself be sated.
 26 He who withholds grain earns the curses of the
 people,
 But blessings are on the head of the one who dispenses it.
 27 He who earnestly seeks what is good pursues
 what is pleasing;
 He who is bent on evil, upon him it shall come.
 28 He who trusts in his wealth shall fall,
 But the righteous shall flourish like foliage.

10–12: The effect people have on their fellow citizens, particularly by their speech. 14: Cf. 20.18. These appreciative assessments of the value of advisers and planners must come from one of their number. 15: See 6.1–5 n.; 20.16 n. 16: We should probably emend ruthless (“aritzim”) to “diligent” (“harutzim”), following the ancient Greek translation. 20: See 3.32. 22: Like an elegant ornament, beauty—fine in itself—becomes ludicrous when attached to a foolish woman. This may be applied to anything which is externally attractive but intrinsically of low value. 24: Literally: “There is one who scatters yet gets more, and one who saves out of honesty yet ends up in need.” The point of this paradox is that we should not admire the rich or despise the poor, because sometimes deeds and efforts do not produce the expected reward. The NJPS translation reflects a traditional moralizing interpretation, which understood the first line to refer to a man who gives charity (Midr. Prov.). 26: One who withholds grain in time of famine (as Joseph did, Gen. 47.13–26) in order to keep its price high will be despised by his countrymen. 27: A summary of vv. 24a, 25–26. 28: Cf. 10.2 and 11.4.

^a Or “a stranger.”

^b Lit. “Hand to hand”; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

29 He who makes trouble for his household shall inherit the wind;
A fool is a slave to the wise-hearted.
30 The fruit of the righteous is a tree of life;
A wise man captivates people.
31 If the righteous on earth get their deserts,
How much more the wicked man and the sinner.

12 He who loves discipline loves knowledge;
He who spurns reproof is a brutish man.
2 A good man earns the favor of the LORD,
A man of intrigues, His condemnation.
3 A man cannot be established in wickedness,
But the root of the righteous will not be shaken loose.
4 A capable wife is a crown for her husband,
But an incompetent one is like rot in his bones.
5 The purposes of the righteous are justice,
The schemes of the wicked are deceit.
6 The words of the wicked are a deadly ambush,
But the speech of the upright saves them.
7 Overturn the wicked and they are gone,
But the house of the righteous will endure.
8 A man is commended according to his intelligence;
A twisted mind is held up to contempt.
9 Better to be lightly esteemed and have a servant
Than to put on airs and have no food.
10 A righteous man knows the needs of his beast,
But the compassion of the wicked is cruelty.
11 He who tills his land shall have food in plenty,
But he who pursues vanities is devoid of sense.
12 ^aThe wicked covet the catch of evil men;
The root of the righteous yields [fruit].^a 13 Sinful speech is a trap for the evil man,
But the righteous escapes from trouble.
14 A man gets his fill of good from the fruit of his speech;
One is repaid in kind for one's deeds.
15 The way of a fool is right in his own eyes;
But the wise man accepts advice.
16 A fool's vexation is known at once,
But a clever man conceals his humiliation.
17 He who testifies faithfully tells the truth,
But a false witness, deceit.

29: A trouble-making son will inherit nothing. The family slave will do better than him; cf. 17.2. 12.1: Sometimes even the wise require reproof, but they, unlike the fools, know enough to appreciate it. 4: The capable woman is praised at length in 31.10–31. 6: The scenario in 1.8–19 illustrates this verse. 7: When disaster strikes, the wicked are the first to disappear; cf. 10.25a. 9: In some circumstances, material debasement is worse than lack of prestige. 10: The Bible shows concern for animals. See also Exod. 22.29; 23.19; 34.26; Lev. 22.27, 28; Deut. 14.21; 22.6; 25.4. 11: Cf. 28.19. 15: It is wise to take counsel (v. 15b). The fool is too smug to do so (v. 15a).

12.16–23: Proverbs on speech, advocating restraint, honesty, and gentleness.

^{a-a} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

18 There is blunt talk like sword-thrusts,
 But the speech of the wise is healing.
 19 Truthful speech abides forever,
 A lying tongue for but a moment.
 20 Deceit is in the minds of those who plot evil;
 For those who plan good there is joy.
 21 No harm befalls the righteous,
 But the wicked have their fill of misfortune.
 22 Lying speech is an abomination to the LORD,
 But those who act faithfully please Him.
 23 A clever man conceals what he knows,
 But the mind of a dullard cries out folly.
 24 The hand of the diligent wields authority;
 The negligent are held in subjection.
 25 If there is anxiety in a man's mind let him quash it,
 And turn it into joy with a good word.
 26 A righteous man ^agives his friend direction,^a
 But the way of the wicked leads astray.
 27 A negligent man never has game to roast;
^aA diligent man has precious wealth.^a 28 The road of righteousness leads to life;
 By way of its path there is no death.

13 A wise son—it is through the discipline of his father;
 A scoffer—he never heard reproof.
 2 A man enjoys good from the fruit of his speech;
 But out of the throat of the treacherous comes lawlessness.
 3 He who guards his tongue^b preserves his life;
 He who opens wide his lips, it is his ruin.
 4 A lazy man craves, but has nothing;
 The diligent shall feast on rich fare.
 5 A righteous man hates lies;
 The wicked man is vile and disgraceful.
 6 Righteousness protects him whose way is
 blameless;
 Wickedness subverts the sinner.
 7 One man pretends to be rich and has nothing;
 Another professes to be poor and has much wealth.
 8 Riches are ransom for a man's life,
 The poor never heard a reproof.
 9 The light of the righteous is radiant;
 The lamp of the wicked is extinguished.

18: Though truth, even when critical, is essential (v. 22), it should be cushioned by being expressed in gentle terms (15.1). 21: An assertion about how things usually work, not an absolute statement.

12.24–16.9: More contrasts.
 12.24: Cf. 17.2. 25–26: Obscure.
 27: The deceitful man may cheat and “hunt” others, but he will get no benefit from his gains. 28: The second line was traditionally understood as affirming immortality. But the Heb is obscure, and even if this translation is correct, it could imply the avoidance of a premature death. 13.2–3: Speech, lit. “mouth.” Throat, Heb “nefesh,” also means “person” or “emotion.” Cf. 12.14a and 18.20a. 7: This insight into human character derides phonies and indirectly warns the reader to avoid pretensions. 8: Contrary to 11.4, people sometimes can save themselves by money. A “ransom” is money paid to get out of trouble. V. 8b is puzzling. 9: Light or lamp are metaphors for life itself but also for the quality of life; cf. Job 18.5–6. Darkness is misery.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Lit. “mouth.”

10 *Arrogance yields nothing but strife;^a Wisdom belongs to those who seek advice.
 11 Wealth may dwindle to less than nothing,
 But he who gathers little by little increases it.
 12 Hope deferred sickens the heart,
 But desire realized is a tree of life.
 13 He who disdains a precept will be injured thereby;
 He who respects a command will be rewarded.
 14 The instruction of a wise man is a fountain of life,
 Enabling one to avoid deadly snares.
 15 Good sense wins favor;
 The way of treacherous men is unchanging.^b
 16 Every clever man acts knowledgeably,
 But a dullard exposes his stupidity.
 17 Harm befalls a wicked messenger;
 A faithful courier brings healing.
 18 Poverty and humiliation are for him who spurns discipline;
 But he who takes reproof to heart gets honor.
 19 Desire realized is sweet to the soul;
 To turn away from evil is abhorrent to the stupid.
 20 He who keeps company with the wise becomes wise,
 But he who consorts with dullards comes to grief.
 21 Misfortune pursues sinners,
 But the righteous are well rewarded.
 22 A good man has what to bequeath to his grandchildren,
 For the wealth of sinners is stored up for the righteous.
 23 The tillage of the poor yields much food;
 But substance is swept away for lack of moderation.
 24 He who spares the rod hates his son,
 But he who loves him disciplines him early.
 25 The righteous man eats to his heart's content,
 But the belly of the wicked is empty.

14 The wisest of women builds her house,
 But folly tears it down with its own hands.
 2 He who maintains his integrity fears the LORD;
 A man of devious ways scorns Him.
 3 In the mouth of a fool is a rod of haughtiness,
 But the lips of the wise protect them.
 4 If there are no oxen the crib is clean,

11: It is a mistake to try to get rich too quickly; see 10.22; 20.21; 28.20, 22. 12: The tree of life represents a source of health and vitality (see 3.18). 13-14: Precept (lit. "word") and command refer to the teachings of the wise. These save lives by steering people away from deadly temptations. 17: See 10.26 n. 23: Moderation, rather, "justice" (Heb "mishpat"). A poor man's plot of land can supply his needs, but this is lost when injustice is rife. 24: A paradox: a harshness inspired by love, a leniency motivated by hatred. A lax parent is treating his son as if he hated him. See also 23.13-14; 29.17. 25: Cf. 10.3; 13.2, 4, 12, 19. Corporal punishment was common in the pre-modern world. 14.1: Folly, a foolish woman. 3: The speech of the wise can protect them against the pain caused by haughty, arrogant words. Cf. 12.6. 4: Clean, that is, empty of produce. It is a good idea to invest in farming "equipment."

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Or "harsh."

But a rich harvest comes through the strength of the ox.

5 An honest witness will not lie;

A false witness testifies lies.

6 A scoffer seeks wisdom in vain,

But knowledge comes easily to the intelligent
man.

7 Keep your distance from a dullard,

For you will not learn wise speech.

8 It is the wisdom of a clever man to understand his course;

But the stupidity of the dullard is delusion.

9 Reparations mediate between fools,

Between the upright, good will.

10 The heart alone knows its bitterness,

And no outsider can share in its joy.

11 The house of the wicked will be demolished,

But the tent of the upright will flourish.

12 A road may seem right to a man,

But in the end it is a road to death.

13 The heart may ache even in laughter,

And joy may end in grief.

14 An unprincipled man reaps the fruits of his ways;

^aA good man, of his deeds.^a

15 A simple person believes anything;

A clever man ponders his course.

16 A wise man is diffident and shuns evil,

But a dullard rushes in confidently.

17 An impatient man commits folly;

A man of intrigues will be hated.

18 Folly is the lot of the simple,

But clever men ^bglory in knowledge.^b

19 Evil men are brought low before the good,

So are the wicked at the gates of the righteous.

20 A pauper is despised even by his peers,

But a rich man has many friends.

21 He who despises his fellow is wrong;

He who shows pity for the lowly is happy.

22 Surely those who plan evil go astray,

While those who plan good earn steadfast love.

23 From all toil there is some gain,

But idle chatter is pure loss.

24 The ornament of the wise is their wealth;

The stupidity of dullards is stupidity.

25 A truthful witness saves lives;

He who testifies lies [spreads] deceit.

6: A scoffer might desire wisdom in the sense of learning or cunning, but he does not have the ability to acquire it. Only one with the right mind-set can do so.

9: Better: "Fools scorn a guilt offering, but the upright find acceptance." Fools lack the humility to admit their guilt and to bring an offering to expiate it. 10: No one can truly understand what another is feeling. This is restated in v. 13a.

16-17: Exercise caution and avoid impulsiveness; similarly v. 29.

20-21: V. 21 seems to respond to the rather cynical observation of v. 20.

^{a-a} Taking 'al as from 'll; cf. Hos. 12.3. ^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

26 Fear of the LORD is a stronghold,
A refuge for a man's children.
27 Fear of the LORD is a fountain of life,
Enabling one to avoid deadly snares.
28 A numerous people is the glory of a king;
Without a nation a ruler is ruined.
29 Patience results in much understanding;
Impatience gets folly as its portion.
30 A calm disposition gives bodily health;
Passion is rot to the bones.
31 He who withholds what is due to the poor affronts his Maker;
He who shows pity for the needy honors Him.
32 The wicked man is felled by his own evil;
The righteous man finds security in his death.
33 Wisdom rests quietly in the mind of a prudent man,
But among dullards it makes itself known.
34 Righteousness exalts a nation;
Sin is a reproach to any people.
35 The king favors a capable servant;
He rages at an incompetent one.

15 A gentle response allays wrath;
A harsh word provokes anger.
2 The tongue of the wise produces much
knowledge,
But the mouth of dullards pours out folly.
3 The eyes of the LORD are everywhere,
Observing the bad and the good.
4 A healing tongue is a tree of life,
But a devious one makes for a broken spirit.
5 A fool spurns the discipline of his father,
But one who heeds reproof becomes clever.
6 In the house of the righteous there is much treasure,
But in the harvest of the wicked there is trouble.
7 The lips of the wise disseminate knowledge;
Not so the minds of dullards.
8 The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to
the LORD,
But the prayer of the upright pleases Him.
9 The way of the wicked is an abomination to the
LORD,
But He loves him who pursues righteousness.
10 Discipline seems bad to him who forsakes the way;
He who spurns reproof will die.
11 Sheol and Abaddon lie exposed to the LORD,
How much more the minds of men!

26: A man's righteousness benefits his children as well; cf. 20.6.
27: For a contrasting notion, see 13.14, "The instruction of a wise man is a fountain of life, enabling one to avoid deadly snares." The difference between these two proverbs highlights the way that the book has ultimately combined largely secular ("the instruction of a wise man") and religious notions ("Fear of the LORD"). 30: Passion, rather, "jealousy." 31: The poor too are God's handiwork (22.2). As such they are worthy of respect, and mistreating them is an affront to their creator. 32: In the second line, we should probably read "betumo," "in his innocence," for "bemoto," in his death. 33: The wise man's wisdom is evident even when he is in a crowd of fools. 15.3: This verse attributes "geographical omniscience" to God, namely that He sees everything everywhere, but does not suggest that God is omniscient in the sense that He knows the future. 4: A healing tongue, see 15.1. Tree of life, see 3.18. A devious tongue disheartens others. Dishonesty is depressing. 5: The humility to accept chastisement is crucial to learning. See 1.7; 5.12; 6.23; 8.33. 6: The righteous get rich. The wicked too might get rich, but their prosperity will be tainted by strife and worry; see 10.24. 8: Sacrifices and prayers must be accompanied by ethical behavior; see, e.g., 21.3; 1 Sam. 15.22b; Isa. 1.10-17; 29.12; Amos 5.21-25; Mic. 6.6-8. 11: God sees everything, even hidden thoughts; see v. 3. Abaddon, lit. "place of destruction," a term found only in wisdom literature (e.g., Job 26.6; 31.12; Ps. 88.12 [translated "place of perdition"]); see also 27.20. Synonymous with Sheol, it is the realm of the dead.

12 The scoffer dislikes being reproved;
 He will not resort to the wise.
 13 A joyful heart makes a cheerful face;
 A sad heart makes a despondent mood.
 14 The mind of a prudent man seeks knowledge;
 The mouth of the dullard pursues folly.
 15 All the days of a poor man are wretched,
 But contentment is a feast without end.
 16 Better a little with fear of the LORD
 Than great wealth with confusion.
 17 Better a meal of vegetables where there is love
 Than a fattened ox where there is hate.
 18 A hot-tempered man provokes a quarrel;
 A patient man calms strife.
 19 The way of a lazy man is like a hedge of thorns,
 But the path of the upright is paved.
 20 A wise son makes his father happy;
 A fool of a man humiliates his mother.
 21 Folly is joy to one devoid of sense;
 A prudent man walks a straight path.
 22 Plans are foiled for want of counsel,
 But they succeed through many advisers.
 23 A ready response is a joy to a man,
 And how good is a word rightly timed!
 24 For an intelligent man the path of life leads upward,
 In order to avoid Sheol below.
 25 The LORD will tear down the house of the proud,
 But He will establish the homestead of the widow.
 26 Evil thoughts are an abomination to the LORD,
 But pleasant words are pure.
 27 He who pursues ill-gotten gain makes trouble for his household;
 He who spurns gifts will live long.
 28 The heart^a of the righteous man rehearses his answer,
 But the mouth of the wicked blurts out evil things.
 29 The LORD is far from the wicked,
 But He hears the prayer of the righteous.
 30 What brightens the eye gladdens the heart;
 Good news puts fat on the bones.
 31 He whose ear heeds the discipline of life
 Lodges among the wise.
 32 He who spurns discipline hates himself;
 He who heeds reproof gains understanding.
 33 The fear of the LORD is the discipline of wisdom;
 Humility precedes honor.

13: One's emotions are visible on his face and in his demeanor (mood, lit. "spirit"). 15: To be sure, the days of a poor man are (objectively) wretched—that is a fact of life—but if he has inner happiness, he enjoys, as it were, an unending feast. This is confirmed by the next verse. 16–17: This pair of sayings probably derives from the Egyptian sage Amenemope, who said, "Better is poverty in the hand of the god than wealth in the storehouse. Better is bread with a happy heart than wealth with vexation" (§6; AEL 2.152). 20: See 10.1. 21: The perverse values of the fool; see 9.7–8. 22: This saying shows an appreciation of collective, cooperative wisdom; see 24.6. 23: A word rightly timed (lit. "a word in its time"), which meets the needs of the particular situation, is satisfying to both speaker and listener. 24: See 2.18–19; 7.27; 15.19. 25: Homestead, lit. "boundary." God will protect the widow's property from encroachments by the greedy. At the same time, it is forbidden to attempt such encroachments (22.28; 23.10). A widow without grown sons had a precarious legal status in ancient Israel because only adult males had independent access to the courts. 30: What brightens the eye, lit. "brightness of eye," an event or report that makes one happy. Fat or "moist" bones were identified with health. 31–33: The importance of being receptive to correction; see 3.11–12. 16.1: Though one may plan what he wants to say, God determines what will actually come out; cf. v. 9. These verses highlight divine omnipotence rather than divine omniscience. 2: Motives, lit. "hearts," that is, thoughts. One may smugly imagine that all his deeds are pure (14.12), but God sees deeper. Cf. 21.2; 1 Sam. 16.7. 3: Once one has done his work and applied his wisdom to his practical affairs, he should leave the outcome to God and trust that the results will be appropriate. 4: We would expect a proverb to say that God made the evil day (that is, a time of troubles) for the

^a For leb as a source of speech, see note to Eccl. 5.1.

16 A man may arrange his thoughts,
 But what he says depends on the LORD.
 2 All the ways of a man seem right to him,
 But the LORD probes motives.
 3 Entrust your affairs to the LORD,
 And your plans will succeed.
 4 The LORD made everything for a purpose,
 Even the wicked for an evil day.
 5 Every haughty person is an abomination to the
 LORD;
 Assuredly,^a he will not go unpunished.
 6 Iniquity is expiated by loyalty and faithfulness,
 And evil is avoided through fear of the LORD.
 7 When the LORD is pleased with a man's conduct,
 He may turn even his enemies into allies.
 8 Better a little with righteousness
 Than a large income with injustice.
 9 A man may plot out his course,
 But it is the LORD who directs his steps.
 10 There is magic on the lips of the king;
 He cannot err in judgment.
 11 Honest scales and balances are the LORD's;
 All the weights in the bag are His work.
 12 Wicked deeds are an abomination to kings,
 For the throne is established by righteousness.
 13 Truthful speech wins the favor of kings;
 They love those who speak honestly.
 14 The king's wrath is a messenger of death,
 But a wise man can appease it.
 15 The king's smile means life;
 His favor is like a rain cloud in spring.
 16 How much better to acquire wisdom than gold;
 To acquire understanding is preferable to silver.
 17 The highway of the upright avoids evil;
 He who would preserve his life watches his way.
 18 Pride goes before ruin,
 Arrogance, before failure.
 19 Better to be humble and among the lowly
 Than to share spoils with the proud.
 20 He who is adept in a matter will attain success;
 Happy is he who trusts in the LORD.
 21 The wise-hearted is called discerning;
 One whose speech is pleasing gains wisdom.

purpose of punishing the wicked. This verse turns things around and says that God made the evil man so that the evil day will have someone to punish. 7: God protects a righteous man by encompassing him in a sphere of peace. 8: Cf. 15.16. 9: Whatever a man's plans, it is God who determines the outcome. See v. 1.

16.10–15: The king's powers and responsibilities. Sayings that declare the king's powers and righteousness hold a mirror up to the monarch and set forth an ideal for him to emulate. On the king's power, see 19.12; 20.2; 24.21. On his righteousness, see 20.8, 26, 28; 22.11; 29.4, 14. Though Proverbs holds kings and rulers in highest esteem, it does not assume that they are inevitably righteous (see 28.15). The concern with royal matters is a very significant theme in some Egyptian wisdom books, which often focus on training royal officials, but it is highlighted less in Proverbs. 10b: Rather: "No one can defy his command." 11: See 11.1. 12: This proverb seems meant for the attention of a king or prince. 14–15: These proverbs speak to someone, such as a royal scribe, who might find himself close enough to the king to dread his wrath or benefit from his favor. Cf. Eccl. 8.1–5; 10.4.

16.16–17.28: Further maxims. 16.16: See 8.10. 17–20: Pride versus trust in God. 18: Goes before means "precedes." An arrogant overconfidence in one's abilities to control his fate prepares the way for disaster. 21–24: Wise and gracious behavior is also effective. 21: Gains wisdom, or "increases learning," i.e., teaches others effectively.

^a Lit. "Hand to hand"; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

22 Good sense is a fountain of life to those who have
it,
And folly is the punishment of fools.
23 The mind of the wise man makes his speech effective
And increases the wisdom on his lips.
24 Pleasant words are like a honeycomb,
Sweet to the palate and a cure for the body.
25 A road may seem right to a man,
But in the end it is a road to death.
26 The appetite of a laborer labors for him,
Because his hunger^a ^bforces him on.^b

27 A scoundrel plots^c evil;
What is on his lips is like a scorching fire.
28 A shifty man stirs up strife,
And a querulous one alienates his friend.
29 A lawless man misleads his friend,
Making him take the wrong way.
30 He closes his eyes while meditating deception;
He purses his lips while deciding upon evil.

31 Gray hair is a crown of glory;
It is attained by the way of righteousness.
32 Better to be forbearing than mighty,
To have self-control than to conquer a city.
33 Lots are cast into the lap;
The decision depends on the LORD.

17 Better a dry crust with peace
Than a house full of feasting with strife.
2 A capable servant will dominate an incompetent
son
And share the inheritance with the brothers.
3 For silver—the crucible;
For gold—the furnace,
And the LORD tests the mind.
4 An evildoer listens to mischievous talk;
A liar gives ear to malicious words.
5 He who mocks the poor affronts his Maker;
He who rejoices over another’s misfortune will not go unpunished.
6 Grandchildren are the crown of their elders,
And the glory of children is their parents.
7 Lofty words are not fitting for a villain;
Much less lying words for a great man.

25: People can be deluded about the quality of their own behavior. See 16.2. 26: Hunger, lit. “mouth.” Cf. Eccl. 6.7. 27–30: Three types of evildoers and their harmful speech. 27: The word translated plots is “koreh,” lit. “digs,” or “mines.” The metaphor is of a smelting furnace, which is hot and dangerous. 29–30: Compare the body language of the scoundrel in 6.13. His intentions are supposedly readable in his facial expression. 31: Righteousness is supposed to be the path to a long life. Hence old age is an indicator of virtue, though not an absolute one. 33: The casting of lots was a widespread means of divination in the ancient world. In one form, names, or “yes” and “no,” would be written on stones, which were shaken till one fell out. This was thought to indicate what God wanted. Some suggest that the priestly Urim and Thummim (see Exod. 28.30) were lots, and the answering of yes-no questions by God in texts like Judg. 20.28 likely reflects the casting of lots. 17.1: A house full of feasting with strife, lit. “a house full of sacrifices of strife.” When people took an animal to the Temple as a sacrifice, they brought most of the meat back home for feasting. Better a crust of bread than a luxurious banquet at which there is quarreling. See 15.16–17 n. 2: Servant is more precisely rendered “slave,” since such a person was owned by his master or at least indentured to him. A capable slave could rise to a position of responsibility in a large household, in spite of his legal inferiority. 3: A furnace tests or assays and purifies ore by heating it until the pure silver or gold melts and rises, where it can be separated from the heavier dross. The analogy, then, implies more than God’s just looking into the heart. It implies a painful test to prove the purity of the sufferer’s faithfulness. Prov. 3.12 expresses a similar idea. 4: Liars and slanderers not only speak lies and slanders, they like to hear them. 5: See 14.31 n. 6: One generation can take pride in another. 7: Lofty: better, “exces-

^a Lit. “mouth.” ^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

8 A bribe seems like a charm to him who uses it;
He succeeds at every turn.

9 He who seeks love overlooks faults,
But he who harps on a matter alienates his friend.

10 A rebuke works on an intelligent man
More than one hundred blows on a fool.

11 An evil man seeks only to rebel;
A ruthless messenger will be sent against him.
12 Sooner meet a bereaved she-bear
Than a fool with his nonsense.

13 Evil will never depart from the house
Of him who repays good with evil.
14 To start a quarrel is to open a sluice;
Before a dispute ^aflares up, ^a drop it.
15 To acquit the guilty and convict the innocent—
Both are an abomination to the LORD.

16 What good is money in the hand of a fool
To purchase wisdom, when he has no mind?
17 A friend is devoted at all times;
A brother is born to share adversity.
18 Devoid of sense is he who gives his hand
To stand surety for his fellow.
19 He who loves transgression loves strife;
He who builds a high threshold invites broken bones.

20 Man of crooked mind comes to no good,
And he who speaks duplicity falls into trouble.
21 One begets a dullard to one's own grief;
The father of a villain has no joy.

22 A joyful heart makes for ^bgood health;^b
Despondency dries up the bones.
23 The wicked man draws a bribe out of his bosom
To pervert the course of justice.
24 Wisdom lies before the intelligent man;
The eyes of the dullard range to the ends of the earth.

25 A stupid son is vexation for his father
And a heartache for the woman who bore him.
26 To punish the innocent is surely not right,
Or to flog the great for their uprightness.

27 A knowledgeable man is sparing with his words;
A man of understanding is reticent.
28 Even a fool, if he keeps silent, is deemed wise; Intelligent, if he seals his lips.

sive.” 8: This seems to praise bribes, but it probably describes a course of behavior that seems valuable but is really destructive (14.12; 16.2). 9: That is, faults or offenses of others toward oneself. 10: This proverb counterbalances the preceding by reminding us of the importance of a rebuke. See 19.11. 11: The “ruthless messenger” may be an angel, called “messenger” (“mal’akh”) in Heb. 12: Fools are not only a nuisance, they are dangerous. 16: The fool might think he can buy wisdom—whose prestige and practical advantages he might covet—but he lacks the wits (or the attitude) to receive it. 18: On the dangers of guaranteeing another’s loan, see 6.1–5 n. 19: Perhaps building a tall portal (not “threshold”) to one’s house is a metaphor for displaying arrogance. 21: See 10.1 n. 22: See 15.30. 23: The Heb probably refers to the wicked man’s taking a bribe. What is condemned is not gift giving (see 18.16) but its misuse. 24: Wisdom is near at hand, and the intelligent person sees it. The dullard, in contrast, looks for wisdom (which he might value in the form of practical cleverness) everywhere except right in front of him. 25: See 10.1. 26: The second line is better translated: “Or to strike the noble man for his honesty,” i.e., for speaking frankly. “Noble” can refer to a generous character. 27–28: The value of reserve in speech. Reticent, actually, “cool of spirit.” The wise man (in Egyptian wisdom too) is “cool,” retaining his repose and controlling his mouth even under provocation.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Or “a cheerful face”; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

18 ^aHe who isolates himself pursues his desires;
 He disdains all competence.^a 2 The fool does not desire understanding,
 But only to air his thoughts.
 3 Comes the wicked man comes derision,
 And with the rogue, contempt.
 4 The words a man speaks are deep waters,
 A flowing stream, a fountain of wisdom.
 5 It is not right to be partial to the guilty
 And subvert the innocent in judgment.
 6 The words of a fool lead to strife;
 His speech invites blows.
 7 The fool's speech is his ruin;
 His words are a trap for him.
 8 The words of a querulous man are bruising;^b
 They penetrate one's inmost parts.
 9 One who is slack in his work
 Is a brother to a vandal.
 10 The name of the LORD is a tower of strength
 To which the righteous man runs and is safe.
 11 The wealth of a rich man is his fortress;
^aIn his fancy^a it is a protective wall.
 12 Before ruin a man's heart is proud;
 Humility goes before honor.
 13 To answer a man before hearing him out
 Is foolish and disgraceful.
 14 A man's spirit can sustain him through illness;
 But low spirits—who can bear them?
 15 The mind of an intelligent man acquires
 knowledge;
 The ears of the wise seek out knowledge.
 16 A man's gift eases his way
 And gives him access to the great.
 17 The first to plead his case seems right
 Till the other party examines him.
 18 The lot puts an end to strife
 And separates those locked in dispute.
 19 A brother offended is more formidable than a stronghold;
 Such strife is like the bars of a fortress.
 20 A man's belly is filled by the fruit of his mouth;
 He will be filled by the produce of his lips.
 21 Death and life are in the power of the tongue;
 Those who love it will eat its fruit.
 22 He who finds a wife has found happiness
 And has won the favor of the LORD.

18.1–8: Maxims on speech and its potentials. 1: Obscure. 4: Human speech has the potential to be a deep fount of wisdom. 5–8: The fool's speech incites strife and thus harms both himself and others.

18.9–22.16: Further maxims.
18.9: An idler causes damage not only to himself but also to those who work with him and depend on his contribution to the enterprise. 10–11: The juxtaposition of these two antithetical proverbs may contrast real (v. 10) and delusive (v. 11) fortresses. 12: Pride leads to destructive overconfidence, whereas humility precedes and opens the way to wisdom and prudence. 14: One's frame of mind has powerful psychosomatic effects. 15: One who is truly wise continues to seek for knowledge beyond what he already has. 16: This proverb just gives practical advice. While bribes to subvert justice are condemned (17.23; Deut. 10.17; 16.19), other sorts of gifts and payments (to gain access to an official, for example) are acceptable (Prov. 18.16; 21.14). 17: A cautionary message to judges and officials: do not jump to conclusions, but wait until all the facts are before you. 18: See 16.33 n. 20–21: One bears the effects of his own words. 22: Marriage is a blessing. There may be exceptions (e.g., 19.13; 21.9, 19), but this is the rule.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

23 The poor man speaks beseechingly;
The rich man's answer is harsh.
24 There are companions to keep one company,
And there is a friend more devoted than a brother.

19 Better a poor man who lives blamelessly Than one who speaks perversely and is a dullard.

2 A person without knowledge is surely not good;
He who moves hurriedly blunders.

3 A man's folly subverts his way,
And his heart rages against the LORD.

4 Wealth makes many friends,
But a poor man loses his last friend.

5 A false witness will not go unpunished;
He who testifies lies will not escape.

6 Many court the favor of a great man,
And all are the friends of a dispenser of gifts.

7 All the brothers of a poor man despise him;
How much more is he shunned by his friends!

8 He who pursues words—they are of no avail.^a
He who acquires wisdom is his own best friend;
He preserves understanding and attains happiness.

9 A false witness will not go unpunished;
He who testifies falsely is doomed.

10 Luxury is not fitting for a dullard,
Much less that a servant rule over princes.

11 A man shows intelligence by his forbearance;
It is his glory when he overlooks an offense.

12 The rage of a king is like the roar of a lion;
His favor is like dew upon the grass.

13 A stupid son is a calamity to his father;
The nagging of a wife is like the endless dripping of water.

14 Property and riches are bequeathed by fathers,
But an efficient wife comes from the LORD.

15 Laziness induces sleep,
And a negligent person will go hungry.

16 He who has regard for his life pays regard to commandments;

He who is heedless of his ways will die.

17 He who is generous to the poor makes a loan to
the LORD;

He will repay him his due.

23: This is the way things are, not the way they should be.

24: Two levels of friendship.

19.3: People blame God for troubles they bring on themselves.

4, 6–7: Further observations on social realities, which are not always fair. A line seems to be missing before 7c, which is not balanced.

8: Wisdom, lit. "heart." "Acquiring a heart"—gaining the right mindset—is a prerequisite to gaining wisdom. 10: The Sages had a conservative view of society. While they demanded fair and compassionate treatment of the lower classes, they assumed that the structure of society as they knew it was fundamentally the right one. Hence it was thought unseemly for a servant (more precisely "slave") to rule over princes (see 30.21–22). 11: This refers to overlooking an offense against oneself (cf. 10.12). 12: An expression of awe at the power of the king; see 16.14–15; cf. 20.2. 13: This proverb does not condemn all women any more than it condemns all sons.

Like the entirety of Proverbs, however, it does evaluate relationships from the standpoint of the adult male. There is no comparable criticism about a vexatious husband, except in a general way in 11.29.

14: Counterbalancing v. 13, this proverb declares the value of a (good) wife. Cf. 31.10–31. Efficient: better, "intelligent" or "insightful."

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

18 Discipline your son while there is still hope,
 And^a do not^b set your heart on his destruction.^b
 19 A hot-tempered man incurs punishment; ^cIf you try to save him you will only make it worse.^c
 20 Listen to advice and accept discipline
 In order that you may be wise in the end.
 21 Many designs are in a man's mind,
 But it is the LORD's plan that is accomplished.
 22 ^cGreed is a reproach to a man;^c
 Better be poor than a liar.
 23 He who fears the LORD earns life;
^cHe shall abide in contentment;^c
 Free from misfortune.
 24 The lazy man buries his hand in the bowl;
 He will not even bring it to his mouth.
 25 Beat the scoffer and the simple will become clever;
 Reprove an intelligent man and he gains
 knowledge.
 26 A son who causes shame and disgrace
 Plunders his father, puts his mother to flight.
 27 My son, cease to stray from words of knowledge
 And receive discipline.
 28 A malicious witness scoffs at justice,
 And the speech of the wicked conceals mischief.
 29 Punishments are in store for scoffers
 And blows for the backs of dullards.

20 Wine is a scoffer, strong drink a roisterer;
 He who is muddled by them will not grow wise.
 2 The terror of a king is like the roar of a lion;
 He who provokes his anger risks his life.
 3 It is honorable for a man to desist from strife,
 But every fool ^cbecomes embroiled.^c
 4 In winter the lazy man does not plow;
 At harvesttime he seeks, and finds nothing.
 5 The designs in a man's mind are deep waters,
 But a man of understanding can draw them out.
 6 He calls many a man his loyal friend,
 But who can find a faithful man?
 7 The righteous man lives blamelessly;
 Happy are his children who come after him.
 8 The king seated on the throne of judgment
 Can winnow out all evil by his glance.

18: See 13.24 n. 24: A humorous picture of extreme sloth. 25: A "simple" or uneducated boy may take warning from seeing the scoffer beaten. (The scoffer himself is probably hopeless.) But verbal rebukes are enough to straighten out an intelligent person. 28: Conceals, better, "gobbles up." Mischief (or "iniquity") is the wicked person's "food." See 4.17. 29: Implicit threats like these suggest that the intended audience of the collection (but not necessarily of the individual proverbs) is a boy, a son or pupil. 20.1: Wine and strong drink (more likely, "beer") are personified, as if they were drunken men. 3: Conflicts often revolve on questions of "honor," but the true honor belongs to him who refrains from strife. 5: Deep, concealed and hard to discover. Draw . . . out or "draw up," as one draws water. 6: He, indefinite: "a man." 8: The royal ideal.

a Or "But."

b-b Or "pay attention to his moaning."

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

9 Who can say, "I have cleansed my heart,
 I am purged of my sin"^a?
 10 False weights and false measures,
 Both are an abomination to the LORD.
 11 A child may be dissembling in his behavior
 Even though his actions are blameless and proper.
 12 The ear that hears, the eye that sees—
 The LORD made them both.
 13 Do not love sleep lest you be impoverished;
 Keep your eyes open and you will have plenty of food.
 14 "Bad, bad," says the buyer,
 But having moved off, he congratulates himself.
 15 Gold is plentiful, jewels abundant,
 But wise speech is a precious object.
 16 Seize his garment, for he stood surety for another;^a Take it as a pledge, [for he stood surety] for an unfamiliar woman.
 17 Bread gained by fraud may be tasty to a man,
 But later his mouth will be filled with gravel.
 18 Plans laid in council will succeed;
 Wage war with stratagems.
 19 He who gives away secrets is a base fellow;
 Do not take up with a garrulous man.
 20 One who reviles his father or mother,
 Light will fail him when darkness comes.
 21 An estate acquired in haste at the outset
 Will not be blessed in the end.
 22 Do not say, "I will requite evil";
 Put your hope in the LORD and He will deliver
 you.
 23 False weights are an abomination to the LORD;
 Dishonest scales are not right.
 24 A man's steps are decided by the LORD;
 What does a man know about his own way?
 25 It is a snare for a man ^bto pledge a sacred gift rashly^b
 And to give thought to his vows only after they have been made.
 26 A wise king winnows out the wicked,
 And turns the wheel upon them.
 27 The lifebreath of man is the lamp of the LORD
 Revealing all his inmost parts.
 28 Faithfulness and loyalty protect the king;
 He maintains his throne by faithfulness.

9: No human is free of inner sins. This may respond to the perhaps too reverent view of the king in v. 8. 10: See 11.1 and cf. Deut. 25.13. An ephah was the most common dry measure, about 23 liters (21 qts). 11: An observation of human nature. 12: God gave humans these faculties, which are the sources of wisdom, so He certainly wants them used. 14: Dissembling is common both in the market and in life in general. 16: These are the words the lender might say when a man guaranteed the loan of a stranger, who then defaulted. See 6.1–5. The "garment" is a large cloak that one could wear in the cold and wrap himself in at night. Its importance is shown by the fact that Torah (Exod. 22.25–26; Deut. 24.12–13) requires that a garment given in pledge be returned each evening so its owner could use it. 17: Stolen pleasures have a special—and deceptive—tang; see 9.17b. 18: Better, "Plans made with counsel." Plans made in group deliberation are more effective. See 11.14; 24.6. 20: Light will fail may imply that such a man will leave no children of his own when he dies. 21: See 10.22. 24: Expressions of humility such as this saying counterbalance the confident assumption, expressed in numerous proverbs, that humans can determine the course of their lives by choosing the right path. The notion of divine inscrutability informs other ancient Near Eastern wisdom literature as well, and may be a main theme of the LORD's speeches in Job chs 38–41. 25: Vows were taken very seriously; see Lev. 27.28–29; Eccl. 5.3–5. The Rabbis discouraged the making of vows but also developed legal means for releasing people from precipitous vows. One formula for this is retained in the Kol Nidre ("All vows," an early medieval prayer on the eve of Yom Kippur for the nullification of vows). 26: Winnows: Wheat was thrown in the air so that the wind would blow away the useless chaff and leave the good grain. A heavy wheel was rolled over grain to crack the husk. 27: The breath that

^a Or "a stranger."

^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

29 The glory of youths is their strength;
The majesty of old men is their gray hair.
30 Bruises and wounds are repayment^a for evil,
Striking at one's inmost parts.

21 Like channeled water is the mind of the king in the LORD's hand;
He directs it to whatever He wishes.
2 All the ways of a man seem right to him,
But the LORD probes the mind.
3 To do what is right and just
Is more desired by the LORD than sacrifice.
4 Haughty looks, a proud heart—
The tillage of the wicked is sinful.
5 The plans of the diligent make only for gain;
All rash haste makes only for loss.
6 Treasures acquired by a lying tongue
^bAre like driven vapor, heading for extinction.^b
7 The violence of the wicked sweeps them away,
For they refuse to act justly.
8 The way of a man may be tortuous and strange,
Though his actions are blameless and proper.
9 Dwelling in the corner of a roof is better
Than a contentious wife in a ^bspacious house.^b
10 The desire of the wicked is set upon evil;
His fellowman finds no favor in his eyes.
11 When a scoffer is punished, the simple man is edified;
When a wise man is taught, he gains insight.
12 The Righteous One observes the house of the wicked man;
He subverts the wicked to their ruin.
13 Who stops his ears at the cry of the wretched,
He too will call and not be answered.
14 A gift in secret subdues anger,
A present in private, fierce rage.
15 Justice done is a joy to the righteous,
To evildoers, ruination.
16 A man who strays from the path of prudence
Will rest in the company of ghosts.
17 He who loves pleasure comes to want;
He who loves wine and oil does not grow rich.
18 The wicked are the ransom of the righteous;
The traitor comes in place of the upright.
19 It is better to live in the desert
Than with a contentious, vexatious wife.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

gives man life illuminates the depths of the human soul. The concept behind this is not clear. 29: This expresses appreciation for the glories of both youth and old age, the sign of which is gray hair. Old age was something to take pride in, for it implied (in the Sages' view) both a successful life and the wisdom of years. 21.1: The king's intentions are under God's control and thus express his will. Channeled water is used in irrigation and is productive. This proverb expresses great esteem for kingship. See 16.10–15 n. 2: God perceives a human's subconscious intentions, possibly finding (and judging) unworthy attitudes that even their possessor is unaware of. 3: Cf. 15.8; contrast 21.27. 4: The tillage of the wicked—what they produce—is “sin” (rather than sinful). 5: Cf. 19.2; 28.20. 6: Wealth acquired dishonestly is both ephemeral and deadly. Heading for extinction should be emended to “deadly snares.” 8: Strange and even circuitous behavior is not always immoral. 11: He in the second line is probably the simple man (actually “simple one,” probably meaning a boy). The simple, callow boy can learn by observing how others are “taught,” each in his own way; cf. 19.25. 13: If one ignores the suffering of others, God will ignore his cry when he gets into trouble. 14: Present, more precisely, “bribe.” Gifts or bribes were acceptable, even recommended, if the intention was good; see 18.16 n. Gifts might be used to placate an angry official or a man who considered himself wronged. 17: Pleasure refers to feasting. One who loves sybaritic pleasures too much will squander his time and his money. 18: The underlying notion is that when God is angry (at a nation, for example), His anger is assuaged by the punishment of the wicked. They take the place of the upright, who might otherwise have suffered in the general catastrophe. Cf. 11.8. 19: See 19.13. 22: The power of wisdom in war; see 16.32; 24.6; contrast 21.31. 23: The importance

20 Precious treasure and oil are in the house of the wise man,
And a fool of a man will run through them.
21 He who strives to do good and kind deeds
Attains life, success, and honor.
22 One wise man prevailed over a city of warriors
And brought down its mighty stronghold.
23 He who guards his mouth and tongue
Guards himself from trouble.
24 The proud, insolent man, scoffer is his name,
Acts in a frenzy of insolence.
25 The craving of a lazy man kills him,
For his hands refuse to work.
26 All day long he is seized with craving
While the righteous man gives without stint.
27 The sacrifice of the wicked man is an abomination,
The more so as he offers it in depravity.
28 A false witness is doomed,
But one who really heard will testify with success.
29 The wicked man is brazen-faced;
The upright man discerns his course.
30 No wisdom, no prudence, and no counsel
Can prevail against the LORD.
31 The horse is readied for the day of battle,
But victory comes from the LORD.

22 Repute is preferable to great wealth,
Grace is better than silver and gold.
2 Rich man and poor man meet;
The LORD made them both.
3 The shrewd man saw trouble and took cover;
The simple kept going and paid the penalty.
4 The effect of humility is fear of the LORD,
Wealth, honor, and life.
5 Thorns and snares are in the path of the crooked;
He who values his life will keep far from them.
6 Train a lad in the way he ought to go;
He will not swerve from it even in old age.
7 The rich rule the poor,
And the borrower is a slave to the lender.
8 He who sows injustice shall reap misfortune;
His rod of wrath shall fail.
9 The generous man is blessed,
For he gives of his bread to the poor.
10 Expel the scoffer and contention departs, Quarrel and contumely cease.

of controlling one's speech, to avoid blurting out offensive or stupid things; see 4.23. 25–26: These sayings are linked by the word craving, but they are independent thoughts. The lazy man is wracked with his appetites, but he refuses to work to satisfy them. In contrast to a greedy man, the righteous man is generous. 27: See 15.8. 30–31: No intellectual skills are effective if they are used contrary to God's will. Prudence, better, "understanding." 22.1: Grace, "good favor," the favor or esteem which others have for oneself. 2: When rich and poor come together, their differences are accentuated, and the sage does not blur them (v. 7). But they are both God's handiwork, and the rich man should keep this in mind. 7: A warning against borrowing money. 8: Rod, a flail used in threshing grain. The power of the unjust man's anger will prove ineffective. 10: The scoffer, arrogant and contemptuous of others (21.24), provokes quarrels wherever he goes.

11 A pure-hearted friend,
His speech is gracious;
He has the king for his companion.
12 The eyes of the LORD watch the wise man;
He subverts the words of the treacherous.
13 The lazy man says, "There's a lion in the street;
I shall be killed *if I step outside."^a 14 The mouth of a forbidden^b woman is a deep pit;
He who is doomed by the LORD falls into it.
15 If folly settles in the heart of a lad,
The rod of discipline will remove it.
16 To profit by withholding what is due to the poor
Is like making gifts to the rich—pure loss.

17 Incline your ear and listen to the words of the sages;
Pay attention to my wisdom.
18 It is good that you store them inside you,
And that all of them be constantly on your lips,
19 That you may put your trust in the LORD.
I let you know today—yes, you—
20 Indeed, I wrote down for you ^ca threefold lore,^c Wise counsel,
21 To let you know truly reliable words,
That you may give a faithful reply to him who sent you.
22 Do not rob the wretched because he is wretched;
Do not crush the poor man in the gate;
23 For the LORD will take up their cause
And despoil those who despoil them of life.
24 Do not associate with an irascible man,
Or go about with one who is hot-tempered,

a-a Lit. "in the square." b Lit. "strange." c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

11: The king wants honest, gracious men for his intimates. This proverb seems to be directed to someone who spends his time in the royal court. 12: The wise man, rather, "knowledge." God protects authentic knowledge and gives it success, whereas He foils the deceptions of the treacherous. 13: The lazy man finds the silliest excuses to beg off work; cf. 26.13. 14: The strange woman (see 2.16) works her seduction above all by her slippery speech. Falling into her trap is so deadly it must be reckoned a sign of divine anger. 16: Better,

"There is one who oppresses the poor, yet makes him (the poor man) profit, and there is one who gives to a rich man, yet he (the rich man) ends up lacking." This is a paradox like 13.7a, and shows that humans do not always know and control the effects of their actions.

22.17–24.22: Collection III. These are mostly admonitions ("Do not . . ."), and in contrast to the previous collection, are often longer than a single two-part verse. Many are particularly relevant to a young man looking forward to his career. They emphasize the inner virtues of humility, compassion, and serenity. Three sections (A–C) are discernible.

22.17–23.11: Collection III, section A. Since 1923 it has been recognized that 22.17–23.11 is based on the Egyptian "Instruction of Amenemope." Though there may be centuries of reworking from the time the Egyptian book was translated into the Canaanite predecessor of Hebrew, the relationship is close, and the sayings in this unit follow the order of the parallel sayings in Amenemope. In the following, the parallel passages in Amenemope are indicated by chapter number (§) and can be found for example in AEL 2.146–63. 22.17: We should read, "The words of the sages. Incline your ear and listen, pay attention to my words." By this reading, this unit too has a title, "Words of the Sages." Cf. 24.23. 17b–21: The prologue. This is similar to the prologue of Amenemope (AEL 2.148) and a sentence from its conclusion, §30. It also resembles the Calls to Attention in Proverbs 1–9. 20: A threefold lore, Heb "shalishim" means "officers," which was traditionally construed to mean "excellent things." But at the end of his book, Amenemope tells his son, "Look to these thirty chapters. They inform; they educate" (AEL 2.162). This suggests that we change the vowels of the Heb word to read "sheloshim," "thirty." There is disagreement, however, on identifying thirty proverbs in the present form of section A. 21: Amenemope's prologue promises to teach the reader "To reply to one who sends a message." Proper "replies" are a topic of special concern in Egyptian wisdom—though not in Prov. 22.17–23.11, in spite of the present verse. 22–23: The wretched man's wretchedness is a reason not to cheat him. The city gate was where disputes and legal cases were adjudicated. The poor may lack a human protector, but they have a divine one. 24: Cf. Amenemope §9. 26–27: See 6.1–5 n. Bed is a

25 Lest you learn his ways
 And find yourself ensnared.
 26 Do not be one of those who give their hand,
 Who stand surety for debts,
 27 Lest your bed be taken from under you
 When you have no money to pay.
 28 Do not remove the ancient boundary stone
 That your ancestors set up.
 29 See a man skilled at his work—
 He shall attend upon kings;
 He shall not attend upon ^aobscure men.^a

23 When you sit down to dine with a ruler,
 Consider well who is before you.
 2 Thrust a knife into your gullet
 If you have a large appetite.
 3 Do not crave for his dainties,
 For they are counterfeit food.
 4 Do not toil to gain wealth;
 Have the sense to desist.
 5 You see it, then it is gone;
 It grows wings and flies away,
 Like an eagle, heavenward.
 6 Do not eat of a stingy man’s food;
 Do not crave for his dainties;
 7 He is like one keeping accounts;
 “Eat and drink,” he says to you,
 But he does not really mean it.
 8 The morsel you eat you will vomit;
 You will waste your courteous words.
 9 Do not speak to a dullard,
 For he will disdain your sensible words.
 10 Do not remove ancient boundary stones;
 Do not encroach upon the field of orphans,
 11 For they have a mighty Kinsman,
 And He will surely take up their cause with you.
 12 Apply your mind to discipline
 And your ears to wise sayings.
 13 Do not withhold discipline from a child;
 If you beat him with a rod he will not die.
 14 Beat him with a rod
 And you will save him from the grave.

blanket or garment a person would roll up in. Though a debtor had some legal protection in this regard (see 20.16 n.), a guarantor did not. 28: Moving a boundary stone between your land and your neighbor’s was a grave offense, because it was easily done and hard to detect. See 23.10; Deut. 19.14; Amenemope §6. 29–30: This unit aims to train young men who would likely become officials, and, if very successful, might even land a job in the royal court. Cf. Amenemope §30. 23.1–3: Proper comportment at a ruler’s table: When dining with a ruler, control your appetite. A ruler may be any superior. Egyptian writings give similar instructions and show that formal dinners headed by a superior official had a role in professional life (cf. Amenemope §23). The official showed whom he favored among his underlings by giving them different size portions (see Gen. 43.34). 1: Consider well, that is, look at the portion you receive and not what others get. Thrust a knife into your gullet, control your appetite at all costs. His dainties are counterfeit food in the sense that if you fill up on them, you may find the result dissatisfying. 4–5: An extension of the principle of vv. 1–3: Do not be greedy. If you strain for wealth, it disappears. Cf. 28.20; Amenemope §7. 6–8: Dinner with a stingy man is an occasion of hypocrisy on all sides and is nauseating. 9: Some people just cannot learn; see 9.7–10. 10–11: See 22.28. Kinsman, rather, “redeemer,” one who will punish the transgressor. The redeemer was originally a kinsman who could sue on behalf of the widow and orphan in the “gate”; see 22.22–23.

23.12–35: Collection III, section B. Advice addressed to a son in an affectionate tone, emphasizing the joy parents get from wise and upright children and the misery they suffer from foolish ones. 13–14: Corporal punishment can save a child from sins that will lead to his death; see 13.24.

^{a-a} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

15 My son, if your mind gets wisdom,
 My mind, too, will be gladdened.
 16 I shall rejoice with all my heart^a
 When your lips speak right things.
 17 Do not envy sinners in your heart,
 But only God-fearing men, at all times,
 18 For then you will have a future,
 And your hope will never fail.

19 Listen, my son, and get wisdom;
 Lead your mind in a [proper] path.
 20 Do not be of those who guzzle wine,
 Or glut themselves on meat;
 21 For guzzlers and gluttons will be impoverished,
 And drowsing will clothe you in tatters.

22 Listen to your father who begot you;
 Do not disdain your mother when she is old.
 23 Buy truth and never sell it,
 And wisdom, discipline, and understanding.
 24 The father of a righteous man will exult;
 He who begets a wise son will rejoice in him.
 25 Your father and mother will rejoice;
 She who bore you will exult.
 26 Give your mind to me, my son;
 Let your eyes watch my ways.
 27 A harlot is a deep pit;
 A forbidden^b woman is a narrow well.
 28 She too lies in wait as if for prey,
 And destroys the unfaithful among men.

29 Who cries, "Woe!" who, "Alas!";
 Who has quarrels, who complaints;
 Who has wounds without cause;
 Who has bleary eyes?
 30 Those whom wine keeps till the small hours,
 Those who gather to drain the cups.
 31 Do not ogle that red wine
 As it lends its color to the cup,
 As it flows on smoothly;
 32 In the end, it bites like a snake;
 It spits like a basilisk.
 33 Your eyes will see strange sights;
 Your heart^c will speak distorted things.
 34 You will be like one lying in bed on high seas,
 Like one lying ^don top of the rigging.^d

17-18: Admire the God-fearing.
20-21: A life of dissolution and indulgence will lead to poverty.
22: Cf. 30.17. 27-28: Avoid harlots. There is a pun here: A woman's sexuality is a pit and a well. With the wrong woman, these are pit-falls (22.14). The sexuality of a man's own wife, however, is a blessed, joyous, productive well (5.15-18). 29-35: A humorous and caustic portrayal of the drunkard. He acts like a fool, staggers around in inebriation, and has a horrible hangover. But he starts again the next day.

^a Lit. "kidneys." ^b Lit. "alien."

^c See note to 15.28. ^{d-d} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

35 “They struck me, but I felt no hurt;
They beat me, but I was unaware;
As often as I wake,
I go after it again.”

24 Do not envy evil men;
Do not desire to be with them;
2 For their hearts^a talk violence,
And their lips speak mischief.

3 A house is built by wisdom,
And is established by understanding;
4 By knowledge are its rooms filled
With all precious and beautiful things.

5 A wise man is strength;
A knowledgeable man exerts power;
6 For by stratagems you wage war,
And victory comes with much planning.

7 Wisdom is too lofty for a fool;
He does not open his mouth in the gate.
8 He who lays plans to do harm
Is called by men a schemer.
9 The schemes of folly are sin,
And a scoffer is an abomination to men.

10 If you showed yourself slack in time of trouble,
Wanting in power, 11 If you refrained from rescuing those taken off to death,
Those condemned to slaughter—
12 If you say, “We knew nothing of it,” Surely He who fathoms hearts will discern [the truth],
He who watches over your life will know it,
And He will pay each man as he deserves.

13 My son, eat honey, for it is good;
Let its sweet drops be on your palate.
14 Know: such is wisdom for your soul;
If you attain it, there is a future;
Your hope will not be cut off.

15 Wicked man! Do not lurk by the home of the righteous man;
Do no violence to his dwelling.

24.1–22: Collection III, section C. Maxims mostly praising wisdom and condemning the schemes of the wicked. 1–2: Of the various dangers that evil people present, Proverbs emphasizes their bad influence on those who consort with them rather than the harm they inflict directly. 3–6: True prosperity (vv. 3–4) and strength (vv. 5–6) comes from wisdom, not from nefarious schemes and crude exercise of power. 7: The fool does not—or rather, “cannot”—open his mouth insofar as no one will pay attention to him. Gate, see 1.20–21 n. 8–9: Like folly, scheming is held in contempt. 10–12: The obligation to fight injustice: It is not enough to refrain from committing injustices; you must actively try to prevent them. Rescuing may refer to standing up for an unjustly accused defendant in a capital case. 13–14: Learning wisdom is not just a matter of hard work and harsh discipline. If pursued with love, learning is a joy. Ps. 119.103 uses similar language about Torah. 15: Wicked man looks like a pointless addition.

^a See note to 15.28.

16 Seven times the righteous man falls and gets up,
While the wicked are tripped by one misfortune.

17 If your enemy falls, do not exult;
If he trips, let your heart not rejoice,
18 Lest the LORD see it and be displeased,
And avert His wrath from him.

19 Do not be vexed by evildoers;
Do not be incensed by the wicked;
20 For there is no future for the evil man;
The lamp of the wicked goes out.

21 Fear the LORD, my son, and the king,
And do not mix with dissenters,
22 For disaster comes from them suddenly;
The doom both decree who can foreknow?

23 These also are by the sages:

It is not right to be partial in judgment.
24 He who says to the guilty, "You are innocent,"
Shall be cursed by peoples,
Damned by nations;
25 But it shall go well with them who decide justly;
Blessings of good things will light upon them.

26 Giving a straightforward reply
Is like giving a kiss.
27 Put your external affairs in order,
Get ready what you have in the field,
Then build yourself a home.
28 Do not be a witness against your fellow without good cause;
Would you mislead with your speech?
29 Do not say, "I will do to him what he did to me;
I will pay the man what he deserves."

30 I passed by the field of a lazy man,
By the vineyard of a man lacking sense.
31 It was all overgrown with thorns;
Its surface was covered with chickweed,
And its stone fence lay in ruins.
32 I observed and took it to heart;
I saw it and learned a lesson.
33 A bit more sleep, a bit more slumber,
A bit more hugging yourself in bed,

16: The righteous have a "future" (v. 14b) because they can recover from misfortune, but wickedness is a dead-end road (vv. 19–20).

17–19: God resents it when you gloat at another's suffering, even if deserved, and might punish you by failing to punish him. Cf. 25.21–22; contrast 11.10b. 21: The striking parallelism between the LORD and the king suggests that the Sages held kingship in awe and believed in the fundamental rightness of the social order as they knew it. See 16.10–15 n.

24.23–34: Collection IV. This short collection is ascribed to anonymous sages. 23–24, 28: Honesty in judgment. 25–26: Them who decide justly, or, "those who give reproof." Honest words, like kisses, are an expression of love (v. 26) and one who reproves others, though ostensibly harsh, will receive praise and good wishes in the end. 27: Lay the right groundwork for your home, and for major projects generally. 29: Do not seek revenge on your own; rather rely on God to execute justice (see 24.12b). 30–34: A little narrative illustrating the consequences of sloth. The sage passed by the field of the lazy man and saw it had gone wild. He draws a lesson by applying a proverb, vv. 33–34, which is found also in 6.10–11 (see 6.11 n.).

34 And poverty will come ^acalling upon you,^a
And want, like a man with a shield.

25 These too are proverbs of Solomon, which the men of King Hezekiah of Judah copied:

2 It is the glory of God to conceal a matter,
And the glory of a king to plumb a matter.
3 Like the heavens in their height, like the earth in its depth,
Is the mind of kings—unfathomable.
4 The dross having been separated from the silver,
A vessel emerged for the smith.
5 Remove the wicked from the king's presence,
And his throne will be established in justice.
6 Do not exalt yourself in the king's presence;
Do not stand in the place of nobles.
7 For it is better to be told, "Step up here,"
Than to be degraded in the presence of the great.

8 Do not let what your eyes have seen
Be vented rashly in a quarrel;
Think^b of what it will effect in the end,
When your fellow puts you to shame.
9 Defend your right against your fellow,
But do not give away the secrets of another,
10 Lest he who hears it reproach you,
And your bad repute never end.

11 Like golden apples in silver showpieces^c
Is a phrase well turned.
12 Like a ring of gold, a golden ornament,
Is a wise man's reproof in a receptive ear.
13 Like the coldness of snow at harvesttime
Is a trusty messenger to those who send him;
He lifts his master's spirits.
14 Like clouds, wind—but no rain—
Is one who boasts of gifts not given.
15 Through forbearance a ruler may be won over;
A gentle tongue can break bones.
16 If you find honey, eat only what you need,
Lest, surfeiting yourself, you throw it up.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Lit. "Lest." c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

25.1–29.27: Collection V. Characteristic of this collection is the frequency of proverbial comparisons in which an image (e.g., "Like clouds, wind—but no rain—" in

v. 14a) is followed by the phenomenon being described (e.g., "one who boasts of gifts not given," v. 14b). 25.1: Copied, better, "transmitted" or "collected." This shows that the royal court in Israel, as elsewhere in the ancient Near East, was one place where traditional wisdom was collected and put in writing. Hezekiah reigned from 715 to 687 BCE. These too of this superscription refers back to the superscription of the book in 1.1. 2–7: Kings and their courts. These proverbs seem to be directed at a scribe or future scribe who might work in the royal court but would not necessarily be of noble rank (v. 6). The proverbs speak of kings and their vast wisdom with reverence, even sycophancy. See 16.10–15 n. 2: It redounds to God's glory to create mysteries in the world and to the king's to investigate mysteries—not necessarily the same ones. The king would investigate matters when sitting in judgment. 3: The king's wisdom is vast and his intentions cannot be fully understood. 4–5: Just as removing dross from silver leaves pure silver, which can be made into a fine vessel, so does removing the wicked from the royal court allow the king's reign to be founded firmly on righteousness. 6–7b: This proverb instructs a young man who might become a royal scribe or official to remember his rank and not to put himself forward. 7c–10: This maxim, whose text and meaning is uncertain, apparently warns against blurting out something you know about someone else when you are in an argument with him. Preserve his secrets even when you are angry with him. If you violate his confidence, your own reputation will be harmed. 11–15: Four comparisons concerning speech. 11–12: Eloquent words—even reprimands—are like precious, well-crafted works of art. 13: The harvesttime in question is probably the wheat harvest in May-June, at which time it can be quite hot. It is refreshing to have a reliable messenger. 15: Won over, more precisely, "beguiled" or "tempted." Subtle, gentle speech has real power, even over the mighty. The second line is a paradox. 16–17: Do not overdo good things. If you wear out your welcome,

17 Visit your neighbor sparingly,
 Lest he have his surfeit of you and loathe you.
 18 Like a club, a sword, a sharpened arrow,
 Is a man who testifies falsely against his fellow.
 19 Like a loose tooth and an unsteady leg,
 Is a treacherous support in time of trouble.
 20 Disrobing on a chilly day,
 Like vinegar on natron,
 Is one who sings songs to a sorrowful soul.

21 If your enemy is hungry, give him bread to eat;
 If he is thirsty, give him water to drink.
 22 You will be heaping live coals on his head,
 And the LORD will reward you.

23 A north wind produces rain,
 And whispered words, a glowering face.
 24 Dwelling in the corner of a roof is better
 Than a contentious woman in ^aa spacious house.^a 25 Like cold water to a parched throat
 Is good news from a distant land.
 26 Like a muddied spring, a ruined fountain,
 Is a righteous man fallen before a wicked one.
 27 It is not good to eat much honey,
^aNor is it honorable to search for honor.^a 28 Like an open city without walls
 Is a man whose temper is uncurbed.

26 Like snow in summer and rain at harvesttime,
 So honor is not fitting for a dullard.
 2 As a sparrow must flit and a swallow fly,
 So a gratuitous curse must backfire.^b
 3 A whip for a horse and a bridle for a donkey,
 And a rod for the back of dullards.
 4 Do not answer a dullard in accord with his folly,
 Else you will become like him.
 5 Answer a dullard in accord with his folly,
 Else he will think himself wise.
 6 He who sends a message by a dullard
 Will wear out legs and ^cmust put up with^c lawlessness.
 7 As legs hang limp on a cripple,
 So is a proverb in the mouth of dullards.
 8 Like a pebble in a sling,
 So is paying honor to a dullard.

you will be like honey that your neighbor gorges on and throws up. 18–20: Four comparisons describing hurtful behaviors. 20: The text of this verse is in doubt, and the first line might be a mistake. As it stands, the proverb offers two images: undressing in the cold and pouring acid on a base. To these are compared the effect that cheerful music has on a melancholy person. The first action causes a chill, the second causes fizzing and hissing, which may suggest irritation and incompatibility. Without the first analogy (which many scholars excise), “vinegar on natron” might imply neutralization of the sorrow. 21–22: Rather than seeking vengeance, treat a vulnerable enemy kindly. Then he will be ashamed and God will reward your kindness. Amenemope (§2) advises that when the wicked man is in trouble, “Fill his belly with bread of your own, that he be sated and weep.” 23: Enigmatic. 24: V. 24 = 21.9. Proverbs is a collection of collections, so it is not surprising to see a proverb repeated in different sections. 25–26: Comparisons to “good” and “bad” water. In Heb these verses (and v. 28) lack the word like, and are striking metaphors rather than similes. The defeat of a righteous person is a scandal, fouling the quality of a society. 28: Like a city wall, self-control holds in the temper (lit. “spirit” or “wind”) and also protects its owner. An angry man’s wall is breached and he is vulnerable. 26.1: Honor, better, “prestige.” 2: Better, “So a gratuitous [that is, undeserved] insult will not arrive.” It will not reach and hurt the person it is sent against.

26.3–12: Sayings on the dullard. The dullard (Heb “kesil”) is not merely a man of low intelligence. He is the kind of fool who is obtuse because of smug overconfidence. See, e.g., 1.32b. 4–5: Two contradictory proverbs. The second one seems like a rejoinder to the more standard message of the first. If you answer the fool in kind

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.
b Kethib, “fail.” c-c Lit. “drink.”

- 9 As a thorn comes to the hand of a drunkard,
So a proverb to the mouth of a dullard.
- 10 ^aA master can produce anything,^a
But he who hires a dullard is as one who hires transients.^a
- 11 As a dog returns to his vomit,
So a dullard repeats his folly.
- 12 If you see a man who thinks himself wise,
There is more hope for a dullard than for him.
- 13 A lazy man says,
“There’s a cub on the road, a lion in the squares.”
- 14 The door turns on its hinge,
And the lazy man on his bed.
- 15 The lazy man buries his hand in the bowl;
He will not even bring it to his mouth.
- 16 The lazy man thinks himself wiser Than seven men who give good advice.
- 17 A passerby who gets embroiled in someone else’s quarrel
Is like one who seizes a dog by its ears.
Like a madman^a scattering deadly firebrands,
arrows,
- 19 Is one who cheats his fellow and says, “I was only joking.”
- 20 For lack of wood a fire goes out,
And without a querulous man contention is stilled.
- 21 Charcoal for embers and wood for a fire
And a contentious man for kindling strife.
- 22 The words of a querulous man are bruising;^b
They penetrate one’s inmost parts.
- 23 Base silver laid over earthenware
Are ardent lips with an evil mind.
- 24 An enemy dissembles with his speech,
Inwardly he harbors deceit.
- 25 Though he be fair-spoken do not trust him,
For seven abominations are in his mind.
- 26 His hatred may be concealed by dissimulation,
But his evil will be exposed to public view.
- 27 He who digs a pit will fall in it,
And whoever rolls a stone, it will roll back on him.

(that is, in a crude and harsh fashion), you will resemble him, but if you do not, he will think that he has impressed or confounded you. Some interpreters think that this juxtaposition suggests the paradoxical difficulties of being wise. 6: Better, “cuts off his own legs and drinks poison.” 7, 9: The dullard is a verbal cripple. To be effective, a proverb must be spoken at the right time (15.23) and in the right fashion (25.11). 8, 10: Obscure. 11: A deliberately disgusting characterization of the way some people repeat stupid behavior. Dogs for some reason often lick up their vomit, giving the impression they like it. 12: As bad as the dullard is, far worse is the man who thinks he is wise (but is not), for he has no hope of improving.

26.13–29.27: Further maxims.

26.13–16: Humorous characterizations of the sluggard. 14: See 22.13. 15: See 19.24. 16: The sluggard, like the dullard (v. 12) is smug and conceited. 17–22: The dangers of strife. 20, 22: Querulous man, or “slanderer.” 23–28: The hypocrite hides his hatred and hostile schemes under a cheap sheen of unctuous words. V. 27 states the principle that the schemer is preparing his own punishment.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

28 A lying tongue hates ^athose crushed by it;^a Smooth speech throws one down.

27 Do not boast of tomorrow,
For you do not know what the day will bring.
2 Let the mouth of another praise you, not yours,
The lips of a stranger, not your own.
3 A stone has weight, sand is heavy,
But a fool's vexation outweighs them both.
4 There is the cruelty of fury, the overflowing of anger,
But who can withstand jealousy?
5 Open reproof is better than concealed love.
6 Wounds by a loved one are long lasting;
The kisses of an enemy are profuse.
7 A sated person disdains honey,
But to a hungry man anything bitter seems sweet.
8 Like a sparrow wandering from its nest
Is a man who wanders from his home.
9 Oil and incense gladden the heart,
And the sweetness of a friend is better than one's own counsel.
10 Do not desert your friend and your father's friend;
Do not enter your brother's house in your time of misfortune;
A close neighbor is better than a distant brother.
11 Get wisdom, my son, and gladden my heart,
That I may have what to answer those who taunt
me.
12 The shrewd man saw trouble and took cover;
The simple kept going and paid the penalty.
13 Seize his garment, for he stood surety for another;^b Take it as a pledge, [for he stood surety] for an unfamiliar woman.
14 He who greets his fellow loudly early in the morning
Shall have it reckoned to him as a curse.
15 An endless dripping on a rainy day
And a contentious wife are alike;
16 As soon repress her as repress the wind,
Or declare one's right hand to be oil.
17 As iron sharpens iron
So a man sharpens the wit^c of his friend.
18 He who tends a fig tree will enjoy its fruit,
And he who cares for his master will be honored.

27.1: Do not praise yourself for future achievements. 5: Friendship often takes the form of forthright reproof of faults. 6: Long lasting, or "trustworthy." The wounds are verbal, as in v. 5, and they are intended to be beneficial. In contrast, an enemy feigns friendship, but this, of course, means nothing. 8: The wanderer and the bird are imagined as hapless and lonely. 9: The word translated sweetness may mean "counsel." It is more satisfying to discuss something with another person than to deliberate on it alone. 10: Three one-line sayings on friends and relations. Together they say that friends can be a better support than relatives in a time of difficulty and should be held precious. 11: When one is being taunted, if his son is smart, he can brag about him. The background circumstances are unclear. 12: See 22.3. 13: See 20.16. 14: People tend to be irritated by loud cheeriness too early in the morning. 15–16: A nagging wife is like a drizzle—irritating and unrelenting. See 19.13 n. 17: If this translation of the difficult verse is correct, it means that good conversation sharpens the wits. 18: This should be read as a comparison.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Or "a stranger." c Lit. "face."

19 As face answers to face in water,
So does one man's heart to another.
20 Sheol and Abaddon cannot be satisfied,
Nor can the eyes of man be satisfied.
21 For silver—the crucible, for gold—the furnace,
And a man is tested by his praise.
22 Even if you pound the fool in a mortar
With a pestle along with grain,
His folly will not leave him.

23 Mind well the looks of your flock;
Pay attention to your herds;
24 For property does not last forever,
Or a crown for all generations.
25 Grass vanishes, new grass appears,
And the herbage of the hills is gathered in.
26 The lambs will provide you with clothing,
The he-goats, the price of a field.
27 The goats' milk will suffice for your food,
The food of your household,
And the maintenance of your maids.

28 The wicked flee though no one gives chase,
But the righteous are as confident as a lion.
2 When there is rebellion in the land, many are its rulers;

^aBut with a man who has understanding and knowledge, stability will last.^a

3 A poor man who withholds what is due to the wretched

Is like a destructive rain that leaves no food.

4 Those who forsake instruction praise the wicked,

But those who heed instruction fight them.

5 Evil men cannot discern judgment,
But those who seek the LORD discern all things.

6 Better is a poor man who lives blamelessly
Than a rich man whose ways are crooked.

7 An intelligent son heeds instruction,
But he who keeps company with gluttons disgraces his father.

8 He who increases his wealth by loans at discount or interest

Amasses it for one who is generous to the poor.

9 He who turns a deaf ear to instruction—
His prayer is an abomination.

19: Answers is not in the Heb. The saying is obscure. 20: The human eye (desire) is insatiable; see Eccl. 1.8. Abaddon, see 15.11 n. 21: By his praise, perhaps read "his praisers." To see what a man is really like, consider what sort of person praises him; see 28.4. 23–27: An epigram on the advantages of animal husbandry as a livelihood. (Property and a crown in v. 24 refer to other kinds of wealth and power.) Grass (unlike, say, silver) renews itself and feeds the flocks, whose yield provides for many needs. 28.1: The wicked live in constant fear (1.26–27; 10.24), knowing that punishment is approaching but being ignorant of when it will arrive. The righteous enjoy a sense of security; see 1.33; 3.23–26. 2: Rebellion (or "crime") brings anarchy, and with it an oppressive multiplicity of rulers. The second line is obscure. 4–5: These proverbs emphasize the bond between the intellectual power of wisdom and the quality of one's values. All things means all things relevant to wisdom teachings. He who seeks God finds wisdom; see 2.4–5. 7: A variant of 29.3. The gluttons are probably guilty of generally licentious and dissolute behavior. 8: Profit-taking on a loan to a distressed Israelite is forbidden in Exod. 22.24; Lev. 25.36; Deut. 23.20. Such loans are to be given interest free, as an act of charity. 9: If one does not listen to instruction ("torah"), God will not listen to him. It is possible that "torah" here, unlike most occurrences in Proverbs (where it usually means parental instructions), means God's Torah. See also 29.18.

^{a-a} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

10 He who misleads the upright into an evil course
 Will fall into his own pit,
 But the blameless will prosper.

11 A rich man is clever in his own eyes,
 But a perceptive poor man can see through him.

12 When the righteous exult there is great glory,
 But when the wicked rise up men make themselves scarce.

13 He who covers up his faults will not succeed;
 He who confesses and gives them up will find mercy.

14 Happy is the man who is anxious always,
 But he who hardens his heart falls into misfortune.

15 A roaring lion and a prowling bear
 Is a wicked man ruling a helpless people.

16 A prince who lacks understanding is very oppressive;
 He who spurns ill-gotten gains will live long.

17 A man oppressed by bloodguilt will flee to a pit;
 Let none give him support.

18 He who lives blamelessly will be delivered,
 But he who is crooked in his ways will fall all at once.

19 He who tills his land will have food in plenty,
 But he who pursues vanities will have poverty in plenty.

20 A dependable man will receive many blessings,
 But one in a hurry to get rich will not go unpunished.

21 To be partial is not right;
 A man may do wrong for a piece of bread.

22 A miserly man runs after wealth;
 He does not realize that loss will overtake it.

23 He who reproves a man will in the end
 Find more favor than he who flatters him.

24 He who robs his father and mother and says, "It is no offense,"
 Is a companion to vandals.

25 A greedy man provokes quarrels,
 But he who trusts the LORD shall enjoy prosperity.

26 He who trusts his own instinct is a dullard,
 But he who lives by wisdom shall escape.

27 He who gives to the poor will not be in want,
 But he who shuts his eyes will be roundly cursed.

28 When the wicked rise up, men go into hiding,
 But when they perish the righteous increase.

10: If one leads someone onto a bad path, he himself will fall.

12: Men make themselves scarce, lit. "a man is sought for." "A man" ("adam") can mean a worthy man. Compare the use of "adam" in Eccl. 7:28. People seek for a worthy man but (it may be implied) cannot find one. 14: Here, is anxious (lit. "fears") means fearing one's own sins and being willing to repent of them. 17: Text and sense very uncertain. 19: See 12.11.

20: See 23.4. 21: Perhaps: Although partiality in judgment is not right, not even toward a poor man (Exod. 23.3), a judge should remember that a man may commit a crime for bread (6.30–31) and show some mercy. 23: Cf. 27.5–6.

24: One might convince himself that exploiting his parents' wealth is no crime, since he will be inheriting it eventually. Such a one is no better than an ordinary thug. 26: Instinct, rather, "heart," meaning one's own mind, even if untutored and callow. One must rely on a mind infused with the principles and attitudes taught by wisdom. 28: Cf. v. 12. When the wicked come to power, people hunker down and try to make themselves inconspicuous. When these rulers perish, the moral level of the society rises. See 29.2.

29 One oft reproved may become stiffnecked,
 But he will be suddenly broken beyond repair.
 2 When the righteous become great the people rejoice,
 But when the wicked dominate the people groan.
 3 A man who loves wisdom brings joy to his father,
 But he who keeps company with harlots will lose his wealth.
 4 By justice a king sustains the land,
 But a fraudulent man tears it down.
 5 A man who flatters his fellow Spreads a net for his feet.
 6 An evil man's offenses are a trap for himself,
 But the righteous sing out joyously.
 7 A righteous man is concerned with the cause of the wretched;
 A wicked man cannot understand such concern.
 8 Scoffers inflame a city,
 But the wise allay anger.
 9 When a wise man enters into litigation with a fool
 There is ranting and ridicule, but no satisfaction.
 10 Bloodthirsty men detest the blameless,
 But the upright seek them out.
 11 A dullard vents all his rage,
 But a wise man calms it down.
 12 A ruler who listens to lies,
 All his ministers will be wicked.
 13 A poor man and a fraudulent man meet;
 The LORD gives luster to the eyes of both.
 14 A king who judges the wretched honestly,
 His throne will be established forever.
 15 Rod and reproof produce wisdom,
 But a lad out of control is a disgrace to his mother.
 16 When the wicked increase, offenses increase,
 But the righteous will see their downfall.
 17 Discipline your son and he will give you peace;
 He will gratify you with dainties.
 18 For lack of vision a people lose restraint,
 But happy is he who heeds instruction.
 19 A slave cannot be disciplined by words;
 Though he may comprehend, he does not respond.
 20 If you see a man hasty in speech,
 There is more hope for a fool than for him.
 21 A slave pampered from youth
^aWill come to a bad end.^a

29.3: A variant of 28.7. One who goes to whores will lose his wealth because he wastes his money on them (cf. 31.3) or because his father will diminish his inheritance.
5: Flattery or "slippery speech" is the device by which the strange woman too lays her trap (2.16; 7.5).
7: Rather, "A righteous man knows the just claim of the wretched"—what is theirs by right. The wicked man is ignorant of this. 8–13: Proverbs on deceit and anger. 9: Translation uncertain. Apparently: It is a mistake to enter into litigation (or just "argue") with fools. Nothing will be resolved. Cf. 26.5. 10: Seek them out, lit. "seek his life." This elsewhere means to try to kill someone, but here the sense may be reversed: They seek his life in order to protect it. 11: Rage, lit. "wind." He lets forth a storm, which the wise man can pacify. Contrast v. 9. 12: Corruption starts at the top of the regime and inevitably spreads downwards. 13: Fraudulent man, meaning uncertain; possibly "contentious man." God "gives their eyes light" (rather than luster) means that he gives life to all. 14–21: Proverbs on discipline and anarchy, both domestic and social. 14: Cf. 20.28; 25.5. 17: Raise your son strictly and he will take care of you when you are old. 18: Vision means prophecy, which was a source of discipline and reproof for Israelite society. Instruction is "torah," which in Proverbs usually means parental instruction. Here it possibly refers to God's Torah (see also 28.9). 19, 21: Since a slave was deprived of material interests of his own, it was assumed that he had to be treated like a child and beaten into submission. Pampering would spoil him. According to Exod. 21.20–21, 26–27, a male or female slave could be beaten at will though not killed or permanently injured.

22 An angry man provokes a quarrel;
 A hot-tempered man commits many offenses.
 23 A man's pride will humiliate him,
 But a humble man will obtain honor.
 24 He who shares with a thief is his own enemy;
 He hears the imprecation and does not tell.^a 25 A man's fears become a trap for him, But he who trusts in the LORD shall be safeguarded.
 26 Many seek audience with a ruler,
 But it is from the LORD that a man gets justice.
 27 The unjust man is an abomination to the
 righteous,
 And he whose way is straight is an abomination to the wicked.

30 The words of Agur son of Jakeh, [man of] Massa;
 The speech of the man to Ithiel, to Ithiel and Ucal:

2 I am brutish, less than a man;
 I lack common sense.
 3 I have not learned wisdom,
 Nor do I possess knowledge of the Holy One.
 4 Who has ascended heaven and come down?
 Who has gathered up the wind in the hollow of his hand?
 Who has wrapped the waters in his garment?
 Who has established all the extremities of the earth?
 What is his name or his son's name, if you know
 it?
 5 Every word of God is pure,
 A shield to those who take refuge in Him.

a Cf. Lev. 5.1.

24: Upon the discovery of a crime, a proclamation was issued requiring everyone who knew about it to come forward and testify; see Lev. 5.1. Tell (as in Leviticus) means "testify." The proclamation was accompanied by an imprecation, a conditional curse that would fall on whoever had information and failed to come forward.

25: A man's fears may mean "what he fears." These, in the case of the evildoer, will be precisely the punishment he suffers (10.24). Alternatively, this may mean that excessive fears can impel anyone to rash steps. 27: Values, right and perverse. See 28.4.

30.1–31.31: Collection VI. Appendices. The book ends with a number of miscellaneous poems and epigrams. In style and sometimes in content they are quite different from the earlier chapters and from each other.

30.1–6: Agur. This mysterious poem is ascribed to an otherwise unknown, apparently foreign, sage. Its message is the overriding importance of piety, which it does not require wisdom to possess. The poem seems like a cautionary response to the rest of the book of Proverbs, which makes wisdom a value of the highest order. Such is the poem's difficulty that other commentators read it as an expression of skepticism or as a claim to a superhuman or mystical knowledge superior to human wisdom.

1: The text and meaning of the title of this poem, after the word Jakeh, are very uncertain. It is usually thought that Agur was a Massaite, a member of the North Arabian tribe of Massa. 1 Kings 5.10 shows that the Israelites had respect for the wisdom of "the sons of the East," of which this passage might preserve an example. The ascription to a foreign sage may be a fiction, however, intended to show that even a foreigner can see the plain truth that pious obedience to God's word supersedes all human wisdom. Agur calls his speech a "ne'um," which actually means "oracle," a communication from God. Compare the way the foreign prophet Balaam introduces his oracle ("ne'um") in Num. 24.3–4. Perhaps Ithiel and Ucal are Agur's sons. These words can, however, also be read as a sentence: "I am weary, God, and perishing."

2–3: Agur declares that he has not learned wisdom, meaning the lore and learning of the ancients. Common sense, better, "human knowledge." Agur disavows even ordinary human wisdom. In v. 3b, NJPS continues the negative from 3a, but it is not in the text. We should translate, "but I do possess knowledge of the Holy One." Similarly, the seer Balaam claimed to have "knowledge of the Most High" (Num. 24.15–19). Knowledge of God (see 2.5; 9.10) is awareness of His will and ways.

4: These provocative questions may be answered in different ways: (1) God, and He alone, has done these things. As in Job chs 38–41, human wisdom consists in recognizing God's infinite and incomparable powers. (2) No one—no human, that is—has done them.

- 6 Do not add to His words,
Lest He indict you and you be proved a liar.
- 7 Two things I ask of you; do not deny them to me before I die:
- 8 Keep lies and false words far from me;
Give me neither poverty nor riches,
But provide me with my daily bread,
9 Lest, being sated, I renounce, saying,
“Who is the LORD?”
Or, being impoverished, I take to theft
And profane^a the name of my God.
- 10 Do not inform on a slave to his master,
Lest he curse you and you incur guilt.
- 11 There is a breed of men that brings a curse on its fathers
And brings no blessing to its mothers,
12 A breed that thinks itself pure,
Though it is not washed of its filth;
13 A breed so haughty of bearing, so supercilious;
14 A breed whose teeth are swords,
Whose jaws are knives,
Ready to devour the poor of the land,
The needy among men.
- 15 The leech has two daughters, “Give!” and “Give!”
Three things are insatiable;
Four never say, “Enough!”:
16 Sheol, a barren womb,
Earth that cannot get enough water,
And fire which never says, “Enough!”
- 17 The eye that mocks a father
And disdains the homage due a mother—
The ravens of the brook will gouge it out,
Young eagles will devour it.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Either way, the point is that God is infinitely powerful and wise and man lowly and limited. Human intellect, therefore, must bow before God’s word. 5: This statement is found also in Ps. 18.31 (= 2 Sam. 22.31). 6: This is said of the Torah in Deut. 4.2 (similarly Deut. 13.1).

30.7–10: Agur’s prayer. This is the only prayer in Proverbs. 8–9: Agur asks, first, to be kept from lies and, second, to be given possessions in moderation. Excess wealth may make one overconfident, and poverty too can corrupt. Profane, lit. “grab.” If arrested, a thief might profane the name of the LORD by using it in a false vow of innocence. 10: An isolated admonition placed between the two poems. Incur guilt, or “be punished.”

30.11–14: Four breeds of men, each with its own type of corruption. The word translated breed, Heb “dor,” usually means “generation,” and that may be applicable here. There is a notion that certain generations, such as the generation of the flood (Gen. 6.5–12) and the generation of the Tower of Babel (Gen. 11.1–9), are characterized by a certain failing. The failings in the present passage are contempt of parents (v. 11), self-righteousness (v. 12), arrogance (v. 13), and rapaciousness (v. 14). Perhaps this list, and some of those that follow, were answers to riddles whose questions are no longer preserved.

30.15–31: Numerical sayings, which associate things sharing a certain feature. When two numbers are mentioned in parallel, the second number is usually what is really meant. Sometimes the numbered items are followed by a supernumerary item which represents the extreme or surprising case. Numerical sayings are common in the Bible (e.g., Amos chs 1–2, Prov. 6.16–19) and other Canaanite literature. 15a: The leech is a bloodsucker. Her daughters are like her, greedy and demanding. The message: Watch out. Your children will be like you. The image can be extended to other greedy things. A midrash in the Talmud (b. A. Z. 17a) says that the daughters are heresy and government.

30.15b–16: Four insatiable things. Sheol, the underworld, the realm of the dead (see 27.20). A barren womb, a barren woman, who yearns endlessly for a child. The earth always needs more rain. Fire always “needs”—can consume—more fuel. 17: An isolated saying excoriating the person who treats his parents with contempt.

18 Three things are beyond me;
 Four I cannot fathom:
 19 How an eagle makes its way over the sky;
 How a snake makes its way over a rock;
 How a ship makes its way through the high seas;
 How a man has his way with a maiden.
 20 Such is the way of an adulteress:
 She eats, wipes her mouth,
 And says, "I have done no wrong."
 21 The earth shudders at three things,
 At four which it cannot bear:
 22 A slave who becomes king;
 A scoundrel sated with food;
 23 A loathsome woman who gets married;
 A slave-girl who supplants her mistress.
 24 Four are among the tiniest on earth,
 Yet they are the wisest of the wise:
 25 Ants are a folk without power,
 Yet they prepare food for themselves in summer;
 26 The badger is a folk without strength,
 Yet it makes its home in the rock;
 27 The locusts have no king,
 Yet they all march forth in formation;
 28 You can catch the lizard^a in your hand,
 Yet it is found in royal palaces.
 29 There are three that are stately of stride,
 Four that carry themselves well:
 30 The lion is mightiest among the beasts,
 And recoils before none;
 31 ^bThe greyhound, the he-goat,
 The king whom none dares resist.^b a Or "spider." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

30.18–19: Four amazing "ways."
 The word translated how is literally "the way of." The wonder of the "ways" or movement of the eagle, the snake, and the ship may lie in the fact that they do not leave traces or that they are smooth and graceful. As for the way of a man with a maiden, love is a mystery, but just how it is mysterious is left to the imagination.

30.20: The additional wonder.
 This verse seems mechanically tacked on and inappropriate, but it might be intended as a shocking climax. The four "ways" are mysterious and graceful and leave no trace. The wmy—that is, behavior—of the adulteress too is amazing: She is unbelievably smug. She thinks she can wipe her sin away as if wiping the crumbs off her face.

30.21–23: Four things the earth cannot bear, so unnatural are they. (1) A slave who becomes king violates the social hierarchy, which the sages of Proverbs assumed was the right and natural order. (See 19.10b.) Becomes king, lit. "rules," with the sense dominates, controls. Perhaps this line implies that one should not let his slave become the master of his household (as Potiphar did to Joseph, though to good effect; Gen. 39.4). (2) A scoundrel—a disobedient slave or son, perhaps—should not be indulged, but should be punished by deprivation (cf. 19.10). (3) A loathsome woman, lit. "hated woman," has (the author presumes) done something deserving of disgust and is unworthy of marriage. Perhaps the point is that one should not force his son to marry a woman he dislikes. The word for "hated" seems to mean "unloved" or "dispreferred" in Gen. 29.30–31 and Deut. 21.15–17. (4) A slave-girl should be kept in her place and not supplant or, more precisely, "disinherit" her mistress. This would happen if a man favored his concubine and made her children his heirs. A well-to-do Egyptian, Djefai-hapi, boasts, "I did not let a slave woman be valued above her mistress" (M. Lichtheim, Maat in Egyptian Autobiographies and Related Studies [1992], p. 38). The four items may thus have messages for a head of a household.

30.24–28: Four small (or "weak") but clever creatures. Ants work without a leader (6.6–8). Badgers—meaning rock badgers—are clever enough to live in fortress-like cliffs. Locusts, also leaderless, move like an army. The lizard can slip into the greatest of houses. All these exemplify the superiority of wisdom over size and strength.

30.29–31: Four animals who move in a majestic fashion. Greyhound, better "cock." The real point of the epigram lies in the fourth item: the king's incomparability.

30.32–33: Avoid strife. If you are arrogant or scheming, at least keep your mouth shut. Just as squeezing (or "churning") milk or a nose

- 32 If you have been scandalously arrogant,
If you have been a schemer,
Then clap your hand to your mouth.
- 33 As milk under pressure produces butter,
And a nose under pressure produces blood,
So patience under pressure produces strife.

31 The words of Lemuel, king of Massa, with which his mother admonished him:

- 2 No, my son!
No, O son of my womb!
No, O son of my vows!
- 3 Do not give your strength to women,
Your vigor,^a ^bto those who destroy kings.^b
- 4 Wine is not for kings, O Lemuel;
Not for kings to drink,
Nor any strong drink for princes, Lest they drink and forget what has been ordained,
And infringe on the rights of the poor.
- 6 Give strong drink to the hapless
And wine to the embittered.
- 7 Let them drink and forget their poverty,
And put their troubles out of mind.
- 8 Speak up for the dumb,
For the rights of all the unfortunate.
- 9 Speak up, judge righteously,
Champion the poor and the needy.
- 10 κ What a rare find is a capable wife!
Her worth is far beyond that of rubies.
- 11 Ϟ Her husband puts his confidence in her,
And lacks no good thing.

a Lit. "ways." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

produces butter or blood, so does squeezing someone's patience produce conflict. There is a wordplay in v. 33: Heb "'af," nose, also means "anger" in certain idioms and Heb "'apayim," patience, also means "nose."

31.1–9: Lemuel's mother. Like Agur (30.1), Lemuel is from the North Arabian nation of Massa. The present passage has several Aramaisms and probably is foreign in origin. Though the passage is called "words of Lemuel," meaning a teaching he would repeat, it was composed by his mother. See 1.8–19 n. This unit and the next (31.10–31) share the theme of a wise mother. The passage is an instruction for a king, showing a fine sense of social responsibility. In the first part, vv. 3–7, Lemuel's mother first admonishes her son to avoid dissipating his strength on wine and women, for wine may make him forget his duties to the poor and women waste his strength. Rather, one should give strong drink or wine to the poor, to let them drown their troubles in alcohol. This advice is unparalleled. The warning about women is countered by the book's concluding poem in vv. 10–31. In the second part (vv. 8–9), Lemuel's mother exhorts him to give justice to the needy.

31.10–31: The woman of strength. So far, the book of Proverbs has been devoted to inculcating the ideal of a wise man. It now concludes with a poem describing a wise woman, praising her energy, her economic talents, and her personal virtues. This is not one specific woman but an ideal, a paragon of female virtues. These virtues are essentially shared by the ideal man described elsewhere. She is a proud and splendid woman, mistress of a prosperous manor. Contrary to a common notion of woman's status in the ancient world, this woman has considerable independence in interacting with outsiders and conducting business, even in acquiring real estate. This allows her husband to spend his time sitting in the city gates, presumably conducting civic business and serving as a judge. Some commentators have interpreted the passage as an allegory, with the wise woman representing wisdom itself. But this woman has a husband and children and is very much a human being, though an ideal one. The poem is traditionally recited by Jewish men to their wives on Sabbath evening, before the Kiddush (the sanctification of the Sabbath over wine). It is also often recited at funerals of women. The poem is an acrostic, with each line beginning with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet in sequence.

10: What a rare find, lit. "who can find," as in 20.6. This is an exclamation of value, not of rarity. Cf. 18.22; 19.14. Capable wife, Heb "'eshet ḥayil," is commonly translated "woman of valor." "Woman of strength" would be a better translation. Heb "ḥayil" refers to strength of all sorts, whether in

- 12 א She is good to him, never bad,
All the days of her life.
- 13 ט She looks for wool and flax,
And sets her hand to them with a will.
- 14 ה She is like a merchant fleet,
Bringing her food from afar.
- 15 י She rises while it is still night,
And supplies provisions for her household,
The daily fare of her maids.
- 16 ז She sets her mind on an estate and acquires it;
She plants a vineyard by her own labors.
- 17 ח She girds herself with strength, ^aAnd performs her tasks with vigor.^a
- 18 ט She sees^b that her business thrives;
Her lamp never goes out at night.
- 19 י She sets her hand to the distaff;
Her fingers work the spindle.
- 20 כ She gives generously to the poor;
Her hands are stretched out to the needy.
- 21 ל She is not worried for her household because of snow,
For her whole household is dressed in crimson.
- 22 מ She makes covers for herself;
Her clothing is linen and purple.
- 23 נ Her husband is prominent in the gates,
As he sits among the elders of the land.
- 24 ס She makes cloth and sells it,
And offers a girdle to the merchant.
- 25 ע She is clothed with strength and splendor;
She looks to the future cheerfully.
- 26 פ Her mouth is full of wisdom,
Her tongue with kindly teaching.
- 27 צ She oversees the activities of her household
And never eats the bread of idleness.
- 28 ק Her children declare her happy;
Her husband praises her,
- 29 ר "Many women have done well,
But you surpass them all."
- 30 ש Grace is deceptive,
Beauty is illusory;
It is for her fear of the LORD
That a woman is to be praised.
- 31 ת Extol her for the fruit of her hand,
And let her works praise her in the gates.

physical or military prowess, in social influence, in wealth, or in personal ethical and intellectual powers, as here. Beneath all this woman's virtues and talents lies a deep and solid strength of character. 19: Distaff and spindle, implements used in hand spinning of flax or wool. Providing cloth for a household would require incessant spinning. 30: Fear of the LORD: This is the culminating virtue of the woman of strength, just as it is wisdom's starting point (1.7; 9.10) and high point (2.5).

^{a-a} Lit. "And exerts her arms." ^b Lit. "tastes."

Job

Character

THE BOOK OF JOB TAKES THE FORM of a symposium, a dramatic dialogue or debate between a man who, though righteous, has been subjected to extreme suffering, and his friends, whose speeches alternate with Job's responses. It then culminates with speeches from the LORD. Readers through the centuries have debated the book's genre. Although it has characters and speeches it is not a drama, and though it engages in argument it is not a philosophical treatise. Some scholars have suggested a fruitful analogy from the classical Greek and Roman literary tradition: the "philosophical diatribe," a type of classical writing in which a particular viewpoint is presented as if it is being argued in a speech. In some diatribes—many of which take the form of attacks on vice—a second voice, present mainly in order to be refuted, expresses an opposing view to that of the main speaker. Although Job is not a work from this classical tradition, the dialogue between Job and his friends, and subsequently between Job and the LORD, serves to express particular viewpoints with an immediacy and passion similar to that of a diatribe, qualities that a more straightforward essay would lack. The multiple characters express variations of the same viewpoints in heightened, poetic language; but the formal, cyclical nature of the dialogue is interrupted at several points, and the speeches of the LORD raise the argument to a new level entirely, and then close off all further conversation without directly answering any of the deep and painful questions that have been raised along the way. Job is a wisdom book (see intro. to Kethuvim, pp. 1276–77), and such dialogues characterize ancient Near Eastern wisdom literature, especially that from Mesopotamia.

The Argument

THE BOOK OF JOB AS WE HAVE IT makes three main points, which are interrelated. The first, most obvious point is that human suffering is not necessarily deserved; that is, though in some cases we may bring our own suffering about by, for instance, neglecting our health or engaging in risky behavior—or, from a religious perspective, by our sin or immorality—the real problem with suffering comes with the many cases in which someone's pain, sorrow, or distress are clearly unrelated to anything they have done or failed to do. This point is the one that Job argues most forcibly against his friends. Those friends, who are concerned to safeguard the goodness of the LORD (seen as the cause of all things, good or bad), argue the contrary view: that if a person suffers, the suffering must somehow be deserved. This leads to the second point. The claim that all suffering is deserved will inevitably persuade those who hold that view to falsify either the character of the sufferer or the character of the LORD. Thus, Job's friends argue that Job is a sinner, deserving of his punishment, while Job claims that the LORD has acted unfairly and is indifferent to human suffering. The third point, however, is the most theologically difficult and gives the book its sense of profundity and at the same time its inconclusive conclusion: There is no way of understanding the meaning of suffering. That is, in the LORD's argument, the reasons for suffering—if there are any—are simply beyond human comprehension.

Difficulties in Interpreting Job

JOB IS THE MOST DIFFICULT BOOK of the Bible to interpret, not only because of its elaborate arguments, especially in the LORD's speeches in the final chapters, but also because of its highly poetic language, which is particularly ambiguous and contains a large number of unusual or unique words (hapax legomena, "things said once," that is, words not appearing elsewhere in the Bible). Thus, any translation of the book must be tentative, as translators or commentators have often understood the same verse or phrase in diametrically opposite ways. The translators' notes in the text call attention to some, but by no means all, of these difficulties.

There are also larger structural issues which confound the interpreter, most significantly the relationship of the various parts of the book. A prose prologue (1.1–3.1) and prose epilogue (42.7–17), which share a similar style and theme, frame a series of poetic speeches by Job, his friends, and the LORD. How should the prose and poetry, neither of which is complete in and of itself, be read as a whole, especially since they are so different in tone, and to some extent, in content? In addition, the speeches themselves seem to contain compositions added at different times, and a pattern present at the beginning seems to be abandoned by the end. Job 3.2–31.40 presents a conversation between Job and three friends, Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar. At first, this conversation follows a cyclical pattern: After an introductory lament from Job (3.2–26), Eliphaz speaks, Job replies, Bildad speaks, Job replies, Zophar speaks, Job replies, and the cycle begins again. Two full cycles (4.1–14.22; 15.1–21.34) are given; in the third cycle (22.1–31.40), the first two friends speak as before, but Zophar does not, and Job's final speech (26.1–31.40) is much longer; it also contains passages that seem to contradict Job's arguments from previous speeches. At 32.2 a new character, Elihu, enters and speaks uninterruptedly (though with several breaks) from 32.6 to 37.24. At 38.1 the LORD speaks, replying not to Elihu but to Job, who has not spoken since 31.40.

The peculiarities of this arrangement have led scholars to propose various theories for the book's composition. Most of these theories suppose that the book took shape over a longer period of time, rather than being composed more or less sequentially in one short period, and that the author (or possibly another writer or writers) returned to it to add further materials. It is also possible that speeches originally written for one character were, probably accidentally, assigned to another. Some scholars find Zophar's missing third speech in 27.7–23, and some have proposed that at least part of ch 28 may be from another composition entirely. In any event, it is clear that in the view of many scholars, the text of Job has undergone considerable upheaval in the course of its transmission, and parts of it have become misplaced. Though there is no direct manuscript evidence of this for Job, evidence from the Dead Sea Scroll versions of other books suggests that biblical books grew over time, and that different recensions (versions or editions) of the same book could circulate in ancient Israel. (See the intro. to Jeremiah and the essay "The Bible in the Dead Sea Scrolls," pp. 1920–28.) Unfortunately, however, the problems with the structure and growth of Job are so trenchant that there is no scholarly consensus concerning the stages of development of the book.

For the purposes of the annotations here, we presuppose the following. The "dream vision," 4.12–21, originally followed 3.26, the end of Job's first speech (see 4.12–21 n.). Chs 22–31, generally designated "the third cycle," can be understood in the following way: We do not presuppose that the body of material contained in these chs, like the material in chs 4–14 and 15–21, originally consisted of six speeches presented by Eliphaz, Job, Bildad, Job, Zophar, Job. The most obvious deviation from this scheme is the absence from chs 22–31 of a speech attributed to Zophar. Samuel ben Nissim Masnuth (12th century) and S. R. Driver (a British biblical scholar of the 19th and early 20th centuries) both suggested that the absence of a speech by Zophar was part of the author's design. By not providing a third speech for Zophar, the author sought to show that the friends had exhausted their arguments. Most modern scholars, however, try to reconstruct a lost speech of Zophar from parts of ch 27. But to do so is to ignore the editors' designation of Job 27.1–29.1 as a separate block of text introduced by the peculiar formula, "Job again took up his theme and said," repeated at 27.1 and 29.1. If this is a separate block of material, we must assume either that the absence of Zophar's third speech is intentional or that the speech was lost and no remnants of it are to be found in the extant book. By a process of dislocation such a speech disappeared while 27.1–29.1 found its way into the book in between the end of the second cycle at 26.14 and Job's soliloquy found in 29.2–31.40. A similar process of dislocation has taken place in ch 25 where v. 1 attributes vv. 2–6 to Bildad while the ideas expressed can only be the words of Job (see 4.12–21 n.). Finally, 26.5–14 should be seen as Bildad's speech, which expresses ideas characteristic of Job's friends and uncharacteristic of Job.

Thus, if we combine the observation that 25.2–6 is a speech of Job with the observation that 26.5–14 belongs to a speech of Bildad, we have successfully accounted for: 25.1, which attributes a speech to Bildad; 26.1, which attributes a speech to Job; 25.2–6, which belongs after 26.1; and 26.5–14, which belongs after 25.1. What of 26.2–4? A crucial observation is that Job always addresses his friends in the second-person plural and that they always address him in the second-person singular. On the basis of this observation, 26.2–4, which is in the second person singular, must be seen as a verbal attack upon Job made on behalf of his three friends by one of them. Since 25.2–6 should be assigned to Job and 26.5–14 should be assigned to Bildad, and since 26.2–4 must also be assigned to one of Job's friends, it follows that the most reasonable solution to the problem of the attributions in chs 25–26 is simply to interchange 26.1 and 25.1 so as to attribute 25.2–6 to Job and 26.2–14 to Bildad. Thus the so-called third cycle consists of Eliphaz's speech (ch 22); Job's reply (chs 23–24); Bildad's reply (25.1 + 26.2–14); Job's reply (26.1 + 25.2–6), possibly originally followed by Zophar's speech and Job's reply (both missing); and Job's soliloquy (29.2–31.40). This scheme requires only that the names Job and Bildad be interchanged in 25.1 and 26.1, and that the order of these chapters be reversed. This solution avoids both tampering with the integrity of 27.1–29.1, and creating an exception to the author's rhetorical convention by which Job always addresses the friends in the second-person plural while the friends always address Job in the second-person singular. Attribution of 4.12–21 to Job and the restoration of 25.2–6 to Job and thereby to its proper place (immediately after 26.1) at the end of the symposium results in the appearance of the almost identical utterances in 4.17–21 and 25.2–6 as an inclusio or envelope, which encloses the debate between Job and his three friends. Thus the thesis presented in the "dream vision"—that neither angels nor mortals can expect to be acquitted by the heavenly tribunal by virtue of their behavior—is the framework for the debate between Job and his friends. Typical of this debate are 5.1 and 15.2–13, where Eliphaz ridicules Job's relying upon what he heard from a "holy being," and 6.10, where Job finds consolation in his not having hidden the words of that same holy being (see the annotations at these points).

Date of Composition and Authorship

THE BABYLONIAN TALMUD, b. Bava Batra 15a, shows that on the basis of linguistic criteria and historical allusions there is hardly a period of biblical literature to which the book of Job does not have affinities. Because of the abundance of allusions to the exilic and post-exilic Isaiah chs 40–66 and the use of the Hebrew ha-satan, "the Adversary," in a manner very similar to that in which the term is employed in the postexilic Zechariah ch 3, it is generally agreed that the book of Job was composed sometime during the period from the mid-6th century to the mid-4th century, the Persian (Achaemenid) period (539–332 BCE). Nevertheless, there are significant affinities between the language of Job and earlier biblical literature, suggesting that its author was archaizing in his presentation of this story from long, long ago (see below, "Setting"). As with the authors of most biblical books, the author of Job is anonymous and unknown.

History of Composition

SOME INTERPRETERS HAVE PROPOSED that four or more distinct and sometimes overlapping compositions can be discerned within Job as it stands. The common theme of these different books is the apparently undeserved suffering of a legendary hero, Job. The first composition is the prose narrative of Job's beginning in 1.1–3.1. The second is the Book of Job the Patient, who loses his material possessions, his children, and his health and who is urged on by his wife and his friends to blaspheme God and thereby to confirm the Adversary's accusation that if Job were made to suffer, he would indeed commit blasphemy. This second book consists of 1.1–2.13; chs 27–28 (in which Job, speaking to his wife and friends, refuses to blaspheme God, insists that in the long run the wicked are punished and the virtuous are rewarded, and contends that true wisdom is the cultivation of those very virtues for which he has been lauded in 1.1, 8 and 2.3, namely fearing God and shunning evil); and 42.7–17. The third book—chs 1–31, 38–42—is the highly profound Book of Job the Impatient, in which the rather banal story of how the LORD, egged on by Satan, tested Job and found him worthy (i.e., 1.1–3.1 and 42.7–14) serves as the narrative framework for a debate between Job and his friends as to whether justice prevails in this world. In the end, in this book, God vindicates Job in his contention that indeed innocent people suffer and guilty people prosper, and He orders Job's friends to apologize. The fourth book is the Book of Job the Impatient with the addition of the three speeches of Elihu the Intruder (chs 32–37). The purpose of these additions is debated: They are particularly problematic because on the one hand Elihu is presented as a bumbler, while on the other hand his arguments closely mirror those of the LORD in the following chapters. Some scholars, as mentioned above, see in ch 28, the Hymn to Wisdom, a separate, fifth composition unrelated either to the narrative framework or the poetic symposium; some even suggest that it was incorporated into the book of Job by mistake because pages containing it were found among the writings composed by the author of the symposium.

Setting

THE SETTING EVOKES THE PATRIARCHAL PERIOD, when great biblical heroes like Abraham were the nomadic herders of large flocks of cattle, sheep, and goats. Sacrifices were offered up in a family setting without any elaborate temples or officiating priesthood. The location is Uz (1.1); this is a poetic name for Edom (Lam. 4.21). Transjordan, of which Edom is the southernmost part, is often referred to in the Bible and other ancient Near Eastern texts as Kedem, translated in 1.3 as “the East,” and Kedemites were known for their wisdom (1 Kings 5.10). It is not surprising, therefore, that an author would choose to set the traditional story of Job in Edom, a region within Kedem, the legendary home of wisdom.

The Book of Job the Patient

BECAUSE THE TWO SPEECHES IN 27.2–28.28 are set apart from the rest of the book by the distinct formula at 27.1 and 29.1, “Job again took up his theme and said,” and because the theology of these chapters is less radical than the theology of the rest of the material attributed to Job, some scholars have concluded that 27.2–28.28 belongs to a composition distinct from the symposium in 3.1–26.4. In this speech Job refuses to blaspheme God (27.2–6), and he affirms that in the end justice prevails (27.7–23). Then in 28.28, echoing Psalm 111.10 and Proverbs 1.7; 9.10, Job states that true wisdom consists of Job's own twin virtues, fearing the LORD and shunning evil (cf. Job 1.1, 8; 2.3). This speech therefore would originally have served as a response to Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar who, like Job's wife in 2.9, urged Job to respond to his suffering by cursing God and dying. In this reading the speech of Job in chs 27–28 was followed originally by a divine promise (which has been lost) to reward his steadfastness; this was followed, in turn, by 42.7–17 (the current prose epilogue), in which Job is rewarded for what he has said in chs 27–28 and the friends are castigated for having encouraged Job to blaspheme God. The other solutions to the dilemma of chs 27–28 involve reassigning most of 27.7–23 to Zophar (thereby completing the third cycle) and treating ch 28 as an independent Hymn to Wisdom composed by the author of the book of Job. For reasons explained above, this commentary does not adopt that view. The rather banal message of this reconstructed “Job the Patient”—the heart of which, 27.7–23, echoes almost verbatim the view of Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar that wicked people ultimately come to a bad end (see 4.8; 8.13; 11.20; 15.17–35; 18.5–21; 20.5–29)—is that indeed Job, despite both his unbearable ordeal and the intense urging of his friends, did not blaspheme God.

The Book of Job the Impatient

FAR MORE PROFOUND IS THE CANONICAL BOOK of Job, which has literally relegated “Job the Patient” to a sort of appendix and replaced this speech with what is universally acknowledged to be the most profound part of the book of Job. This largest and most important part of the book of Job is a symposium carried on by Job and his three friends—Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar—in 3.2–26.14. This symposium in poetic form is joined to the prose tale in which God wins His wager with the Adversary by the account, also in prose (2.11–13) of Job's three friends paying a combination condolence call and hospital visit to Job upon hearing of the calamities that befell him. It is pointed out in 2.13 that the three friends remained silent for seven days and seven nights until it was Job who broke the silence with his soliloquy in 3.3–26 in which, bereft of his children and himself afflicted with a debilitating illness, he wishes that he had never been born or even conceived and prays that he might at least die. This speech upsets Job's friends, who begin to suggest to him that Job brought his suffering upon himself (so Eliphaz in 4.7; so also Zophar 11.14) and that Job's children died as punishment for their own sins (Bildad in 8.4)—exactly the opposite of what we were told in chs 1–2. Throughout the condolence call turned into symposium, Job continually argues that his suffering is undeserved. The friends become progressively more hostile in their accusations, suggesting that his suffering is deserved. In addition, he repeatedly challenges God to put an end to his undeserved suffering (ch 7; 9.25–10.22; 13.17–14.22; 16.18–17.16; ch 23; 26.5–14). The symposium carried on between Job and his friends is launched by Eliphaz's response to Job's lament in ch 3, and the symposium (chs 4–26) is followed by Job's soliloquy (chs 29–31), the last ch of which is Job's oath proclaiming his innocence. When in the epilogue of the canonical book of Job God says to Job's three friends, “You have not spoken the truth about Me as did My servant Job” (42.8), God is in effect agreeing with Job's contention, among others, “He destroys the blameless and the guilty” (9.22). The LORD’s lengthy discourse on the power of the mythical monster Leviathan in 40.25–41.26 (see esp. 41.2: “There is no one so fierce as to rouse him; Who then can stand up to Me [who made him]?”) echoes and vindicates Job’s own observation in Job 9.13:

God does not restrain His anger;
Under Him Rahab’s helpers sink down.
How then can I answer Him,
Or choose my arguments against Him?

One of the ideas that sets the poem of Job apart from the Book of Job the Patient and from other ancient Near Eastern poems about righteous sufferers is the book’s detailed pronouncement by the LORD that people who behave as badly as Job’s friends need to apologize to both Job and to the LORD and to be retrained by an expert in the field, Job himself (ch 29).

[MAYER GRUBER]

1 There was a man in the land of Uz named Job. That man was blameless and upright; he feared God and shunned evil. ²Seven sons and three daughters were born to him; ³his possessions were seven thousand sheep, three thousand camels, five hundred yoke of oxen and five hundred she-asses, and a very large household. That man was wealthier than anyone in the East.

⁴It was the custom of his sons to hold feasts, each on his set day in his own home. They would invite their three sisters to eat and drink with them. ⁵When a round of feast

1.1–3.1: The prologue. The LORD points out to the Adversary that Job is the most virtuous person on earth, but the Adversary suggests that Job’s virtue is a function of his material success, arguing that if Job were to suffer he would cease to be a man who fears God and would “blaspheme You [God] to Your face” (1.11). God thereupon empowers the Adversary, a kind of heavenly prosecutor, to afflict Job with undeserved suffering in order to test by experiment the LORD’s thesis that Job’s virtue is unconditional. The verdict of the prologue is that, contrary to the Adversary’s expectations, Job responds to the loss of all his material goods and the death by natural disaster of his seven sons and three daughters by praising God and refusing to blaspheme (1.21–22). When the Adversary challenges the LORD to perform an additional experiment to see if physically afflicting Job himself might cause Job to commit blasphemy, the LORD again agrees (2.6). Once again, even though Job’s wife attempts to goad Job into blasphemy (2.9), “Job said nothing sinful,” and he thereby vindicates God in His argument with the Adversary. The prologue constitutes a drama of five scenes, alternating between heaven and earth, as follows: Scene One (1.1–5): Job’s way of life and his good fortune; Scene Two (1.6–12): the first dialogue between the LORD and the Adversary about Job; Scene Three (1.13–22): Job in the first phase of his trial; Scene Four (2.1–6): the second dialogue between the LORD and the Adversary about Job; Scene Five (2.7–3.1): Job in the second phase of his trial. 1.1: Uz, or Edom, in the East, was a traditional source of wisdom (see intro.). Job, the hero of the book, bears the name given to a virtuous person of hoary antiquity mentioned by Ezekiel (Ezek. 14.12–20), who, along with Noah and Daniel, is a paradigm of righteousness. Blameless . . . upright . . . feared God . . . shunned evil: These characteristics underline Job’s goodness, indeed, his perfection, and his subsequent actions (vv. 4–5) will demonstrate this perfection. Fear of God (or fear of the LORD) is the major principle in wisdom literature (Prov. 1.7; Eccl. 12.13) and signifies obedience to God’s will. Even a non-Israelite like Job can be God-fearing. The reason for Job’s fear of God will soon be questioned by the Adversary. A Talmudic tradition (b. B. Bat. 15b) considers Job to have been more virtuous than Abraham because only the fear of God is ascribed to Abraham and Job’s other virtues are not. 2: The numbers three and seven are special numbers in the Bible, and here they indicate that Job’s family was the perfect size. So, too, his possessions are great, a sign that God has blessed him for his virtue. Many of the numbers used in the prologue are stereotypical, and help to create a fairytale-like atmosphere in the book. 5: Blasphemed God in their days was over, Job would send word to them to sanctify themselves, and, rising early in the morning, he would make burnt offerings, one for each of them; for Job thought, "Perhaps my children have sinned and blasphemed God in their thoughts." This is what Job always used to do.

⁶One day the divine beings presented themselves before the LORD, ^aand the Adversary^a came along with them. ⁷The LORD said to the Adversary, "Where have you been?" The Adversary answered the LORD, "I have been roaming all over the earth." ⁸The LORD said to the Adversary, "Have you noticed My servant Job? There is no one like him on earth, a blameless and upright man who fears God and shuns evil!" ⁹The Adversary answered the LORD, "Does Job not have good reason to fear God? ¹⁰Why, it is You who have fenced him round, him and his household and all that he has. You have blessed his efforts so that his possessions spread out in the land. ¹¹But lay Your hand upon all that he has and he will surely blaspheme You to Your face." ¹²The LORD replied to the Adversary, "See, all that he has is in your power; only do not lay a hand on him." The Adversary departed from the presence of the LORD.

¹³One day, as his sons and daughters were eating and drinking wine in the house of their eldest brother, ¹⁴a messenger came to Job and said, "The oxen were plowing and the she-asses were grazing alongside them ¹⁵when Sabceans attacked them and carried them off, and put the boys to the sword; I alone have escaped to tell you." ¹⁶This one was still speaking when another came and said, "God's fire fell from heaven, took hold of the sheep and the boys, and burned them up; I alone have escaped to tell you." ¹⁷This one was still speaking when another came and said, "A Chaldean formation of three columns made a raid on the camels and carried them off and put the boys to the sword; I alone have escaped to tell you." ¹⁸This one was still speaking when another came and said, "Your sons and daughters were eating and drinking a-a Heb. ha-satan.

thoughts: The plot turns on what Job will say out loud, whether, when deprived of his good life, he will curse God (v. 11). Here, virtuous Job shows his extreme piety by worrying whether his children, in a moment of levity, may have thought unseemly thoughts about God. The Heb throughout the prologue euphemistically uses the root "b-r-k," lit. "bless," to indicate "blaspheme." ^{6:} The divine beings presented themselves before the LORD. Similar meetings of the LORD enthroned on His heavenly throne and all the heavenly host standing before Him on either side are reported by the prophet Micaiah son of Imlah in 1 Kings 22.19–23, by the prophet Isaiah in Isa. ch 6, and in Ps. 82 and Dan. 7.9–10. The members of the heavenly court, here and in Ps. 82 called divine beings (here lit. "sons of the gods"; in Ps. 82.2 lit. "gods") are called in 1 Kings ch 22 "the heavenly host"; in Job 4.18 they are called "servants" and "angels"; in 15.15 they are called "holy ones" and "the heavens," while in 25.5 they are identified with the moon and stars, who, with the sun, are called "the whole heavenly host" in Deut. 4.19. Typically, these divine beings, though they have great power, may not act independently of God. The Adversary, or "the Accuser," Heb "ha-satan," is one of the divine beings. He functions as a kind of prosecuting attorney, and should not be confused with the character of Satan as it developed in the late biblical (see 1 Chron. 21.1) and especially the postbiblical period, that is, the source of evil and rebellion against God. (Heb "ha-" is the definite article, which cannot precede a proper noun, "Satan.") Later, the idea of Satan developed into the devil, but these associations were not present at the time of our story. ^{8:} The LORD repeats the four attributes by which the narrator characterized Job in v. 1, thereby confirming them. ^{9:} Does Job not have good reason to fear God? Some scholars hold that this issue—whether Job's piety is disinterested—is the center around which the legend revolves, and that the ultimate answer of the book is that such disinterested piety is possible. ^{13–19:} The first test is the removal of all Job's possessions, including his children, by sudden catastrophes that alternate between acts of war and acts of nature. The phrase "I alone have escaped to tell you" serves as a refrain, highlighting the increasing horror of these escalating catastrophes. ^{15:} Sabceans, nomads from Arabia; it is the same place as in "Queen of Sheba." ^{17:} Chaldean: The term usually refers to Neo-Babylonians, from southern Mesopotamia, but here it may mean wine in the house of their eldest brother¹⁹ when suddenly a mighty wind came from the wilderness. It struck the four corners of the house so that it collapsed upon the young people and they died; I alone have escaped to tell you.”

²⁰Then Job arose, tore his robe, cut off his hair, and threw himself on the ground and worshiped. ²¹He said, “Naked came I out of my mother’s womb, and naked shall I return there; the LORD has given, and the LORD has taken away; blessed be the name of the LORD.”

²²For all that, Job did not sin nor did he cast reproach on God.

2 One day the divine beings presented themselves before the LORD. The Adversary came along with them to present himself before the LORD. ²The LORD said to the Adversary, “Where have you been?” The Adversary answered the LORD, “I have been roaming all over the earth.” ³The LORD said to the Adversary, “Have you noticed My servant Job? There is no one like him on earth, a blameless and upright man who fears God and shuns evil. He still keeps his integrity; so you have incited Me against him to destroy him for no good reason.” ⁴The Adversary answered the LORD, ^a“Skin for skin^a—all that a man has he will give up for his life. ⁵But lay a hand on his bones and his flesh, and he will surely blaspheme You to Your face.” ⁶So the LORD said to the Adversary, “See, he is in your power; only spare his life.” ⁷The Adversary departed from the presence of the LORD and inflicted a severe inflammation on Job from the sole of his foot to the crown of his head. ⁸He took a potsherd to scratch himself as he sat in ashes. ⁹His wife said to him, “You still keep your integrity! Blaspheme God and die!” ¹⁰But he said to her, “You talk as any shameless woman might talk! Should we accept only good from God and not accept evil?” For all that, Job said nothing sinful.

¹¹When Job’s three friends heard about all these calamities that had befallen him, each came from his home—

a-a Apparently a proverb whose meaning is uncertain.

semi-nomadic marauders. 19: In the fourth catastrophe, the four corners collapse, just as there are three columns in the third catastrophe (v. 17). This, along with the notice that the enemies are coming from all different parts of the globe, highlights the fairytale-like ambiance of the narrative. 21: The LORD has given . . . This phrase is often recited at Jewish burial services. Job blesses the LORD rather than blaspheming. This verse contains a unique biblical reference to mother earth (naked shall I return there). 2.9: His wife: This is the first of three references (see 19.17; 31.10) to Job’s wife, who remains nameless. Second Temple Jewish literature and later Jewish, Christian, and Muslim exegetical literature tend to identify unknown and unnamed persons, often with known and named persons. In the apocryphal Testament of Job, Job’s wife is named Sitis, probably from “sitos,” Gk for “food” or “bread,” reflecting a tradition that Job’s wife supported him from her work during the time that his illness made it impossible for him to work. In 1st-century CE Pseudo-Philo (L.A.B.), and in Gen. Rab. Job’s wife was Dinah, the daughter of Jacob and Leah (see Gen. 30.21; ch 34). Thus, several later Jewish traditions develop and improve the image of Job’s wife. However, both the Church Father Augustine and the Jewish sage Rabbi Abba b. Kahana (Gen. Rab. 19.12) compare Job and his wife to Adam and Eve, noting that both men were urged by their wives to transgress and that Job, unlike Adam, withstood the test. 10: Shameless woman, Heb “nevalot,” plural of “nevalah,” translated “outrage” at Gen. 34.7 and “shameful thing” in Deut. 22.21, is a very strong term, referring in both of those texts to extramarital sex. Drawing on this connotation, the medieval Job Targum here translates “women who engage in premarital sex.” Many modern translations prefer “foolish,” however, without sexual connotations, though this may be too weak. 10: It is difficult to know how closely we should read the phrase said nothing sinful; might it imply, in contrast to 1.22, Job did not sin, that at this point, he harbored sinful thoughts, as suggested by one talmudic sage (b. B. Bat. 16a)? 11: Eliphaz and Zophar bear names associated with the Transjordanian peoples called Kedemites. Kedem was a traditional source of wisdom (see intro.). Temanite, Teman was a grandson of Esau, ancestor of the Edomites (Gen. 36.11). Shuhite, Shuah was a son of Abraham by Keturah (Gen. 25.1–2), and probably also stands for the Edomites.

Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite. They met together to go and console and comfort him. ¹²When they saw him from a distance, they could not recognize him, and they broke into loud weeping; each one tore his robe and threw dust into the air onto his head. ¹³They sat with him on the ground seven days and seven nights. None spoke a word to him for they saw how very great was his suffering.

3^aAfterward, Job began to speak and cursed the day of his birth. ²Job spoke up and said:

3 Perish the day on which I was born,
And the night it was announced,
"A male has been conceived!"
4 May that day be darkness;
May God above have no concern for it;
May light not shine on it;
5 May darkness and deep gloom reclaim it;
May a pall lie over it;
May ^bwhat blackens^b the day terrify it.
6 May obscurity carry off that night;
May it not be counted among the days of the year;
May it not appear in any of its months;
7 May that night be desolate;
May no sound of joy be heard in it;
8 May those who cast spells upon the day^c damn it,
Those prepared to disable Leviathan;
9 May its twilight stars remain dark;
May it hope for light and have none;
May it not see the glimmerings of the dawn—
10 Because it did not block my mother's womb,
And hide trouble from my eyes.
11 Why did I not die at birth, Expire as I came forth from the womb?
12 Why were there knees to receive me,
Or breasts for me to suck?
13 For now would I be lying in repose, asleep and at rest, 14 With the world's kings and counselors who rebuild ruins for themselves,

a There are many difficulties in the poetry of Job, making the interpretation of words, verses, and even chapters uncertain. The rubric "Meaning of Heb. uncertain" in this book indicates only some of the extreme instances.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Or "sea," taking Heb. yom as equivalent of yam; compare the combination of sea with Leviathan in Ps. 74.13, 14 and with Dragon in Job 7.12; cf. also Isa. 27.1.

Zophar the Naamathite is probably from Sabean (Arabian) territory (see 1.15 n.). To console, Heb "lanud," "to nod," short for "to nod their heads" (Jer. 18.16), a nonverbal expression of empathy. Unfortunately, Job's friends forgot their empathy; see 21.2. 13: Sitting on the ground for seven days resembles the Jewish mourning practice of "sitting shiv'ah" (sitting for seven [days]). See Gen. 50.10 n.

3.1–26: Job's lament. In similar language to that in which Job curses his very being, the prophet Jeremiah (20.14–18), regretting that the LORD convinced him to accept the thankless job of prophet, curses the day on which he was born. This is a masterful chapter, playing on the light and day, darkness and night, and particularly on the two definitions of day: the twenty-four hour period, and daylight. 1: We expect the verse to be continued "and cursed God," but Job only curses the day of his birth. 2: Job spoke up and said: According to b. Mo'ed Kat. 28b, this clause inspires Judaism's guidelines concerning the comforting of mourners (see Shulhan Arukh, Yoreh Deah 376.1), according to which, "The persons paying a condolence call should not open their mouths until the mourner first opens his or her mouth." 3–10: Job curses the day he was born, wishing that the day itself had never existed and that it could have been erased from the calendar. 8: Cast spells . . . Leviathan, perhaps sorcerers who curse the cosmos. Leviathan is a mythical sea-monster who played a role in the mythology of Ugarit (in modern Syria), and was known in the Bible as well as in creation stories (e.g., Isa. 27.1; Ps. 74.14), though he does not appear in the canonical story at the beginning of Genesis. 11–23: Job wishes he had died at birth or as a newborn, or had been stillborn. He views death as a release from suffering. Life, on the other hand, brings with it suffering and misery. 13–15: In his miserable state, Job depicts death in an

15 Or with nobles who possess gold and who fill their houses with silver.
 16 Or why was I not like a buried stillbirth,
 Like babies who never saw the light?
 17 There the wicked cease from troubling;
 There rest those whose strength is spent.
 18 Prisoners are wholly at ease;
 They do not hear the taskmaster's voice.
 19 Small and great alike are there,
 And the slave is free of his master.

20 Why does He give light to the sufferer
 And life to the bitter in spirit; 21 To those who wait for death but it does not come,
 Who search for it more than for treasure,
 22 Who rejoice to exultation,
 And are glad to reach the grave;
 23 To the man who has lost his way,
 Whom God has hedged about?

24 My groaning serves as my bread;
 My roaring pours forth as water.
 25 For what I feared has overtaken me;
 What I dreaded has come upon me.
 26 I had no repose, no quiet, no rest,
 And trouble came.

4 Then Eliphaz the Temanite said in reply:

2 If one ventures a word with you, will it be too much?
 But who can hold back his words?
 3 See, you have encouraged many;
 You have strengthened failing hands.
 4 Your words have kept him who stumbled from falling;
 You have braced knees that gave way.
 5 But now that it overtakes you, it is too much;
 It reaches you, and you are unnerved.
 6 Is not your piety your confidence,
 Your integrity your hope?
 7 Think now, what innocent man ever perished?
 Where have the upright been destroyed?
 8 As I have seen, those who plow evil
 And sow mischief reap them.
 9 They perish by a blast from God,
 Are gone at the breath of His nostrils.

idealized fashion. 21: In traditional wisdom literature, wisdom, not death, is compared to treasure (Prov. 2.4). 23: Whom God has hedged about uses the same root as 1.10, "Why, it is You who have fenced him round," creating cohesion between the different parts of the book.

4.1–5.27: Eliphaz opens the debate. Though each friend is named in his speeches and speaks several times, it is difficult to attribute particular characteristics or personalities to each; they seem to serve generically as advocates of traditional wisdom perspectives and foils to Job's position. 2: If one ventures a word with you, will it be too much? But who can hold back his words? Eliphaz begins tentatively, asking permission before beginning to speak and apologizing that he can no longer keep silent but needs to express his own feelings in response to Job's speech. By the third cycle of argument, in chs 22–26, Eliphaz (ch 22) becomes at best sarcastic, at worst convinced that the virtuous tragic hero of the book of Job is guilty of merciless greed at the expense of the poor, the widow, and the fatherless.

3–5: See, you have encouraged many . . . But now that it overtakes you, it is too much: Eliphaz observes that in the past, Job has helped others in their time of trouble but now he, himself is in need of help. Job confirms (29.12–17) that he has, in fact, successfully provided moral and monetary support to persons in need as well as free legal services to the indigent. Eliphaz at this point accuses Job only of encouraging others to believe that there is no straightforward system of retribution, and thus indirectly encouraging them to sin, but he is not yet directly accusing Job of sinning. 6–7: Is not your piety your confidence, your integrity your hope? Think now, what innocent man ever perished? Eliphaz spouts the conventional wisdom that good people prosper and do not suffer. This, of course, is exactly the wisdom that Job challenges. Integrity, the same word used of Job in 1.1;

10 The lion may roar, the cub may howl,
But the teeth of the king of beasts ^aare broken.^a 11 The lion perishes for lack of prey,

And its whelps are scattered.

12 A word came to me in stealth;
My ear caught a whisper of it.

13 In thought-filled visions of the night,
When deep sleep falls on men,
14 Fear and trembling came upon me,
Causing all my bones to quake with fright.

15 A wind passed by me,
Making the hair of my flesh bristle.

16 It halted; its appearance was strange to me;
A form loomed before my eyes;
I heard a murmur, a voice,
17 "Can mortals be acquitted by God?
Can man be cleared by his Maker?
18 If He cannot trust His own servants,
And casts reproach^b on His angels,
19 How much less those who dwell in houses of clay,
Whose origin is dust,
Who are crushed like the moth,

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

2.3, 9. 10-11: Eliphaz chooses a lion since one might think that the lion provides a counterexample to the claims of the traditional system of retribution, but Eliphaz claims that ultimately the lion fares poorly.

4.12-21: The dream vision. The dream vision, or revelation, is conventionally assigned, in accord with the chapter heading at 4.1, to Eliphaz. Some scholars, however, argue that it belongs after 3.26 as the conclusion of Job's lament; this may be reflected in the poetry of the early great Paytan (liturgical poet) from the land of Israel, Eliezer ha-Qallir, who ascribes this section to Job, and may have had a text in which 4.12-21 followed 3.26, forming the end of Job's lament. If it is reassigned to Job—on the grounds that it is an interruption in its current location, that it expresses Job's fear that, right or wrong, human beings cannot prevail in argument against God, and that it fits better at the end of ch 3—then subsequent references to it in 9.2 (from Job); 15.12-16 (where Eliphaz addresses Job); and 25.4-6 (attributed to Bildad) support Job's argument that mortals cannot be acquitted by God. 14: Fear and trembling came upon me: This translation reflects the insight of Rashbam (c. 1085-1174) that here as in Exod. 1.10 the Heb verb "kara" "with final "alef," typically "to read," corresponds in meaning to "karah," "happened," with final "heh." This phrase is reflected in the liturgical poem Unetaneh Tokef recited at Rosh Ha-Shanah and on Yom Kippur. There it is stated, "The angels are dismayed; they experience fear and trembling." In fact, that entire liturgical poem is full of reverberations of this passage. 16: I heard a murmur, a voice, lit. "A murmur and a voice I heard." This clause also is reflected in Unetaneh Tokef: "The sound of a still small voice [cf. 1 Kings 19.12: 'a soft murmuring sound'] will be heard." 17: Can mortals be acquitted by God? Can man be cleared by his Maker? These two clauses constitute a double rhetorical question, whose structure was described by Rashi in his commentary on Jeremiah (at Jer. 14.22). In such a question the first clause is introduced by the interrogative particle "ha-" while the second, synonymous clause is introduced by the interrogative particle "im." The ancient and authentic Jewish interpretation of the two-part question as a plea for mercy, altogether appropriate in the mouth of Job and totally inappropriate in the mouth of Eliphaz, is reflected in a medieval Italian penitential prayer "selilah." Mortals, better, "a human"; Heb "enosh" is singular. By God . . . by his Maker, better, "before God . . . before his Maker." The two rhetorical questions refer to one's day in court, standing literally "before" the heavenly tribunal. A similar notion is found in 25.4. 18: If He cannot trust . . . His angels, cf. 15.15: "He puts no trust in His holy ones; the heavens are not guiltless in His sight." Both the parallelism here and in 15.15 make it clear that the servants are the personified heavenly host, which includes the personified sky, sun, moon, and stars; cf. 25.5: "Even the moon is not bright, And the stars are not pure in His sight." Given the role of the heavenly Adversary in chs 1-2, there is a certain justice to this claim. These ideas—that even God's servants and messengers (Heb "mal'akh" and Gk "angelos" both mean "messenger") are to be arraigned in judgment and that even the members of the heavenly host must throw themselves upon the mercy of the court—are taken over by the liturgical poem Unetaneh Tokef and used as Israel's collective defense in the face of the unjustified suffering of both individuals and collective Israel. In light of the clear influence these passages from Job have had on Unetaneh Tokef, it should be clear that the interpretation of this passage as a defense of Job that is mocked by Eliphaz in 5.1 represents not only an interpre-

20 Shattered between daybreak and evening,
Perishing forever, unnoticed.
21 Their cord is pulled up
And they die, and not with wisdom.”

5 Call now! Will anyone answer you?
To whom among the holy beings will you turn?
2 Vexation kills the fool;
Passion slays the simpleton.
3 I myself saw a fool who had struck roots;
Impulsively, I cursed his home:
4 May his children be far from success;
May they be oppressed in the gate with none to deliver them;
5 May the hungry devour his harvest,
*Carrying it off in baskets;
May the thirsty swallow their wealth.*
6 Evil does not grow out of the soil,
Nor does mischief spring from the ground;
7 For man is born to [do] mischief,
Just as sparks fly upward.
8 But I would resort to God;
I would lay my case before God, 9 Who performs great deeds which cannot be
fathomed,
Wondrous things without number;
10 Who gives rain to the earth,
And sends water over the fields;
11 Who raises the lowly up high,
So that the dejected are secure in victory;
12 Who thwarts the designs of the crafty,
So that their hands cannot gain success;
13 Who traps the clever in their own wiles;
The plans of the crafty go awry.
14 By day they encounter darkness,
At noon they grope as in the night.
15 But He saves the needy from the sword of their mouth,
From the clutches of the strong.
16 So there is hope for the wretched;
The mouth of wrongdoing is stopped.
17 See how happy is the man whom God reproves;
Do not reject the discipline of the Almighty.
18 He injures, but He binds up;
He wounds, but His hands heal.

tation which makes the very best sense of the book of Job but also one with strong roots in the Judaism of the common liturgy.

19–21: References to the frailness and transience of human habitation and human life. Whose origin is dust probably means “whose foundations are in dust”—i.e., the foundations of the houses just mentioned. It is often interpreted using the metaphor of a person as a house, to mean that the origin or basic component of humans is dust, as in the story of the garden of Eden (Gen. chs 2–3). Their cord is pulled up, perhaps referring to a tent cord, i.e., their home; or perhaps their wealth.

5.1–27: Continuation of Eliphaz’s speech. 1: To whom . . . will you turn? As in 15.13 Eliphaz ridicules Job’s reliance upon the dream vision (see 4.12–21 n.). Job (6.10; 9.2ff.) finds consolation in what he learned from that vision. Holy beings, Heb “kedoshim,” lit. “holy ones,” here a reference to the heavenly court (4.18), continuing the image of the previous chapter. See 6.10 n. 7: This begins to develop one of the friends’ main claims, that humans are fundamentally sinful, and thus Job must have sinned. This misunderstands Job’s complaint: He does not claim to be perfect, but does claim that his behavior has not merited the extreme punishment he seems to be receiving. 8: Here Eliphaz introduces a significant theme of the book: God’s great power. For the friends, God’s power implies His fairness, as seen in v. 15, But He saves the needy from the sword of their mouth. Job believes that God often uses His power in a negative or abusive fashion (see esp. 12.7–25). God’s power is the major theme of the speeches from the whirlwind as well (chs 38–41), but they do not clearly resolve whether Job or his friends are correct. 17: Suffering, says Eliphaz, should be welcomed because it is God’s way of disciplining a person; as in Prov. 3.12, it is proof of divine love. 18–26: A parallel assurance is given in

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

19 He will deliver you from six troubles;
 In seven no harm will reach you:
 20 In famine He will redeem you from death,
 In war, from the sword.
 21 You will be sheltered from the scourging tongue;
 You will have no fear when violence comes.
 22 You will laugh at violence and starvation,
 And have no fear of wild beasts.
 23 For you will have a pact with the rocks in the field,
 And the beasts of the field will be your allies.
 24 You will know that all is well in your tent;
 When you visit your wife^a you will never fail.
 25 You will see that your offspring are many,
 Your descendants like the grass of the earth.
 26 You will come to the grave ^bin ripe old age,^b
 As shocks of grain are taken away in their season.
 27 See, we have inquired into this and it is so;
 Hear it and accept it.

6 Then Job said in reply:

2 If my anguish were weighed,
 My full calamity laid on the scales,
 3 It would be heavier than the sand of the sea;
 That is why I spoke recklessly.^c
 4 For the arrows of the Almighty are in me;
 My spirit absorbs their poison;
 God's terrors are arrayed against me.
 5 Does a wild ass bray when he has grass?
 Does a bull bellow over his fodder?
 6 Can what is tasteless be eaten without salt?
 Does ^bmallow juice^b have any flavor?
 7 I refuse to touch them;
 They are like food when I am sick.
 8 Would that my request were granted,
 That God gave me what I wished for;
 9 Would that God consented to crush me,
 Loosed His hand and cut me off.
 10 Then this would be my consolation,
^bAs I writhed in unsparing^b pains:
 That I did not ^dsuppress my words against the Holy One.^d
 11 What strength have I, that I should endure?
 How long have I to live, that I should be patient?

a Lit. "home." b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.
 d-d Meaning of Heb. uncertain; others "deny the words of the Holy One."

Ps. 91. 22: Laugh at violence and starvation: Eliphaz's overconfidence that the merit of the righteous will protect them must have seemed insensitive to Job and to the reader. Eliphaz and his two friends, Bildad and Zophar, show little empathy with Job; similarly, Zophar in 8.22; see also 12.4 n., and contrast Job's confession of innocence of this very sin of gloating over the misfortunes of one's enemies in 31.29. Prov. 17.5; 24.17 condemn this sin and warn that God will punish those who commit it. 27: This verse, like much of the book, shares a major tenet of wisdom literature, that human inquiry rather than revelation is a sufficient source for understanding the world and how it functions.

6.1–7.21: Job responds to Eliphaz.

6.1–30: Job addresses the friends.

6.2–7, 11–13: Eliphaz has suggested both that Job brought his suffering upon himself (4.7–9; 5.2–16) and that, alternatively, Job should look upon his sufferings as God's way of disciplining him in preparation for his reward (5.17–26). Job makes an emotional response to Eliphaz's rational explanations, expressing once again the reasons for his anguish and hoping that God will end his misery by granting him death (see ch 3). 3: Recklessly: The translation's uncertainty (note c) is because Heb "la'u" is only attested twice, here and in Obad. 1.16, where NJPS translates "their speech grows thick," referring to the slurred speech of drunkards. Job thus more likely refers to slurred speech. Job apologizes for rambling on, when in fact his friends should be apologizing for insulting him (4.2–9) and suggesting that someone else's calamity is a laughing matter (5.22). 5–6: Rhetorical questions are typical of wisdom literature (see v. 12; Prov. 6.27–28). 9: Job again asks to be killed, so his suffering may be relieved. 10: Suppress, Heb "kihed" always means "conceal, suppress, withhold" as it does also in 15.18. There Eliphaz proudly asserts that 12 Is my strength the strength of rock?

Is my flesh bronze?

13 Truly, I cannot help myself;
I have been deprived of resourcefulness.

14 ^aA friend owes loyalty to one who fails,
Though he forsakes the fear of the Almighty;^a 15 My comrades are fickle, like a wadi,

Like a bed on which streams once ran.

16 ^aThey are dark with ice;
Snow obscures them;^a

17 But when they thaw, they vanish;
In the heat, they disappear where they are.

18 Their course twists and turns;
They run into the desert and perish.

19 Caravans from Tema look to them;
Processions from Sheba count on them.

20 They are disappointed in their hopes;
When they reach the place, they stand aghast.

21 So you are as nothing;^b
At the sight of misfortune, you take fright.

22 Did I say to you, "I need your gift;
Pay a bribe for me out of your wealth;
23 Deliver me from the clutches of my enemy;
Redeem me from violent men"?

24 Teach me; I shall be silent;
Tell me where I am wrong.

25 ^aHow trenchant honest words are;^a
But what sort of reproof comes from you?

26 Do you devise words of reproof,
But count a hopeless man's words as wind?

27 You would even cast lots over an orphan,
Or barter away your friend.

28 Now be so good as to face me;
I will not lie to your face.

29 Relent! Let there not be injustice;
Relent! I am still in the right.

30 Is injustice on my tongue?
Can my palate not discern evil?

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Following kethüb, with Targum; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

he and his friends rely on the wisdom they learned from their forebears, which they have not withheld. Here Job, true to character, asserts that he relies on what he learned from a divine being in a vision of the night (4.12–21; 9.2–3; 15.13–16; 25.4–6). For "ki'hed" meaning "conceal," see also 20.12; 27.11. The words of (translators' note d-d): This reflects the vowel points in the traditional Heb text, while the rendering my words requires changing the vocalization.

The Holy One (translators' note d-d): better, "a holy being"; since the Heb text here does not employ the definite article, Job here reaffirms his reliance on what he learned in the vision (4.17–21), and Eliphaz has in 5.1 ridiculed Job precisely for his reliance on a holy being. On the other hand, it is Eliphaz who says: "But I would resort to God" (5.8); "I will declare that which wise men have transmitted from their fathers, and have not withheld" (15.17–18). Additionally, in 15.15 in Eliphaz's attribution of the dream vision to Job (which Eliphaz ridicules in 15.12–13) the expression "His holy ones" refers to the same heavenly host called "His own servants || His angels" in 4.18 and "the moon and stars" in 25.5. Consolation: Just as the readers learn from chs 1–2 that Job is not to blame for his suffering, so also does Job in 4.12–21. His friends, relying upon what they learned from their teachers and from their own limited experience (see 15.7–18), will not know this until the LORD Himself tells them in 42.7–8. In the meantime Job must deal not only with debilitating illness, the death of his children, and the loss of his worldly goods, but also with the cognitive dissonance created by the fact that his three friends keep telling him that, contrary to what he has been told in his dream and what his instincts and experience tell him, he brought all his troubles on himself. It is Job's knowledge gained from on high, which his friends do not yet understand, that is his consolation in the face of his friends' total lack of sympathy. 14–30: Job rebukes his friends for their lack of loyalty and support in his time of need. 15: Wadi, a seasonal stream that may be dangerously overflowing in winter and dry in summer. 19: Tema, Sheba, areas in northern and southwestern Arabia, respectively. 24: This foreshadows the LORD's answer in 38.2–3. 30: Though this two-chapter speech seems like a disjointed set of speeches, food imagery ties much of it together: 6.5–7, 30; 7.4 ("sated"), 19 ("spittle").

7 Truly man has a term of service on earth;
 His days are like those of a hireling—
 2 Like a slave who longs for [evening's] shadows,
 Like a hireling who waits for his wage.
 3 So have I been allotted months of futility;
 Nights of misery have been apportioned to me.
 4 When I lie down, I think,
 "When shall I rise?"
 Night ^adrags on,^a
 And I am sated with tossings till morning twilight.
 5 My flesh is covered with maggots and clods of earth;
 My skin is broken and festering.
 6 My days fly faster than a weaver's shuttle,
 And come to their end ^bwithout hope.^b
 7 Consider that my life is but wind;
 I shall never see happiness again.
 8 The eye that gazes on me will not see me;
 Your eye will seek me, but I shall be gone.
 9 As a cloud fades away,
 So whoever goes down to Sheol does not come up;
 10 He returns no more to his home;
 His place does not know him.

11 On my part, I will not speak with restraint;
 I will give voice to the anguish of my spirit;
 I will complain in the bitterness of my soul.
 12 Am I the sea or the Dragon,^c
 That You have set a watch over me?
 13 When I think, "My bed will comfort me,
 My couch will share my sorrow,"
 14 You frighten me with dreams,
 And terrify me with visions,
 15 Till I prefer strangulation,
 Death, to my wasted frame.
 16 I am sick of it.
 I shall not live forever;
 Let me be, for my days are a breath.

17 What is man, that You make much of him,
 That You fix Your attention upon him?
 18 You inspect him every morning,
 Examine him every minute.
 19 Will You not look away from me for a while,
 Let me be, till I swallow my spittle?

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Or "when the thread runs out."
c See note at 3.8.

7.1–14: Job continues. Formally, this is a continuation of Job's response to Eliphaz, but the tone changes, becoming more philosophical, and Job directs his words to God. Job sees all life, not only his own, as a struggle. He then says how hopeless is his suffering. Job's vision of people as God's slaves contradicts the typical image of human free choice found in much of the canon, but fits the view of the wisdom book Koheleth (Ecclesiastes), which stresses that God controls everything. 2: [Evening's shadows . . . wage: Laborers were paid daily, at evening, so that they could buy food (Lev. 19.13, Deut. 24.15). 5: Job's point is that he is in a state of living death, and would prefer actual death. 9: Sheol is the underworld, where everyone goes after death. Only in postbiblical thought did a differentiated idea of heaven and hell develop. 12: Sea . . . Dragon: As in 3.8, the author is building upon Canaanite mythology, best known from the myths discovered at Ugarit, where the sea (actually the deity Yam) and Dragon rebelled against the high god Baal. Job is asking God rhetorically if he is to be presumed extremely guilty like the sea or Dragon, for only that could explain his severe punishment. 17–18: These vv. are a parody of Ps. 8.5–10, which magnifies the role of humanity in creation. In the psalm God's unceasing concern with humans renders Him praiseworthy, but for Job God's unceasing concern is like the unnerving meddling of an overprotective parent. He yearns for a release from God's attention. As elsewhere, Job is admitting that he is not perfect, but insisting that he must be judged fairly. 19: Till I swallow my spittle, i.e., for an instant. This seemingly indelicate expression is one of many expressions in ancient Semitic languages describing the very briefest interval one can imagine as the time requisite for a bodily reflex, such as "the twinkling of an eye." 21: Why do you not pardon my transgression and forgive my iniquity? In 6.29–30; 9.17–21; 13.23; 23.4–12;

20 If I have sinned, what have I done to You,
 Watcher of men?
 Why make of me Your target,
 And a burden to myself?
 21 Why do You not pardon my transgression
 And forgive my iniquity?
 For soon I shall lie down in the dust;
 When You seek me, I shall be gone.

8 Bildad the Shuhite said in reply:

2 How long will you speak such things?
 Your utterances are a mighty wind!
 3 Will God pervert the right?
 Will the Almighty pervert justice?
 4 If your sons sinned against Him,
 He dispatched them for their transgression.
 5 But if you seek God
 And supplicate the Almighty, 6 If you are blameless and upright,
 He will protect you,
 And grant well-being to your righteous home.
 7 Though your beginning be small,
 In the end you will grow very great.

8 Ask the generation past,
 Study what their fathers have searched out—9 For we are of yesterday and know nothing;
 Our days on earth are a shadow—
 10 Surely they will teach you and tell you,
 Speaking out of their understanding.
 11 Can papyrus thrive without marsh?
 Can rushes grow without water?
 12 While still tender, not yet plucked,
 They would wither before any other grass.
 13 Such is the fate of all who forget God;
 The hope of the impious man comes to naught—
 14 Whose confidence is a ^athread of gossamer,^a Whose trust is a spider's web.
 15 He leans on his house—it will not stand;
 He seizes hold of it, but it will not hold.
 16 He stays fresh even in the sun;
 His shoots spring up in his garden;
 17 ^aHis roots are twined around a heap,
 They take hold of a house of stones.^a 18 When he is uprooted from his place,
 It denies him, [saying,]

24.25; 31.3 (see there) Job insists that he is innocent; here, as also in 13.26; 14.16–17, he admits some measure of guilt; otherwise he could not ask God to pardon and forgive. This admission of less than total innocence on an absolute scale, however (apart from Job's being the most virtuous person on earth relative to other humans according to 1.1, 8; 2.3), is in consonance with the message of the dream vision which Job affirms in 6.10; 9.2 (see also 4.12–21; 15.13–16; 25.2–6; 5.1). When You seek me: As in Psalms, the assumption is that God needs people; as in Ps. 6.6, Job is reminding God that if Job is killed, he will no longer be able to praise Him.

8.1–22: Bildad's first speech.

2: How long will you speak such things? Job has already needlessly apologized in 6.3 for his rambling utterance (ch 3), which was itself a perfectly reasonable response. Instead of comforting Job, Bildad insults him for having expressed his feelings. In 11.2–3 Zophar will do the same thing. Eliphaz will follow suit in 15.1. Bildad insists that God acts justly and if one is suffering, it must be because he has sinned. Nevertheless, Bildad urges Job to seek God's mercy and forgiveness. It is God, after all, who sustains the world. 8–12: The source of knowledge is experiential. Former generations are the source of wisdom and without a link to them, people cannot succeed. 11: Rhetorical questions are again used to develop a point (see 6.5–6 n.). 13–19: The impious man may look prosperous, but his "growth" is in a ruined place and if uprooted, he has no future.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

"I never saw you."

- 19 Such is his happy lot;
And from the earth others will grow.
20 Surely God does not despise the blameless;
He gives no support to evildoers.
21 He will yet fill your mouth with laughter,
And your lips with shouts of joy.
22 Your enemies will be clothed in disgrace;
The tent of the wicked will vanish.

9 Job said in reply:

- 2 Indeed I know that it is so:
Man cannot win a suit against God.
3 If he insisted on a trial with Him,
He would not answer one charge in a thousand.
4 Wise of heart and mighty in power—
Who ever challenged Him and came out whole?— 5 Him who moves mountains without their knowing it,
Who overturns them in His anger;
6 Who shakes the earth from its place,
Till its pillars quake;
7 Who commands the sun not to shine;
Who seals up the stars;
8 Who by Himself spread out the heavens,
And trod on the back of the sea;
9 Who made the Bear^a and Orion,
Pleiades, and the chambers of the south wind;
10 Who performs great deeds which cannot be
 fathomed,
And wondrous things without number.
11 He passes me by—I do not see Him;
He goes by me, but I do not perceive Him.
12 He snatches away—who can stop Him?
Who can say to Him, "What are You doing?"
13 God does not restrain His anger;
Under Him Rahab's^b helpers sink down.
14 How then can I answer Him,
Or choose my arguments against Him?
15 Though I were in the right, I could not speak out,
But I would plead for mercy with my judge.
16 If I summoned Him and He responded,
I do not believe He would lend me His ear.
17 For He crushes me ^cfor a hair;^c
He wounds me much for no cause.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^b A primeval monster.

^{c-c} With Targum and Peshitta; or "with a storm."

9.1–10.22: Job responds to Bildad.

9.2: Indeed I know that it is so: As suggested by the colon at the end of 9.2a, the following clause, 2b, Man cannot win a suit against God, is a paraphrase of the main thesis of the dream vision (4.12–21) set forth there in the form of a double rhetorical question, "Can mortals be acquitted by God? Can man be cleared by his Maker?" (4.17). In fact, it would be better to translate the Heb as a question: "Can man win a (law)-suit before God?" Since Job shares Abraham's view that ultimately "the Judge of all the earth will deal justly" (cf. Gen. 18.25), Job would like to take God to court and sue Him for treating him unjustly. Job explains in this passage, however, that he has decided not to do so because the dream vision has taught him that there is no point in taking God to court. Forensic, or law-court, imagery typifies this speech, and much of the rest of the book. Job feels, correctly, that he is facing an insurmountable problem: God is both the prosecutor and the judge, and thus Job's case cannot possibly be adjudicated fairly. In addition, Job has no parity with God as judge. 5–10: Job returns to the central theme of God's power, again implying that God abuses that power. 8a: Who by Himself spread out the heavens, an expression borrowed from Isa. chs 40–66, where it occurs five times: see Isa. 40.22; 42.5; 44.24; 45.12; 51.13. This description of God is best known from the Adoration or "Aleynu" recited at the end of every synagogue worship service. Ironically, while Job here invokes God's mastery over the forces of nature as an argument why God should not be afraid to meet Job in court, the LORD, in chs 38–39, invokes His mastery over the forces of nature as an argument why Job, who has no such mastery, is incapable of understanding how the universe is governed. Equally ironically, in 40.3–5, Job concurs and apologizes. 8b: And trod on the back of the sea: In the mythological texts recovered from Late Bronze Age Ugarit, frequent reference is 18 He does not let me catch my breath,

 But sates me with bitterness.
 19 If a trial of strength—He is the strong one;
 If a trial in court—who will summon Him for me?
 20 Though I were innocent,
 My mouth would condemn me;
 Though I were blameless, He would prove me crooked.
 21 I am blameless—I am distraught;
 I am sick of life.
 22 It is all one; therefore I say,
 “He destroys the blameless and the guilty.”
 23 When suddenly a scourge brings death,
 He mocks as the innocent fail.
 24 The earth is handed over to the wicked one;
 He covers the eyes of its judges.
 If it is not He, then who?

25 My days fly swifter than a runner;
 They flee without seeing happiness;
 26 They pass like reed-boats,
 Like an eagle swooping onto its prey.
 27 If I say, “I will forget my complaint; Abandon my sorrow^a and be diverted,”
 28 I remain in dread of all my suffering;
 I know that You will not acquit me.
 29 It will be I who am in the wrong;
 Why then should I waste effort?
 30 If I washed with soap,
 Cleansed my hands with lye,
 31 You would dip me in muck
 Till my clothes would abhor me.
 32 He is not a man, like me, that I can answer Him,
 That we can go to law together.
 33 No arbiter is between us
 To lay his hand on us both.
 34 If He would only take His rod away from me
 And not let His terror frighten me,
 35 Then I would speak out without fear of Him;
 For I know myself not to be so.

10 I am disgusted with life;
 I will give rein to my complaint,
 Speak in the bitterness of my soul.
 2 I say to God, “Do not condemn me;
 Let me know what You charge me with.

made to the rivalry among the deities responsible for the sky, the sea, and the summer drought for hegemony over the world. In the Israelite version of this myth, reflected in the Bible—including Gen. 1.21, and esp. in Isaiah (27.1), Psalms (74.13–14), Proverbs (8.29), and Job—a personified, deified sea is no longer a competitor of the storm deity Baal but rather a creature fashioned by God. (In rabbinic literature he becomes the divinely appointed heavenly prince in charge of the sea just as 'Af-Beri [see 37.11] is the divinely appointed prince in charge of rain, and Canaanite Mot, death personified [cf. Ps. 49.15b], becomes the divinely appointed “angel of death.”) Like men and women, personified sea (referred to also by the proper names of Leviathan [serpent] and Rahab [blusterer; see 9.13]) has the audacity to rebel against the LORD. It is God’s subduing of personified sea, who has attempted, like men and women, to rival and challenge God, that is referred to here. Trod on the back refers to the gesture of a victor over the vanquished. 10: Who performs great deeds . . . This v. is quoted verbatim in the benediction “True and Faithful” in the Evening Service every day of the year. 12b: Who can say to Him, “What are You doing?” In the present context Job anticipates what he will be told by the LORD in chs 38–41: Humankind is too insignificant to understand an explanation of how God rules the cosmos even if such an explanation were to be forthcoming. 17: The alternative reading in translators’ note c-c, with a storm (or tempest), foreshadows the divine revelation in chs 38–41. 22–24: A basic assumption of Job, like other biblical books, is that God is omnipotent. Thus, given his personal experience, Job can insist, If it is not He, then who? 25–35: This section of the speech returns to the theme of vv. 2–3, the fundamental unfairness of a case brought by God against Job, a human. 10.2: I say to God, “Do not condemn me”: This introduces the speech (vv. 2b–22) that Job would

^a Lit. “face.”

3 Does it benefit You to defraud,
 To despise the toil of Your hands,
 While smiling on the counsel of the wicked?
 4 Do You have the eyes of flesh?
 Is Your vision that of mere men?
 5 Are Your days the days of a mortal,
 Are Your years the years of a man,
 6 That You seek my iniquity
 And search out my sin?
 7 You know that I am not guilty,
 And that there is none to deliver from Your hand.

8 “Your hands shaped and fashioned me,
 Then destroyed every part of me.
 9 Consider that You fashioned me like clay;
 Will You then turn me back into dust?
 10 You poured me out like milk,
 Congealed me like cheese;
 11 You clothed me with skin and flesh
 And wove me of bones and sinews;
 12 You bestowed on me life and care;
 Your providence watched over my spirit.
 13 Yet these things You hid in Your heart;
 I know that You had this in mind:
 14 To watch me when I sinned
 And not clear me of my iniquity;
 15 Should I be guilty—the worse for me!
 And even when innocent, I cannot lift my head;
 So sated am I with shame,
 And drenched in my misery.
 16 ^aIt is something to be proud of^a to hunt me like a lion,
 To ^bshow Yourself wondrous through^b me time and again!
 17 You keep sending fresh witnesses against me,
 Letting Your vexation with me grow.
^aI serve my term and am my own replacement.^a

18 “Why did You let me come out of the womb?
 Better had I expired before any eye saw me, 19 Had I been as though I never was,
 Had I been carried from the womb to the grave.
 20 My days are few, so desist!
 Leave me alone, let me be diverted a while 21 Before I depart—never to return—
 For the land of deepest gloom;

like to address to God if indeed Job should be granted a day in court. 4–6: Job’s sarcastic accusation here is among the most powerful in the book, demanding that God act like God, and not like a human being. 8–12: These vv. show some similarity to the creation stories in Gen. chs 2–3, but do not convey exactly the same picture. 17: This section ends with a final forensic image: The witnesses may refer to the variety of punishments sent against Job which are seen as testifying to this guilt. 18–22: Why did You let me come out of the womb? Job returns to the image of ch 3. 19b: Had I been carried from the womb to the grave: Job repeats the wish he expressed in 3.11–12. 21–22: A description of Sheol, the abode of the dead; cf. 3.17–19; his mention of darkness returns us to another central image of ch 3.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b-b Or “makesport of”; cf. Pal. Aram. ʾnʿl.

22 A land whose light is darkness,
All gloom and disarray,
Whose light is like darkness.”

11 Then Zophar the Naamathite said in reply:

2 Is a multitude of words unanswerable?
Must a loquacious person be right?
3 Your prattle may silence men;
You may mock without being rebuked,
4 And say, “My doctrine is pure,
And I have been innocent in Your sight.”
5 But would that God might speak,
And talk to you Himself.
6 He would tell you the secrets of wisdom,
^aFor there are many sides to sagacity;
And know that God has overlooked for you some of your iniquity.^a

7 Would you discover the mystery of God?
Would you discover the limit of the Almighty?
8 Higher than heaven—what can you do?
Deeper than Sheol—what can you know?
9 Its measure is longer than the earth
And broader than the sea.
10 ^aShould He pass by, or confine,
Or call an assembly, who can stop Him?^a 11 For He knows deceitful men;
When He sees iniquity, does He not discern it?
12 ^aA hollow man will get understanding,
When a wild ass is born a man.^a 13 But if you direct your mind,

And spread forth your hands toward Him—
14 If there is iniquity with you, remove it,
And do not let injustice reside in your tent—15 Then, free of blemish, you will hold your head
high,
And, ^bwhen in straits, ^bbe unafraid.
16 You will then put your misery out of mind,
Consider it as water that has flowed past.
17 ^aLife will be brighter than noon;^a
You will shine, you will be like the morning.
18 You will be secure, for there is hope, ^aAnd, entrenched,^a you will rest secure;

11.1–20: Zophar’s first speech.
2–3: Is a multitude of words unanswerable? Like Bildad in 8.2, Zophar here, in the house of a man bereft of his children (1.18–19) and infested with maggots (7.5), has the colossal nerve to tell Job, the master of the house, that he talks too much! Just because a person talks a lot, says Zophar, does not mean that he is right. 7–11: Can Job, or any person, really understand God? And should God’s actions be limited to those that human beings find rational or just? Here, like the other friends, Zophar suggests that God’s great power (vv. 7–10) shows that He is a fair judge, who punishes iniquity only (v. 11). 12: This is a proverb. Wisdom writings typically quote proverbs, integrating them into their own compositions (see, e.g., the “better” proverbs integrated in Eccl. [Koheleth] ch 7). Zophar is using this proverb to suggest that Job is a hollow man, and that he will never get understanding. 17: A response to the darkness imagery used at the end of Job’s previous speech.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Heb. muṣṣaq; other Heb. editions muṣṣaq, “you will be firm.”

19 You will lie down undisturbed;
The great will court your favor.
20 But the eyes of the wicked pine away;
Escape is cut off from them;
They have only their last breath to look forward to.

12 Then Job said in reply:

2 Indeed, you are the [voice of] the people,
And wisdom will die with you.
3 But I, like you, have a mind,
And am not less than you.
Who does not know such things?
4 I have become a laughingstock to my friend—
“One who calls to God and is answered, Blamelessly innocent”—a laughingstock.
5 ^aIn the thought of the complacent there is contempt for calamity;
It is ready for those whose foot slips.^a 6 Robbers live untroubled in their tents,
And those who provoke God are secure,
^aThose whom God’s hands have produced.^a 7 But ask the beasts, and they will teach you;
The birds of the sky, they will tell you,
8 Or speak to the earth, it will teach you;
The fish of the sea, they will inform you.
9 Who among all these does not know That the hand of the LORD has done this?
10 In His hand is every living soul
And the breath of all mankind.
11 Truly, the ear tests arguments
As the palate tastes foods.
12 Is wisdom in the aged
And understanding in the long-lived?
13 With Him are wisdom and courage;
His are counsel and understanding.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

12.1–14.22: Job responds to Zophar. 12.2–3: Indeed, you are the [voice of] the people, and wisdom will die with you. Better, rhetorically: “Are you really the whole people, and will wisdom die with you?” The authority invoked by Job’s three friends is wisdom tradition (we might say “common knowledge”), which wise people teach as the lesson of the past and which older sages can confirm from life experience. Consequently, Eliphaz appealed both to his own experience, what “I have seen” (4.8 and 5.3) and what “we have inquired” (5.27). Eliphaz will refer again in 15.17–18 to both of his sources of authority: his own life experience, and the teachings of the Sages.

Like Eliphaz, Bildad in 8.8–10 also invokes the teachings of the wise, as does Zophar in 20.4. 3: Who does not know such things? lit., “Who does not have like these?” Rashbam suggests that Job refers to the friends’ previous arguments. Some contemporary scholars construe “these” as referring to Job’s parody in vv. 4–6 of the friends’ arguments (especially Eliphaz in 5.19–24). 4–6: Following this reading, we may understand these vv. as follows: “He laughs at mischance and disaster, just calls to God and is answered—the blameless good man laughs. He scorns misfortune, is tranquil in time of calamity, firm in time of foot-slipping. Tents are unharmed despite marauders, there is security despite those who provoke God, for him whom God shelters with His hand.” Job here refers to Eliphaz’s assertion in 5.22 and Bildad’s similar assertion in 8.21 that a virtuous person should simply laugh at the disasters which befall other persons. See 5.22 n. and 31.29 n. 5: Contempt for calamity: In Tosefta Sotah 3.12 this is taken as an apt description of the people of Sodom who refused to take seriously the warning of impending disaster conveyed by God’s messengers (cf. Gen. 19.4). 7–8: Understanding these vv. as Job’s parodic quotation of the friends, note that in other parts of the text, Job consistently addresses the friends in the second-person plural and they consistently address him in the second-person singular. Here, however, you is singular, indicating that Job is quoting the friends, not speaking to them. Alternatively this may be Job’s counterargument to his friends: They claim that they have the wisdom of generations, but Job suggests that he possesses greater wisdom, based on the less biased, all-seeing animals. 9: Who among all these does not know: Here, as in 3, Job refers critically to his friends’ assertions. 13–25: Again, Job returns to a central theme, the power of God, asserting very clearly that God is extremely powerful, but abuses His power and uses it for 14 Whatever He tears down cannot be rebuilt;

 Whomever He imprisons cannot be set free.
 15 When He holds back the waters, they dry up;
 When He lets them loose, they tear up the land.
 16 With Him are strength and resourcefulness;
 Erring and causing to err are from Him.
 17 He makes counselors go about naked^a
 And causes judges to go mad.
 18 He undoes the belts of kings,
 And fastens loincloths on them.
 19 He makes priests go about naked,^a
 And leads temple-servants^b astray.
 20 He deprives trusty men of speech,
 And takes away the reason of elders.
 21 He pours disgrace upon great men,
 And loosens the belt of the mighty.
 22 He draws mysteries out of the darkness,
 And brings obscurities to light.
 23 He exalts nations, then destroys them;
 He expands nations, then leads them away.
 24 He deranges the leaders of the people,
 And makes them wander in a trackless waste.
 25 They grope without light in the darkness;
 He makes them wander as if drunk.

13 My eye has seen all this;
 My ear has heard and understood it.
 2 What you know, I know also;
 I am not less than you.
 3 Indeed, I would speak to the Almighty;
 I insist on arguing with God.
 4 But you invent lies;
 All of you are quacks.
 5 If you would only keep quiet
 It would be considered wisdom on your part.
 6 Hear now my arguments,
 Listen to my pleading.
 7 Will you speak unjustly on God's behalf?
 Will you speak deceitfully for Him?
 8 Will you be partial toward Him?
 Will you plead God's cause?
 9 Will it go well when He examines you?
 Will you fool Him as one fools men?
 10 He will surely reprove you
 If in ^cyour heart^c you are partial toward Him.

destructive purposes. 13: Job returns to the forensic imagery of ch 9. 13.4–6: Job's plea that his friends listen is logical, given that when each friend replies to Job, he is not actually replying to what Job had just said, and sometimes the friends even put false statements into Job's mouth (e.g., 22.13). 5: This reflects a common wisdom notion, seen in Prov. 17:28: "Even a fool, if he keeps silent, is deemed wise; / Intelligent, if he seals his lips." 9–10: Job is ultimately proven correct in 42:7.

a Sign of madness.

b Cf. Ugaritic ytnm, a class of temple servants; others "the mighty."

c-c Lit. "secret."

11 His threat will terrify you,
 And His fear will seize you.
 12 Your briefs are empty^a platitudes;
 Your responses are unsubstantial.^b
 13 Keep quiet; I will have my say,
 Come what may upon me.
 14 How long! I will take my flesh in my teeth;
 I will take my life in my hands.
 15 ^cHe may well slay me; I may have no hope;^c
 Yet I will argue my case before Him.
 16 In this too is my salvation:
 That no impious man can come into His presence.
 17 Listen closely to my words;
 Give ear to my discourse.
 18 See now, I have prepared a case;
 I know that I will win it.
 19 For who is it that would challenge me?
 I should then keep silent and expire.
 20 But two things do not do to me,
 So that I need not hide from You:
 21 Remove Your hand from me,
 And let not Your terror frighten me.
 22 Then summon me and I will respond,
 Or I will speak and You reply to me.
 23 How many are my iniquities and sins?
 Advise me of my transgression and sin.
 24 Why do You hide Your face,
 And treat me like an enemy?
 25 Will You harass a driven leaf,
 Will You pursue dried-up straw,
 26 That You decree for me bitter things
 And make me ^danswer for^d the iniquities of my youth,
 27 That You put my feet in the stocks
 And watch all my ways, ^eHemming in my footsteps?^e
 28 Man wastes away like a rotten thing,
 Like a garment eaten by moths.

14 Man born of woman is short-lived and sated with trouble.
² He blossoms like a flower and withers;
 He vanishes like a shadow and does not endure.

a Lit. "ashen." b Lit. "clayey."

c-c So with kethib; others with qere "Though He slay me, yet will I trust in Him."

d-d Lit. "inherit." e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

27: Job returns to the theme of 7.12-21, that God watches people too closely; this is further developed at the beginning of the following chapter. 14.1: Man born of woman, Gen. 1.27, "God created the "adam" ("human"). . . . He created them male and female" proves that in biblical Heb "adam," here translated man, refers to both every individual human of either sex and to humankind collectively. This understanding is reflected in ancient rabbinic exegesis (see, e.g., Sifra at Lev. 1.2). Born of woman (Heb "yelud 'ishah") is peculiar to Job (found only twice more in the entire Bible, in Job 15.14; 25.4). It signifies the mortality of human beings. Some commentators read this as a reference to the impurity of childbirth. 2: The image of a flower will be picked up and developed in v. 7.

3 Do You fix Your gaze on such a one?
Will You go to law with me?
4 *Who can produce a clean thing out of an unclean one? No one!^a

5 His days are determined;
You know the number of his months;
You have set him limits that he cannot pass.
6 Turn away from him, that he may be at ease
Until, like a hireling, he finishes out his day.

7 There is hope for a tree;
If it is cut down it will renew itself;
Its shoots will not cease.
8 If its roots are old in the earth,
And its stump dies in the ground,
9 At the scent of water it will bud
And produce branches like a sapling.
10 But mortals languish and die;
Man expires; where is he?
11 The waters of the sea fail,
And the river dries up and is parched.
12 So man lies down never to rise;
He will awake only when the heavens are no more,
Only then be aroused from his sleep.
13 O that You would hide me in Sheol,
Conceal me until Your anger passes,
Set me a fixed time to attend to me.
14 If a man dies, can he live again?
All the time of my service I wait Until my replacement comes.
15 You would call and I would answer You;
You would set Your heart on Your handiwork.
16 Then You would not count my steps,
Or keep watch over my sin.
17 My transgression would be sealed up in a pouch;
You would coat over my iniquity.

18 Mountains collapse and crumble;
Rocks are dislodged from their place.
19 Water wears away stone;
Torrents wash away earth;
So you destroy man's hope,
20 You overpower him forever and he perishes;
You alter his visage and dispatch him.
21 His sons attain honor and he does not know it;
They are humbled and he is not aware of it.

6: The hireling image builds on the opening of ch 7. 7-12: Job is full of ironies. Picking up on the image of the withering flower of v. 2, Job insists that trees are better off than people, since they renew themselves, while human death cannot be reversed. 13-14: O that you would hide me in Sheol. . . . If a man dies, can he live again? The notion of an afterlife, the resurrection of the dead, or a world to come where people are rewarded or punished for their deeds in this world, had not yet developed at the time that Job was written. He thus has, in general, no recourse to these ideas or beliefs in his argument, although there may be the seeds of this idea in v. 14. 18-22: God's power again is invoked by Job, and cast in a negative light.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

22 He feels only the pain of his flesh,
And his spirit mourns in him.

15 Eliphaz the Temanite said in reply:

2 Does a wise man answer with windy opinions,
And fill his belly with the east wind?

3 Should he argue with useless talk,
With words that are of no worth?

4 You subvert piety
And restrain prayer to God.

5 Your sinfulness dictates your speech,
So you choose crafty language.

6 Your own mouth condemns you—not I;
Your lips testify against you.

7 Were you the first man born?

Were you created before the hills?

8 Have you listened in on the council of God?

Have you sole possession of wisdom?

9 What do you know that we do not know,
Or understand that we do not?

10 Among us are gray-haired old men,
Older by far than your father.

11 Are God's consolations not enough for you,
And His gentle words to you?

12 How your heart has carried you away,
How your eyes ^ahave failed^a you,

13 That you could vent your anger on God,
And let such words out of your mouth!

14 What is man that he can be cleared of guilt,
One born of woman, that he be in the right?

15 He puts no trust in His holy ones;

The heavens are not guiltless in His sight;

16 What then of one loathsome and foul,
Man, who drinks wrongdoing like water!

17 I will hold forth; listen to me;

What I have seen, I will declare—

18 That which wise men have transmitted from their fathers,

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

15.1–35: Eliphaz's second speech.

Following the wisdom tradition, this speech begins with a large number of rhetorical questions.

2–3: These rhetorical questions, to which the answer is no, are meant to undermine Job's claim in 12.2–6,

11–12; 13.1–5 that he is wise (i.e., an embodiment of education in the truth) and that his three friends are foolish (i.e., uneducated, miseducated, or possibly ineducable).

3: Useless talk: Echoing Bildad in 8.2ff. and Zophar in 11.2–3, Eliphaz begins his speech by insulting Job for talking too much.

4: And restrain prayer to God, better, "And did you remove conversation [that took place] before God?"—referring back to the dream vision recorded in 4.12–21 (see annotations there) and referred to again most positively by Job in 9.2 (see there). 8: Have you listened in on the council of God? Another mocking reference to Job's report of the dream vision (see above at v. 4 and see 4.12–21; 9.2); for the mocking by the friends of Job's account of his dream vision, see 5.1, and see Job's deriving consolation in 6.10 from his having told of his dream vision. 10: The wisdom accumulated by elders is a major theme in biblical and ancient Near Eastern wisdom literature. 11: God's consolations, better, with Gersonides (1288–1344), "these consolations," i.e., the consolations offered by Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar. The Heb particle "el" here, as in Gen. 19.8, 25; 26.3, 4; Lev. 18.27, etc., is a biform of the common demonstrative adjective "eleh," "these," and it should not be confused with its homonym, the generic term for God or a god. NJPS here follows Rashi (1040–1105). 11b: And His gentle words to you? better, "For there is with you (i.e., you know) some word that reached you with stealth," following Ibn Ezra (1089–1164) and Gersonides.

13: Vent your anger on God, better, "blow your wind at these men." This also follows Gersonides' interpretation (see v. 11a n. above). 13: Out of your mouth! Since Eliphaz now mockingly quotes Job's account of his dream vision, the exclamation mark should be replaced by a colon, and vv. 14–16 should be placed within quotation marks as they are an almost verbatim quotation of 4.12–21 (see also 9.2; 25.4–6). 14: What is man that he can be cleared of guilt? Heb "mah'enosh ki-yizkeh," which inspires the alphabetical "piyyut" (liturgical poem) "Enosh Ma-Yizkeh," "How can man be clear," by Meshullam b. Kalonymos of Rome, in the Morning Service for Yom Kippur.

19 And have not withheld,
 To whom alone the land was given,
 No stranger passing among them:
 20 The wicked man writhes in torment all his days;
 Few years are reserved for the ruthless.
 21 Frightening sounds fill his ears;
 When he is at ease a robber falls upon him.
 22 He is never sure he will come back from the dark;
 A sword stares him in the face.
 23 He wanders about for bread—where is it?
 He knows that the day of darkness has been readied for him.
 24 Troubles terrify him, anxiety overpowers him,
 Like a king ^aexpecting a siege.^a 25 For he has raised his arm against God
 And played the hero against the Almighty.
 26 He runs at Him defiantly^b
^aWith his thickly bossed shield.
 27 His face is covered with fat
 And his loins with blubber.^a 28 He dwells in cities doomed to ruin,
 In houses that shall not be lived in,
 That are destined to become heaps of rubble.
 29 He will not be rich;
 His wealth will not endure;
^aHis produce shall not bend to the earth.^a 30 He will never get away from the darkness;
 Flames will sear his shoots;
^aHe will pass away by the breath of His mouth.
 31 He will not be trusted;
 He will be misled by falsehood,
 And falsehood will be his recompense.^a 32 He will wither before his time,
 His boughs never having flourished.
 33 He will drop his unripe grapes like a vine;
 He will shed his blossoms like an olive tree.
 34 For the company of the impious is desolate;
 Fire consumes the tents of the briber;
 35 For they have conceived mischief, given birth to evil,
 And their womb has produced deceit.

16 Job said in reply:

2 I have often heard such things;
 You are all mischievous comforters.

pur. Both Job and his friends agree that people are worthless (see Bil-dad in 8.17–21). They disagree, however, concerning the implications of this premise: For the friends, it means that people are fundamentally sinners, while for Job it suggests that God needs to give people more leeway in judging them. 14b: Born of woman, see above n. at 14.1, and below at 25.4. 15: He puts no trust in His holy ones, see 4.18 n. The heavens are not guiltless in His sight: This clause appears in its entirety as the ninth clause in the “piyyut” (liturgical poem) “Enosh ‘Eikh Yitzdak,” “How can man be proved innocent before his Creator?” in the Additional (Musaf) Service for Yom Kippur. Composed by the most important of the medieval “pay-yetanim” (liturgical poets), Eleazar ha-Qallir, who lived in the land of Israel during the 7th century CE, this poem is clearly inspired by an ancient Jewish interpretation of Job 15.14–16 and its parallel passages (4.12–21; 9.2; 25.4–6) as a plea for mercy appropriate in the mouth of Job and consequently in the mouth of downtrodden Israel (i.e., the Jewish people) and thoroughly inappropriate in the mouth of Eliphaz except as a quotation of Job’s plea for mercy. This plea is here based upon the reasoning that if personified heavens (said to be pure in Exod. 24.10) are not pure in God’s sight, how much the more are human beings impure; hence collective Israel, following Job’s example, throws himself on the mercy of the divine court. See also the paraphrase of Job 15.15 in the most famous “piyyut,” recited on both the New Year and the Day of Atonement, Unetaneh Tokef: “Indeed, even they [the heavenly host] will not be pure in Your eyes during the judicial process.” 20–35: This is one of the longest descriptions by one of Job’s friends of the fate of the wicked; it is developed with great detail and certainty.

16.1–17.16: Job’s reply to Eliphaz’s second speech. Job begins by criticizing his friends’

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Lit. “with neck.”

3 Have windy words no limit?
 What afflicts you that you speak on?
 4 I would also talk like you
 If you were in my place;
 I would barrage you with words,
 I would wag my head over you.
 5 I would encourage you with words,^a
 My moving lips would bring relief.
 6 If I speak, my pain will not be relieved,
 And if I do not—what have I lost?
 7 Now He has truly worn me out;
 You have destroyed my whole community.
 8 You have shriveled me;
 My gauntness serves as a witness,
 And testifies against me.
 9 In His anger He tears and persecutes me;
 He gnashes His teeth at me;
 My foe stabs me with his eyes.
 10 They open wide their mouths at me;
 Reviling me, they strike my cheeks;
 They inflame themselves against me.
 11 God hands me over to an evil man,
 Thrusts me into the clutches of the wicked.
 12 I had been untroubled, and He broke me in pieces;
 He took me by the scruff and shattered me;
 He set me up as His target;
 13 His bowmen surrounded me;
 He pierced my kidneys; He showed no mercy;
 He spilled my bile onto the ground.
 14 He breached me, breach after breach;
 He rushed at me like a warrior.
 15 I sewed sackcloth over my skin;
 I ^bburied my glory^b in the dust.
 16 My face is red with weeping;
 Darkness covers my eyes
 17 ^cFor no injustice on my part
 And for the purity of my prayer!^c 18 Earth, do not cover my blood;
 Let there be no resting place for my outcry!
 19 Surely now my witness is in heaven;
 He who can testify for me is on high.
 20 O my advocates, my fellows,
 Before God my eyes shed tears;

words, but soon the focus shifts from the friends to God, who is spoken of in the third person and also addressed in the second person. God has become Job's foe, ruining his life, in ways that are described, perhaps metaphorically, as physical attacks on parts of Job's body. Job feels social rejection as well as physical ailments (a common complaint in ancient Near Eastern, including biblical, lament literature). In 16.18–17.1 Job returns to the idea that he has no recourse against God and that all he can do is wait for death. He seems to have lost all hope.

16.3: This echoes Eliphaz in 15.2–3; the friends accuse Job of being a windbag and vice versa. This theme will also play a major role in the first speech of Elihu, in 32.18–19. 9: My foe in this context is likely God, a very strong accusation, representing the tremendous alienation that Job is feeling.

18: Earth, do not cover my blood: Job does not want his suffering to be forgotten or unrequited. The idea behind this phrase is the belief that the blood of the innocent cries out from the ground, as in the case of Abel (Gen. 4.10; see also Ezek. 24.7–8). In a ritual context, Lev. 17.13 states that if an animal or bird is hunted down, its blood must be poured out and covered with earth in order for it to be permitted as food. More recently, this verse has become associated with the Holocaust; it appears, for example, in an inscription in Warsaw marking the site where Jews were transported to Treblinka.

19: In this reference to heaven, Job may also be recalling the ancient tradition that heaven and earth may serve as unbiased witnesses (see Deut. 32.1).

a Lit. "my mouth."

b-b Lit. "made my horn enter into."

c-c Or "Though I did no injustice, / And my prayer was pure."

21 Let Him arbitrate between a man and God
As between a man and his fellow.

22 For a few more years will pass,
And I shall go the way of no return.

17 My spirit is crushed, my days run out;
The graveyard waits for me.

2 Surely mocking men keep me company,
And with their provocations I close my eyes.

3 Come now, stand surety for me!
Who will give his hand on my behalf?

4 You have hidden understanding from their minds;
Therefore You must not exalt [them].

5 He informs on his friends for a share [of their property],
And his children's eyes pine away.

6 He made me a byword among people;
I have become like Tophet^a of old.

7 My eyes fail from vexation;
All shapes seem to me like shadows.

8 The upright are amazed at this;
The pure are aroused against the impious.

9 The righteous man holds to his way;
He whose hands are clean grows stronger.

10 But all of you, come back now;
I shall not find a wise man among you.

11 My days are done, my tendons severed,
The strings of my heart.

12 They say that night is day,
That light is here—in the face of darkness.

13 If I must look forward to Sheol as my home,
And make my bed in the dark place,

14 Say to the Pit, "You are my father,"
To the maggots, "Mother," "Sister"—

15 Where, then, is my hope?
Who can see hope for me?

16 Will it descend to Sheol?
Shall we go down together to the dust?

18 Then Bildad the Shuhite said in reply:

2 How long? Put an end to talk!
Consider, and then we shall speak.

3 Why are we thought of as brutes,
Regarded by you as stupid?

17.10–14: After explicitly raising the issue of wisdom in v. 10, Job reworks a well-known wisdom notion that wisdom would be your relative in a perverse fashion in v.14.

18.1–21: Bildad's second speech. As before, this speech opens with words about making speeches. Bildad rejects Job's characterization of the friends as stupid, suggesting instead that Job makes himself too important, takes his suffering too seriously. He repeats his former views about the fate of the wicked. This is longer and more metaphor-

^a That consumed children; cf. Jer. 7.31.

4 You who tear yourself to pieces in anger—
 Will ^aearth's order be disrupted^a for your sake?
 Will rocks be dislodged from their place?
 5 Indeed, the light of the wicked fails;
 The flame of his fire does not shine.
 6 The light in his tent darkens;
 His lamp fails him.
 7 His iniquitous strides are hobbled;
 His schemes overthrow him.
 8 He is led by his feet into the net;
 He walks onto the toils.
 9 The trap seizes his heel;
 The noose tightens on him.
 10 The rope for him lies hidden on the ground;
 His snare, on the path.
 11 Terrors assault him on all sides
 And send his feet flying.
 12 His progeny hunger;
 Disaster awaits his wife.^b
 13 The tendons under his skin are consumed;
 Death's first-born consumes his tendons.
 14 He is torn from the safety of his tent;
 Terror marches him to the king,^c
 15 It lodges in his desolate tent;
 Sulfur is strewn upon his home.
 16 His roots below dry up,
 And above, his branches wither.
 17 All mention of him vanishes from the earth;
 He has no name abroad.
 18 He is thrust from light to darkness,
 Driven from the world.
 19 He has no seed or breed among his people,
 No survivor where he once lived.
 20 Generations to come will be appalled at his fate,
 As the previous ones are seized with horror.
 21 "These were the haunts of the wicked;
 Here was the place of him who knew not God."

19 Job said in reply:

2 How long will you grieve my spirit,
 And crush me with words?
 3 ^dTime and again^d you humiliate me,
 And are not ashamed to abuse me.
 4 If indeed I have erred,
 My error remains with me.

ical than the similar description of Eliphaz at the end of ch 15.
13-14: Death's first-born . . . Terror
. . . to the king: These may be mythological references; the deity Mot ("Death") is well-attested in Ugaritic mythology. V. 14 ends with "le-melekh balahot," apparently an epithet, better translated as "to King-of-Terrors."

19.1-29: Job's reply to Bildad's second speech. Job complains again about the treatment he receives from his friends and from God. He then describes his feelings of alienation from his family, servants, and friends (vv. 13-20).
 The chapter concludes with a cry for pity, and a wish that his state be recorded for posterity, so that in the future he will be vindicated.

a-a Lit. "the earth be abandoned." b Lit. "rib" (cf. Gen. 2.22); or "stumbling."
c Viz., of the netherworld. d-d Lit. "Ten times."

5 Though you are overbearing toward me,
 Reproaching me with my disgrace,
 6 Yet know that God has wronged me;
 He has thrown up siege works around me.
 7 I cry, "Violence!" but am not answered;
 I shout, but can get no justice.
 8 He has barred my way; I cannot pass;
 He has laid darkness upon my path.
 9 He has stripped me of my glory,
 Removed the crown from my head.
 10 He tears down every part of me; I perish;
 He uproots my hope like a tree.
 11 He kindles His anger against me;
 He regards me as one of His foes.
 12 His troops advance together;
 They build their road toward me
 And encamp around my tent.
 13 He alienated my kin from me;
 My acquaintances disown me.
 14 My relatives are gone;
 My friends have forgotten me.
 15 My dependents and maidservants regard me as a stranger;
 I am an outsider to them.
 16 I summon my servant but he does not respond;
 I must myself entreat him.
 17 My odor is repulsive to my wife;
 I am loathsome to my children.
 18 Even youngsters disdain me;
 When I rise, they speak against me.
 19 All my bosom friends detest me;
 Those I love have turned against me.
 20 My bones stick to my skin and flesh;
 I escape with the skin of my teeth.
 21 Pity me, pity me! You are my friends;
 For the hand of God has struck me!
 22 Why do you pursue me like God,
 *Maligning me insatiably?^a 23 O that my words were written down;
 Would they were inscribed in a record,
 24 Incised on a rock forever
 With iron stylus and lead!
 25 But I know that my Vindicator lives;
 In the end He will testify on earth—
 26 This, after my skin will have been peeled off.

8–13: The repetition of "he" and "me" serves as a powerful accusation against God. 17: My odor is repulsive to my wife: This is the second of three references to Job's wife (see 2.10; 31.10). 17b: I am loathsome to my children: This verse would seem to demonstrate the independence of the poetic symposium from the prose framework, according to which by the time Eliphaz, Bildad, and Zophar came to visit Job, the latter's seven sons and three daughters had all perished. Inconsistencies in details such as these between prose narrative frameworks and poems set within such narrative frameworks are found elsewhere (Exod. chs 14–15; Judg. chs 4–5; Jonah). 23–24: Job is so certain of his innocence that he wants his case to be inscribed on a monumental stele, rather than the more temporary parchment or papyrus used in biblical antiquity. 25: But I know that my Vindicator lives: The word for Vindicator is "go'el," "redeemer," the legal term for the person in the family responsible for avenging the murder of other members (Num. 35.19; Deut. 19.6). While the term "go'el" is sometimes applied to God, who is the "redeemer" of Israel, Job is not speaking about God but rather about a future kinsman who will vindicate him, who will take revenge on God for what God has done to Job.

a-a Lit. "You are not satisfied with my flesh."

27 But I would behold God while still in my flesh,
 I myself, not another, would behold Him;
 Would see with my own eyes:
 My heart^a pines within me.
 28 You say, "How do we persecute him?
 The root of the matter is in him."^b
 29 Be in fear of the sword,
 For [your] fury is iniquity worthy of the sword;
 Know there is a judgment!

20 Zophar the Naamathite said in reply:

2 In truth, my thoughts urge me to answer
 (It is because of my feelings
 3 When I hear reproof that insults me);
 A spirit out of my understanding makes me reply:
 4 Do you not know this, that from time immemorial,
 Since man was set on earth,
 5 The joy of the wicked has been brief,
 The happiness of the impious, fleeting?
 6 Though he grows as high as the sky,
 His head reaching the clouds,
 7 He perishes forever, like his dung;
 Those who saw him will say, "Where is he?"
 8 He flies away like a dream and cannot be found;
 He is banished like a night vision.
 9 Eyes that glimpsed him do so no more;
 They cannot see him in his place any longer.
 10 His sons ingratiate themselves with the poor;
 His own hands must give back his wealth.
 11 His bones, still full of vigor,
 Lie down in the dust with him.
 12 Though evil is sweet to his taste,
 And he conceals it under his tongue;
 13 Though he saves it, does not let it go,
 Holds it inside his mouth,
 14 His food in his bowels turns Into asps' venom within him.
 15 The riches he swallows he vomits;
 God empties it out of his stomach.
 16 He sucks the poison of asps;
 The tongue of the viper kills him.
 17 Let him not enjoy the streams,
 The rivers of honey, the brooks of cream.
 18 He will give back the goods unswallowed;
 The value of the riches, undigested.

20.1–29: Zophar's second speech.
 As if all of Job's previous words meant nothing, Zophar speaks about the fate of the wicked. The dominant image calls upon the digestive system (vv. 12–18). Zophar allows for the possibility that the wicked may triumph, but only briefly (contrast Ps. 1). Though not stated directly, the implication of the speech is that Job, who is suffering all of the punishments of the wicked, must therefore be wicked.

a Lit. "kidneys." b With many mss. and versions; printed editions, "me."

19 Because he crushed and tortured the poor,
He will not build up the house he took by force.
20 He will not see his children tranquil;
He will not preserve one of his dear ones.^a 21 With no survivor to enjoy it,
His fortune will not prosper.
22 When he has all he wants, trouble will come;
Misfortunes of all kinds will batter him.
23 Let that fill his belly;
Let Him loose His burning anger at him,
And rain down His weapons upon him.
24 Fleeing from iron arrows,
He is shot through from a bow of bronze.
25 Brandished and run through his body,
The blade, through his gall,
Strikes terror into him.
26 Utter darkness waits for his treasured ones;
A fire fanned by no man will consume him;
Who survives in his tent will be crushed.
27 Heaven will expose his iniquity;
Earth will rise up against him.
28 His household will be cast forth by a flood,
Spilled out on the day of His wrath.
29 This is the wicked man's portion from God,
The lot God has ordained for him.

21 Job said in reply:

2 Listen well to what I say,
And let that be your consolation.
3 Bear with me while I speak,
And after I have spoken, you may mock.
4 Is my complaint directed toward a man?
Why should I not lose my patience?
5 Look at me and be appalled,
And clap your hand to your mouth.
6 When I think of it I am terrified;
My body is seized with shuddering.
7 Why do the wicked live on,
Prosper and grow wealthy?
8 Their children are with them always,
And they see their children's children.
9 Their homes are secure, without fear;
They do not feel the rod of God.

21.1–34: Job's reply to Zophar's second speech. In this last speech in the second cycle, Job insists that, contrary to what his friends have been saying, the wicked do prosper. 2–3: Listen well . . . be your consolation: Job suggests that the way the friends can bring him consolation, which was their intent (2.11), is to listen to him, instead of berating him. 7–34: Job complains that the wicked prosper and that the success of the wicked demonstrates that justice does not prevail. In the same vein, Jeremiah asks in 12.1, "Why does the way of the wicked prosper? Why are the workers of treachery at ease?" Commenting on vv. 9–14, the Tosefta, which many view as the oldest commentary on the Mishnah (220 CE, at Sotah 3.6), sees in Job's graphic description of the material success of the wicked an account of the prosperity of the generation that perished in the flood described in Gen. ch 7. Tosefta Sotah thereby neutralizes the scriptural evidence, which contradicts the assertion of Mishnah Sotah 1.7 = Tosefta Sotah 3.1 that everyone is rewarded or punished in direct proportion to that person's positive or negative behavior. Moreover, Tosefta Sotah 3.7 contends that "the bounty with which God favored them [the people who perished in the flood] led to the following: 'They say to God "Leave us alone . . ." ' " (Job 21.14a); "[the declaration] 'What is Shaddai that we should serve Him?' " (21.15a), which means, according to Tosefta: "They said, 'Do we need Him [God] for anything except a few drops of rain? Look, we have rivers and wells which are more than enough for us in the summer and in the rainy season.' " Tosefta understands that the vivid description of the prosperity of the wicked in Job 21.8–17, 30–33 seriously undermines the Mishnah's and Tosefta's assertion that ultimately justice prevails. Tosefta's interpretive strategy to defuse the power of Job's account of the prosperity of the wicked is to treat that depiction not as it certainly appears in its biblical context, as a

^a For this meaning of beten and hamud, cf. Hos. 9.16.

10 Their bull breeds and does not fail;
 Their cow calves and never miscarries;
 11 They let their infants run loose like sheep,
 And their children skip about.
 12 They sing to the music of timbrel and lute,
 And revel to the tune of the pipe;
 13 They spend their days in happiness,
 And go down to Sheol in peace.
 14 They say to God, "Leave us alone,
 We do not want to learn Your ways;
 15 What is Shaddai that we should serve Him?
 What will we gain by praying to Him?"
 16 Their happiness is not their own doing.
 (The thoughts of the wicked are beyond me!)
 17 How seldom does the lamp of the wicked fail,
 Does the calamity they deserve befall them,
 Does He apportion [their] lot in anger!
 18 Let them become like straw in the wind,
 Like chaff carried off by a storm.
 19 [You say,] "God is reserving his punishment for his sons";
 Let it be paid back to him that he may feel it,
 20 Let his eyes see his ruin,
 And let him drink the wrath of Shaddai!
 21 For what does he care about the fate of his family,
 When his number of months runs out?
 22 Can God be instructed in knowledge,
 He who judges from such heights?
 23 One man dies in robust health,
 All tranquil and untroubled;
 24 His pails are full of milk;
 The marrow of his bones is juicy.
 25 Another dies embittered,
 Never having tasted happiness.
 26 They both lie in the dust
 And are covered with worms.
 27 Oh, I know your thoughts,
 And the tactics you will devise against me.
 28 You will say, "Where is the house of the great man—
 And where the tent in which the wicked dwelled?"
 29 You must have consulted the wayfarers;
 You cannot deny their evidence.
 30 For the evil man is spared on the day of calamity,
 On the day when wrath is led forth.
 31 Who will upbraid him to his face?
 Who will requite him for what he has done?

depiction of the human situation in all times and places, but rather as a description of one historical event, which occurred at one time in the very remote past and which culminated in the happy ending in which the virtuous few—Noah and his family—survived while the wicked majority perished. 19: [You say,]. The brackets indicate that the translators believe that Job here quotes the view of Bildad in 18.12, 19 and of Zophar in 20.20–21, according to which Job's innocent children died as recompense for Job's guilt; for another view see Zophar at 8.4. Zophar need not be consistent. It is not a debate between philosophers that is portrayed here, but rather a random discussion between a suffering individual and his highly educated friends. 20: Drink the wrath, better, "drink the poison," referring to capital punishment by means of a cup of poison such as was administered to Socrates. 29: Again it is experience which is the ultimate arbiter in wisdom literature. What makes the book of Job so striking is that both Job and his friends view the same world in such diametrically opposed ways. Only an outside event, such as a divine revelation, can settle this debate, and this is precisely what happens in chs 38–42.

32 He is brought to the grave,
While a watch is kept at his tomb.
33 The clods of the wadi are sweet to him,
Everyone follows behind him,
Innumerable are those who precede him.
34 Why then do you offer me empty consolation?
Of your replies only the perfidy remains.

22 Eliphaz the Temanite said in reply:

2 Can a man be of use to God,
A wise man benefit Him?
3 Does Shaddai gain if you are righteous?
Does He profit if your conduct is blameless?
4 Is it because of your piety that He arraigns you,
And enters into judgment with you?
5 You know that your wickedness is great,
And that your iniquities have no limit.
6 You exact pledges from your fellows without reason,
And leave them naked, stripped of their clothes;
7 You do not give the thirsty water to drink;
You deny bread to the hungry.
8 The land belongs to the strong;
The privileged occupy it.
9 You have sent away widows empty-handed;
The strength of the fatherless is broken.
10 Therefore snares are all around you,
And sudden terrors frighten you,
11 Or darkness, so you cannot see;
A flood of waters covers you.
12 God is in the heavenly heights;
See the highest stars, how lofty!
13 You say, "What can God know?
Can He govern through the dense cloud?
14 The clouds screen Him so He cannot see
As He moves about the circuit of heaven."
15 Have you observed the immemorial path
That evil men have trodden;

22.1–30: Eliphaz's third and final speech. 2–4: Eliphaz refers here to Job's begging in 10.2; 13.23 that God tell him just where he has gone wrong so as to deserve the loss of children, wealth, and health, and insists that God is unbiased. 5–7, 9: Eliphaz here provides the kind of bill of particulars that Job had requested in 10.2; 13.23. These follow naturally from his immediately preceding comments: If God is unbiased and punishes only the wicked, and Job is being punished, then he must be very wicked. In his final speech, Eliphaz has moved far from his initial position in 4.3–6. 8: The land

... occupy it, better, "The man of violence owns the earth, and the man who is an object of favoritism is enthroned therein." The ancient Dead Sea Scroll Aramaic translation of Job recovered from Qumran Cave 11 anticipated modern scholarship in understanding this verse as Eliphaz's quoting Job's viewpoint as expressed in 9.24; 15.19. (One of the many problems of interpreting Job is that, like other wisdom texts, it quotes sayings in order to refute them, but there is no equivalent of quotation marks in ancient Heb.) Some scholars suggest that originally 22.8 was after 22.14. 10: Eliphaz here repeats what he stated in 4.7–9 and what Bildad stated in 8.4 concerning the death of Job's children: "They had it coming to them." 11–14: Holding that Eliphaz is serious in his allegations in 22.5–9, some modern interpreters, inspired by Rashi and Ibn Ezra, see in 22.11–14 an explanation of Job's disregard of the poor and the weak: "You thought, God is above the stars and therefore cannot judge men." Since in the end Job's friends are made to apologize to Job for blaming him for his own suffering, and since in v. 13a Eliphaz explicitly says, "You say . . .," it is possible to see in vv. 12, 13b–14, and 8 a speech that Eliphaz puts into Job's mouth so that he can rebut it in vv. 15–30. Of course, Job has said no such thing. This is another indication that there is no true dialogue here, and Job's accusations that his "friends" are not listening to him are true. 15–30: Eliphaz repeats what he stated in 5.17–27; 15.17–35; what Bildad stated in 8.13–22; 18.5–21; and what Zophar stated in 11.13–20; 20.4–29; that in the long run justice will prevail, and that Job, if he is indeed essentially innocent, will be vindicated and prosper if he will desist from whatever misdemeanors he has committed. 15–18: Here Eliphaz addresses Job, echoing Job's allegations in 21.14–16. As elsewhere, the truth may be learned from observation of how the world works.

16 How they were shriveled up before their time
 And their foundation poured out like a river?
 17 They said to God, "Leave us alone;
 What can Shaddai do about it?"
 18 But it was He who filled their houses with good things.
 (The thoughts of the wicked are beyond me!)
 19 The righteous, seeing it,^a rejoiced;
 The innocent laughed with scorn.
 20 Surely their substance was destroyed,
 And their remnant consumed by fire.

21 Be close to Him and wholehearted;
 Good things will come to you thereby.
 22 Accept instruction from His mouth;
 Lay up His words in your heart.
 23 If you return to Shaddai you will be restored,
 If you banish iniquity from your tent;
 24 If you regard treasure as dirt,
 Ophir-gold as stones of the wadi,
 25 And Shaddai be your treasure
 And precious silver for you, 26 When you seek the favor of Shaddai,
 And lift up your face to God,
 27 You will pray to Him, and He will listen to you,
 And you will pay your vows.
 28 You will decree and it will be fulfilled,
 And light will shine upon your affairs.
 29 When others sink low, you will say it is pride;
 For He saves the humble.
 30 He will deliver the guilty;
 He will be delivered through the cleanness of your hands.

23 Job said in reply:

2 Today again my complaint is bitter;
^bMy strength is spent^b on account of my groaning.
 3 Would that I knew how to reach Him,
 How to get to His dwelling-place.
 4 I would set out my case before Him
 And fill my mouth with arguments.
 5 I would learn what answers He had for me
 And know how He would reply to me.
 6 Would He contend with me overbearingly?
 Surely He would not accuse me!

23.1–24.25: Job's reply to Eliphaz's third speech. In this speech Job does not even address Eliphaz. He complains about God (23.2–17); he accuses God of not intervening to prevent injustice (24.1–12); and he provides numerous examples of the material success of the unjust, and he wishes that God would punish the wicked. He concludes his speech emphatically with 24.25: "Surely no one can confute."
23.2–10: The theme is again forensic. Job is insisting that God is hiding. This picks up on a major theological theme of the Bible, especially in Psalms, that God sometimes hides His face from individuals, allowing them to be punished unjustly (e.g., Job 13.24; Ps. 13.2).

^a Referring to v. 16. ^{b-b} Lit. "My hand is heavy."

7 There the upright would be cleared by Him,
And I would escape forever from my judge.

8 But if I go East—He is not there;
West—I still do not perceive Him;
9 North—since He is concealed, I do not behold
Him;
South—He is hidden, and I cannot see Him.
10 But He knows the way I take;
Would He assay me, I should emerge pure as gold.
11 I have followed in His tracks,
Kept His way without swerving, 12 I have not deviated from what His lips commanded;
I have treasured His words more than my daily bread.

13 He is one; who can dissuade Him?
Whatever He desires, He does.
14 For He will bring my term to an end,
But He has many more such at His disposal.
15 Therefore I am terrified at His presence;
When I consider, I dread Him.
16 God has made me fainthearted;
Shaddai has terrified me.
17 Yet I am not cut off by the darkness;
He has concealed the thick gloom from me.

24 Why are times for judgment not reserved by Shaddai?

Even those close to Him cannot foresee His actions.^a

2 People remove boundary-stones;
They carry off flocks and pasture them;
3 They lead away the donkeys of the fatherless,
And seize the widow's bull as a pledge;
4 They chase the needy off the roads;
All the poor of the land are forced into hiding.
5 Like the wild asses of the wilderness,
They go about their tasks, seeking food;
The wilderness provides each with food for his lads;
6 They harvest fodder in the field,
And glean the late grapes in the vineyards of the wicked.
7 They pass the night naked for lack of clothing,
They have no covering against the cold;

24.2–12: All of the sins mentioned by Job are general in nature, and express universal moral expectations of all people, not just Israelites. Similar expectations are found in ancient Near Eastern wisdom literature, and in passages such as Amos 1.3–2.3, which contain oracles of condemnation against nations other than Israel. 2: People remove boundary-stones, i.e., they expropriate other people's real estate; see Deut. 19.14; 27.17; Prov. 23.10.

^a Lit. "days."

8 They are drenched by the mountain rains,
And huddle against the rock for lack of shelter.

9^a They snatch the fatherless infant from the breast,
And seize the child of the poor as a pledge.

10 They go about naked for lack of clothing,
And, hungry, carry sheaves;

11 Between rows [of olive trees] they make oil,
And, thirsty, they tread the winepresses.

12 Men groan in the city;
The souls of the dying cry out;
Yet God does not regard it as a reproach.

13 They are rebels against the light;
They are strangers to its ways,
And do not stay in its path.

14 The murderer arises ^bin the evening^b
To kill the poor and needy,
And at night he acts the thief.

15 The eyes of the adulterer watch for twilight,
Thinking, "No one will glimpse me then."
He masks his face.

16 In the dark they break into houses;
By day they shut themselves in;
They do not know the light.

17 For all of them morning is darkness;
It is then that they discern the terror of darkness.

18^c May they be flotsam on the face of the water;
May their portion in the land be cursed;
May none turn aside by way of their vineyards.

19 May drought and heat snatch away their snow
waters,
And Sheol, those who have sinned.

20 May the womb forget him;
May he be sweet to the worms;
May he be no longer remembered;
May wrongdoers be broken like a tree.

21 May he consort with a barren woman who bears
no child,
Leave his widow deprived of good.

22 Though he has the strength to seize bulls,
May he live with no assurance of survival.

23 Yet [God] gives him the security on which he relies,
And keeps watch over his affairs.

9b: And seize the child of the poor as a pledge: For children enslaved because they were collateral on their parents' debts, see 2 Kings 4.1.

15–25: Here as in 21.7–34 Job complains that the wicked prosper and that the success of the unjust demonstrates that justice does not prevail in the world, but he goes beyond what he stated before by showing that injustice is compounded by the fact that the success of the wicked is achieved at the expense of orphans (vv. 3, 9), widows (v: 3), and the poor (vv. 5–8, 14). Such undeserved suffering of those on the lowest rungs of the socioeconomic ladder proves that justice does not prevail in the world. Using the third person, he condemns all unjust individuals, preparing the way for the stronger (first-person) self-imprecation in ch 31. 15: The eyes of the adulterer watch for twilight, / Thinking, "No one will glimpse me then." / He masks his face. Tosefta Sotah 3.5 comments as follows: "She did it [i.e., committed adultery] in secret [Heb "beseter") as it is stated in Scripture, 'The eyes of the adulterer watch for twilight, Thinking . . . , and she does not know that He who is enthroned in the Secret Place [a form of "beseter" inspired by this v.] of the world has set [His] face against her (cf. Jer. 44.11; Ezek. 15.7) in accord with what is stated in Scripture (Job 24.15), 'He puts [away] the face mask,' which teaches that God removes what is hidden into the open, as it is said in Scripture (Prov. 26.26), 'His hatred may be concealed [by dissimulation, but his evil will be exposed to public view].'" NJPS concurs with Tosefta in understanding Heb "seter" as mask. Where NJPS interprets literally "he puts [on] face mask," Tosefta gives the verb "yasim," "put," the unlikely meaning of "put off, remove." Moreover, while NJPS construes adulterer in the first half of the verse as the subject of the verb "puts" and correctly understands the verse as one more item in a catalogue of injustices that populate the world, Tosefta seeks here, (see 21.7–34 n.) to defuse Scripture's a This verse belongs to the description of the wicked in vv. 2–4a.

b-b Cf. Mishnaic Heb. 'or, Aramaic 'orta, "evening"; others "with the light."

c From here to the end of the chapter the translation is largely conjectural.

24 Exalted for a while, let them be gone;
Be brought low, and shrivel like mallows,
And wither like the heads of grain.

25 Surely no one can confute me,
Or prove that I am wrong.

25 Bildad the Shuhite said in reply:

2 Dominion and dread are His;
He imposes peace in His heights.
3 Can His troops be numbered?
On whom does His light not shine?
4 How can man be in the right before God?
How can one born of woman be cleared of guilt?
5 Even the moon is not bright,
And the stars are not pure in His sight.
6 How much less man, a worm,
The son-of-man, a maggot.

26 Then Job said in reply:

2 You would help without having the strength;
You would deliver with arms that have no power.
3 Without having the wisdom, you offer advice
And freely give your counsel.
4 To whom have you addressed words?
Whose breath issued from you?
5 The shades tremble
Beneath the waters and their denizens.
6 Sheol is naked before Him;
Abaddon has no cover.

vivid portrayal of human injustice and to read into the biblical text God's dispensing of justice.

25.1–6: Continuation of Job's speech. Although ascribed to Bildad, these vv. should be assigned to Job (see intro.). 2b: He imposes peace in His heights: This half verse is found as the first clause of the final line of long versions of kaddish, and is also recited silently at the end of the "Shemoneh 'Esrei" (Eighteen Benedictions). The reference here is to God controlling His heavenly council (see chs 1–2). 4: Born of woman, for this expression, which is unique to the book of Job, see 14.1 n.; 15.14 n.

26.1–14: Bildad's reply. Here Bildad, to whom we have restored vv. 2–4 (because, as we noted, Job always addresses the friends in the plural and they always address him in the singular; see intro.), repeats with slight variations the rhetorical questions addressed to Job by Eliphaz in 4.3–4. There, as here, the import of these questions is the friends' inability to understand why Job cannot apply his wisdom to his own case. Were he able to do so, he would not upset his visitors by his expressions of a death wish for himself and his conclusion that his own unjust suffering proves that injustice ultimately prevails in the conduct of the cosmos. 2: You would help without having the strength, better, "Did you help persons without strength?"; cf. the assertions in 4.3b–4: "You have strengthened failing hands. / Your words have kept him who stumbled from falling; / You have braced knees that gave way." Cf. also Job's own recollection of better days gone by when he was literally "eyes to the blind, feet to the lame . . . father to the needy . . . one who consoles mourners" (29.12–25). 3: Without having the wisdom, better, "Did you offer advice to persons lacking wisdom and give counsel to the multitude?" See comments on v. 2 above; cf. 29.21–22. 4: To whom have you addressed words? In light of the clear parallels between 26.2–3 and both 4.3–4 and 29.12–25, it should be obvious that in 26.4 Bildad attempts to remind Job of what Job himself declares about his former success as both a listening ear and a person who says the right thing at the right time in the right place in 29.21–25. Whose breath issued from you? In light of the questions posed to Job in vv. 2–4a and the affirmative answers later provided to those questions by Job in 29.12–25, v. 4b must refer to the renewed lease on life that Job, by means of his listening ear and empathetic discourse, provided others. Here as in 4.3–4 the friends scold Job for not doctoring himself as he had doctoring others.

5–14: Like Elihu in 37.2–24 and like the LORD in ch 38 and anticipated by Job himself in 9.4–13, so also Bildad here argues that the majesty of God's power should preclude Job from challenging God to account for Job's allegedly undeserved suffering. As the friends have argued before, the implication of God's great power is His fair justice. 5: The shades, Heb "refa'im," refers to the dead who abide in Sheol. The same word is found also in Isa. 14.9; 26.14, 19; Ps. 88.11; Prov. 2.18; 9.18;

7 He it is who stretched out Zaphon^a over chaos,
Who suspended earth over emptiness.
8 He wrapped up the waters in His clouds;
Yet no cloud burst under their weight.
9 ^bHe shuts off the view of His throne,
Spreading His cloud over it.^b
10 He drew a boundary on the surface of the waters,
At the extreme where light and darkness meet.
11 The pillars of heaven tremble,
Astounded at His blast.
12 By His power He stilled the sea;
By His skill He struck down Rahab.
13 By His wind the heavens were calmed;
His hand pierced the “Elusive Serpent.”^c
14 These are but glimpses of His rule,
The mere whisper that we perceive of Him;
Who can absorb the thunder of His mighty deeds?

27 Job again took up his theme and said:

2 By God who has deprived me of justice!
By Shaddai who has embittered my life!
3 As long as there is life in me,
And God’s breath is in my nostrils,
4 My lips will speak no wrong,
Nor my tongue utter deceit.
5 Far be it from me to say you are right;
Until I die I will maintain my integrity.

a Used for heaven; cf. Isa. 14.13; Ps. 48.3.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c-c Cf. Isa. 27.1.

21.16; and the same term refers to the dead in their repose on two Phoenician sarcophagi from Sidon, belonging to 6th-century BCE Tabnit and 5th-century BCE Eshmunazar II, respectively, and on a 1st-century CE Neo-Punic inscription. 7: Stretched out Zaphon, cf. 9.8, “spread out the heavens” and the parallels cited there. 9: He shuts off the view of His throne, / Spreading His cloud over it, cf. Ps. 97.2: “Dense clouds are around Him . . . His throne.” 10: He drew a boundary on the surface of the waters: Here, as in Gen. 1.1–3; Ps. 104.6–9; Prov. 8.27, creation is described as God’s making order out of an already existing chaos, which consisted of a watery abyss. At the extreme where light and darkness meet: According to Gen. 1.2–3 the first act of creation was God’s commanding the light into existence alongside the preexisting darkness. Isa. 45.7, on the other hand, asserts that the LORD is the creator of both light and darkness. The NJPS translation of 26.10 follows Ibn Ezra and suggests that the boundary between earth and preexisting water was made at the point where preexisting light and preexisting darkness met. 12: Rahab, the personified sea. Here, as in 9.13, the creation of the cosmos is pictured as the victory of God over the sea. This epithet is found in Job only at 9.13 and here; it appears also in Isa. 30.7; 51.9; Pss. 87.4; 89.11. 13: Elusive Serpent, Heb “naḥašh bariaḥ,” translating “bariaḥ” as an

Aramaic form of Heb “boreaḥ,” “fleeing.” The same word is translated “bar” (i.e., a straight rod or support) in Exod. 26.26–29 and elsewhere. The Baal Epic from Late Bronze Age Ugarit says, “You will destroy Lotan [= Heb Leviathan] the straight [b-r-h] serpent / the twisted serpent with seven heads”; and Isa. 27.1, a parallel, reads, “Leviathan the ‘bariaḥ’ serpent / Leviathan the twisting serpent.” Consequently, it may be preferable to translate “bariaḥ” both here and in Isa. 27.1 as “straight.”

27.1–28.28: The continuation of Job’s speech. Conventional modern biblical scholarship treats ch 27 as a collection of leftover verses from which to reconstruct the speech of Zophar and Job’s reply to that speech, and ch 28 as possibly a separate composition that was erroneously included in an early copy of Job. For reasons given in the introduction, a different approach is taken here. When interpreting the book as a complete work it is possible to see in these chapters Job’s long reply to the suggestion on the part of his wife (2.9) and friends in the Book of Job the Patient (see intro.) that Job blaspheme God. (Integrity in 27.5 is the same word, “tam,” translated “blameless” in 1.1 and 2.3.) In so doing, of course, Job would have enabled the Adversary rather than God to win the wager described in 1.6–12; 2.2–8.

27.1–23: Job’s speech continues. 2–6: Notwithstanding his loss of property, children, and health, and the friends’ urging him to blaspheme God, he is swearing an oath by God not to blaspheme God. 2: By God, i.e., “I swear.” Having been urged by his wife to blaspheme God, Job refuses to do so (2.9–10). 4: My lips will speak no wrong, the content of the oath referred to in v. 2. Consequently, each clause begins with “im,” which means “no, nor” in the context of an oath. Here we see the dramatization of what the narrator asserted in 2.10: “Job said nothing

6 I persist in my righteousness and will not yield;
 I shall be free of reproach^a as long as I live.

7 May my enemy be as the wicked;
 My assailant, as the wrongdoer.

8 For what hope has the impious man when he is cut down,
 When God takes away his life?

9 Will God hear his cry
 When trouble comes upon him,
 When he seeks the favor of Shaddai,
 Calls upon God at all times?

11 I will teach you what is in God's power,
 And what is with Shaddai I will not conceal.

12 All of you have seen it,
 So why talk nonsense?

13 This is the evil man's portion from God,
 The lot that the ruthless receive from Shaddai:

14 Should he have many sons—they are marked for the sword;
 His descendants will never have their fill of bread;
 Those who survive him will be buried in a plague,
 And their widows will not weep;
 Should he pile up silver like dust,
 Lay up clothing like dirt—
 He may lay it up, but the righteous will wear it,
 And the innocent will share the silver.

18 The house he built is like a bird's nest,
 Like the booth a watchman makes.

19 He lies down, a rich man, with [his wealth]
 intact;
 When he opens his eyes it is gone.

20 Terror overtakes him like a flood;
 A storm wind makes off with him by night.

21 The east wind carries him far away, and he is gone;
 It sweeps him from his place.

22 Then it hurls itself at him without mercy;
 He tries to escape from its force.

23 It claps its hands at him,
 And whistles at him from its place.

28 There is a mine for silver,
 And a place where gold is refined.

2 Iron is taken out of the earth,
 And copper smelted from rock.

sinful.” 5: To say you are right: The plural you here may be addressed to Job's three friends, who, in a now lost version of the narrative framework, joined with Job's wife in urging him to curse God. 6: I shall be free of reproach, lit. “my heart will not blaspheme.” Contrary to Rava in b. Bava Batra 16a, and going beyond what the narrator states in 2.10, and also beyond what Job himself imputed to his children in 1.5, Job declares unequivocally that he has blasphemed God neither aloud nor in his thoughts. 7–23: Job expresses the conviction that it is not wise to blaspheme God because, in the end, virtuous people are rewarded, and wicked people are punished. In this Job the Patient agrees with what in the Book of Job the Impatient Eliphaz states in 4.7–11, Zophar in 8.3–22, and Bildad in 11.13–20. 15: Their widows will not weep because they will not be sad. One of the common beliefs reflected in the books of Job and Koheleth (Ecclesiastes) is that virtuous people deserve elaborate funerals and that the wicked ought to be punished by not being mourned (Eccl. 8.10–14; 9.1–6); see 21.30–33.

28.1–28: Hymn of Wisdom or more of Job the Patient. According to many modern scholars, ch 28 is a hymn in praise of wisdom. In fact, this chapter does not praise wisdom. Wisdom is claimed by both Job and his friends as their possession. It is attributed to both King Solomon on the one hand and the Kedemites and Egyptians on the other (1 Kings 5.10), and it is claimed by both Nebuchadnezzar's learned advisers and Daniel in Daniel ch 2. The point of ch 28 is not that wisdom is to be praised but that wisdom is very difficult to acquire. Here, as in Ps. 111.10 and Prov. 1.7; 9.10, are praises of the twin virtues of fearing the LORD and shunning evil, virtues that merit the LORD's bestowing upon Joseph, Solomon, Job, and Daniel knowledge which enables them to surpass what all the other “wise people” in the world attempt to

^{a-a} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

3 He sets bounds for darkness;
 To every limit man probes,
 To rocks in deepest darkness.
 4 ^aThey open up a shaft far from where men live,
 [In places] forgotten by wayfarers,
 Destitute of men, far removed.^a 5 Earth, out of which food grows,
 Is changed below as if into fire.
 6 Its rocks are a source of sapphires;
 It contains gold dust too.
 7 No bird of prey knows the path to it;
 The falcon's eye has not gazed upon it.
 8 The proud beasts have not reached it;
 The lion has not crossed it.
 9 Man sets his hand against the flinty rock
 And overturns mountains by the roots.
 10 He carves out channels through rock;
 His eyes behold every precious thing.
 11 He dams up the sources of the streams
 So that hidden things may be brought to light.

12 But where can wisdom be found;
 Where is the source of understanding?
 13 No man can set a value on it;
 It cannot be found in the land of the living.
 14 The deep says, "It is not in me";
 The sea says, "I do not have it."
 15 It cannot be bartered for gold;
 Silver cannot be paid out as its price.
 16 The finest gold of Ophir cannot be weighed against it,
 Nor precious onyx, nor sapphire.
 17 Gold or glass cannot match its value,
 Nor vessels of fine gold be exchanged for it.
 18 Coral and crystal cannot be mentioned with it;
 A pouch of wisdom is better than rubies.
 19 Topaz from Nubia cannot match its value;
 Pure gold cannot be weighed against it.

20 But whence does wisdom come?
 Where is the source of understanding?
 21 It is hidden from the eyes of all living,
 Concealed from the fowl of heaven.
 22 Abaddon and Death say,
 "We have only a report of it."

achieve on the basis of their education and life experience. As in parts of Proverbs, fear of the LORD is presented as superior to this elusive wisdom. 1–11: An extended image of the inaccessibility of ores and gems sets the scene for the question posed in v. 12. Gold, the most precious metal, must be extracted at great effort from the earth, where it is hidden away. Vv. 4–5 are an especially vivid description of the opening of a mine. The world under the ground is very different from the world above ground. 12–19: Wisdom is more precious than gold and precious gems. Where can it be found? 19: Nubia (Heb "Kush"), or Ethiopia. 20–28: Unlike gold or precious gems, wisdom cannot be found in the physical world, even in far-off, exotic places. Even Death does not know where it resides. Only God, who created the world and knows the source of all things, knows where wisdom is. He gives it to those who fear the LORD and shun evil. Fear of the LORD is the sine qua non for attaining wisdom; and fearing God and shunning evil are the attributes of Job.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

23 God understands the way to it;
 He knows its source;
 24 For He sees to the ends of the earth,
 Observes all that is beneath the heavens.
 25 When He fixed the weight of the winds,
 Set the measure of the waters;
 26 When He made a rule for the rain
 And a course for the thunderstorms,
 27 Then He saw it and gauged it;
 He measured it and probed it.
 28 He said to man,
 "See! Fear of the Lord is wisdom;
 To shun evil is understanding."

29 Job again took up his theme and said:

2 O that I were as in months gone by,
 In the days when God watched over me,
 3 When His lamp shone over my head,
 When I walked in the dark by its light,
 4 When I was in my prime,
 When God's company graced my tent,
 5 When Shaddai was still with me,
 When my lads surrounded me,
 6 When my feet were bathed in cream,
 And rocks poured out streams of oil for me.
 7 When I passed through the city gates
 To take my seat in the square,
 8 Young men saw me and hid,
 Elders rose and stood;
 9 Nobles held back their words;
 They clapped their hands to their mouths.
 10 The voices of princes were hushed;
 Their tongues stuck to their palates.
 11 The ear that heard me acclaimed me;
 The eye that saw, commended me.
 12 For I saved the poor man who cried out,
 The orphan who had none to help him.
 13 I received the blessing of the lost;
 I gladdened the heart of the widow.
 14 I clothed myself in righteousness and it robed me;
 Justice was my cloak and turban.
 15 I was eyes to the blind
 And feet to the lame.
 16 I was a father to the needy,
 And I looked into the case of the stranger.
 17 I broke the jaws of the wrongdoer,
 And I wrested prey from his teeth.

29.1–31.40: Job's soliloquy. These chapters form a logical progression: Job recalls the good old days (ch 29), laments his current physical and social afflictions (ch 30), and offers a powerful self-imprecation, insisting on his innocence (ch 31). Toward the end of his soliloquy, he returns to the forensic imagery (31.35–37) that typifies many of his arguments earlier in the book. 29.2–4: O that I were . . . when I was in my prime: Job prefers the memory of his former state to his present situation. In earlier times, when God blessed him and made him successful, he was an honored member of society, respected and heeded by all, who helped those in need. 3: Lamp . . . light, cf. Ps. 119.105; 139.12. 7: Gates . . . square, the centers of legal transactions and business activity. Those who sat here were the decision-makers of society.

18 I thought I would end my days with my family,^a
 And ^bbe as long-lived as the phoenix,^b 19 My roots reaching water,
 And dew lying on my branches;
 20 My vigor refreshed,
 My bow ever new in my hand.
 21 Men would listen to me expectantly,
 And wait for my counsel.
 22 After I spoke they had nothing to say;
 My words were as drops [of dew] upon them.
 23 They waited for me as for rain,
 For the late rain, their mouths open wide.
 24 When I smiled at them, they would not believe it;
 They never expected^c a sign of my favor.
 25 I decided their course and presided over them;
 I lived like a king among his troops,
 Like one who consoles mourners.

20: A reference to physical or sexual vigor. 25: Like one who consoles mourners: High social status is afforded the person who succeeds in consoling mourners in their bereavement. Given the failure of Job's friends to condole with him properly, Job's words are all the more poignant. 30.1: But now those younger than I deride me: Those with less wisdom than Job now think they are wiser and no longer respect him. Job feels like an outcast; he has lost his position in society because of his suffering. 2–8: The elderly and the infirm are banished so as not to be seen. 10–14: Young people taunt and even physically abuse the elderly and the infirm.

30 But now those younger than I deride me, [Men] whose fathers I would have disdained to put among my sheep dogs.

2 Of what use to me is the strength of their hands?

All their vigor^d is gone.
 3 Wasted from want and starvation,
 They flee to a parched land,
 To the gloom of desolate wasteland.
 4 They pluck saltwort and wormwood;
 The roots of broom are their food.
 5 Driven out ^efrom society,^e
 They are cried at like a thief.
 6 They live in the gullies of wadis,
 In holes in the ground, and in rocks,
 7 Braying among the bushes,
 Huddling among the nettles,
 8 Scoundrels, nobodies,
 Stricken from the earth.

9 Now I am the butt of their gibes;
 I have become a byword to them.
 10 They abhor me; they keep their distance from me;
 They do not withhold spittle from my face.
 11 Because God^f has disarmed^g and humbled me,
 They have thrown off restraint in my presence.

a Lit. "nest." b-b Others "multiply days like sand."

c Taking yappilun as from pll; cf. Gen. 48.11. d Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain. f Lit. "He." g Lit. "loosened my [bow] string."

12 Mere striplings assail me at my right hand:
 They put me to flight;
 They build their roads for my ruin.
 13 They tear up my path;
 They promote my fall,
 Although it does them no good.
 14 They come as through a wide breach;
 They roll in ^alike raging billows.^a 15 Terror tumbles upon me;
 It sweeps away my honor like the wind;
 My dignity^b vanishes like a cloud.
 16 So now my life runs out;
 Days of misery have taken hold of me.
 17 By night my bones feel gnawed;
 My sinews never rest.
 18 ^aWith great effort I change clothing;
 The neck of my tunic fits my waist.^a 19 He regarded me as clay,
 I have become like dust and ashes.
 20 I cry out to You, but You do not answer me;
 I wait, but You do [not] consider me.
 21 You have become cruel to me;
 With Your powerful hand You harass me.
 22 You lift me up and mount me on the wind;
 You make my courage melt.
 23 I know You will bring me to death,
 The house assigned for all the living.
 24 ^aSurely He would not strike at a ruin
 If, in calamity, one cried out to Him.^a 25 Did I not weep for the unfortunate?
 Did I not grieve for the needy?
 26 I looked forward to good fortune, but evil came;
 I hoped for light, but darkness came.
 27 My bowels are in turmoil without respite;
 Days of misery confront me.
 28 I walk about in sunless gloom;
 I rise in the assembly and cry out.
 29 I have become a brother to jackals,
 A companion to ostriches.
 30 My skin, blackened, is peeling off me;
 My bones are charred by the heat.
 31 So my lyre is given over to mourning,
 My pipe, to accompany weepers.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Heb. yeshu'athi taken as related to shoa', "noble."

31 I have covenanted with my eyes
 Not to gaze on a maiden.
 2 What fate is decreed by God above?
 What lot, by Shaddai in the heights?
 3 Calamity is surely for the iniquitous;
 Misfortune, for the worker of mischief.
 4 Surely He observes my ways,
 Takes account of my every step.
 5 Have I walked with worthless men,
 Or my feet hurried to deceit?
 6 Let Him weigh me on the scale of righteousness;
 Let God ascertain my integrity.
 7 If my feet have strayed from their course,
 My heart followed after my eyes,
 And a stain sullied my hands,
 8 May I sow, but another reap,
 May the growth of my field be uprooted!
 9 If my heart was ravished by the wife of my neighbor,
 And I lay in wait at his door,
 10 May my wife grind for another,
 May others kneel over her!
 11 For that would have been debauchery,
 A criminal offense,
 12 A fire burning down to Abaddon,
 Consuming the roots of all my increase.

31.1–40: Job's confession of innocence. This summation by the defense before both the LORD and Job's three friends most certainly constitutes Job's last word in his trial (see 32.1). Eliphaz accused Job of failing to provide for the needs of the impoverished (22.7) and of adding to the suffering of widows and orphans (22.9). Here (vv. 16–19) Job responds with a plea of innocence to these and other charges that have been mentioned or implied in the course of the condolence call turned into symposium (chs 4–26). With this plea Job rests his case. Many scholars have compared Job's confession of innocence with the negative confession in the Egyptian Book of the Dead from the Egyptian New Kingdom (1555–1085 BCE). In the latter text the deceased declares—before Osiris, the divine ruler of the realm of the dead (who himself had overcome death), and forty-two judges—the deceased person's innocence of thirty-six offenses, including both murder and shortcomings with respect to religious rites. Job ch 31 has three especially significant rhetorical features: First, a list of 14 (i.e., 7 × 2) sins from which Job claims innocence, similar to the listing of 14 capital offenses punishable by stoning to death in m. Sanh. 7.4; to the 14 ages of humans in m. 'Avot 5.21; and to the 14 qualities induced by the study of Torah according to 'Avot 6.7. Second, twenty instances of the particle "im" in three distinct meanings: (1) "if" in the protasis (conditional clause) of an ordinary conditional sentence (31.19); (2) "if" in the protasis describing a crime where the apodasis (concluding clause) describes the penalty (vv. 7–8; 9–10; 21–22; 38–40); (3) the interrogative particle introducing a rhetorical question which calls for a negative reply (vv. 5, 13, 16, 19, 24, 25, 26, 33). Third, virtual quotations of Job's thought processes in vv. 2–4 and 14–15 [Robert Gordis, The Book of Job (New York, 1978), pp. 543–545]. The self-imprecation (curse) of this chapter would have been seen as very serious in antiquity, and not as a mere rhetorical statement. Many of the consequences suggested for offences reflect the biblical principle of measure-for-measure, which is further developed in the rabbinic period (see esp. vv. 9–10 and 21–22; note, e.g., Exod. 22.20–23). 1: Not to gaze on a maiden: Heb "betulah," "maiden," like its Akkadian masculine and feminine cognates, can designate a young, unmarried person of marriageable age. In some contexts (e.g., Deut. 22.13–21) it means specifically "virgin." The exact reference of this verse is obscure and many scholars relocate it to later in the chapter. 3: Calamity is surely for the iniquitous: Here, as in 6.29–30; 9.17, 21; 13.23; 23.4–12; 24.25, Job protests that he is totally innocent and that his suffering is totally undeserved. Contrast 7.21; 13.26; 14.16–17, and see the discussion at 7.21. Job wavers between admitting that he is, like all persons, guilty of some misdeeds, for which he would like to be forgiven, and asserting his total innocence. 5–6: An affirmation that Job has not cheated in business; for the prohibition see Lev. 19.35–36; Deut. 25.13–16. 7–8: An affirmation that Job has not expropriated material goods belonging to others; for the relevant prohibitions in the Torah see Lev. 5.20–26; 19.11–13. 9–12: Committing adultery with another man's wife is an offense against that man's property in ancient Near Eastern law. In "measure-for-measure" penalties, or the law of talion, found in the Bible and the ancient Near East, if a man injures or mistreats a member of another man's family, the comparable member of the criminal's family is

- 13 Did I ever brush aside the case of my servants,
man or maid,
When they made a complaint against me?
14 What then should I do when God arises;
When He calls me to account, what should I answer Him?
15 Did not He who made me in my mother's belly make him?
Did not One form us both in the womb?
16 Did I deny the poor their needs,
Or let a^a widow pine away,
17 By eating my food alone,
The fatherless not eating of it also?
18 Why, from my youth he grew up with me as though I were his father;
Since I left my mother's womb I was her^b guide.
19 I never saw an unclad wretch,
A needy man without clothing,
20 Whose loins did not bless me
As he warmed himself with the shearings of my sheep.
21 If I raised my hand against the fatherless,
Looking to my supporters in the gate,
22 May my arm drop off my shoulder;
My forearm break off^c at the elbow.^c
23 For I am in dread of God-sent calamity;
I cannot bear His threat.
24 Did I put my reliance on gold,
Or regard fine gold as my bulwark?
25 Did I rejoice in my great wealth,
In having attained plenty?
26 If ever I saw the light shining,
The moon on its course in full glory,
27 And I secretly succumbed,

^a Lit. "the eyes of a." ^b Viz., the widow's.

^{c-c} Lit. "from its shaft," i.e., the humerus.

similarly injured or mistreated. There is, however, no biblical law stating that an adulterer's wife may be sexually used by the man whose own wife engaged in the adulterous relationship. Job is merely speaking rhetorically here, to show how innocent of wrongdoing he is. He invokes the principle of talion against himself in the following vv. as well, for the same reason. 13–14: The rhetorical question requiring a negative answer is tantamount to asserting that Job has granted his slaves the full protection of the law; see Exod. 21.20–21, 26–27; Deut. 23.16–17. Likewise, he expects that God will treat His servant, i.e., Job, just as fairly. 14–15: Here (as in vv. 2–4, 11–12) is a virtual quotation of Job's thoughts which led to his virtuous behavior described in v. 13. 15: One, a possible name of God; see also Zech. 14.9. 16–19: Job claims for himself innocence of the principal offenses ascribed to the people of Sodom in Ezek. 16.49. 16a: Here Job denies ever having failed to provide for the needs of the impoverished. If so, Eliphaz in 22.7 is either mistaken or sarcastic. Alternatively, Job could be lying. In that case, God would not have praised his virtue in 1.8; 2.3 and again defended him in 42.7 against the insults hurled upon him by his friends. The virtue to which Job confesses here is commanded in Lev. 19.9–10; 23.22; Deut. 14.22–29; 15.8. 16b: Or let a widow pine away: Heb "'almanah," commonly translated "widow," actually means a once-married woman who has no means of financial support and who is thus in need of special legal protection. Pine away, better, "cry her eyes out." The Heb "kilah 'einei" refers to causing someone's eyes to empty, as it were, by profuse crying. It is taken for granted here as also in 22.9 that Job, as an extremely affluent person, would have been expected by the social norms of the Late Bronze Age and Iron Age Levant (see, e.g., Isa. 1.17) to provide legal and financial aid to the underprivileged, including the "'almanah." His failure to do so would be a crime. 17: Contrast Eliphaz's assertion in 22.9b. 19: Contrast Eliphaz's assertion in 22.6. 21: Raised my hand, i.e., engaged in physical violence. In the gate, here (as in Deut. 21.19; 22.15, 24; Ruth ch 4) the public place of one's community, which was located just inside any of the gates of the city walls. It was here that judges tried cases and issued legal decisions, and this is where the verdicts of the court were carried out. Consequently, the extended meaning is "in the process of litigation." 26: The light: As pointed out by Rashi and Ibn Ezra, this refers to the sun; hence the moon is in the following clause. 27: And I secretly succumbed to worship of the sun and moon. Deut. 4.19 prohibits worship of the sun and moon only to Israelites. Job, however, like Adam, Noah, Jethro, Rahab, and Ruth, is portrayed in Scripture and in rabbinic literature as a non-Israelite who is faithful to 28 And my hand touched my mouth in a kiss,

 That, too, would have been a criminal offense,
 For I would have denied God above.
 29 Did I rejoice over my enemy's misfortune?
 Did I thrill because evil befell him?
 30 I never let my mouth^a sin
 By wishing his death in a curse.
 31 (Indeed, the men of my clan said,
 "We would consume his flesh insatiably!")
 32 No sojourner spent the night in the open;
 I opened my doors to the road.
 33 Did I hide my transgressions like Adam,
 Bury my wrongdoing in my bosom,
 34 That I should [now] fear the great multitude,
 And am shattered by the contempt of families,
 So that I keep silent and do not step outdoors?
 35 O that I had someone to give me a hearing;
 O that Shaddai would reply to my writ,
 Or my accuser draw up a true bill!
 36 I would carry it on my shoulder;
 Tie it around me for a wreath.
 37 I would give him an account of my steps,
 Offer it as to a commander.
 38 If my land cries out against me,
 Its furrows weep together;
 39 If I have eaten its produce without payment,
 And made its [rightful] owners despair,
 40 May nettles grow there instead of wheat;
 Instead of barley, stinkweed!

The words of Job are at an end.

32 These three men ceased replying to Job, for he considered himself right. ²Then Elihu son of Barachel the Buzite, of the family of Ram, was angry—angry at Job because he thought himself right against God. ³He was angry as well at his three friends, because they found no reply, but merely condemned Job. ⁴Elihu waited out Job's speech, for they were all older than he. ⁵But when Elihu saw that the three men had nothing to reply, he was angry.

a Lit. "palate."

the LORD. This verse is thus anomalous within this chapter, which otherwise notes infractions of customs shared by both Israelites and non-Israelites. My hand . . . in a kiss, blowing a kiss into one or both palms, a gesture of worship frequently illustrated pictorially on cylinder seals from ancient Mesopotamia. 33: A rare reference outside of Genesis to the Garden story. 35–37: This interrupts the flow of the chapter, but returns to a main theme of the book. 36: As elsewhere, Job is using a wisdom image with a twist: It is wisdom that is typically worn as adornment or jewelry (see, e.g., Prov. 3.22).

32.1: The end of the debate with the three friends. Just as in ch 31 Job presents a veritable summation for the defense, so here the friends rest their case because they have exhausted every available argument. As Rashbam puts it: "For indeed in his own perception he was innocent, and he continually said that the Holy One Blessed be He had perverted judgment in his case. His three friends responded to him many times until they found no answer with which to respond to him."

Chs 32–37: Elihu the intruder.

After apologizing for even opening his mouth in 32.6–22, Elihu addresses four speeches to Job in chs 32–33; 34; 35; 36–37. Most scholars regard the speeches of Elihu as a later addition by a different author, for the following reasons: Elihu is not mentioned in the narrative sections in chs 2 and 42; neither Job nor God replies to him; he speaks in a Hebrew that differs from both the prose and the poetry of other parts of the book; and he seems to add nothing to what has been said before. This last argument, at least, is weakened by the fact that many of the speeches of the others also do not advance the argument in any way, yet they are not regarded as interpolations of a later redactor. In distinction to the others, however, Elihu is an excellent listener, the only speaker in the entire book who quotes other people's ideas verbatim. For example, in 33.9 and 34.5 he quotes Job's protestation of innocence in 16.17. In 33.11 he quotes Job's statement in 13.27; in 33.12–13 he responds to what Job said in 9.3–4; in 34.3 he quotes what Job had said in 12.11. If, in the end, Elihu contributes anything of substance

6 Then Elihu son of Barachel the Buzite said in reply:

I have but few years, while you are old;
Therefore I was too awestruck and fearful
To hold forth among you.

7 I thought, "Let age speak;
Let advanced years declare wise things."

8 But truly it is the spirit in men,
The breath of Shaddai, that gives them understanding.

9 It is not the aged who are wise,
The elders, who understand how to judge.

10 Therefore I say, "Listen to me;
I too would hold forth."

11 Here I have waited out your speeches,
I have given ear to your insights,

While you probed the issues;

12 But as I attended to you,
I saw that none of you could argue with Job,
Or offer replies to his statements.

13 I fear you will say, "We have found the wise
course;

God will defeat him, not man."

14 He did not set out his case against me,
Nor shall I use your reasons to reply to him.

15 They have been broken and can no longer reply;
Words fail them.

16 I have waited till they stopped speaking,
Till they ended and no longer replied.

17 Now I also would have my say;
I too would like to hold forth,

18 For I am full of words;
The wind in my belly presses me.

19 My belly is like wine not yet opened,
Like jugs of new wine ready to burst.

20 Let me speak, then, and get relief;
Let me open my lips and reply.

21 I would not show regard for any man,
Or temper my speech for anyone's sake;

22 For I do not know how to temper my speech—
My Maker would soon carry me off!

33 But now, Job, listen to my words,
Give ear to all that I say.

2 Now I open my lips;

My tongue forms words in my mouth.

3 My words bespeak the uprightness of my heart;
My lips utter insight honestly.

to the book, it is his elaboration (in 33.16–30; 36.16) upon a thesis presented earlier by Eliphaz in 5.17–26. According to this thesis, suffering is a divine gift comparable to parents disciplining their children. Such discipline enables people to correct their behavior and thereby to secure and not to lose their just reward. It is difficult to know how to evaluate Elihu's remarks. On the one hand, what he says is closely parallel to the following speeches by the LORD. On the other, he presents himself as a windbag (32.18–20) and is exceedingly pompous. This dichotomy may even be evident in his genealogy (v. 2): He is a Buzite, which may be etymologized as "contemptible," but of the family of Ram, "elevated." "Elihu," a variant form of Elijah ("Eliyahu"), means "my God [is] the LORD."

32.2–6: Elihu is introduced.

4: Respect for elders is a key point of general and Israelite wisdom literature, as of other biblical literature (e.g., Lev. 19.32). 6: Said in reply, see 38.1 n.

32.6–33.33: Elihu's first speech.

Elihu has held back because he is younger, and therefore presumably less wise, than the other friends. But he finds the words of the friends unsatisfying, and offers his own answers to Job. He rejects Job's characterization of God as unjust or capricious, suggesting that suffering is God's way of warning people, and that God will bring back the sufferer from the brink of death. A similar notion that chastisements reflect God's love is found in Prov. 3.11–12 (see n. there). This idea took root and was expanded greatly in the rabbinic tradition, where it is called "yisurin shel 'ahavah," "chastisement of love." 32.19: The image is that of fermenting wine, producing much gas, an image which may easily be seen as mocking Elihu.

4 The spirit of God formed me;
The breath of Shaddai sustains me.
5 If you can, answer me;
Argue against me, take your stand.
6 You and I are the same before God;
I too was nipped from clay.
7 You are not overwhelmed by fear of me;
My pressure does not weigh heavily on you.

33.15–16: This idea as well, that dreams play a significant role in warning people of their deviant behavior, was not stressed by the friends. 23: A representative . . . One advocate: It is not clear if this refers to a supernatural intercessor, or a human friend who serves as an intercessor.

8 Indeed, you have stated in my hearing,
I heard the words spoken,
9 “I am guiltless, free from transgression;
I am innocent, without iniquity.
10 But He finds reasons to oppose me, Considers me His enemy.
11 He puts my feet in stocks,
Watches all my ways.”

12 In this you are not right;
I will answer you: God is greater than any man.
13 Why do you complain against Him
That He does not reply to any of man’s charges?
14 For God speaks “time and again”—
Though man does not perceive it—15 In a dream, a night vision,
When deep sleep falls on men,
While they slumber on their beds.
16 Then He opens men’s understanding,
And by disciplining them leaves His signature
17 To turn man away from an action,
To suppress pride in man.
18 He spares him from the Pit,
His person, from perishing by the sword.
19 He is reproved by pains on his bed,
And the trembling in his bones is constant.
20 He detests food;
Fine food [is repulsive] to him.
21 His flesh wastes away till it cannot be seen,
And his bones are rubbed away till they are invisible.
22 He comes close to the Pit,
His life [verges] on death.
23 If he has a representative,
One advocate against a thousand
To declare the man’s uprightness, 24 Then He has mercy on him and decrees,

a-a Lit. “once . . . twice.”

"Redeem him from descending to the Pit,
 For I have obtained his ransom;
 25 Let his flesh be healthier^a than in his youth;
 Let him return to his younger days."
 26 He prays to God and is accepted by Him;
 He enters His presence with shouts of joy,
 For He requites a man for his righteousness.
 27 He^b declares^a to men,
 "I have sinned; I have perverted what was right;
 But I was not paid back for it."
 28 He redeemed^c him from passing into the Pit;
 He^c will enjoy the light.
 29 Truly, God does all these things
 Two or three times to a man,
 30 To bring him back from the Pit,
 That he may bask in the light of life.
 31 Pay heed, Job, and hear me;
 Be still, and I will speak;
 32 If you have what to say, answer me;
 Speak, for I am eager to vindicate you.
 33 But if not, you listen to me;
 Be still, and I will teach you wisdom.

34 Elihu said in reply:

2 Listen, O wise men, to my words;
 You who have knowledge, give ear to me.
 3 For the ear tests arguments
 As the palate tastes food.
 4 Let us decide for ourselves what is just;
 Let us know among ourselves what is good.
 5 For Job has said, "I am right;
 God has deprived me of justice.
 6 I declare the judgment against me false;
 My arrow-wound is deadly, though I am free from transgression."
 7 What man is like Job,
 Who drinks mockery like water;
 8 Who makes common cause with evildoers,
 And goes with wicked men?
 9 For he says, "Man gains nothing
 When he is in God's favor."
 10 Therefore, men of understanding, listen to me;
 Wickedness be far from God,

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b I.e., the contrite man.

c-c Or with kethib, "me . . . I."

34.1-37: Elihu's second speech. Elihu strongly insists that God is not unjust, directly countering many of Job's earlier claims. He says nothing new, however, but repeats various arguments made by the friends. According to many scholars, this makes Elihu look foolish, for he had claimed that he was patiently waiting to hear out the friends before he presented his new arguments (32.3-5). 1: Elihu said in reply: Since no one has addressed Elihu, it is likely that here, as in 3.1, the poet has employed the verb root "'-n-y" in the sense "declaim" rather than the homonym "'-n-y" meaning "reply"; also in 35.1.

Wrongdoing, from Shaddai!

11 For He pays a man according to his actions,
And provides for him according to his conduct;
12 For God surely does not act wickedly;
Shaddai does not pervert justice.
13 Who placed the earth in His charge?
Who ordered the entire world?
14 If He but intends it,
He can call back His spirit and breath;
15 All flesh would at once expire,
And mankind return to dust.

16 If you would understand, listen to this;
Give ear to what I say.
17 Would one who hates justice govern?
Would you condemn the Just Mighty One?
18 Would you call a king a scoundrel, Great men, wicked?
19 He is not partial to princes;
The noble are not preferred to the wretched;
For all of them are the work of His hands.
20 Some die suddenly in the middle of the night;
People are in turmoil and pass on;
Even great men are removed—not by human hands.
21 For His eyes are upon a man's ways;
He observes his every step.
22 Neither darkness nor gloom offers
A hiding-place for evildoers.
23 He has no set time for man
To appear before God in judgment.
24 He shatters mighty men without number
And sets others in their place.
25 Truly, He knows their deeds;
Night is over, and they are crushed.
26 He strikes them down with the wicked
Where people can see,
27 Because they have been disloyal to Him
And have not understood any of His ways;
28 Thus He lets the cry of the poor come before Him;
He listens to the cry of the needy.
29 When He is silent, who will condemn?
If He hides His face, who will see Him,
Be it nation or man?
30 The impious man rule no more,
Nor do those who ensnare the people.
31 Has he said to God,
"I will bear [my punishment] and offend no more.

32 What I cannot see You teach me.
 If I have done iniquity, I shall not do so again"?
 33 Should He requite as you see fit?
 But you have despised [Him]!
 You must decide, not I;
 Speak what you know.
 34 Men of understanding say to me,
 Wise men who hear me,
 35 "Job does not speak with knowledge;
 His words lack understanding."
 36 Would that Job were tried to the limit
 For answers which befit sinful men.
 37 He adds to his sin;
 He increases his transgression among us;
 He multiplies his statements against God.

35.1-15: Elihu's third speech.
 God surely sees everything that transpires on earth. If He seems indifferent, that is because His response is not immediate.
1: See 34.1 n. 2-8: Like the friends, Elihu argues that God is an impartial judge.

35 Elihu said in reply:

2 Do you think it just
 To say, "I am right against God"?
 3 If you ask how it benefits you,
 "What have I gained from not sinning?"
 4 I shall give you a reply,
 You, along with your friends.
 5 Behold the heavens and see;
 Look at the skies high above you.
 6 If you sin, what do you do to Him?
 If your transgressions are many,
 How do you affect Him?
 7 If you are righteous,
 What do you give Him;
 What does He receive from your hand?
 8 Your wickedness affects men like yourself;
 Your righteousness, mortals.
 9 Because of contention the oppressed cry out;
 They shout because of the power of the great.
 10 But none says, "Where is my God, my Maker,
 Who gives strength in the night;
 11 Who gives us more knowledge than the beasts of the earth,
 Makes us wiser than the birds of the sky?"
 12 Then they cry out, but He does not respond
 Because of the arrogance of evil men.
 13 Surely it is false that God does not listen,
 That Shaddai does not take note of it.
 14 Though you say, "You do not take note of it,"
 The case is before Him;

So wait for Him.
 15 *But since now it does not seem so,
 He vents his anger;
 He does not realize that it may be long drawn out.*
 16 Hence Job mouths empty words,
 And piles up words without knowledge.

36 Then Elihu spoke once more.

2 Wait a little and let me hold forth;
 There is still more to say for God.
 3 I will make my opinions widely known;
 I will justify my Maker.
 4 In truth, my words are not false;
 A man of sound opinions is before you.
 5 See, God is mighty; He is not contemptuous;
 He is mighty in strength and mind.
 6 He does not let the wicked live;
 He grants justice to the lowly.
 7 He does not withdraw His eyes from the righteous;
 With kings on thrones
 He seats them forever, and they are exalted.
 8 If they are bound in shackles
 And caught in trammels of affliction,
 9 He declares to them what they have done,
 And that their transgressions are excessive;
 10 He opens their understanding by discipline,
 And orders them back from mischief.
 11 If they will serve obediently,
 They shall spend their days in happiness,
 Their years in delight.
 12 But if they are not obedient,
 They shall perish by the sword,
 Die for lack of understanding.
 13 But the impious in heart become enraged;
 They do not cry for help when He afflicts them.
 14 They die in their youth;
 [Expire] among the depraved.
 15 He rescues the lowly from their affliction,
 And opens their understanding through distress.
 16 Indeed, He draws you away from the brink of distress
 To a broad place where there is no constraint;
 Your table is laid out with rich food.

16: Unlike Eliphaz in 22.5-7, Elihu does not explicitly state that Job has acted wickedly, but stresses instead Job's ignorance (see 34.35).

36.1-37.24: Elihu's fourth and last speech. Elihu glorifies God, describing, in a manner that anticipates God's speech in chs 38-39, God's supremacy over the natural world. This foreshadowing of the LORD's speeches helps to integrate Elihu into the book, but also presents a serious interpretive problem: If Elihu's claims are wrong, how are we to view the LORD's claims in the following chapters, which are prefigured by Elihu, and even by Elihu's name, which as noted above means "My God is the LORD"? 36.1: Then Elihu spoke once more, better: "Elihu continued speaking," 5-6: This introduction is the key to Elihu's claim, mirroring what the friends had earlier claimed: God is powerful and just. The rest of the speech notes God's great power as witness to God's justice.

17 You are obsessed with the case of the wicked man,
 But the justice of the case will be upheld.
 18 Let anger at his affluence not mislead you;
 Let much bribery not turn you aside.
 19 *Will your limitless wealth avail you,^a
 All your powerful efforts?
 20 Do not long for the night
 When peoples vanish where they are.
 21 Beware! Do not turn to mischief;
 Because of that you have been tried by affliction.
 22 See, God is beyond reach in His power;
 Who governs like Him?
 23 Who ever reproached Him for His conduct?
 Who ever said, "You have done wrong"?
 24 Remember, then, to magnify His work,
 Of which men have sung,
 25 Which all men have beheld,
 Men have seen, from a distance.
 26 See, God is greater than we can know;
 The number of His years cannot be counted.
 27 He forms the droplets of water,
 Which cluster into rain, from His mist.
 28 The skies rain;
 They pour down on all mankind.
 29 Can one, indeed, contemplate the expanse of clouds,
 The thunderings from His pavilion?
 30 See, He spreads His lightning over it;
 It fills the bed of the sea.
 31 By these things He controls peoples;
 He gives food in abundance.
 32 Lightning fills His hands;
 He orders it to hit the mark.
 33 Its noise tells of Him.
 The kindling of anger against iniquity.^a 37 Because of this, too, my heart quakes,

 And leaps from its place.
 2 Just listen to the noise of His rumbling,
 To the sound that comes out of His mouth.
 3 He lets it loose beneath the entire heavens—
 His lightning, to the ends of the earth.
 4 After it, He lets out a roar;
 He thunders in His majestic voice.
 No one can find a trace of it by the time His voice is heard.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

5 God thunders marvelously with His voice;
 He works wonders that we cannot understand.
 6 He commands the snow, "Fall to the ground!"
 And the downpour of rain, His mighty downpour of rain,
 7 Is as a sign on every man's hand,
 That all men may know His doings.
 8 Then the beast enters its lair,
 And remains in its den.
 9 The storm wind comes from its chamber,
 And the cold from the constellations.
 10 By the breath of God ice is formed,
 And the expanse of water becomes solid.
 11 He also loads the clouds with moisture
 And scatters His lightning-clouds.
 12 ^aHe keeps turning events by His stratagems,^a
 That they might accomplish all that He commands
 them
 Throughout the inhabited earth,
 13 Causing each of them to happen to His land,
 Whether as a scourge or as a blessing.
 14 Give ear to this, Job;
 Stop to consider the marvels of God.
 15 Do you know what charge God lays upon them
 When His lightning-clouds shine?
 16 Do you know the marvels worked upon the expanse of clouds
 By Him whose understanding is perfect,
 17 ^aWhy your clothes become hot^a
 When the land is becalmed by the south wind?
 18 Can you help him stretch out the heavens,
 Firm as a mirror of cast metal?
 19 Inform us, then, what we may say to Him;
 We cannot argue because [we are in] darkness.
 20 Is anything conveyed to Him when I speak?
 Can a man say anything when he is confused?
 21 Now, then, one cannot see the sun,
 Though it be bright in the heavens,
 Until the wind comes and clears them [of clouds].
 22 By the north wind the golden rays emerge;
 The splendor about God is awesome.
 23 Shaddai—we cannot attain to Him;
 He is great in power and justice
 And abundant in righteousness; He does not torment.

37.11: Also . . . with moisture: This translation construes Heb "af-beri" as a combination of the common coordinate conjunction "af," "also," the common prefix "be-," "with," and the otherwise unattested "ri," "moisture," derived from the common Heb root "r-v-y," "saturate, be abundant" (see, e.g., Ps. 23.5: "my drink is abundant [fevayah]"; Jer. 31.25: "I will give the thirsty abundant drink [hirveyti]".) Ancient rabbinic tradition concerning the expression is reflected in the first of the series of liturgical poems ("piyyutim") sung by the cantor wearing a white robe before the open Ark in the synagogue on the festival of "Shemini 'Atzeret" (also called the Eighth Day of Solemn Assembly because it immediately follows the seven days of Sukkot or Tabernacles). In these poems, composed by Eliezer ha-Qallir (7th century CE), God is asked to grant abundant rain in the land of Israel, whose agriculture and drinking water relies on the seasonal rain that, if it arrives at all, begins in October and ends in May. The poem, called "'Af-Beri" from its opening phrase, is incorporated into the first of the seven benedictions of the Additional Service on "Shemini 'Atzeret." In that poem Af-Beri is said to be "the name given to the heavenly angel in charge of rain." He . . . loads: This translation reflects an assumption that the abstract sense (attested in rabbinic Heb), "encumber, burden, trouble," is a later development from an earlier concrete sense "burden, load." In context, the rain is one of God's many gifts that demonstrate divine interest and intervention, which Job has questioned (see, e.g., vv. 9–10). 18: Like Gen. 1.6–7, this verse envisions the sky as a metal plate, hammered thin, that separates the water above from the water below. 23: Just as he opened this final speech with his thesis (see n. on 36.5–6), he concludes with a summary, He is great in power and justice.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

24 Therefore, men are in awe of Him
Whom none of the wise can perceive.

38 Then the LORD replied to Job out of the tempest
and said:

2 Who is this who darkens counsel,
Speaking without knowledge?
3 Gird your loins like a man;
I will ask and you will inform Me.

4 Where were you when I laid the earth's foundations?
Speak if you have understanding.
5 Do you know who fixed its dimensions
Or who measured it with a line?
6 Onto what were its bases sunk?
Who set its cornerstone
7 When the morning stars sang together
And all the divine beings shouted for joy?

8 Who closed the sea behind doors
When it gushed forth out of the womb,
9 When I clothed it in clouds,
Swaddled it in dense clouds,
10 When I made breakers My limit for it,
And set up its bar and doors,
11 And said, "You may come so far and no farther;
Here your surging waves will stop?"

12 Have you ever commanded the day to break,
Assigned the dawn its place,
13 So that it seizes the corners of the earth
And shakes the wicked out of it?
14 It changes like clay under the seal
Till [its hues] are fixed like those of a garment.
15 Their light is withheld from the wicked,
And the upraised arm is broken.

38.1–41.26: The speeches of the LORD.

38.1–39.30: The LORD's first speech. In a series of rhetorical questions that contrast the power and wisdom of God with that of Job, the speech argues that, since Job was not present at the creation (v. 4), and has no notion of how such matters as the sun's rising occur (v. 12), let alone how many other natural phenomena happen, he has no right to demand explanations. (Such rhetorical questions have typified the book as wisdom literature, and the cumulative effect of them here is very powerful.) God will not give Job a straight answer to his demand for a hearing (6.8–13; 7.11–21; 9.2–20, 25–35; ch 10; 13.17–14.22). If the reader is looking for God to explain why bad things happen to good people and how justice reigns in the cosmos, neither God nor the book of Job as a whole provides an answer. If the message of the book is construed as a question of virtue—whether a person should be righteous even in the face of apparent injustice—then no answer would be expected, nor would it be appropriate. If the book poses the question of why the righteous suffer, then the conclusion may be that we cannot know the ways of God, and that to insist that God act in a certain way is to limit God's great power and knowledge. The effect of God's speech is to put Job in his place, to awe him with God's might. Other interpretations have been offered for this speech. Some suggest that God does answer Job by His appearance; the revelation itself is a sufficient answer. Others suggest that if Job is arguing that God is powerful and unjust, and the friends are arguing that God is powerful and just, the LORD's speeches "resolve" this debate by insisting only that God is powerful. Still others take such statements as 38.12–13, "Have you ever commanded the day to break, / Assigned the dawn its place, / So that it seizes the corners of the earth / And shakes the wicked out of it?" not as rhetorical questions, but as God conceding His weakness, and asking Job if he could do any better in running the world fairly. Unfortunately, it is difficult to decide between these (and still other) interpretive possibilities, especially because the speeches are indirect and ambiguous, and Job's answers to the LORD's speeches, which might help us understand what God is saying, are also somewhat ambiguous. Perhaps this is best, given the nature of the issues that the book is grappling with.

38.1: Replied to Job, lit. "answered Job," with Job marked by the definite accusative particle "et" as direct object of the verb. Comparison of this expression here and in 40.1 and 40.6 and in many other places

16 Have you penetrated to the sources of the sea,
 Or walked in the recesses of the deep?
 17 Have the gates of death been disclosed to you?
 Have you seen the gates of deep darkness?
 18 Have you surveyed the expanses of the earth?
 If you know of these—tell Me.
 19 Which path leads to where light dwells,
 And where is the place of darkness,
 20 That you may take it to its domain
 And know the way to its home?
 21 Surely you know, for you were born then,
 And the number of your years is many!
 22 Have you penetrated the vaults of snow,
 Seen the vaults of hail,
 23 Which I have put aside for a time of adversity,
 For a day of war and battle?
 24 By what path is the west wind^a dispersed,
 The east wind scattered over the earth?
 25 Who cut a channel for the torrents
 And a path for the thunderstorms,
 26 To rain down on uninhabited land,
 On the wilderness where no man is,
 27 To saturate the desolate wasteland,
 And make the crop of grass sprout forth?
 28 Does the rain have a father?
 Who begot the dewdrops?
 29 From whose belly came forth the ice?
 Who gave birth to the frost of heaven?
 30 Water congeals like stone,
 And the surface of the deep compacts.
 31 Can you tie cords to Pleiades
 Or undo the reins of Orion?
 32 Can you lead out Mazzaroth^b in its season,
 Conduct the Bear with her sons?
 33 Do you know the laws of heaven
 Or impose its authority on earth?
 34 Can you send up an order to the clouds
 For an abundance of water to cover you?
 35 Can you dispatch the lightning on a mission
 And have it answer you, “I am ready”?
 36 Who put wisdom in the hidden parts?
 Who gave understanding to the mind?^c

in Job may support the view (similarly Rashi) against NJPS that in all of those cases the verbal root “-n-y” means “declaim” and corresponds to Arabic “gh-n-y.”
36: The rooster: This interpretation (in translators’ note c) is reflected in the ancient benediction with which the prayer leader begins every morning service of the synagogue: “Praised are You, O Lord our God, King of the universe, who gave understanding to the rooster to distinguish between day and night.” The source of this benediction is b. Berakhot 60b, which states that this benediction should be recited each morning upon hearing the crowing of the rooster.

a As Aramaic ‘urya. b Evidently a constellation.

c Or “rooster”; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

37 Who is wise enough to give an account of the heavens?
Who can tilt the bottles of the sky,
38 Whereupon the earth melts into a mass,
And its clods stick together.

39 Can you hunt prey for the lion,
And satisfy the appetite of the king of beasts?
40 They crouch in their dens,
Lie in ambush in their lairs.
41 Who provides food for the raven
When his young cry out to God
And wander about without food?

39.13-18: The ostrich provides an example of the problems of interpreting this speech as a whole. For some, it points to God's great power: Only He understands why such a foolish creature exists. For others, it hints at the imperfections in God's creation. (See similarly the end of the chapter: "His young gulp blood; / Where the slain are, there is he.")

39 Do you know the season when the mountain goats give birth?
Can you mark the time when the hinds calve?
2 Can you count the months they must complete?
Do you know the season they give birth,
3 When they couch to bring forth their offspring,
To deliver their young?
4 Their young are healthy; they grow up in the open;
They leave and return no more.

5 Who sets the wild ass free?
Who loosens the bonds of the onager,
6 Whose home I have made the wilderness,
The salt land his dwelling-place?
7 He scoffs at the tumult of the city,
Does not hear the shouts of the driver.
8 He roams the hills for his pasture;
He searches for any green thing.

9 Would the wild ox agree to serve you?
Would he spend the night at your crib?
10 Can you hold the wild ox by ropes to the furrow?
Would he plow up the valleys behind you?
11 Would you rely on his great strength
And leave your toil to him?
12 Would you trust him to bring in the seed
And gather it in from your threshing floor?

13 The wing of the ostrich beats joyously;
Are her pinions and plumage like the stork's?
14 She leaves her eggs on the ground,
Letting them warm in the dirt,

15 Forgetting they may be crushed underfoot,
Or trampled by a wild beast.

16 Her young are cruelly abandoned as if they were not hers;
Her labor is in vain for lack of concern.

17 For God deprived her of wisdom,
Gave her no share of understanding,
18 Else she would soar on high,
Scoffing at the horse and its rider.

19 Do you give the horse his strength?
Do you clothe his neck with a mane?
20 Do you make him quiver like locusts,
His majestic snorting [spreading] terror?
21 He^a paws with force, he runs with vigor,
Charging into battle.

22 He scoffs at fear; he cannot be frightened;
He does not recoil from the sword.

23 A quiverful of arrows whizzes by him,
And the flashing spear and the javelin.

24 Trembling with excitement, he swallows^b the land;
He does not turn aside at the blast of the trumpet.

25 As the trumpet sounds, he says, "Aha!"
From afar he smells the battle,
The roaring and shouting of the officers.

26 Is it by your wisdom that the hawk grows pinions,
Spreads his wings to the south?
27 Does the eagle soar at your command,
Building his nest high,
28 Dwelling in the rock,
Lodging upon the fastness of a jutting rock?
29 From there he spies out his food;
From afar his eyes see it.

30 His young gulp blood;
Where the slain are, there is he.

40 The LORD said in reply to Job.

2 ^cShall one who should be disciplined complain against Shaddai?^c
He who arraigns God must respond.

3 Job said in reply to the LORD:

4 See, I am of small worth; what can I answer You?
I clap my hand to my mouth.

19: While all the other examples are taken from the exotic or mysterious, the image of the horse is closer to human life. Yet the image is one of magnificent power.

40.3-5: The first reply of Job. It is very difficult to understand the tone with which this is said: Is Job defiant, frightened, or sincere? Yet in v. 2 the LORD insisted that Job must respond, but Job insists in v. 5 that he will not reply (the Heb uses the same word as respond). Thus, the LORD must offer another speech, beginning in v. 6.

^a Lit. "They . . ." ^b Or "digs up." ^{c-c} Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

5 I have spoken once, and will not reply;
Twice, and will do so no more.

6 Then the LORD replied to Job out of the tempest
and said:

7 Gird your loins like a man;
I will ask, and you will inform Me.

8 Would you impugn My justice?
Would you condemn Me that you may be right?

9 Have you an arm like God's?
Can you thunder with a voice like His?

10 Deck yourself now with grandeur and eminence;
Clothe yourself in glory and majesty.

11 Scatter wide your raging anger;
See every proud man and bring him low.

12 See every proud man and humble him,
And bring them down where they stand.

13 Bury them all in the earth;
Hide their faces in obscurity.

14 Then even I would praise you
For the triumph your right hand won you.

15 Take now behemoth, whom I made as I did you;
He eats grass, like the cattle.

16 His strength is in his loins,
His might in the muscles of his belly.

17 *He makes his tail stand up^a like a cedar;
The sinews of his thighs are knit together.

18 His bones are like tubes of bronze,
His limbs like iron rods.

19 He is the first of God's works;
Only his Maker can draw the sword against him.

20 The mountains yield him produce,
Where all the beasts of the field play.

21 He lies down beneath the lotuses,
In the cover of the swamp reeds.

22 The lotuses embower him with shade;
The willows of the brook surround him.

23 He can restrain the river from its rushing;
He is confident the stream^b will gush at his command.

24 Can he be taken by his eyes?
Can his nose be pierced by hooks?

25 Can you draw out Leviathan by a fishhook?
Can you press down his tongue by a rope?

40.6–41.26: The LORD's second speech. 40.7: This is identical with 38.3, from the first speech, suggesting that the two speeches will be thematically similar. 11–14: Most readers understand these verses sarcastically, as a challenge to Job to try to be as just as God, while some read these as an admission of divine imperfection. 15–24, 25–32: Behemoth . . . Leviathan: Many scholars interpret behe-moth as designating a mythologized hippopotamus (see Isa. 30.6), and leviathan as a mythologized crocodile. Heb "tanin," "Dragon," appears as a synonym of Rahab (on which see Job 9.13; 26.12), the personified sea in Isa. 51.9 and in Job 7.12. The same term, however, designates the crocodile in Ezek. 29.3; 32.2. Since in Ugaritic poetry the corresponding "tnn" appears as a poetic synonym of "ltn," i.e., Leviathan (see 26.13 n.), it follows that Leviathan here could refer to the crocodile rather than to the personified sea, which rebels against but is ultimately subdued by the LORD, in an ancient Israelite myth to which Job and other biblical books frequently refer. Since Isa. 27.1 intimates that there may have been two Leviathans (see also Gen. 1.21: "the great sea monsters") and that Leviathan is yet to be killed, while Ps. 74.14 hints that God has already smashed the heads of Leviathan, b. Bava Batra 74b concludes that originally there were two Leviathans, one of each sex, who might have procreated and taken over the cosmos. Therefore God castrated the male and killed the female and preserved her in salt to be served up at the great eschatological feast to which all the righteous will be invited and at which a principal food item will be Leviathan. It was but one more step to note that behemoth, which is paired with Leviathan only in Job 40.15–32, must represent another principal food item to be served up at the eschatological banquet, namely a choice kind of beef (also called "shor ha-bar," i.e., "wild bull"). A further leap of the Jewish imagination led to the realization that the menu of the escha-

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain. b Lit. "Jordan."

26 Can you put a ring through his nose,
Or pierce his jaw with a barb?
27 Will he plead with you at length?
Will he speak soft words to you?
28 Will he make an agreement with you
To be taken as your lifelong slave?
29 Will you play with him like a bird,
And tie him down for your girls?
30 ^aShall traders traffic in him?^a
Will he be divided up among merchants?
31 Can you fill his skin with darts
Or his head with fish-spears?
32 Lay a hand on him,
And you will never think of battle again.

tological banquet, which certainly could not have provided only fish, and which included both Leviathan conceived of as fish and behemoth conceived of as beef, must also include some kind of fowl. This last menu item was provided by the enigmatic Ziz, translated as "creatures [of the field]" by NJPS at Pss. 50.11; 80.14. Job anticipated in 9.13 the argument that the LORD's power over the mythical sea-monsters proves that God is indeed in charge of the universe and that cosmic anarchy cannot explain Job's unjust suffering.

41 See, any hope [of capturing] him must be disappointed;
One is prostrated by the very sight of him.
2 There is no one so fierce as to rouse him;
Who then can stand up to Me?
3 Whoever confronts Me I will requite,
For everything under the heavens is Mine.
4 ^aI will not be silent concerning him
Or the praise of his martial exploits.^a 5 Who can uncover his outer garment?
Who can penetrate the folds of his jowls?
6 Who can pry open the doors of his face?
His bared teeth strike terror.
7 His protective scales are his pride,
Locked with a binding seal.
8 One scale touches the other;
Not even a breath can enter between them.
9 Each clings to each;
They are interlocked so they cannot be parted.
10 His sneezings flash lightning,
And his eyes are like the glimmerings of dawn.
11 Firebrands stream from his mouth;
Fiery sparks escape.
12 Out of his nostrils comes smoke
As from a steaming, boiling cauldron.
13 His breath ignites coals;
Flames blaze from his mouth.
14 Strength resides in his neck;
Power leaps before him.
15 The layers of his flesh stick together;
He is as though cast hard; he does not totter.

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

16 His heart is cast hard as a stone,
Hard as the nether millstone.
17 Divine beings are in dread as he rears up;
As he crashes down, they cringe.
18 No sword that overtakes him can prevail,
Nor spear, nor missile, nor lance.
19 He regards iron as straw,
Bronze, as rotted wood.
20 No arrow can put him to flight;
Slingstones turn into stubble for him.
21 Clubs^a are regarded as stubble;
He scoffs at the quivering javelin.
22 His underpart is jagged shards;
It spreads a threshing-sledge on the mud.
23 He makes the depths seethe like a cauldron;
He makes the sea [boil] like an ointment-pot.
24 His wake is a luminous path;
He makes the deep seem white-haired.
25 There is no one on land who can dominate him,
Made as he is without fear.
26 He sees all that is haughty;
He is king over all proud beasts.

42 Job said in reply to the LORD:

2 I know that You can do everything,
That nothing you propose is impossible for You.
3 Who is it who obscures counsel without knowledge?
Indeed, I spoke without understanding
Of things beyond me, which I did not know.
4 Hear now, and I will speak;
I will ask, and You will inform me.
5 I had heard You with my ears,
But now I see You with my eyes;
6 Therefore, I recant and relent,
Being but dust and ashes.

⁷After the LORD had spoken these words to Job, the LORD said to Eliphaz the Temanite, "I am incensed at you and your two friends, for you have not spoken the truth about Me as did My servant Job. ⁸Now take seven bulls and seven rams and go to My servant Job and sacrifice a burnt offering for yourselves. And let Job, My servant, pray for you; for to him I will show favor and not treat you vilely, since you have not spoken the truth about Me

42.1–6: Job's recantation. 3–4: It is likely that the first half of v. 3 and all of v. 4 are quotations of God by Job, to which Job is responding. 5: Job suggests that before he had only indirect knowledge of God, but now he has direct knowledge. One of his desires was for his accuser, God, to appear, and God has now done this. Job, however, ignores the fact that God has not directly answered his questions. 6: As Job's final comment, this verse would seem to be key to understanding the book as a whole. The Heb of the text, unlike the rest of Job, is not difficult, but is very ambiguous. The verb translated as recant more typically means "despise," and neither verb in the first half has the expected direct object—what does Job recant/despise or relent? As translated, the second half reflects Job's basic creaturehood, the fact that unlike God, he is a mere mortal, dust and ashes. The preposition that opens this section is more naturally translated "on," however, and thus this phrase may be a prosaic notice that Job feels this way while he is mourning on a dust-heap (see 2.8). Thus, the highly ambiguous poetry concludes with this seemingly simple but ambiguous verse. Whatever it means, the LORD seems to be satisfied that Job has responded adequately (see 40.5), so the poetic section of the work is concluded.

42.7–17: Prose epilogue. 8: Seven bulls and seven rams . . . a burnt offering: According to Lev. 1.3–17 a burnt offering can be a male from the herd, a male from the flock, of sheep or of goats, or a turtledove or a pigeon. A ram, on the other hand, is presented as a guilt offering (see Lev. 5.15–26). A bull, according to Lev. 4.1–21, is appropriate for the sin or purification offering of either "the anointed priest" or "the whole community of Israel." Job's friends repeatedly offended God by intimating that Job somehow brought his suffering upon himself. They describe themselves and are described by Job as communal leaders. It is also as did My servant Job.”⁹ Eliphaz the Temanite and Bildad the Shuhite and Zophar the Naamathite went and did as the LORD had told them, and the LORD showed favor to Job.¹⁰ The LORD restored Job’s fortunes when he prayed on behalf of his friends, and the LORD gave Job twice what he had before.

^a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

¹¹ All his brothers and sisters and all his former friends came to him and had a meal with him in his house. They consoled and comforted him for all the misfortune that the LORD had brought upon him. Each gave him one kesitah^a and each one gold ring.¹² Thus the LORD blessed the latter years of Job’s life more than the former. He had fourteen thousand sheep, six thousand camels, one thousand yoke of oxen, and one thousand she-asses.¹³ He also had seven sons and three daughters.¹⁴ The first he named Jemimah, the second Keziah, and the third Keren-happuch.¹⁵ Nowhere in the land were women as beautiful as Job’s daughters to be found. Their father gave them estates together with their brothers.¹⁶ Afterward, Job lived one hundred and forty years to see four generations of sons and grandsons.¹⁷ So Job died old and contented.

gether appropriate that they should be asked to present, in addition to an unspecified number of burnt offerings, the sin offering appropriate either to “the anointed priest” or “the whole community.” Each of the seven rams would be equally appropriate as expiation for sacrilege (Lev. 5.15; cf. Job 42.7): “when a person, without knowing it, sins in regard to any of the LORD’s commandments about things not to be done, and then realizes his guilt” (Lev. 5.17) or “when a person sins and commits a trespass [i.e., sacrilege] against the LORD by dealing deceitfully with his fellow” (Lev. 5.21). The author of the book of Job knew the Torah, and therefore knew quite well that both seven bulls and seven rams have nothing to do with what is commonly called a burnt offering. Job must pray for the friends, showing the empathy that they had not shown, and leaving his cocoon of self-interest and self-pity. 11: The kesitah is mentioned only in Gen. 33.19 and Josh. 24.32, texts describing the ancestral period. The author uses it here (rather than the much more common shekel) to help set this story in hoary antiquity. 14: Jemimah, usually explained by Arabic “yumayma,” “little dove.” Keziah, usually explained as the aromatic plant cassia mentioned in Ps. 45.9. Keren-happuch, “a flask of blue eyeshadow,” mentioned also in Jer. 4.30. The ending of the book should not be construed as a reward for Job, but simply as the end of the test begun in ch 1 and Job’s restoration to his status quo ante. 16: Living to a ripe old age and having many progeny is the ideal of the blessed person in the Bible. Job’s life span of 140 years is twice the ideal life span of seventy years (see Ps. 90.10). 17: The ending is formulaic, much like “and they lived happily ever after.”

^a A unit of unknown value.

The Five Megillot (Scrolls)

IN PRINTED EDITIONS OF THE TANAKH, the three initial large books of Kethuvim, Psalms, Proverbs, and Job (sometimes ordered Psalms, Job, Proverbs), are followed by five smaller books. In this translation, they appear in the order of the Songs of Songs, Ruth, Lamentations, Ecclesiastes, and Esther. In the Middle Ages, these were called ḥamesh megillot, the five scrolls.

These books are counted as individual books and were not always perceived as a single unit. In the Septuagint, Ruth, which opens “In the days that the judges ruled,” appears after Judges, and Lamentations is placed after Jeremiah since an ancient tradition ascribes the authorship of Lamentations to Jeremiah. The Babylonian Talmud as well does not know of the ḥamesh megillot; it suggests (b. B. Bat. 14b) that the order of the beginning of the Kethuvim is: Ruth, Psalms, Job, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Song of Songs, Lamentations. A small number of medieval Hebrew manuscripts follow this tradition, as well as other orders that do not place these five books together.

The order in the NJPS Tanakh translation is a common one, found in numerous manuscripts. The books are arranged in the order in which they are read liturgically in the annual cycle, beginning with the spring new year (see Exod. 12.2): Song of Songs is read on Passover (April), Ruth on Shavuot (May–June), Lamentations on the ninth of Av (July–August), Ecclesiastes on Sukkot (September–October), and Esther on Purim (March). Another common order, found in the best early manuscripts (Aleppo Codex, the first complete Masoretic manuscript [10th century], and Leningrad Codex B19A, the earliest extant complete manuscript [11th century]; see essay “Masoretic Bible,” pp. 2077–84), have a different order. These manuscripts place the megillot in chronological order according to theories of traditional authorship: Ruth (Samuel), Song of Songs (Solomon in his youth), Ecclesiastes (Solomon in his old age), Lamentations (Jeremiah), and Esther (Mordecai, after the Babylonian exile). Many other orders exist. The grouping of the five books together reflects their common liturgical use, and perhaps a desire to have another pentad, to parallel the five books in the Torah and the five books within the book of Psalms.

[ADELE BERLIN AND MARC ZVI BRETTLER]

The Song of Songs

THE SONG OF SONGS is the Tanakh's only extensive discourse on human, erotic love. The book consists of a series of poems in which the speech of two lovers is interspersed with occasional comments by other voices. Throughout the poems, the lovers describe themselves and each other, and their feelings of love, desire, and longing. While the book has no narrative plot, the relationship between the lovers is marked by cycles of absence and presence. Poems which celebrate the presence of a lover alternate with poems of longing and poems of invitation. While both lovers speak within the text, the woman is the more active and articulate character. Her experiences, feelings, and perceptions are the central content of the poem. This suggests to some that a woman may have authored (parts of) the Song.

The Song is characterized by a wide range of poetic techniques. The poets draw from the language of the natural, domestic, and urban spheres. They use techniques of wordplay, pun and soundplay, repetition, simile, metaphor, and double entendre to highlight the relationship between the two lovers. One of the most striking literary features of the Song is the oscillation among the different spheres and modes. The poetic voices shift repeatedly from praise to adjuration, from playfulness to violence, and from third-person to second-person address, creating dynamic movement. The poetic techniques, many of which have parallels in Egyptian and Mesopotamian love poetry, provide an apt vehicle and a literary mirror for the lushness, exuberance, and movement of the relationship which they describe.

The compositional history and origin of the Song of Songs remain matters of debate. Most commentators agree that the book is a collection of poetic units which are linked by theme, language, and style. There are disagreements, however, over the extent of each unit and the degree of coherence of the collection. Some scholars insist that the poem is the work of a single author who might have relied on earlier sources or traditions. Others insist that the canonical text is the product of a redactor who edited together preexistent poems and poetic fragments.

The date of composition of the Song is also unclear. With the exception of the few references to King Solomon, there is no mention of known historical figures or events. Nor do the references to human behavior correlate to the attitudes or situations of a particular historical period. In addition, the book contains both archaic language and relatively late words, which makes it difficult to establish a date on linguistic grounds. Contemporary scholarly consensus hypothesizes that the poem probably has its roots in early folk and literary traditions but was composed or redacted in the 4th or 3rd century BCE.

The original genre and function of the text have also been the subject of much research and debate. Over the past century, three major theories have been adduced. The first is that the Song is the script of a drama which told the story of a love affair. This theory was quite popular in the 19th century, but has since been abandoned. The second theory holds that the Song evolved from a Mesopotamian liturgical context which described the sacred marriage of a god and goddess. This theory is based on perceived similarities between the Song and ancient Mesopotamian sacred marriage texts. Like the dramatic theory, this theory has become less popular in recent years, but it remains possible that some of the images of the poem originate in liturgical or mythological traditions. The third, most satisfactory theory maintains that the text is a collection of poems about human love, some of which may have originally been used in wedding celebrations.

The Song's positive focus on human, erotic love, its silence regarding the central theological and historical themes of the rest of the biblical text, and the centrality of its female character, make it unique within the biblical canon. Some scholars have argued that already by the time of its inclusion in the canon, the Song was understood not only as human love poetry but also, and perhaps primarily, as a description of the love relationship between God and Israel. This theory rests partly on the use of the human love relationship as a metaphor for the God-Israel relationship in the prophetic literature (e.g., Isa. 54.4–8; Jer. 2.1–2; Ezek. chs 16, 23; Hos. chs 1–3). While it is possible that the allegorical understanding of the poem was already current at the time of the book's canonization, it is also possible that the poems were introduced into the canon because, as secular love songs, they occupied an important place in the culture of ancient Israel in biblical and Second Temple times. Once the book became part of the canon, the tendency to interpret it allegorically increased.

Song of Songs in Jewish Tradition

WHILE THE BOOK'S ORIGIN remains obscure, the history of interpretation of the Song in Jewish tradition is well documented. From as early as the 2nd century CE, it has been understood in both human and divine terms. In rabbinic tradition, the Song narrates the words which God and Israel spoke to each other at the Red Sea, at Sinai, or in the Tent of Meeting. The descriptions of the male lover are understood as allegorical descriptions of God while the descriptions of the female lover are understood as divine praise of Israel. The statements of desire and love are read as expressions of love and intimacy between God and Israel. The Targum to the Song employs a similar strategy of expounding the Song as a historical allegory; it interprets the Song as a description of Israel's ongoing history of redemption by God. The allegorical interpretation plays a particularly important role in early Jewish mysticism. In medieval mystical texts, the theme of love remains constant but the identification of the protagonists changes. The lovers are sometimes identified as God and Israel, and sometimes interpreted as God and the individual soul or, alternatively, as the male and female aspects of the divine. The Song of Songs also plays a role in the Jewish liturgical tradition. It is recited at Passover and, in some communities, is recited or sung as part of the kabbalat shabbat (welcoming the Sabbath) service on Friday night.

While there has been a constant tradition of theological interpretation of the Song within Judaism, there has also been a tradition of secular, humanistic interpretation. The Talmud (b. Sanh. 101a) testifies to the singing of the Song in the secular settings of feasts and drinking halls, though it polemicizes against this use. In addition, words and images from the Song of Songs have figured prominently in Jewish marriage art, music, and liturgy since at least the Middle Ages. The Song was also a popular biblical text for the early Zionist movement. Its lush descriptions of the natural world and the flora and fauna of the land of Israel gave voice to the early Zionist love for the land.

Although the Song of Songs was not written by a single author as a narrative whole, the various poetic devices—including verbatim repetitions, recurring genres, and thematic echoes—encourage it to be read as an unfolding story. Much of the book’s richness and meaning is communicated through its poetic structures and techniques, its choice of language and use of imagery, and the relationship between different poetic units. The poet uses partial or exact repetition in different ways to communicate patterns and changes in the lovers’ relationship. Throughout the poem, motifs such as spices, vineyards and gardens, gazelles and doves, hiding and seeking, king and mother, communicate details about the lovers’ relationship and the variety and scope of their feelings for one another.

[ELSIE STERN]

1 The Song of Songs, by^a Solomon.

- 2 ^bOh, give me of the kisses of your mouth,^b
For your love is more delightful than wine.
3 Your ointments yield a sweet fragrance,
Your name is like finest^c oil—
Therefore do maidens love you.
4 Draw me after you, let us run!
^dThe king has brought me to his chambers.^d

^a Or “concerning.” ^{b-b} Heb. “Let him give me of the kisses of his mouth!”

^c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

^{d-d} Emendation yields “Bring me, O king, to your chambers.”

1.1: Title. Internal evidence suggests that this v. is secondary, and does not represent an ancient tradition of authorship. Song of Songs is a superlative phrase meaning “the greatest or preeminent song.” By Solomon, or “about Solomon.”

According to Jewish tradition, Solomon authored the books of Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and Song of Songs. These attributions are based on Song 1.1 and Eccl. 1.1. Also, biblical tradition describes Solomon as the author of Proverbs and the Song, an expert in flora and fauna (1 Kings 5.9–14), and a lover of many women (1 Kings 11.1). In both the Targum and the midrash, the name “Shlomo” (Solomon) is interpreted as a reference to God. According to this interpretation, the Song is a description of the love between God and Israel. Modern scholars do not accept the idea of Solomonic authorship.

1.2–4: The woman expresses her desire for her lover. 2: Wine: The repeated references to wine (2.4, 7; 4.10; 5.1; 7.10; 8.2) may suggest an original context in wedding feasts or other celebrations where wine was drunk. Alternatively, wine is used poetically as a symbol of sensuous pleasure. Finest oil, or, “oil poured out”; the lover’s excellent reputation is widespread. 4: The

Let us delight and rejoice in your love,
Savoring it more than wine—
“Like new wine”^a they love you!

5 I am dark, but comely,
O daughters of Jerusalem—
Like the tents of Kedar,
Like the pavilions of Solomon.
6 Don’t stare at me because I am swarthy,
Because the sun has gazed upon me.
My mother’s sons quarreled with me,
They made me guard the vineyards;
My own vineyard I did not guard.

7 Tell me, you whom I love so well;
Where do you pasture your sheep?
Where do you rest them at noon?
Let me not be ^bas one who strays^b
Beside the flocks of your fellows.
8 If you do not know, O fairest of women,
Go follow the tracks of the sheep,
And graze your kids^c
By the tents of the shepherds.

9 I have likened you, my darling,
To a mare in Pharaoh’s chariots:
10 Your cheeks are comely with plaited wreaths,
Your neck with strings of jewels.
11 We will add wreaths of gold
To your spangles of silver.

12 While the king was on his couch,
My nard gave forth its fragrance.
13 My beloved to me is a bag of myrrh
Lodged between my breasts.
14 My beloved to me is a spray of henna blooms
From the vineyards of En-gedi.

15 Ah, you are fair, my darling,
Ah, you are fair,
With your dove-like eyes!
16 And you, my beloved, are handsome,
Beautiful indeed!
Our couch is in a bower;
17 Cedars are the beams of our house,
Cypresses the rafters.

king: References to a king and to King Solomon (1.12; 3.9, 11; 6.8–9; 7.6) support interpretations of the Song as a royal wedding song or cultic song. In rabbinic interpretations, references to the king are understood as references to God, and the royal chambers refer to the Temple. In most modern readings, the references to the king are complimentary references to the male lover.

1.5–6: The woman describes herself. 5: Dark, but comely, or “dark and comely.” In 5.10, fair skin is a sign of masculine beauty. Here, the woman’s darkness may be either an asset or a liability, and is the likely result of her work outdoors, described in the following vv. Kedar, northern Assyrian nomadic tribe. Kedar means “dark.” 6: Vineyard: In the Song, the vineyard often represents both a physical place and the woman’s own sexuality (1.14; 2.15; 7.13; 8.12).

1.7–17: Dialogue between the lovers. 9: I have likened . . .: Throughout the Song, the lovers use comparison to praise one another’s beauty and charm. Mare in Pharaoh’s chariots, either an image of adorned majesty (the horses were decorated with ornaments) or a reference to an ancient battle strategy in which a mare was let loose among cavalry to distract the stallions. 12–14: The physical closeness of the lovers—their scent—is described. Nard . . . myrrh . . . henna, precious spices used in perfumes. Nard and myrrh were exotic imports while henna was indigenous to biblical Israel. 14: En-gedi, a fertile oasis in the Judean wilderness. Given that wine grapes did not grow there, this too is a likely allusion to the woman’s own sexuality.

a-a Understanding mesharim as related to tirosh; cf. Aramaic merath.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain. c As a pretext for coming.

- 2 I am a rose^a of Sharon,
A lily of the valleys.
- 2 Like a lily among thorns,
So is my darling among the maidens.
- 3 Like an apple tree among trees of the forest,
So is my beloved among the youths.
I delight to sit in his shade,
And his fruit is sweet to my mouth.
- 4 He brought me to the banquet room ^bAnd his banner of love was over me.^b
- 5 “Sustain me with raisin cakes,
Refresh me with apples,
For I am faint with love.”
- 6 His left hand was under my head,
His right arm embraced me.
- 7 I adjure you, O maidens of Jerusalem,
By gazelles or by hinds of the field:
Do not wake or rouse
Love until it please!
- 8 Hark! My beloved!
There he comes,
Leaping over mountains,
Bounding over hills.
- 9 My beloved is like a gazelle
Or like a young stag.
There he stands behind our wall,
Gazing through the window,
Peering through the lattice.
- 10 My beloved spoke thus to me,
“Arise, my darling;
My fair one, come away!
For now the winter is past,
The rains are over and gone.
The blossoms have appeared in the land,
The time of pruning^c has come;
The song of the turtledove
Is heard in our land.
- 13 The green figs form on the fig tree,
The vines in blossom give off fragrance.
Arise, my darling;
My fair one, come away!
- 14 “O my dove, in the cranny of the rocks,
Hidden by the cliff,

2.1–3: The lovers praise one another for their uniqueness.

1: Sharon, fertile plain in northern Israel. 3: Apple tree: The precise type of fruit is unknown (apples are not indigenous to Israel); perhaps quince or apricot.

2.4–7: The woman reminisces about her lover. 7: I adjure you . . . This recurring refrain (3.5; 5.8; 8.4), whose exact meaning is ambiguous, is addressed to the woman’s female companions. By gazelles . . . In Heb, the names of these animals function as word-plays on the name of God (e.g., gazelles, “tzeva’ot,” also means “hosts,” as in “Lord of hosts”), which would be expected in such an adjuration; they also underscore the earthy quality of the oath and resonate with the use of these animals as symbols of love and beauty throughout the Song.

2.8–17: The woman’s wish for the couple to run away together, to be alone in nature in the springtime. This passage is full of flora and fauna. 10–13: Arise, my darling . . . arise, my darling: The repetition of the phrase sets these vv. apart as a separate unit. While many biblical texts are concerned with the land of Israel and its fertility, this is one of the few that celebrate the beauty of the land of Israel. 14: O my dove: The dove, a symbol of purity, gentleness, and fidelity, is a frequent epithet for the woman in the Song (cf. 2.15; 5.2; 6.9). 15: Catch us . . .: The relationship of this fragment to the surrounding vv. is unclear. It may be either a fragment of a separate poem or proverb or the woman’s response to the man’s request in 2.14. 16: My beloved is mine: This declaration of mutual love appears frequently in wedding liturgies, music, and art. 17: This v. is mirrored in the conclusion of the Song.

^a Lit. “crocus.” ^{b-b} Meaning of Heb. uncertain. ^c Or “singing.”

Let me see your face,
 Let me hear your voice;
 For your voice is sweet
 And your face is comely.”
 15 Catch us the foxes,
 The little foxes
 That ruin the vineyards—
 For our vineyard is in blossom.

16 My beloved is mine
 And I am his
 Who browses among the lilies.
 17 When the day ^ablows gently^a
 And the shadows flee,^b
 Set out, my beloved,
 Swift as a gazelle
 Or a young stag,
 For the hills of spices!^c

3 Upon my couch at night^d
 I sought the one I love—
 I sought, but found him not.
 2 “I must rise and roam the town,
 Through the streets and through the squares;
 I must seek the one I love.”
 I sought but found him not.
 3 ^eI met the watchmen^e
 Who patrol the town.
 “Have you seen the one I love?”
 4 Scarcely had I passed them
 When I found the one I love.
 I held him fast, I would not let him go
 Till I brought him to my mother’s house,
 To the chamber of her who conceived me
 5 I adjure you, O maidens of Jerusalem,
 By gazelles or by hinds of the field:
 Do not wake or rouse
 Love until it please!
 6 Who is she that comes up from the desert
 Like columns of smoke,
 In clouds of myrrh and frankincense,
 Of all the powders of the merchant?
 7 There is Solomon’s couch,
 Encircled by sixty warriors

3.1–6: The woman searches for her lover. This passage may be interpreted as a dream scene, although it is sufficiently ambiguous to allow other interpretations as well. The dreamlike quality of the episode, found here and at the beginning of ch 5, is one of the many poetic techniques employed in the Song. 2: I sought, but found him not: The desperate tone here contrasts with the playful, hide-and-go-seek mode of the previous ch. 4: My mother’s house: Motherhood is a central image in the Song (cf. 3.4, 11; 6.9; 8.1, 5). Here, the mother represents security and support for the lovers.

3.6–11: Vision of royal wedding procession. This section consists of two parallel descriptions. The first (vv. 6–8) employs the language of war and has an undertone of violence; the second (vv. 9–11) employs the language of royalty and romance. 6: Who is she, or, what is this? The feminine form of the pronoun (she) probably refers to Solomon’s couch.

a-a Emendation yields “declines”; cf. Jer. 6.4.

b Septuagint reads “lengthen”; cf. Jer. 6.4.

c Heb. bath of uncertain meaning; 8.14 reads besamim, “spices.”

d I.e., in a dream. e-e Lit. “The watchmen met me.”

8 Of the warriors of Israel,
All of them trained^a in warfare,
Skilled in battle,
Each with sword on thigh
Because of terror by night.

9 King Solomon made him a palanquin
Of wood from Lebanon.
10 He made its posts of silver,
Its back^b of gold,
Its seat of purple wool.
Within, it was decked with “love
By the maidens of Jerusalem.”^c

11 O maidens of Zion, go forth
And gaze upon King Solomon
Wearing the crown that his mother
Gave him on his wedding day,
On his day of bliss.

4 Ah, you are fair, my darling,
Ah, you are fair.
Your eyes are like doves
Behind your veil.
Your hair is like a flock of goats
Streaming down Mount Gilead.

2 Your teeth are like a flock of ewes^d
Climbing up from the washing pool;
All of them bear twins,
And not one loses her young.

3 Your lips are like a crimson thread,
Your mouth is lovely.
Your brow behind your veil
[Gleams] like a pomegranate split open.

4 Your neck is like the Tower of David,
Built “to hold weapons,”^e
Hung with a thousand shields—
All the quivers of warriors.

5 Your breasts are like two fawns,
Twins of a gazelle,
Browsing among the lilies.

6^f When the day blows gently
And the shadows flee,

a Cf. Akkadian aḥāzu, “to learn.”

b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Emendation yields “ebony, / O maidens of Jerusalem!”

d Cf. 6.6; exact nuance of qesuboth uncertain, perhaps “shorn ones.”

e-e Apparently a poetic figure for jewelry; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

f See notes at 2.17.

9–11: Solomon made . . .: These vv. may be among the oldest parts of the Song. Palanquin, a covered chair that was set on poles and carried on the shoulders of four men. 10: Silver . . . gold . . . purple wool, symbols of wealth and royalty. They were also used in the construction of the Tabernacle (Exod. ch 26). Consequently, the rabbinic commentators interpreted these vv. in reference to the Tabernacle. 11: Wearing the crown: Grooms wore crowns in the Second Temple period. After the destruction of the Second Temple, the practice was abolished as a sign of mourning. On his wedding day: Rabbinic interpreters understood this as a reference to the giving of Torah at Mt. Sinai. The idea that God and Israel were married at Sinai appears in Song of Songs Rabbah, other midrashic texts, and liturgical texts from the rabbinic and medieval periods.

4.1–16: The man praises his lover’s beauty and charms. The beginning of this unit corresponds to a genre called the “wasf.” In this genre, which is known from Arabic poetry and ancient Egyptian love poetry, each part of the body is compared to a different object with which it shares one trait. As a result, the comparisons are often surprising and whimsical. In this wasf, the objects of comparison are drawn primarily from the pastoral and natural spheres. 1: The woman’s wavy hair flows down her back. Behind your veil: In biblical times, women wore veils in public. Mount Gilead, rich pastureland in the Transjordan region. 2: A flock of ewes . . . her young, an extended simile for the whiteness and evenness of the woman’s teeth. The similarity in sound between the Heb words “shekulam” (all of them) and “shakulah” (loses her young) reinforces the notion of symmetry on the level of sound. 3: Pomegranate, common symbol in the Song for color and taste. Here, either a reference to the color or shape of her brow or of the play of light and dark between her skin and her veil. 4: Tower of David: This

I will betake me to the mount of myrrh,
 To the hill of frankincense.
 7 Every part of you is fair, my darling,
 There is no blemish in you
 8 From Lebanon come with me;
 From Lebanon, my bride, with me!
 Trip down from Amana's peak,
 From the peak of Senir^a and Hermon,
 From the dens of lions,
 From the hills^b of leopards.
 9 You have captured my heart,
 My own,^c my bride,
 You have captured my heart
 With one [glance] of your eyes,
 With one coil of your necklace.
 10 How sweet is your love,
 My own, my bride!
 How much more delightful your love than wine,
 Your ointments more fragrant
 Than any spice!
 11 Sweetness drops
 From your lips, O bride;
 Honey and milk
 Are under your tongue;
 And the scent of your robes
 Is like the scent of Lebanon.
 12 A garden locked
 Is my own, my bride,
 A fountain locked,
 A sealed-up spring.
 13 Your limbs are an orchard of pomegranates
 And of all luscious fruits,
 Of henna and of nard—
 14 Nard and saffron,
 Fragrant reed and cinnamon,
 With all aromatic woods,
 Myrrh and aloes—
 All the choice perfumes.
 15 ^d[You are] a garden spring,
 A well of fresh water,^d
 A rill of Lebanon.

structure is not mentioned elsewhere in the Bible, and is not identical with the tower of the same name in modern Jerusalem. The image is that of a long neck adorned with necklaces. 6: The mount of myrrh and the hill of frankincense most likely refer to the woman's breasts. 8: Lebanon, Amana, Senir, Hermon, mountains in the north of Israel. In the midrash, this v. is used as a proof-text for the idea that God goes into exile with Israel and will return to the land of Israel with the people. 9: My own, lit. "my sister." Brother and sister are also used as terms of endearment in Egyptian love poetry. They symbolize closeness here, and are not to be taken literally. See 8.1. 10: How much more delightful . . .: The man's praise echoes the woman's in 1.2. 11: Sweetness drops: The Hebrew words "nofet titofnah" form an onomatopoeic phrase which mimics the sound of dripping liquid. Honey and milk, symbols of agricultural plenty. "Land of milk and honey" is a frequent epithet for the land of Israel (e.g., Exod. 3.8). 12-16: The garden represents the woman's sexuality, which is inaccessible in v. 12 and into which she invites her lover in v. 16.

^a Cf. Deut. 3.9.

^b Emendation yields "lairs"; cf. Nah. 2.13.

^c Lit. "sister"; and so frequently below.

^{d-d} Emendation yields "The spring in my garden / Is a well of fresh water."

16 Awake, O north wind,
Come, O south wind!
Blow upon my garden,
That its perfume may spread.
Let my beloved come to his garden
And enjoy its luscious fruits!

5 I have come to my garden,
My own, my bride;
I have plucked my myrrh and spice,
Eaten my honey and honeycomb,
Drunk my wine and my milk.

Eat, lovers, and drink:
Drink deep of love!

2^a I was asleep,
But my heart was wakeful.
Hark, my beloved knocks!
"Let me in, my own,
My darling, my faultless dove!
For my head is drenched with dew,
My locks with the damp of night."
3 I had taken off my robe—
Was I to don it again?
I had bathed my feet—
Was I to soil them again?
4 My beloved ^btook his hand off the latch,^b
And my heart was stirred ^cfor him.^c
5 I rose to let in my beloved;
My hands dripped myrrh—
My fingers, flowing myrrh—
Upon the handles of the bolt.
6 I opened the door for my beloved,
But my beloved had turned and gone.
I was faint ^dbecause of what he said.^d
I sought, but found him not;
I called, but he did not answer.
7 I met the watchmen^e
Who patrol the town;
They struck me, they bruised me.
The guards of the walls Stripped me of my mantle.

a In vv. 2–8 the maiden relates a dream.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Many manuscripts and editions read "within me" ('alai).

d-d Change of vocalization yields "because of him."

e See note at 3.3.

5.1: The man responds. The string of four first-person (I) verbs followed by direct objects with possessive suffixes communicates a sense of completion and possession. Eat, lovers, and drink: Either an exhortation to the lovers by an unidentified speaker or an exhortation by the man to his companions.

5.2–7: Second nighttime episode. This unit echoes the dreamlike sequence in 3.1–4. Here, however, the ending is dark and violent, suggesting unfulfilled desire. The unit's imagery is replete with sexual innuendo, where the house may represent the woman's body. 5–6: I rose . . . I opened: The repetition of the personal pronoun I ("ani") lends emphasis to the woman's actions. 6–7: I sought . . . him . . . my mantle: The repetition of the word "found" and the symmetrical structure of v. 7 lend coherence to this ironic episode in which the watchmen, who are supposed to protect the city, perpetrate an act of unexplained, and seemingly unmotivated, violence.

- 8 I adjure you, O maidens of Jerusalem!
If you meet my beloved, tell him this:
That I am faint with love.
- 9 How is your beloved better than another,^a
O fairest of women?
How is your beloved better than another^a
That you adjure us so?
- 10 My beloved is clear-skinned and ruddy,
Preeminent among ten thousand.
- 11 His head is finest gold,
His locks are curled
And black as a raven.
- 12 His eyes are like doves
By watercourses,
Bathed in milk,
^bSet by a brimming pool.^b
- 13 His cheeks are like beds of spices, ^cBanks of ^cperfume
His lips are like lilies;
They drip flowing myrrh.
- 14 His hands are rods of gold,
Studded with beryl;
His belly a tablet of ivory,
Adorned with sapphires.
- 15 His legs are like marble pillars
Set in sockets of fine gold.
He is majestic as Lebanon,
Stately as the cedars.
- 16 His mouth is delicious
And all of him is delightful.
Such is my beloved,
Such is my darling,
O maidens of Jerusalem!

- 6 “Whither has your beloved gone,
O fairest of women?
Whither has your beloved turned?
Let us seek him with you.”
- 2 My beloved has gone down to his garden,
To the beds of spices,
To browse in the gardens
And to pick lilies.

8: I adjure you, variation of 2.7; 5.8; 8.4. 9: How is your beloved, either a request for identifying information or a question regarding the reasons for the woman’s intense love.

5.10–16: The woman praises the man’s beauty. This unit corresponds to the wasf in 4.1–7 and is the only extended description of the male body in the Song. The imagery is drawn from the realms of animals, plants, and precious materials, and is more static than the wasfs of the woman.

6.1–3: Dialogue between the woman and the daughters of Jerusalem. My beloved has gone down to his garden, description of a sexual encounter (cf. 5.2). I am my beloved’s, see 5.6 n.

a Or “What sort of beloved is your beloved?”

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c-c Septuagint vocalizes as participle, “producing.”

- 3 I am my beloved's
And my beloved is mine;
He browses among the lilies.
- 4 You are beautiful, my darling, as Tirzah,
Comely as Jerusalem,
Awesome as bannered hosts.^a
- 5 Turn your eyes away from me,
For they overwhelm me!
Your hair is like a flock of goats
Streaming down from Gilead.
- 6 Your teeth are like a flock of ewes
Climbing up from the washing pool;
All of them bear twins,
And not one loses her young.
- 7 Your brow behind your veil
[Gleams] like a pomegranate split open.
- 8 There are sixty queens,
And eighty concubines,
And damsels without number.
- 9 Only one is my dove,
My perfect one,
The only one of her mother,
The delight of her who bore her.
Maidens see and acclaim her;
Queens and concubines, and praise her.
- 10 Who is she that shines through like the dawn,
Beautiful as the moon,
Radiant as the sun
Awesome as bannered hosts?
- 11 I went down to the nut grove
To see the budding of the vale;
To see if the vines had blossomed,
If the pomegranates were in bloom.
- 12 *Before I knew it,
My desire set me
Mid the chariots of Ammi-nadib.*^a
- 7 Turn back, turn back,
O maid of Shulem!
Turn back, turn back,
That we may gaze upon you.
"Why will you gaze at the Shulammitte

6.4–9: The man describes his lover. 4: Tirzah, capital of the Northern Kingdom of Israel in the late 10th and early 9th centuries BCE. Jerusalem: To Jerusalem is ascribed legendary and mythic beauty in both the Bible (e.g., Ps. 48.3; Lam. 2.16) and later Jewish texts. Awesome as bannered hosts, or visions. This v. introduces a series of vivid visual images. 5–7: Your hair . . . split open, cf. 4.1b–3. 8: There are sixty queens . . .: The man's praise echoes the woman's praise in 2.2–3; 5.10. Mother, see 3.4 n. 10: Beautiful . . . sun: The terms for sun and moon here are highly poetic and refer to the whiteness of the moon and the heat of the sun.

6.11–12: Episode fragment. Again a seeming escape to the world of nature, the site of lovemaking. The meaning of v. 12 eludes scholars.

7.1: Address to the woman by a group of men. Maid of Shulem: Shulem as a place name is unattested elsewhere in the Bible. It may be a variation of Shunem, a shortened form of Jerusalem, or a derivation from the root "shalem" which refers to Solomon or to the woman's wholeness and perfection. In the Mahanaim dance: A variant version means "as the Mahanaim dance." The woman says: Don't look at me as you would look at a dance.

7.2–7: Description of the woman. While other wasfs describe the body from top down, this wasf, of the woman dancing, begins at the woman's feet and moves up. Artisanal images dominate. 2: Daughter of nobles: "Bat-nadiv" echoes the enigmatic phrase in 6.12. 3: Heap of wheat, a reference either to the shape and color of her belly or to its fertility. 5: Tower of ivory, cf. 4.4. Heshbon, city in ancient Moab. Bath-rabbim: The location is unattested elsewhere in the Bible. Nose: This comparison has troubled commentators. Some have suggested "face" instead of "nose" and read the simile as a symbol of stateliness. 6: Crimson wool,

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

In^a the Mahanaim dance?"
 2 How lovely are your feet in sandals,
 O daughter of nobles!
 Your rounded thighs are like jewels,
 The work of a master's hand.
 3 Your navel is like a round goblet—
 Let mixed wine not be lacking!—
 Your belly like a heap of wheat
 Hedged about with lilies.
 4 Your breasts are like two fawns,
 Twins of a gazelle.
 5 Your neck is like a tower of ivory,
 Your eyes like pools in Heshbon
 By the gate of Bath-rabbim,
 Your nose like the Lebanon tower
 That faces toward Damascus.
 6 The head upon you is like ^bcrimson wool,^b
 The locks of your head are like purple—
^cA king is held captive in the tresses.^c
 7 How fair you are, how beautiful!
 O Love, with all its rapture!
 8 Your stately form is like the palm,
 Your breasts are like clusters.
 9 I say: Let me climb the palm,
 Let me take hold of its branches;
 Let your breasts be like clusters of grapes,
 Your breath like the fragrance of apples,
 10 And your mouth like choicest wine.
 "Let it flow to my beloved as new wine^d ^eGliding over the lips of sleepers."^e
 11 I am my beloved's,
 And his desire is for me.
 12 Come, my beloved,
 Let us go into the open;
 Let us lodge ^eamong the henna shrubs.^e
 13 Let us go early to the vineyards;
 Let us see if the vine has flowered,
 If its blossoms have opened,
 If the pomegranates are in bloom.
 There I will give my love to you.

or, "like the Carmel mountain range," another image of stateliness. 8–10: The wasf serves as a kind of sexual foreplay that the lover wishes to consummate.

7.11–14: The woman speaks to her lover. Again, nature is the setting for love. 11: I am my beloved's . . ., explicitly erotic variation on the mutual declaration of love (cf. 5.6; 6.3). 12: Come, my beloved: This v. is the opening line of the song, "lekha dodi," which was incorporated by kabbalists in early modern times into the Sabbath eve liturgy. 13: Vineyards, see 1.6 n.

a With many manuscripts and editions; others read "like." Meaning of entire line uncertain.

b-b So Ibn Janah and Ibn Ezra, taking karmel as a by-form of karmil: cf. 2 Chron. 2.6, 13; 3.14.

c-c Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

d See note at 1.4 end.

e-e Or "in the villages."

14 The mandrakes yield their fragrance,
At our doors are all choice fruits;
Both freshly picked and long-stored
Have I kept, my beloved, for you.

8 If only it could be as with a brother,
As if you had nursed at my mother's breast:
Then I could kiss you
When I met you in the street,
And no one would despise me.
2 I would lead you, I would bring you
To the house of my mother,
Of her who taught^a me—
I would let you drink of the spiced wine,
Of my pomegranate juice.

3 His left hand was under my head,
His right hand caressed me.
4 I adjure you, O maidens of Jerusalem:
Do not wake or rouse
Love until it please!

5 Who is she that comes up from the desert,
Leaning upon her beloved?

Under the apple tree I roused you;
It was there your mother conceived you,
There she who bore you conceived you.

6 Let me be a seal upon your heart,
Like the seal upon your hand.^b
For love is fierce as death,
Passion is mighty as Sheol;
Its darts are darts of fire,
A blazing flame.
7 Vast floods cannot quench love,
Nor rivers drown it.
If a man offered all his wealth for love,
He would be laughed to scorn.

8 "We have a little sister,
Whose breasts are not yet formed.
What shall we do for our sister
When she is spoken for?
9 If she be a wall,
We will build upon it a silver battlement;

14: Mandrakes, aphrodisiac and fertility plant (cf. Gen. 30.14–15). At our doors . . . for you, cf. 1.6 in which the woman states that she has not kept her vineyard.

8.1–6: The woman speaks of her love and desire. 1: The woman longs for closeness with her lover and an openly affectionate relationship. 2: House of my mother, see 3.4 n. 4: I adjure you, see 2.7 n. 5: Who is she . . .: This fragment seems unconnected to the surrounding vv. It echoes 3.6a and 6.10. Apple tree, see 2.3 n.

8.6–7: Testimony to the power of love. These vv. are unique in the poem because they deal with love in the abstract. In addition, the cosmic, mythic language contrasts with the bucolic, pastoral, and artisanal images that dominate the rest of the poem. 6: Seal upon your heart, sign of intimate connection and identity. Seals of semiprecious metals or stones were worn around the neck and were used to prove identity, as we use a signature. See Gen. 38.18. Sheol, land of the dead. The connection between love and death is particularly evocative. 7: If a man: This v. returns to the humanistic language which is more typical of the poem.

8.8–10: Dialogue between the woman and her brothers. 8–9: Scholars disagree over the relationship between wall and door here. Some read the two terms as synonyms. In this case, the brothers vow to protect her inviolability. Others read them as opposites. If the woman is inaccessible like a wall, her brothers will reward her. If she is open like a door, they will board her up.

^a Emendation yields "bore"; cf. 6.9; 8.5. ^b Lit. "arm."

If she be a door,
 We will panel it in cedar."
 10 I am a wall,
 My breasts are like towers.
 So I became in his eyes
 As one who finds favor.
 11 Solomon had a vineyard
 In Baal-hamon.
 He had to post guards in the vineyard:
 A man would give for its fruit
 A thousand pieces of silver.
 12 I have my very own vineyard:
 You may have the thousand, O Solomon,
 And the guards of the fruit two hundred!
 13 O you who linger in the garden,^a
 A lover^a is listening;
 Let me hear your voice.
 14 "Hurry, my beloved,
 Swift as a gazelle or a young stag,
 To the hills of spices!"

8.11–12: The woman compares herself to Solomon's vineyard.
I have my very own vineyard, cf. 1.6.
 Solomon's vineyard had many keepers, but this vineyard (the beloved) is kept by and for one person only.

8.13–14: The woman's final invitation to her lover. The final vv. of the poem return to the imagery of the garden, spices, and gazelles. Yet following a fundamental ambiguity of the Song, it is unclear if the woman is here suggesting that she will flee with her lover, or is telling him to flee from her. In line with this ambiguity, the hills of spices may refer to a place outside, or to the woman herself (see 4.6 n.).

^a Heb. plural. Meaning of verse uncertain.

Ruth

THIS BEAUTIFUL SHORT STORY revolves around the relationship between Naomi, a woman from Bethlehem, in Judah, and her Moabite daughter-in-law, Ruth. Naomi, her husband, and their two sons have come to Moab to escape from famine in Bethlehem. The first chapter recounts, in short order, the death of Naomi's husband, the marriage of her sons to Moabite women, the sons' deaths ten years later, and Naomi's decision to return to Bethlehem. One daughter-in-law, Orpah, returns to her Moabite family. The other, Ruth, declares allegiance to Naomi and to the God of Israel and returns with Naomi. Despite Ruth's company, Naomi is embittered at her many losses. In the course of the coming weeks, however, these losses are all reversed. In the second chapter, Ruth gleans in the field of Naomi's kinsman, Boaz, and acquires enough grain to sustain Naomi and herself for some time. In the third chapter, Naomi devises a plan for Ruth's future security: Ruth will pay a nighttime visit to the threshing floor where Boaz has been winnowing the barley harvest, and will thereby elicit a promise of marriage. The plan is successful and culminates, in chapter four, in the marriage of Ruth and Boaz and the birth of their child, Obed. The book ends with a genealogy which traces the line of Obed back to Perez, the child of Judah and Tamar (Gen. ch 38), and forward to King David.

The simplicity of the story belies the literary craft of the book. Its central theme is the movement from emptiness to fulfillment. This theme is expressed on two planes, the agricultural and the personal. The agricultural sequence anticipates the personal sequence by one step all along the way. The famine precedes Naomi's bereavement, whereas the renewed harvest during which Ruth gleans in Boaz's fields anticipates the abundance that awaits Naomi herself with Obed's birth. The fidelity and love between Naomi and Ruth is the most positive portrayal of women's relationships in biblical literature. The centrality of women is also emphasized by the references in Ruth 4.11–12 to other prominent biblical women, namely, Leah and Rachel, the two wives of Jacob, and Tamar, whose son by Judah, who himself is Jacob's son, is an ancestor of Boaz, and therefore of Obed and David as well.

The story portrays Ruth, Naomi, and Boaz as models of hesed, that is, of loyalty and commitment that go beyond the bounds of law or duty. Hesed is exemplified in the fidelity of Ruth to Naomi, the loving concern of Naomi for Ruth, and the kindness of Boaz to both women. Related to the motif of hesed is the role of God. God is mentioned numerous times by the three main characters, but the actions of the story are never explicitly mentioned as deriving from God. Rather, God remains in the shadows, implying that divine activity lies behind the reversal of the deprivations that have afflicted Naomi and the nation as a whole.

The authorship of the book is unknown and its date is difficult to establish. Many scholars propose a date between 950 and 700 BCE, that is, between the time of David and the Assyrian conquest of the Northern Kingdom of Israel. Others suggest a date during the period of the Babylonian exile or in the early period of the return (586–500 BCE). In the latter case, the book may be read as promising that those who return from exile will be blessed, just as Naomi was when she returned from Moab to Bethlehem. A story recounting the lineage of David might also have had special meaning at a time after the Davidic monarchy had come to an end. If the story is dated to the early exilic period, its positive depiction of Ruth the Moabite may be polemical, emphasizing, in contrast to Ezra-Nehemiah, that foreigners may be integrated into the Jewish community.

In the Jewish Scriptures, Ruth is included among the five “megillot” (scrolls) in the third division, namely, the “writings” (Kethuvim). Because the book is read in the synagogue on Shavuot, the Feast of Weeks, it usually appears second among the megillot, after Song of Songs, which is read at Passover, though other sequences for these five books are found in manuscripts. The association with Shavuot is appropriate. The events told in Ruth span a period somewhat equivalent to that of Passover to Shavuot, that is, a seven-week period from the beginning of the barley harvest to the end of the wheat harvest. Furthermore, King David, the culmination of the genealogy in Ruth 4.18–22, was traditionally thought to have been born and to have died on Shavuot. Finally, Shavuot has been identified since the 2nd or 3rd centuries of the Common Era as the time of the giving of the Torah to Moses on Mount Sinai (cf. Exod. chs 19–20). This element of the feast is related to the prevalent rabbinic theme of Ruth as the ideal convert to Judaism who takes the Torah upon herself just as the Israelites did at Mount Sinai.

In non-Jewish versions and translations of the Bible, Ruth is placed between Judges and the books of Samuel, following the order of the Septuagint. This placement acknowledges the fact that the book is set in the period of the judges (1.1) and ends with a genealogy of David (4.18–22). It therefore provides a link between the chaotic period when Israel was ruled by judges and the stories that lead up to the establishment of the monarchy, which reaches its highest point in the reign of David.

[ADELE REINHARTZ]

1 In the days when the chieftains^a ruled, there was a famine in the land; and a man of Bethlehem in Judah, with his wife and two sons, went to reside in the country

1.1–22: From Moab to Bethlehem.
1.1–5: Naomi and her family in Moab. 1: The judges (chieftains) were tribal leaders of Israel in the period before the monarchy. Several biblical texts reflect tension of Moab. ²The man's name was Elimelech, his wife's name was Naomi, and his two sons were named Mahlon and Chilion—Ephrathites of Bethlehem in Judah. They came to the country of Moab and remained there.

^a i.e., the leaders who arose in the period before the monarchy; others “judges.”

³Elimelech, Naomi's husband, died; and she was left with her two sons. ⁴They married Moabite women, one named Orpah and the other Ruth, and they lived there about ten years. ⁵Then those two—Mahlon and Chilion—also died; so the woman was left without her two sons and without her husband.

⁶She started out with her daughters-in-law to return from the country of Moab; for in the country of Moab she had heard that the LORD had taken note of His people and given them food. ⁷Accompanied by her two daughters-in-law, she left the place where she had been living; and they set out on the road back to the land of Judah.

⁸But Naomi said to her two daughters-in-law, "Turn back, each of you to her mother's house. May the LORD deal kindly with you, as you have dealt with the dead and with me! ⁹May the LORD grant that each of you find security in the house of a husband!" And she kissed them farewell. They broke into weeping ¹⁰and said to her, "No, we will return with you to your people."

¹¹But Naomi replied, "Turn back, my daughters! Why should you go with me? Have I any more sons in my body who might be husbands for you? ¹²Turn back, my daughters, for I am too old to be married. Even if I thought there was hope for me, even if I were married tonight and I also bore sons, ¹³should you wait for them to grow up? Should you on their account debar yourselves from marriage? Oh no, my daughters! My lot is far more bitter than yours, for the hand of the LORD has struck out against me."

¹⁴They broke into weeping again, and Orpah kissed her mother-in-law farewell. But Ruth clung to her. ¹⁵So she said, "See, your sister-in-law has returned to her people and her gods. Go follow your sister-in-law." ¹⁶But Ruth replied, "Do not urge me to leave you, to turn back and not follow you. For wherever you go, I will go; wherever you lodge, I will lodge; your people shall be my people, and your God my God. ¹⁷Where you die, I will die, and between the Israelites and the Moabites, who lived east of the Dead Sea (see Num. 21.29–30; Deut. 23.4; Jer. 48.1–9). This tension, however, is not apparent in the book of Ruth (cf. 1 Sam. 22.3–4). Bethlehem means "house of bread"; this v. thus contains a pun of a famine in "the house of bread." 2: Ephrathites: Ephrathah (see 4.11) is another name for Bethlehem. 3–5: The names of Naomi and her family members may have symbolic significance. Elimelech literally means "my God is king"; Mahlon means "sickness"; Chilion may mean

"consumptive"; Orpah is interpreted as "back of the neck"; Ruth may be "friend" or "companion"; Naomi is "pleasant"; and Boaz (2.1) is "in him is strength." These traits describe, to some degree, the role or the fate of the character within the story. Combined with the pun in v. 1, the symbolic nature of these names suggests that Ruth should not be read as a historical text.

1.6–18: Naomi plans her return to Bethlehem. 6: Naomi attributes relief from the famine to God. This is one of several hints of a divine hand guiding the events in the story. 8: The term mother's house occurs elsewhere (Gen. 24.28; Song 3.4; 8.2). Childless widows are normally portrayed as returning to their fathers' homes (Gen. 38.11; Lev. 22.13). The unusual formulation is appropriate because Naomi is asking the young women to return to their mothers rather than remaining with their mother-in-law. 11: According to Deut. 25.5–10, a childless widow is bound to marry her dead husband's brother. This is referred to as levirate law (from Latin "levir," "brother-in-law"). The first son of a levirate marriage will legally be the dead man's son for purposes of inheritance. Even were Naomi to give birth to more sons, they would not be obligated by levirate law to marry the widows, because they would not have had the same father as did the dead men. 12: Ruth Rabbah points out that Naomi urges her daughters-in-law to turn back three times (vv. 8, 11, 12). This number corresponds to the number of times that potential converts should be strongly discouraged. Those who persist, however, should be educated and accepted as sincere converts.

14: Ruth clung to her: Ruth's attachment to Naomi is reminiscent of Gen. 2.24, which refers to the "clinging" of husband to wife. The connotation here is not sexual, but rather signifies Ruth's unwavering devotion to Naomi. 16–17: This moving plea is among the best-known lines of the book. It expresses Ruth's devotion and loy-

there I will be buried. ^aThus and more may the LORD do to me^a if anything but death parts me from you.”¹⁸ When [Naomi] saw how determined she was to go with her, she ceased to argue with her;¹⁹ and the two went on until they reached Bethlehem.

When they arrived in Bethlehem, the whole city buzzed with excitement over them. The women said, “Can this be Naomi?”²⁰ “Do not call me Naomi,”^b she replied. “Call me Mara,^c for Shaddai^d has made my lot very bitter. ²¹I went away full, and the LORD has brought me back empty. How can you call me Naomi, when the LORD has ^edealt harshly with^e me, when Shaddai has brought misfortune upon me!”

²²Thus Naomi returned from the country of Moab; she returned with her daughter-in-law Ruth the Moabite. They arrived in Bethlehem at the beginning of the barley harvest.

2 Now Naomi had a kinsman on her husband’s side, a man of substance, of the family of Elimelech, whose name was Boaz.

²Ruth the Moabite said to Naomi, “I would like to go to the fields and glean among the ears of grain, behind someone who may show me kindness.” “Yes, daughter, go,” she replied;³ and off she went. She came and gleaned in a field, behind the reapers; and, as luck would have it, it was the piece of land belonging to Boaz, who was of Elimelech’s family.

⁴Presently Boaz arrived from Bethlehem. He greeted the reapers, “The LORD be with you!” And they responded, “The LORD bless you!”⁵ Boaz said to the servant who was in charge of the reapers, “Whose girl is that?”⁶ The servant in charge of the reapers replied, “She is a Moabite girl who came back with Naomi from the country of Moab. ⁷She said, ‘Please let me glean and gather among the sheaves behind the reapers.’ She has been on her feet ever since she came this morning. ^fShe has rested but little in the hut.”^f a-a A formula of imprecation.

b I.e., “Pleasantness.”

c I.e., “Bitterness.”

d Usually rendered “the Almighty.”

e-e Others “testified against.”

f-f Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

alty to Naomi. Ruth Rabbah and Rashi view Ruth’s passionate declaration of allegiance as the point at which Naomi instructs Ruth in a formal process of conversion. The story, however, contains no reference to formal conversion, since that institution did not come into existence until rabbinic times. Thus . . . do to me: Ruth’s oath underscores the seriousness of her declaration. It has been interpreted to mean “only death will part us” or “not even death will part us.”

1.19–23: Naomi and Ruth arrive in Bethlehem. 20–21: Shaddai, a divine epithet, perhaps used here as an archaism; in Job, where it is frequent (5.17ff.), it is translated “the Almighty” (see translators’ note d). 22: The beginning of the barley harvest is associated in Lev. 23.10 with the Passover festival, in the spring.

2.1–23: The field. 2.1–7: Ruth’s plan. 1: Boaz, see 1.3–5 n. 2: According to biblical law, the poor were permitted to walk behind the harvesters and gather the grain that they left behind (Lev. 19.9; 23.22; Deut. 24.19). Ruth’s remark is puzzling in that she apparently plans to work among the ears themselves, that is, in the area that has not yet been harvested. This differs from what was permitted in extant biblical law, but some laws differed in different times and places in the biblical period. The fact that Naomi calls Ruth daughter suggests that Ruth’s love, devotion, and sense of responsibility is now reciprocated by Naomi. 3: Luck: By coincidence—or perhaps divine providence—the field in which Ruth hopes to glean is that belonging to Boaz. Ruth is apparently unaware of the connection between Boaz and Naomi. 7: Among the sheaves: Ruth’s request exceeds biblical law. Here the text suggests that Ruth will glean in the area of harvested grain. Some interpreters suggest that her request was a ploy to meet the owner of the field, since special permission to glean among the sheaves is granted in 2.15. She has rested . . . hut: The literal translation is “this is her sitting the house a little.” Some commentators emend the text by omitting “the house,” in conformity with the Septuagint. The overall sense is clear, however. The servant is commenting on Ruth’s stamina and perseverance, perhaps with some admiration.

⁸ Boaz said to Ruth, ^a“Listen to me, daughter.” Don’t go to glean in another field. Don’t go elsewhere, but stay here close to my girls. ⁹ Keep your eyes on the field they are reaping, and follow them. I have ordered the men not to molest you. And when you are thirsty, go to the jars and drink some of [the water] that the men have drawn.”

¹⁰ She prostrated herself with her face to the ground, and said to him, “Why are you so kind as to single me out, when I am a foreigner?”

¹¹ Boaz said in reply, “I have been told of all that you did for your mother-in-law after the death of your husband, how you left your father and mother and the land of your birth and came to a people you had not known before. ¹² May the LORD reward your deeds. May you have a full recompense from the LORD, the God of Israel, under whose wings you have sought refuge!”

¹³ She answered, “You are most kind, my lord, to comfort me and to speak gently to your maidservant—though I am not so much as one of your maidservants.”

¹⁴ At mealtime, Boaz said to her, “Come over here and partake of the meal, and dip your morsel in the vinegar.” So she sat down beside the reapers. He handed her roasted grain, and she ate her fill and had some left over.

¹⁵ When she got up again to glean, Boaz gave orders to his workers, “You are not only to let her glean among the sheaves, without interference, ¹⁶ but you must also pull some [stalks] out of the heaps and leave them for her to glean, and not scold her.”

¹⁷ She gleaned in the field until evening. Then she beat out what she had gleaned—it was about an ’ephah of barley—¹⁸ and carried it back with her to the town. When her mother-in-law saw what she had gleaned, and when she also took out and gave her what she had left over after eating her fill, ¹⁹ her mother-in-law asked her, “Where did you glean today? Where did you work? Blessed be he who took such generous notice of you!” So she told her mother-in-law whom she had worked with, saying, “The name of the man with whom I worked today is Boaz.”

²⁰ Naomi said to her daughter-in-law, “Blessed be he of the LORD, who has not failed in His kindness to the living or to the dead! For,” Naomi explained to her daughter-in-law, “the man is related to us; he is one of our redeeming kinsmen.”^b ²¹ Ruth the Moabite said, “He even told me, ‘Stay close by my workers until all my harvest is fin-

2.8–16: Ruth meets Boaz in the field where she is gleaning.

8: Like Naomi, Boaz refers to Ruth as daughter. This form of address conveys his warm attitude toward her, and also stresses the generational difference between them.

12: This v. summarizes the message of the book: Whoever seeks shelter with the God of Israel will be rewarded. Rabbinic interpreters understand this phrase as a reference to Ruth’s conversion.

14: Vinegar, actually a refreshing drink of sour wine and oil. Boaz’s generosity, in providing drink and roasted grain, foreshadows the important role he will come to play in providing for both Ruth and Naomi.

2.17–23: Ruth reports back to Naomi.

17: An ’ephah is approximately two-thirds of a bushel, a substantial amount for one day of gleaning. 20: By identifying Boaz as one of our redeeming kinsmen, Naomi suggests his potential role in providing for Ruth and herself, since a “go’el” (redeeming kinsman: see translators’ note b) had a special obligation to the family.

a-a Lit. “Have you not heard, daughter?”

b Cf. Lev. 25.25 and note and Deut. 25.5–6. The fact that Boaz was a kinsman of Ruth’s dead husband opened up the possibility of providing an heir for the latter.

ished.”²² And Naomi answered her daughter-in-law Ruth, “It is best, daughter, that you go out with his girls, and not be annoyed in some other field.”²³ So she stayed close to the maidservants of Boaz, and gleaned until the barley harvest and the wheat harvest were finished. Then she stayed at home with her mother-in-law.

3 Naomi, her mother-in-law, said to her, “Daughter, I must seek a home for you, where you may be happy.² Now there is our kinsman Boaz, whose girls you were close to. He will be winnowing barley on the threshing floor tonight.³ So bathe, anoint yourself, dress up, and go down to the threshing floor. But do not disclose yourself to the man until he has finished eating and drinking.⁴ When he lies down, note the place where he lies down, and go over and uncover his feet and lie down. He will tell you what you are to do.”⁵ She replied, “I will do everything you tell me.”

⁶ She went down to the threshing floor and did just as her mother-in-law had instructed her.⁷ Boaz ate and drank, and in a cheerful mood went to lie down beside the grainpile. Then she went over stealthily and uncovered his feet and lay down.⁸ In the middle of the night, the man gave a start and pulled back—there was a woman lying at his feet!

⁹ “Who are you?” he asked. And she replied, “I am your handmaid Ruth. ^aSpread your robe over your handmaid,^a for you are a redeeming kinsman.”

¹⁰ He exclaimed, “Be blessed of the LORD, daughter! Your latest deed of loyalty is greater than the first, in that you have not turned to younger men, whether poor or rich.^b ¹¹ And now, daughter, have no fear. I will do in your behalf whatever you ask, for all the ^celders of my town^c a-a A formal act of espousal; cf. Ezek. 16.8.

b I.e., she sought out a kinsman of her dead husband; see note at 2.20 above. Her first act of loyalty had been to return with Naomi.

c-c Lit. “gate of my people.”

3.1–18: The threshing floor.

3.1–6: Naomi’s plan. 2: The threshing floor is an elevated open space where the kernels of grain were separated from the chaff (winnowed). Winnowing was done in the evening when strong breezes would carry the chaff away. 3: Rashi, following b. Shabbat 113b, comments that Ruth reversed the order of preparation that Naomi had proposed. First she went down to the threshing floor and then beautified herself, lest passers-by believe her to be a harlot. According to Rashi, following y. Pe’ah 8.7, Ruth’s preparations related directly to her conversion. In washing herself, Ruth purified herself from her earlier idolatry; in anointing herself, she took upon herself the commandments; in dressing, she put on Sabbath garments, that is, full observance of the Sabbath. 4: The crucial aspect of Naomi’s instructions to Ruth, to uncover Boaz’s feet and lie down, is also the most ambiguous. Naomi may simply mean that Ruth should uncover a place at Boaz’s feet and lie down. The word feet, however, may also be a euphemism for sexual organs (see Isa. 7.20). In this case, Naomi may have a bolder and less respectable act in mind. Similarly, the verb lie down, which appears eight times in this chapter, may be a euphemism for sexual intercourse. The frequent use of the verb “to know” also contributes to the sexual innuendo. Most commentators agree that sexual intercourse did not actually take place, though several suggest that after awakening from a drunken stupor after a long day’s work (3.7), Boaz was unsure whether or not he had intercourse with Ruth. The language conveys the sexual tension that must have been present.

3.7–13: Ruth meets Boaz at the threshing floor after he has winnowed. 9: Rather than wait for Boaz’s instruction, as Naomi had proposed, Ruth takes the initiative. She asks him to spread his robe (“kanaf”) over her, because he is a redeeming kinsman. In doing so, she echoes his own words in 2.12, in which he describes her as seeking shelter under God’s wing (also “kanaf”). Ruth’s words are also a marriage proposal (see translators’ note a-a). In referring to Boaz as a redeeming kinsman, Ruth links the concepts of redemption and levirate marriage that are not otherwise connected in the Bible. The situation is not precisely that of levirate marriage, however. Had Boaz in fact been the brother of Ruth’s dead husband, Mahlon, he would have been obligated by law to marry Ruth. No elaborate pretense would have been required. This might suggest that the legislation of Deut. 25.5–10 was not normative at this period. 10: Boaz may be suggesting that Ruth’s proposal of marriage is an even more daring and comprehensive attempt to provide for Naomi’s well-know what a fine woman you are. ¹²But while it is true I am a redeeming kinsman, there is another redeemer closer than I. ¹³Stay for the night. Then in the morning, if he will act as a redeemer, good! let him redeem. But if he does not want to act as redeemer for you, I will do so myself, as the LORD lives! Lie down until morning."

¹⁴So she lay at his feet until dawn. She rose before one person could distinguish another, for he thought, "Let it not be known that the woman came to the threshing floor." ¹⁵And he said, "Hold out the shawl you are wearing." She held it while he measured out six measures of barley, and he put it on her back.

When she^a got back to the town, ¹⁶she came to her mother-in-law, who asked, "How is it with you, daughter?" She told her all that the man had done for her; ¹⁷and she added, "He gave me these six measures of barley, saying to me, 'Do not go back to your mother-in-law empty-handed.'" ¹⁸And Naomi said, "Stay here, daughter, till you learn how the matter turns out. For the man will not rest, but will settle the matter today."

4 Meanwhile, Boaz had gone to the gate and sat down there. And now the redeemer whom Boaz had mentioned passed by. He called, "Come over and sit down here, So-and-so!" And he came over and sat down. ²Then [Boaz] took ten elders of the town and said, "Be seated here"; and they sat down.

³He said to the redeemer, "Naomi, now returned from the country of Moab, must sell the piece of land which belonged to our kinsman Elimelech. ⁴I thought I should disclose the matter to you and say: Acquire it in the presence of those seated here and in the presence of the elders of my people. If you are willing to redeem it, redeem! But if you^b will not redeem, tell me, that I may know. For there is no one to redeem but you, and I come after you." "I am willing to redeem it," he replied. ⁵Boaz continued, "When you acquire the property from Naomi 'and from Ruth the Moabite, you must also acquire the wife of the deceased,'"

a So in many Heb. mss.; most mss. read "he."

b So many Heb. mss., Septuagint, and Targum; most mss. read "he."

c-c Emendation yields "you must also acquire Ruth the Moabite, the wife of the deceased"; cf. v. 10.

being than was her gleaning in the field. Ruth's decision to link her life with him is clearly flattering, particularly because she could have had her choice of young men.

3.14-18: Ruth reports back to Naomi. 15: Here, as at the end of ch 2, Ruth is provided with a large amount of grain to bring home to Naomi. The grain that Boaz gives her symbolizes the "seed" that he will later provide in order for their child to be conceived. Noting that six measures of barley is far too much for a single person to carry, the Rabbis suggested symbolic interpretations. Rashi, following Ruth Rabbah and various talmudic traditions, claimed that the text literally meant "six grains of barley," as a portent that their future son would be blessed with six blessings: the spirit of wisdom and discernment, counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge, and the fear of the LORD (see Isa. 11.2). Ruth Rabbah suggests that the six grains of barley refer to six righteous descendants: David, Hezekiah, Josiah, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah. 16: Naomi's question means, "How do things stand with you, my daughter?" It echoes that of Boaz in v. 9 and thereby links the two older people, though they do not encounter one another directly. 17: Here, as in 2.21, the words that Ruth reports to Naomi are not part of Boaz's original words to Ruth. Ruth may be fabricating or embroidering in order to emphasize that Boaz's care for Ruth extended to his concern for Naomi.

4.1-22: The gate. 4.1-12: Boaz "acquires" Ruth. 1: The gate was the commercial and judicial center of the town, where legal, business, and political transactions were conducted. Here Boaz encounters "Ploni 'Almoni," the unnamed redeemer (3.12). Although Boaz must have known the name of the kinsman, the narrative does not report it. According to Rashi, following Ruth Rabbah, and many contemporary commentators, the anonymity expresses the narrator's disapproval of the man's behavior.

2: Ten as the number of a quorum (Heb "minyan") is derived by some from this verse (b. Ketub. 7b). 3-4: Certain textual difficulties in vv. 3-5 make it difficult to reconstruct exactly the legal background of these proceedings. It is only here that we learn of Elimelech's land, which needs to be redeemed in order to provide for Naomi and Ruth. On redemption so as to perpetuate the name of the deceased upon his estate.”⁶ The redeemer replied, “Then I cannot redeem it for myself, lest I impair my own estate.^a You take over my right of redemption, for I am unable to exercise it.”

⁷Now this was formerly done in Israel in cases of redemption or exchange: to validate any transaction, one man would take off his sandal and hand it to the other. Such was the practice^b in Israel. ⁸So when the redeemer said to Boaz, “Acquire for yourself,” he drew off his sandal. ⁹And Boaz said to the elders and to the rest of the people, “You are witnesses today that I am acquiring from Naomi all that belonged to Elimelech and all that belonged to Chilion and Mahlon. ¹⁰I am also acquiring Ruth the Moabite, the wife of Mahlon, as my wife, so as to perpetuate the name of the deceased upon his estate, that the name of the deceased may not disappear from among his kinsmen and from the gate of his home town. You are witnesses today.”

¹¹All the people at the gate and the elders answered, “We are. May the LORD make the woman who is coming into your house like Rachel and Leah, both of whom built up the House of Israel! Prosper in Ephrathah^c and perpetuate your name in Bethlehem! ¹²And may your house be like the house of Perez whom Tamar bore to Judah—through the offspring which the LORD will give you by this young woman.”

¹³So Boaz married Ruth; she became his wife, and he cohabited with her. The LORD let her conceive, and she bore a son. ¹⁴And the women said to Naomi, “Blessed be the LORD, who has not withheld a redeemer from you today! May his name be perpetuated in Israel! ¹⁵He will renew your life and sustain your old age; for he is born of your daughter-in-law, who loves you and is better to you than seven sons.”

¹⁶Naomi took the child and held it to her bosom. She became its foster mother, ¹⁷and the women neighbors gave him a name, saying, “A son is born to Naomi!” They

of the land. Nevertheless, it is clear that within this story, the link that is articulated by Ruth on the threshing floor is accepted as a fundamental premise by the other characters as well as by the narrator. 8: The sandal represents the conveying of goods or rights from one party to another. In Heb it is not clear whether it was the redeemer who gave his sandal to Boaz or the other way around. Ruth Rabbah opts for the latter, on the principle that it is the purchaser who gives the pledge. Modern interpreters generally prefer the former. In their view, the act symbolizes the fact that “Ploni ‘Almoni” relinquishes the obligation and the privilege of redeeming the land and marrying Ruth.

4.13–17: The birth of Obed.

15: Though Ruth has disappeared from the story, she is acknowledged and given her due by the women who speak to Naomi after the birth of Boaz and Ruth’s son. 16: It is unlikely that Naomi has become the child’s wet-nurse or adoptive parent. The child symbolizes the complete reversal of Naomi’s ill-fortune, her restoration to fullness, and the continuation of her family. It is possible that the association of the child with Naomi rather than Ruth is meant to remove the taint of foreign birth from the child.

a I.e., by expending capital for property which will go to the son legally regarded as Mahlon’s; see Deut. 25.5–6.

b Understanding Heb. te‘udah in the sense of the Arabic ‘ādah and Syriac ‘yādā. Cf. Ibn Ezra.

c Ephrathah is another name applied to Bethlehem; cf. 1.2; Gen. 35.16, 19; 48.7; Mic. 5.1.

of land, see Lev. 25.24–34, 47–55; Jer. 32.7–15. 5: Boaz implies that the acquisition of Ruth as wife is necessarily tied to the redemption of land. According to biblical law, levirate marriage pertains only to the brother of the dead husband (Deut. 25.5–10). For this reason, neither Boaz nor the other kinsman is legally bound to marry Ruth. Nor does biblical law link levirate marriage with redemption named him Obed; he was the father of Jesse, father of David.

¹⁸This is the line of Perez: Perez begot Hezron, ¹⁹Hezron begot Ram, Ram begot Ammi-nadab, ²⁰Amminadab begot Nahshon, Nahshon begot Salmon,^a ²¹Salmon begot Boaz, Boaz begot Obed, ²²Obed begot Jesse, and Jesse begot David.

4.18–22: Generations from Perez to David. Obed's genealogy is traced through Boaz, and not through Mahlon as it would be in the case of levirate marriage. The genealogy draws a direct line between Perez (son of Tamar) through Obed (son of Ruth) to David. In this way the theme of family continuity and divine favor through Ruth is extended to embrace national continuity and divine favor through David. The genealogy also helps to frame the book, which opens with Bethlehem, the home of David, and concludes with the genealogy of David.

^a Heb. "Salmah."

Lamentations

LAMENTATIONS, CALLED 'ekhah ("alas") in Hebrew, after its initial word, commemorates the destruction of the First Temple in 586 BCE. The Talmud refers to the book as Kinot, "Elegies," or "Lamentations." The book is a collection of five laments, in moving poetry, reflecting on the suffering and dislocation that resulted from the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple and the exile that followed. It is the Bible's primary literature of destruction and became the paradigm for later Jewish literature of destruction. Lamentations is a form of mourning for a destruction that was to become a linchpin in Jewish history and Jewish religious thought. More than that, Lamentations eternalizes the destruction, thereby helping to make it a central event in the Jewish memory. In summarizing rabbinic interpretation of Lamentations in Lamentations Rabbah, Shaye J. D. Cohen wrote (in Proof-texts 2 [1982]:20) that Lamentations is "the eternal lament for all Jewish catastrophes, past, present, and future."

The five chapters are five separate poems, each with a distinctive tone and theme. All of the poems accept the standard biblical theology that the disaster is God's punishment for Israel's sins. In fact, the Babylonians are never mentioned by name. It is God who is responsible for the destruction. Nowhere is there any doubt about the power of God, and it is this power, and also His mercy, that the poets call on for help in their present plight. But the end of Judah's suffering seems far away for most of the book. The emphasis is on the grief and suffering of the present.

The book is among the most difficult in the canon. It is highly poetic, using rare words and unusual grammatical structures, and the thematic logic of the ordering of the verses is often tenuous. Abrupt changes in speaking voices mark shifts in perspectives, so that we hear various aspects of the siege and destruction of Jerusalem as well as diverse responses to the catastrophe. We see Jerusalem, the lonely and shamed city, grieving for her lost inhabitants. Feminine imagery is especially prominent, and especially effective, in reference to Jerusalem in ch 1, pictured as a shameful and then shamed woman, abandoned by her lovers (her supposed allies), emptied of all she holds dear, mocked by passers-by, and lacking comfort. In ch 2 we find ourselves looking at the siege of the city and all the horror of starvation and disease that accompanied it. We can imagine ourselves among the deportees being led into exile, or among the survivors who remained in Judah under Babylonian occupation. Complex imagery abounds, and it is not easy to understand all of it, but it is clear that the imagery contributes to the vividness of the portrayal and the emotional impact it has on the reader.

While Lamentations is surely the Bible's lament par excellence, there are other poems of lament in Psalms, both individual and communal laments, that may have served as generic forerunners to the book. Another forerunner may be the funeral dirge, a eulogy used to lament the death of individuals (like David's lament over Saul and Jonathan in 2 Sam. 1). Looking beyond the Bible, we find in ancient Mesopotamia, centuries before 586 BCE, laments for destroyed cities (e.g., "Lamentation over the Destruction of Ur," "Lamentation over the Destruction of Sumer and Ur," "Nippur Lament"). Exactly if and how these other types of laments influenced the authors of Lamentations is unclear. No literary genre arises in a vacuum; but Lamentations surpasses by far, both in its poetic sophistication and in its effect on its readers, any of its forerunners.

Poetic Structure

THE POETRY OF CHS 1–4 is marked by lines broken into two parts, the first possessing three accentual units and the second, two. Karl Budde, a Hebraist at the end of the 19th century, wrote (in Das hebräische Klaglied, 1882) that the second part of the line "seems, as it were, to die away . . . and a plaintive, melancholy cadence is thus produced." This "meter" has, therefore, been called qinah ("elegiac") meter.

The first four chapters are structured as alphabetic acrostics, with each verse beginning with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet, in sequence. Ch 3 is a triple acrostic. (The sequence in chs 2–4 reverses the order of the letters "pe" and "'ayin"; this reflects an alternative order of the alphabet found on inscriptions from Izbet Sartah and Kuntillet Ajrud.) Alphabetic acrostics occur elsewhere in the Bible: for instance, Ps. 119 and Prov. 31.10–31. The use of all the letters of the alphabet may imply fullness of expression—everything from A to Z—thereby symbolizing the completeness of the devastation being described and also of the mourning being expressed. The alphabetic order might also serve as an aid to memory, prompting the recall of successive lines. Acrostics of different types were used elsewhere in the ancient world; in Mesopotamia, for example, several poems spell out their author's name through acrostics. In Hebrew liturgical poetry (piyyutim) there is much use of both alphabet acrostics and name acrostics.

The verses in chs 1 and 2 are relatively long, with three "poetic lines" in each. Ch 3 is composed of short verses, three for each letter of the alphabet, with each verse falling into two parts. Ch 4 returns to the use of longer verses, but with two "lines" in each instead of three. Ch 5, although not an acrostic, has twenty-two single-line stanzas. (Twenty-two is the number of letters in the alphabet, so the last poem has the same number of verses as chs 1, 2, and 4.) Parallelism, the outstanding characteristic of biblical poetry, is found throughout the book, but is most obvious in ch 5.

Date and Authorship

ANCIENT TRADITION, REFLECTED IN THE TALMUD, the Septuagint, and the Vulgate, ascribes authorship of the book to Jeremiah, the leading prophet at the time of the destruction, whose book bears a resemblance to the language of Lamentations. Modern scholars do not accept the notion of Jeremian authorship (as they do not accept the ancient ascription of other biblical books to biblical figures). They ascribe each chapter to a different, anonymous author, whose identity is impossible to ascertain. The poems were probably written shortly after 586 BCE and collected together shortly thereafter, probably by 520 BCE when the postexilic community began to rebuild the Temple.

Place in the Bible and in Jewish Liturgy

IN MASORETIC MANUSCRIPTS and in Jewish Bibles, Lamentations is found among the Five Megillot, all of which are recited publicly on specific occasions during the year. The recitation of Lamentations takes place on Tish'ah be'av, the 9th of Av (in July or August), which commemorates the destruction of the First Temple in 586 BCE and the Second Temple in 70 CE, and around which the commemoration of other Jewish destructions and catastrophes have coalesced. Tish'ah be'av is a day of public mourning and fasting. As part of the rites of mourning, the reader and congregation sit on the floor or low benches when Lamentations is recited, during the evening and morning services of Tish'ah be'av. Other, later poems of lament are customarily added afterwards.

[DANIEL GROSSBERG]

1^a א Alas!
Lonely sits the city
Once great with people!
She that was great among nations
Is become like a widow;
The princess among states
Is become a thrall.

2 ב Bitterly she weeps in the night,
Her cheek wet with tears.
There is none to comfort her
Of all her friends.
All her allies have betrayed her;
They have become her foes.

3 ג Judah has gone into exile
Because of misery and harsh oppression;
When she settled among the nations,
She found no rest;
All her pursuers overtook her

1.1–22: Jerusalem in mourning, with no one to comfort her. First the poet and then the city lament the destruction of Jerusalem. The chapter may be divided into two parts, vv. 1–11 and 12–22, corresponding to the two speaking voices. There is an interlocking design that binds the two parts together: 1.22, 21, 20, 19, 18, and 12 echo 1.1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 11, respectively.

1.1–11: The poet's lament. The city is described as a woman, widowed, abandoned, and shamed. 1.1: Alas! This mournful cry is characteristic of the Hebrew elegy and also opens chs 2 and 4 (cf. Isa. 1.21; 2.1; 4.1). It suggests a contrast between a former glorious state and the current state of misery. The image of the widow evokes loneliness and bereavement, and also vulnerability. 2: Bitterly she weeps: "To weep"

a Chaps. 1–4 are alphabetical acrostics, i.e., the verses begin with the successive letters of the Heb. alphabet. Chap. 3 is a triple acrostic. In chaps. 2–4 the letter pe precedes the 'ayin.

- ^aIn the narrow places.^a
- 4 7 Zion's roads are in mourning,
Empty of festival pilgrims;
All her gates are deserted.
Her priests sigh,
Her maidens are unhappy—
She is utterly disconsolate!
- 5 7 Her enemies are now the masters,
Her foes are at ease,
Because the LORD has afflicted her
For her many transgressions;
Her infants have gone into captivity
Before the enemy.
- 6 1 Gone from Fair Zion are all
That were her glory;
Her leaders were like stags
That found no pasture;
They could only walk feebly
Before the pursuer.
- 7 1 All the precious things she had
In the days of old Jerusalem recalled
In her days of woe and sorrow,
When her people fell by enemy hands
With none to help her;
When enemies looked on and gloated
Over her downfall.
- 8 7 Jerusalem has greatly sinned,
Therefore she is become a mockery.
All who admired her despise her,
For they have seen her disgraced;
And she can only sigh
And shrink back.
- 9 7 Her uncleanness clings to her skirts.
She gave no thought to her future;
She has sunk appallingly,
With none to comfort her.—
See, O LORD, my misery;
How the enemy jeers!
- 10 7 The foe has laid hands
On everything dear to her.
She has seen her Sanctuary Invaded by nations
Which You have denied admission Into Your community.

means to cry out, to utter sounds of sadness. Heb "bakhoh tivkeh," "weeping she weeps": a common grammatical construction indicating intensity. The Talmud explains the double occurrence of the verbal root, as referring to the destruction of both Temples (b. Sanh. 104.2). Friends, her political allies, who should have aided and comforted her. The term also points to Judah's idolatry, her pursuit of "friends" other than her "husband," God. 3: Misery and harsh oppression recall the enslavement in Egypt (Gen. 15.13; Exod. 1.11; Deut. 26.6). Judah's exile to Babylonia is like a second Egyptian enslavement. The verse makes more sense if translated "after misery" rather than "because of misery." No rest, no resting place, no place to dwell secure. 4: The once-busy thoroughfares are empty of pilgrims to the Temple, for the Temple is destroyed and the people are gone. (The idea that Judah was totally depopulated is a rhetorical exaggeration—many Judeans were not exiled and remained behind.) 5: Her many transgressions, first of several admissions (1.8, 9, 14, 18, 20) that the sins of Israel brought on the destruction. 6: Fair Zion, lit. "Daughter of Zion," the designation of the personified city that appears most frequently throughout Lamentations and the Prophets (e.g., 2.1, 4, 8, 10, 13, 18; 4.22; Isa. 1.8; 52.2; Jer. 4.31; Mic. 4.8). 8: A mockery, or, alternatively, she has been banished. Her disgraced, lit. "her nakedness," meaning her shame. 9: Her uncleanness; The metaphor of ritual impurity (Lev. 15.16–24) is used to indicate Fair Zion's moral impurity. Zion has "exposed herself" immodestly and is sexually immoral. Sexual immorality is, in turn, a metaphor for idolatry, the sin which caused the exile. See, O LORD, my misery: Personified Zion's words (1.12), introduced into the poet's lament, integrate the two parts of ch 1. 10: The Temple has been violated as a woman is sexually violated. 11: A second interjection of personified Zion's words into the

a-a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

- 11 o All her inhabitants sigh
As they search for bread;
They have bartered their treasures for food,
To keep themselves alive.—
See, O LORD, and behold, ^aHow abject^a I have become!
- 12 h ^bMay it never befall you,^b
All who pass along the road—
Look about and see:
Is there any agony like mine,
Which was dealt out to me
When the LORD afflicted me
On His day of wrath?
- 13 n From above He sent a fire
Down into my bones.
He spread a net for my feet,
He hurled me backward;
He has left me forlorn,
In constant misery.
- 14^c o The yoke of my offenses is bound fast,
Lashed tight by His hand;
Imposed upon my neck,
It saps my strength;
The Lord has delivered me into the hands
Of those I cannot withstand.
- 15 o The Lord in my midst has rejected
All my heroes;
He has proclaimed a set time against me
To crush my young men.
As in a press the Lord has trodden Fair Maiden Judah.
- 16 y For these things do I weep,
My eyes flow with tears:
Far from me is any comforter
Who might revive my spirit;
My children are forlorn,
For the foe has prevailed.
- 17 o Zion spreads out her hands,
She has no one to comfort her;
The LORD has summoned against Jacob
His enemies all about him;
Jerusalem has become among them
A thing unclean.

poet's lament. See, O LORD, and behold, how abject I have become: A cry to God for compassion ends the first half of the ch (see 1.12).

1.12–22: Personified Zion's lament. The pain of Jerusalem and the harsh treatment she has suffered. 12: Jerusalem calls out for sympathy to passers-by as she called out to God in the previous verse. His day of wrath: God's destruction is often depicted as transpiring in a single day, as in the Day of the LORD (e.g., Isa. 13.13; Joel 2.1; Amos 5.18; Obad. 15). 13: The imagery of war—fire and nets to capture prisoners—is invoked to describe God's actions against Judah. 14: The yoke of submission is constructed from Judah's sins; i.e., it is the sins that led to this situation. 15: The blood of Judah is squeezed out of her like wine in a winepress. 16: Comforter: The lack of a comforter is mentioned in vv. 2, 9, 16, 17, 21 and is a major theme in the ch. With no comforter, Jerusalem's mourning cannot be completed. 17: A thing unclean, lit. a menstruating woman, who is ritually impure. Again, ritual impurity serves as a metaphor for the moral impurity of adultery/idolatry.

a-a Or (ironically) "What a glutton"; cf. Prov. 23.20–21.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c Meaning of parts of vv. 14 and 15 uncertain.

18 ז The LORD is in the right,
For I have disobeyed Him.
Hear, all you peoples,
And behold my agony:
My maidens and my youths
Have gone into captivity!

19 פ I cried out to my friends,
But they played me false.
My priests and my elders
Have perished in the city
As they searched for food
To keep themselves alive.

20 ט See, O LORD, the distress I am in!
My heart is in anguish,
*I know how wrong I was^a
To disobey.
Outside the sword deals death;
Indoors, the plague.

21 ש When they heard how I was sighing,
There was none to comfort me;
All my foes heard of my plight and exulted.
For it is Your doing:
^bYou have brought on the day that You threatened.
Oh, let them become like me!^b

22 נ Let all their wrongdoing come before You,
And deal with them
As You have dealt with me
For all my transgressions.
For my sighs are many,
And my heart is sick.

2 נ Alas!
The Lord in His wrath
Has shamed^c Fair Zion,
Has cast down from heaven to earth
The majesty of Israel.
He did not remember His Footstool^d
On His day of wrath.

2 צ The Lord has laid waste without pity
All the habitations of Jacob;
He has razed in His anger
Fair Judah's strongholds.
He has brought low in dishonor

a-a Lit. "My heart has turned over within me"; cf. Exod. 14.5; Hos. 11.8.

b-b Emendation yields "Oh, bring on them what befell me, / And let them become like me!"

c Meaning of Heb. uncertain. d I.e., the Temple.

18: The LORD is in the right, an admission of Judah's guilt and a confirmation of the justice of God.

20: I know how wrong I was to disobey: An alternate translation is "How very bitter I am." 22: The enemy is no more righteous than Judah, and deserves a punishment like hers. Are many, Heb "rabot," recalls "great [with]" Heb "rabati" (twice in 1.1). They frame the ch and contrast the former "rabati" ("great with people" and "great among nations") to the latter "rabot" (my sighs are many).

2.1–22: The second lament. In contrast to the previous ch, where the tone is one of despair and mourning, the tone of this ch is angry. God is depicted throughout as an angry enemy who destroyed the physical structures of Jerusalem with violent force. The ch has an interlocking design with 2.22, 21, 20, 13 and 12 echoing 2.1, 2, 3, 10, and 11, respectively.

2.1–9: The details of how God destroyed Judah. 1: Alas! See 1.1 n., cf. 4.1. The Lord in His wrath has shamed Fair Zion: God has made His holy Temple into an abomination. "Abomination" is elsewhere linked with idolatry, to be shunned by Israel. The majesty of Israel, epithet for the Temple. His Footstool, a designation for the Temple (Ps. 132.7). Day of wrath, with echoes in vv. 21 and 22, frames and characterizes ch 2. (See 1.12 and note.) 3: All the might of Israel, lit. "Horn of Israel," a common metaphor for power and pride (e.g., Jer. 48.25; Ps. 75.11). His right hand, a symbol of divine power (e.g., Exod. 15.6, 12), is here used to prevent the protection of Judah. 4: The Tent, the places where Judeans live, or, the Temple (Ps. 27.5). 6: His Booth here signifies the Temple (Ps. 27.5). Like a garden: The phrase is grammatically difficult and makes better sense if rendered "as in a garden," meaning that God has destroyed the Temple ("His Booth") as easily as if it were a hut ("booth," a temporary structure used during harvest time) in a garden. Has ended in

The kingdom and its leaders.

- 3 א In blazing anger He has cut down
All the might of Israel;
He has withdrawn His right hand
In the presence of the foe;
He has ravaged Jacob like flaming fire,
Consuming on all sides.
- 4 ז He bent His bow like an enemy,
Poised His right hand like a foe;
He slew all who delighted the eye.
He poured out His wrath like fire
In the Tent of Fair Zion.
- 5 ה The Lord has acted like a foe,
He has laid waste Israel,
Laid waste all her citadels,
Destroyed her strongholds.
He has increased within Fair Judah
Mourning and moaning.
- 6 ו He has stripped His Booth^a like a garden,
He has destroyed His Tabernacle;^b
The LORD has ended in Zion Festival and sabbath;
In His raging anger He has spurned
King and priest.
- 7 ז The Lord has rejected His altar,
Disdained His Sanctuary.
He has handed over to the foe
The walls of its citadels;
They raised a shout in the House of the
LORD
As on a festival day.
- 8 ח The LORD resolved to destroy The wall of Fair Zion;
“He measured with a line,”^c refrained not
From bringing destruction.
He has made wall and rampart to mourn,
Together they languish.
- 9 ט Her gates have sunk into the ground,
He has smashed her bars to bits;
Her king and her leaders are ^din exile,^d
Instruction^e is no more;
Her prophets, too, receive
No vision from the LORD.
- 10 י Silent sit on the ground

Zion / Festival and sabbath: God has cast into oblivion the Temple sacrifices on those days. 7: They raised a shout . . . as on a festival day: The joyous sounds of Temple worship, now silenced, have been replaced by the enemies' exultant crowing. 8: Measured with a line is the normal procedure for erecting a building, but here God is measuring how to destroy it (cf. Amos 7:7–9).

2.10–19: The survivors bewail their suffering. 10: Each action is a sign of mourning (see Ezek. 27:30; Job 2.12–13). Some current Jewish mourning practices reflect these ancient practices. Mention of elders and maidens is an example of a merism, a literary device whereby two opposites are used to express totality: The two and all in between mourn.

a i.e., the Temple. b Lit. "(Tent of) Meeting."

c-c i.e., He made His plans. d-d Lit. "among the nations."

e Heb. torah, here priestly instruction; cf. Jer. 18.18; Hag. 2.11; Mal. 2.6.

- The elders of Fair Zion;
 They have strewn dust on their heads
 And girded themselves with sackcloth;
 The maidens of Jerusalem have bowed
 Their heads to the ground.
- 11 > My eyes are spent with tears,
 My heart is in tumult,
^aMy being melts away^a
 Over the ruin of ^bmy poor people,^b
 As babes and sucklings languish
 In the squares of the city.
- 12 > They keep asking their mothers,
 "Where is bread and wine?"
 As they languish like battle-wounded
 In the squares of the town,
 As their life runs out
 In their mothers' bosoms.
- 13 > What can I ^ctake as witness^c or liken
 To you, O Fair Jerusalem?
 What can I match with you to console you,
 O Fair Maiden Zion?
 For your ruin is vast as the sea:
 Who can heal you?
- 14 > Your seers prophesied to you Delusion and folly.
 They did not expose your iniquity
 So as to restore your fortunes,
 But prophesied to you oracles
 Of delusion and deception.
- 15 o All who pass your way
 Clap their hands at you;
 They hiss and wag their head
 At Fair Jerusalem:^d
 "Is this the city that was called Perfect in Beauty,
 Joy of All the Earth?"
- 16 o All your enemies
 Jeer at you;
 They hiss and gnash their teeth,
 And cry: "We've ruined her!
 Ah, this is the day we hoped for;
^eWe have lived to see it!"^e

13: Vast as the sea, simile expressing infinite size (see Isa. 48.18; Ps. 104.25; Job 11.9). 14: Denunciation of false prophets. Oracles of delusion and deception, see Jer. 14.13–16; 23.25–27. 15: Complaint about enemies. Clap their hands . . . hiss . . . wag their head, gestures of shock or derision. 16: In this acrostic, and in the following two chs, the letter "pe" precedes the "'ayin," reflecting an alternative order of the alphabet, attested in inscriptions from Izbet Sartah and Kuntillet Ajrud. 17: Has carried out the decree, to punish sinners (1 Kings 9.6–9). 18–19: A call to Zion (according to the emendation). The "wall" is personified as a supplicant to God on behalf of the city.

a-a Lit. "My liver spills on the ground."

b-b Lit. "the daughter of my people"; so elsewhere in poetry.

c-c Emendation yields "compare."

d These gestures were intended to ward off the calamity from the viewer; cf., e.g., Jer. 18.16 and note; Job 27.23.

e-e Lit. "We have attained, we have seen."

17 ו The LORD has done what He purposed,
Has carried out the decree
That He ordained long ago;
He has torn down without pity.
He has let the foe rejoice over you,
Has exalted the might of your enemies.

18 ז ^aTheir heart cried out^a to the Lord.
O wall of Fair Zion,
Shed tears like a torrent
Day and night!
Give yourself no respite,
Your eyes no rest.

19 ח Arise, cry out in the night
At the beginning of the watches,
Pour out your heart like water
In the presence of the Lord!
Lift up your hands to Him
For the life of your infants,
Who faint for hunger
At every street corner.

20 ט See, O LORD, and behold,
To whom You have done this!
Alas, women eat their own fruit,
Their new-born^b babes!
Alas, priest and prophet are slain
In the Sanctuary of the Lord!

21 י Prostrate in the streets lie
Both young and old.
My maidens and youths
Are fallen by the sword;
You slew them on Your day of wrath,
You slaughtered without pity.

22 יא You summoned, as on a festival,
My neighbors from roundabout.
On the day of the wrath of the LORD,
None survived or escaped;
Those whom I bore^b and reared
My foe has consumed.

3 יב I am the man ^cwho has known affliction
Under^c the rod of His wrath;
2 Me He drove on and on
In unrelieved darkness;

2.20-22: Direct address to the LORD; lament becomes prayer.

20: See, O LORD, and behold, a call to God for divine compassion. Eat . . . babes (cf. 4.10), a stark reversal of the norm during the siege (2 Kings 6.28) and a punishment for violation of the covenant (Deut. 23.53-57). Cannibalism is a motif often associated with literary descriptions of sieges. 21: You slew . . . You slaughtered: Israel's prayer may include accusations against God alongside supplication for divine mercy and admission of guilt. 22: Day of wrath, see 2.1 and n.; 2.22.

3.1-66: Individual and collective laments. Theological reflection is mixed with lament; hope alternates with despair. The identification of the individual has perplexed scholars for centuries. Some have identified the first-person speaker as a historical individual, but it seems better to take him (he is definitely male) as the counterpart of the female city of ch 1 or as the voice of a survivor going into exile. He is a Job-like figure, crying out to God in his suffering, trying to provoke a response from God. In contrast to the rest of Lamentations, it is likely that this chapter was originally written for a different purpose, and only secondarily was connected to the destruction of the Temple and the exile.

3.1-20: The lament of an individual. 1: I am the man: The male voice may represent a survivor, perhaps one going into exile. He may also be thought of as the collective voice of the people. (Later in the ch, the "I" merges with the "we.") Rod of His wrath, the shepherd's crook used for divine punishment (e.g., 2 Sam. 7.14; Ps. 89.33). The following verses continue the image of the shepherd, but instead of protecting his flock and leading them to water and good pastures (as in Ps. 23), this shepherd leads his flock into danger, which seems to symbolize the exile. 2-17a: The LORD is the implied subject of the actions; the poet is the object; a a-a Emendation yields "Cry aloud."

b The root has this meaning in Arabic; others "dandled."

c-c Emendation yields "whom the Lord has shepherded with."

3 On none but me He brings down His hand
 Again and again, without cease.
 4 א He has worn away my flesh and skin;
 He has shattered my bones.
 5 All around me He has built Misery^a and hardship;
 6 He has made me dwell in darkness,
 Like those long dead.
 7 א He has walled me in and I cannot break out;
 He has weighed me down with chains.
 8 And when I cry and plead,
 He shuts out my prayer;
 9 He has walled in my ways with hewn blocks,
 He has made my paths a maze.
 10 א He is a lurking bear to me,
 A lion in hiding;
 11 ^bHe has forced me off my way^b and mangled me,
 He has left me numb.
 12 He has bent His bow and made me
 The target of His arrows:
 13 א He has shot into my vitals
 The shafts of His quiver.
 14 I have become a laughingstock to all people,
 The butt of their gibes all day long.
 15 He has filled me with bitterness,
 Sated me with wormwood.
 16 א He has broken my teeth on gravel,
 Has ground me into the dust.
 17 My life was bereft of peace,
 I forgot what happiness was.
 18 I thought my strength and hope
 Had perished before the LORD.
 19 א To recall my distress and my misery
 Was wormwood and poison;
 20 Whenever I thought of them,
 I was bowed low.
 21 But this do I call to mind,
 Therefore I have hope:
 22 א The kindness of the LORD has not ended,
 His mercies are not spent.
 23 They are renewed every morning—
 Ample is Your grace!

a Taking rosh as equivalent to resh.

b-b Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

scathing condemnation of God the abusive shepherd (cf. 2.2–8 and Job's laments). 2: Me He drove, with the shepherd's rod. On and on in unrelieved darkness, to a death-like state (Job 10.21–22; Lam. 3.6). Reversal of care and security usually associated with shepherd imagery (Ps. 23.1–4; 77.21; 78.52–53). Darkness, and not light, a reversal of the positive image of deliverance from darkness as symbol of redemption (Isa. 42.16; 49.9). "Darkness" also connotes imprisonment, anticipating 3.6–7. 8: He shuts out my prayer, lamenting theological distress as well as physical calamities (see 3.44). This is consistent with the Psalms' emphasis on God's ability to "forget" the worshipper or to hide his face (e.g., Ps. 13.2). 10: Bear . . . lion, the LORD, depicted just before as a shepherd, turns into fearsome beasts (cf. Isa. 38.13; Hos. 13.8), from whom the shepherd is supposed to protect the flock. 12–13: The LORD shoots disaster and affliction from His bow (Deut. 32.23–24; Ps. 38.2–3; Job 16.12–13). 15: Filled me . . . sated me with wormwood: Drinking bitter liquid is a common symbol of suffering (cf. 4.21; 3.19; Jer. 9.14; Job 9.18). 16: He has broken my teeth on gravel: The midrash explains this literally in Lam. Rab. 3:16, suggesting that on their way into exile, Israelites kneaded dough on the ground, picking up grit along with the dough. The custom of dipping hard-boiled eggs or bread into ashes at the meal preceding the Fast of Tish'ah be'av derives from this midrash. 18: I thought my strength and hope had perished before the LORD, a shift to the subjective reactions of the poet to punishments and the first mention of the LORD in this ch. 19: Wormwood and poison, see 3.15.

3.21–24: Expression of faith and hope. 21: I call to mind . . . I have hope: The reasons for hope are explained in the following verses. 22–23: Kindness . . . mercies, with grace (or "faithfulness" in 3.23) constitute three of the Thirteen Attributes of God (Heb "shelosh 'esreh midot," Exod. 34.6–7). The

24 "The LORD is my portion," I say with full heart;
Therefore will I hope in Him.

25 ♪ The LORD is good to those who trust in Him,
To the one who seeks Him;
26 It is good to wait patiently
Till rescue comes from the LORD.
27 It is good for a man, when young,
To bear a yoke;
28 ♪ Let him sit alone and be patient,
When He has laid it upon him.
29 Let him put his mouth to the dust—
There may yet be hope.
30 Let him offer his cheek to the smiter;
Let him be surfeited with mockery.
31 ♪ For the Lord does not Reject forever,
32 But first afflicts, then pardons
In His abundant kindness.
33 For He does not willfully bring grief
Or affliction to man,
34 ♪ Crushing under His feet
All the prisoners of the earth.
35 To deny a man his rights
In the presence of the Most High,
36 To wrong a man in his cause—
This the Lord does not choose.
37 ♪ Whose decree was ever fulfilled,
Unless the Lord willed it?
38 Is it not at the word of the Most High,
That weal and woe befall?
39 Of what shall a living man complain?
Each one of his own sins!

40 ♪ Let us search and examine our ways,
And turn back to the LORD;
41 Let us lift up our hearts with^a our hands
To God in heaven:
42 We have transgressed and rebelled,
And You have not forgiven.

^a Lit. "to"; emendation yields "rather than"; cf. Joel 2.13.

Thirteen Attributes are often cited in biblical texts; they are also recited on festivals and fast days, and in penitential prayers during the High Holy Day period. Similar praise of God's goodness appears in promises to David (Ps. 89).

23: They are renewed every morning—Ample is Your grace! It is only through God's grace that the poet wakes up every morning from sleep, a mini-death. This verse is the basis for the Jewish prayer recited upon waking from sleep, "I thank You, everliving King, who has mercifully restored my soul within me; ample is Your grace." In Lam. Rab. 3:16, the midrash interprets, "Because You renew us every morning, we know that ample is Your grace to redeem us." 24: The word hope appears in both v. 21 and v. 24, framing and featuring bracketed verses.

3.25–39: Pious wisdom on human suffering. 25–27: Good, Heb "tob," first word of each of three verses, suggests a benefit to trustful waiting, hoping (Pss. 27.14; 40.5; Prov. 20.22), and resigned suffering. 28: Let him sit alone, cf. 1.1. It, His chastisement. 29: Let him put his mouth to the dust, accepting God's discipline submissively. 30: Let him offer his cheek . . . be surfeited with mockery, suffering abasement with resignation. 33: Rationale for accepting suffering with patient trust. Divine punishment is of limited duration; the LORD is ultimately compassionate; and the chastisement is not arbitrary. 32: Pardons, kindness, Heb terms are the same as "kindness" and "mercies" in v. 22. 33: Willfully, capriciously, lit. "from His heart." God afflicts only in response to human misconduct. 34–39: A restatement of standard biblical retribution theology: All is according to the divine will; suffering is the divine punishment for sin, to be accepted willingly. 39: Each one, Heb "gever," "man." With "gever," "man" in v. 1 it defines the poetic unit spoken by the individual (vv. 1–39).

3.40–47: Communal lament. 40: Let us, an appeal for introspection and repentance in the first-person plural. 41: Our hearts with (or "rather than") our hands stresses sincerity, not mere outward gesture (cf. Joel 2.13). 42: We have transgressed and rebelled, confession of sin in first-person plural using multiple terms for sin. The Yom Kippur Confession of Sin ("viduy") exhibits the same form and is preceded by recitation of the Thirteen Attributes of God (see 3.22–23 n.). And You, better "but

43 o You have clothed Yourself in anger and pursued us,
 You have slain without pity.
 44 You have screened Yourself off with a cloud,
 That no prayer may pass through.
 45 You have made us filth and refuse
 In the midst of the peoples.
 46 o All our enemies loudly
 Rail against us.
 47 Panic and pitfall are our lot,
 Death and destruction.
 48 My eyes shed streams of water
 Over the ruin of my poor^a people.
 49 y My eyes shall flow without cease,
 Without respite,
 50 ^bUntil the LORD looks down
 And beholds from heaven.
 51 My eyes have brought me grief^b
 Over all the maidens of my city.
 52 x My foes have snared me like a bird,
 Without any cause.
 53 They have ended my life in a pit
 And cast stones at me.
 54 Waters flowed over my head;
 I said: I am lost!
 55 p I have called on Your name, O LORD,
 From the depths of the Pit.
 56 Hear my plea;
 Do not shut Your ear
 To my groan, to my cry!
 57 You have ever drawn nigh when I called You;
 You have said, "Do not fear!"
 58 r You championed my cause, O Lord,
 You have redeemed my life.
 59 You have seen, O LORD, the wrong done me;
 Oh, vindicate my right!
 60 You have seen all their malice,
 All their designs against me;
 61 w You have heard, O LORD, their taunts,
 All their designs against me,
 62 The mouthings and pratings of my adversaries
 Against me all day long.
 63 See how, at their ease or at work,
 I am the butt of their gibes.

You," although the Heb has no conjunction. This introduces a shift back to accusation. You have not forgiven: The expected result of repentance and confession did not occur. 43–45: More charges of divine abandonment. 47: Panic and pitfall, a proverbial expression (Isa. 24.17–18; Jer. 48.43–44); NJPS imitates the alliteration of Heb "paḥad wapaḥat" and also of Death and destruction, (Heb "hashet vehashaver").

3.49–63: Return to lament of the individual. 53: Pit, a cistern for collecting water; it also stands for the grave, the realm of the dead. 54: Waters flowed over my head, metaphor for desperation (cf. Jonah 2.6–7; 2 Sam. 22.5–6 = Ps. 18.5–6). I am lost!, dead, cut off from God (Isa. 53. 8; Ps. 88.6). 56: Many verbs translated as imperatives in vv. 56–66 are in the past tense. This change in tense, found in several psalms as well (e.g., Ps. 6.10) may reflect a wish, or a newfound confidence in the worshipper, perhaps after hearing an oracle that God has heard the prayer. 57–61: Drawn nigh, I called, have said, championed, have redeemed, etc.: These verbs are in the perfect tense, which usually refers to past actions, but some interpreters understand them as futures or imperatives. The meaning would be "draw nigh when I call," "Champion my cause," and the like. This is a plea by the poet to God for future action. 59–61: Complaint about the enemy anticipates an appeal for retribution (vv. 64–66).

a Lit. "the daughter of my"; so frequently in poetry.

b-b Emendation yields: ⁵⁰"Until the LORD looks down from heaven / And beholds ⁵¹my affliction. / The LORD has brought me grief."

64 n Give them, O LORD, their deserts
According to their deeds.
65 Give them anguish^a of heart;
Your curse be upon them!
66 Oh, pursue them in wrath and destroy them
From under the heavens of the LORD!

4 n Alas!
The gold is dulled,^a Debased the finest gold!
The sacred^b gems are spilled
At every street corner.
2 z The precious children of Zion;
Once valued as gold—
Alas, they are accounted as earthen pots,
Work of a potter's hands!
3 z Even jackals offer the breast
And suckle their young;
But my poor people has turned cruel,
Like ostriches of the desert.
4 7 The tongue of the suckling cleaves
To its palate for thirst.
Little children beg for bread;
None gives them a morsel.
5 n Those who feasted on dainties
Lie famished in the streets;
Those who were reared in purple
Have embraced refuse heaps.
6 7 The guilt^c of my poor^d people
Exceeded the iniquity^e of Sodom,
Which was overthrown in a moment,
Without a hand striking it.
7 7 Her elect were purer than snow,
Whiter than milk;
Their limbs were ruddier than coral,
Their bodies^a were like sapphire.
8 n Now their faces are blacker than soot,
They are not recognized in the streets;
Their skin has shriveled on their bones,
It has become dry as wood.
9 b Better off were the slain of the sword
Than those slain by famine, ^aWho pined away, [as though] wounded,
For lack of^e the fruits of the field.
10 7 With their own hands, tenderhearted women

3.64–66: Closing call for retribution against enemies. 64: Give them . . . their deserts, calls for retribution, which will reestablish God's justice in the world (cf. 1.21–22; Ps. 3.8). 66: Pursue them in wrath appears in the Haggadah for Passover among a collection of verses ("shefokh hamatkha," "Pour out Thy wrath") whose theme is petition for vengeance on the nations oppressing Israel (see Ps. 79.6 n.).

4.1–22: Description of the siege of Jerusalem and the suffering and degradation of its inhabitants, ending in threats against Edom and blessings for Israel.

4.1–10: Contrasts between former grandeur and wretched present.

1: Alas! See 1.1 and n.; 2.1.

1–2: Gold and gems, metaphors for people who, though precious, are now treated as worthless, throwaway objects (potsherds).

3: Even jackals: Israel compares unfavorably even with the vilest animals (Isa. 1.3; Jer. ch 8). Ostriches, known proverbially for neglect of their young (Job 39.13–18).

4: Infants are so weak they cannot cry or suck. Children are starving.

6: Sodom, infamous for its wickedness (Gen. 19.1–11; Deut. 32.32; Isa. 1.10; 3.9; Jer. 23.14; Ezek. 16.46–56) and sudden and total destruction (Deut. 29.22; Isa. 1.9; 13.19; Jer. 49.18; 50.40; Amos 4.11; Zeph. 2.9). Jerusalem's slow agony is worse than Sodom's quick punishment. 9: A quick death in battle would be preferable to slow starvation. 10: Have cooked, see 2.20 n.

a Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b Emendation yields "precious."

c I.e., punishment.

d See note at 3.48.

e-e Meaning of Heb. uncertain.

Have cooked their children;
Such became their fare,
In the disaster of my poor^a people.

- 11 ⊃ The LORD vented all His fury, Poured out His blazing wrath;
He kindled a fire in Zion
Which consumed its foundations.
- 12 ↳ The kings of the earth did not believe,
Nor any of the inhabitants of the world,
That foe or adversary could enter
The gates of Jerusalem.
- 13 Ⓜ It was for the sins of her prophets,
The iniquities of her priests,
Who had shed in her midst
The blood of the just.
- 14 ⊂ They wandered blindly through the streets,
Defiled with blood,
So that no one was able
To touch their garments.
- 15 ⊖ "Away! Unclean!" people shouted at them, "Away! Away! Touch not!"
So they wandered and wandered again;
For the nations had resolved:
"They shall stay here no longer."
- 16 Ⓟ ^bThe LORD's countenance has turned away from
them,
He will look on them no more.
They showed no regard for priests,
No favor to elders.
- 17 Ⓝ Even now our eyes pine away
In vain for deliverance.
As we waited, still we wait
For a nation that cannot help.
- 18 Ⓜ Our steps were checked,
We could not walk ^{c-c}"in our squares."
Our doom is near, our days are done—
Alas, our doom has come!
- 19 Ⓟ Our pursuers were swifter
Than the eagles in the sky;
They chased us in the mountains,
Lay in wait for us in the wilderness.
- 20 Ⓝ The breath of our life, the LORD's anointed,
Was captured in their traps—
He in whose shade we had thought
To live among the nations.

4.11-16: Misery is divine chastisement. 11: Fire, symbol of divine wrath (e.g., 2.3; Deut. 32.22; Isa. 10.17; Jer. 17.27); also actual fire that burned down the city.

12: Even foreign kings are shocked that God would let an enemy conquer His people. Faith in Jerusalem's inviolability, a theme of Isa. 1-39 (see also Pss. 46.5; 48.3-8), a Judean thought here projected on foreigners, is recognized as myth. 13: Prophets . . . priests, religious leaders singled out for blame (cf. 2.14). 14-15: The formerly respected are now scorned and shunned as lepers (cf. Lev. 13.45-46). 16: LORD's countenance, the sign of divine favor (Lev. 6.26-27), is averted from Israel. Priests, faithful priests, in contrast to the priests of v. 13.

4.17-22: Communal lament.

The "we" uttered by the city reemerges. 17: A nation, Egypt (see Jer. 37.5-10), to which Judah had looked in vain for relief. 20: The LORD's anointed, breath of our life, divinely ordained kings (1 Sam. 24.7, 11; 2 Sam. 1.14, 16). The reference may be to King Zedekiah. The kings were also of no avail, and now the kingdom has lost its independence. 21: Rejoice and exult, ironic charge to the enemy to exult as long as she can, for soon she, too, will suffer divine punishment. Edom, singled out for a curse (cf. Ezek. ch 35; Obad. 11; Ps. 137.8). "Fair" Edom parallels "Fair" Zion; the two will exchange places in terms of misery. The cup, of God's wrath (cf. 3.15; Jer. 25.15-29; 49.12; 51.7; Hab. 2.15-16). 22: Your iniquity, i.e., punishment for your iniquity. Is expiated, lit. "is complete," and therefore the exile will end. Consolation of Israel (cf. Isa. 40.2) contrasted to imprecation against Edom.

^a See note at 3.48. ^b Meaning of line uncertain. ^{c-c} Or "With long strides."

21 w Rejoice and exult, Fair Edom,
Who dwell in the land of Uz!
To you, too, the cup shall pass,
You shall get drunk and expose your nakedness.

22 n Your iniquity, Fair Zion, is expiated;
He will exile you no longer.
Your iniquity, Fair Edom, He will note;
He will uncover your sins.

5 Remember, O LORD, what has befallen us;
Behold, and see our disgrace!
2 Our heritage has passed to aliens,
Our homes to strangers.
3 We have become orphans, fatherless;
Our mothers are like widows.
4 We must pay to drink our own water,
Obtain our own kindling at a price.
5 We are hotly^a pursued;
Exhausted, we are given no rest.
6 We hold out a hand to Egypt;
To Assyria, for our fill of bread.
7 Our fathers sinned and are no more;
And we must bear their guilt.
8 Slaves are ruling over us,
With none to rescue us from them.
9 We get our bread at the peril of our lives,
Because of the ^bsword of the wilderness.^b
10 Our skin glows like an oven,
With the fever of famine.
11 They^c have ravished women in Zion,
Maidens in the towns of Judah.
12 Princes have been hanged by them;^c
No respect has been shown to elders.
13 Young men must carry millstones,
And youths stagger under loads of wood.
14 The old men are gone from the gate,
The young men from their music.
15 Gone is the joy of our hearts;
Our dancing is turned into mourning.
16 The crown has fallen from our head;
Woe to us that we have sinned!

17 Because of this our hearts are sick,
Because of these our eyes are dimmed:

5.1–22: Communal lament and prayer for restoration.

5.1: Appeal to God to take note. Remember, O LORD, . . . Behold, and see echoes 1.9, 11, 20; 3.59–60. Petition to God to take heed is complemented by a final petition to God to take action (v. 21).

5.2–18: Communal recounting of suffering. The main institutions of Judean society have been broken down. Families lack a head of household, family inheritances are lost, the elite of society have lost their status, economic deprivation is widespread, as is violence and lawlessness. 2: Heritage, the land passed on by inheritance from one member of a family to the next; also the land God gave to Israel (Deut. 4.38; 25.19; 26.1). 6: Egypt . . . Assyria, the two dominant powers of the ancient Near East in an earlier time, used figuratively for “east and west” i.e., “anyone, anywhere.” 7: Our fathers sinned . . . we must bear their guilt, better, “bear their punishment” (see Exod. 20.5; 34.7). With v. 16, the recognition that rebelliousness against God is the cause for catastrophe and that Israel has a long history of rebelling against God. 13: Carry millstones: Grinding, usually the work of women, slaves, and prisoners (Exod. 11.5; Judg. 16.21; Isa. 47.2), is now forced upon the young men. Carrying wood is also among the most menial of labors. 14: Old men administered justice at the city gates (Deut. 22.15; 25.7; Ruth 4.1–2, 11). 16: We have sinned, admission of guilt (cf. 3.42 and n. 5.7). 17: Because of this refers back to vv. 2–16 as well as forward to v. 18.

a Lit. “on our neck”; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

b-b Or “heat (cf. Deut. 28.22) of the wilderness”; meaning of Heb. uncertain.

c I.e., the slaves of v. 8.

18 Because of Mount Zion, which lies desolate;
Jackals prowl over it.

19 But You, O LORD, are enthroned forever,
Your throne endures through the ages.

20 Why have You forgotten us utterly,
Forsaken us for all time?

21 Take us back, O LORD, to Yourself,
And let us come back;

Renew our days as of old!

22 For truly, You have rejected us,
Bitterly raged against us.

Take us back, O LORD, to Yourself,
And let us come back;
Renew our days as of old!

18: Jackals prowl, a conventional sign of desolation (Isa. 13.22; 34.13; Zeph. 2.14–15; and in ancient Near Eastern curses).

5.19–21: Praise of the LORD and appeal for restoration of divine favor. 19: Enthroned: God remains king even though His earthly throne, the Temple, has been destroyed. This faith in divine sovereignty (Pss. 44.5–6; 74.12) is the basis for the question and prayer that follow. 20: Why: Questioning of God is a frequent element of prayer (Pss. 22.1; 44.24–25; 89.47). 21: Take us back . . . Renew our days, imperatives echoing those in v. 1 frame the description of Zion's anguish and suggest it is only the LORD who can alleviate the disaster. Take us back, a fitting close to the book, a call for return (cf. Jer. 31.18). Days as of old, i.e., days evoked in 1.1 when Jerusalem was "great with people," "great among nations," and "princess among states."

5.22: Final dire pronouncement. For truly, You have rejected us emphasizes the urgency in the preceding call for remembrance and divine mercy. The call for God that echoes throughout the book remains unanswered. Take us back . . . as of old: In order not to conclude on a dire note, it is the Jewish custom at any public reading of Lamentations to repeat the last positive phrase (v. 21). Similar repetitions of the penultimate verse apply to the final chapters of Isaiah, Malachi, and Ecclesiastes.

Ecclesiastes

AS LITERATURE, ECCLESIASTES BELONGS, along with Proverbs, Job, and some other sections of the Bible, in the category of wisdom. Wisdom texts reflect on the nature of the world and the God who created and controls it, and on the place of humans in this divine creation. These observations are usually presented as the work of one or more sages, who arrive at the observations by exercising wisdom—a faculty based on their own experience and that of other sages before them, and sometimes also on divine revelation. But whether from experience or revelation, the wisdom is regularly understood to have God as its ultimate source. In the case of Ecclesiastes, the wisdom is presented as experiential. The sage who comes to it through his experiences, one might even say experiments, is designated in Hebrew as Koheleth, and so supplies the Hebrew title for the book. Christian tradition generally uses, for book and sage, Ecclesiastes, “the one who assembled,” which is the Greek rendering of Koheleth found in the Septuagint (see 1.1 n.).

The twelve chs of Koheleth cover a miscellany of topics: the cycles of the natural order; the amassing of wealth in property and other forms; the opposing forces that govern life; friendship, particularly as an antidote to life’s wearying uncertainties; the virtues and difficulties of human authority; the nature of folly and the possibilities and limitations of wisdom; the enjoyment of one’s toil; the terrors of old age. Behind these topics, it appears, are certain fundamental themes. The first is expressed by the term “futility” (hevel) (1.2 n.). For Koheleth, this is foremost the inability of humans to make sense of the world around them—to see a coherent pattern, a plan to their lives and to nature, in the sense of a movement toward lasting goals, a line of development or progress. Koheleth, it appears, does not deny that there may be coherent patterns of activity for each human, animal, and other phenomenon, and he uses the word ma’aseh (“deed, work, action” from ‘-s-h, “do, make”) for these (ch 8), indicating also that they seem folded into the larger ma’aseh of God. But the human ability to discern what these are is frustrated, he argues, again and again; most significantly, the traditional doctrine of reward and punishment for the good and the wicked does not appear to work, at least in this life. In this regard, Koheleth is arguing against the position evident in the book of Deuteronomy or the bulk of Proverbs.

The one thing that is clear for Koheleth is death. It is the final point in each one’s ma'aseh, the one immutable event in life that every human, animal, and other organism must succumb to; it cuts across all categories of morality and class. If there is any survival beyond death, either physically or in terms of memory and influence, humans cannot know this, and so cannot rely on it. What is left to humans, then, as Koheleth sees it—though he does raise an occasional doubt (e.g., 6.1–12 n.)—is principally to enjoy their toil while they are alive. This “portion” (helek) (2.21) is granted to them by God as part of their activity. Individual rewards and punishments, however, have no enduring significance because they are canceled out by death and cannot be passed on to future generations. The capacity to discern all of this—to understand what can be known and what cannot—is for Koheleth the task of wisdom. Wisdom, therefore, is most effective when it is used to clarify its own limits. In so doing, wisdom need not deny—nor does Koheleth deny—that God is in control and has a coherent pattern of activity that will bring every creature to account. Accordingly, it makes sense not to tempt the anger of God, say, by making rash prayer at the sanctuary or rash vows (4.17–5.5). This affirmation of God’s authority and judgment is, indeed, what rabbinic interpreters have emphasized as the central element in Koheleth, and while some modern critics have assigned the vv. that express it to later, orthodox editor(s) of the book, it comports well with the limits on human wisdom, a central theme of the original author.

These topics and themes are not developed in a systematic exposition from the beginning to the end of the book; rather, a number of them, like futility and enjoyment of toil, are revisited, several times. These recurrences often involve new perspectives that build on, even contradict, what has come before (e.g., ch 8; 9.1–12; ch 10). At times, therefore, the recurrences and contradictions can be confusing, and in any case they make reading Koheleth no easy task.

But there are occasional indications of structure in the book. Thus, a frame surrounds most of the book, as 1.2 is essentially repeated in 12.8; the assertion in these two vv. that everything is futility should then reflect what the author regards as the fundamental theme of all the intervening material. Within the frame are various smaller units defined by formal markers, balance in the placement of vv., or a certain connectedness in the flow of narrative. The catalogue of polarities in 3.1–8 is the most obvious example, with the opposites arranged as syntactic parallels. (Other examples are considered in the annotations below.) These structures create a loose coherence. This is reinforced by the repetition of certain nouns for key concepts, like “futility” (hevel) and “portion” (helek), and of certain verbs, like “set my mind” (natati et-libi, 1.13) and “probe” (tur, 1.13), which represent a technical terminology assembled to describe Koheleth’s intellectual search. Put together, then, the recurrences of themes and terminology testify to the leisurely, self-conscious, ruminative process in which Koheleth is engaged, meandering through, around, and back to his favorite issues, considering them first from one angle, then from another.

If the Koheleth of the book is depicted throughout as a sage, he is also, in the first two chs, described as a king, more specifically, as recognized from the earliest Bible translations (e.g., Septuagint, Targum), as Solomon son of David. To be sure, the name Solomon is nowhere used in the book; conversely, Koheleth does not occur elsewhere in the Bible. Yet the genealogy and descriptions given of Koheleth in his book (1.1, 12, 16; 2.7, 9) make the identification with Solomon clear. The Solomonic depiction is consistent with the depiction of Koheleth as sage, given the clear biblical tradition of Solomon as wise man (1 Kings ch 3; 5.9–14), and indeed, the larger ancient Near Eastern association of kingship and wisdom. Classical rabbinic tradition generally accepted that Koheleth was really Solomon, and thus that the book originated from the Solomonic period, but internal evidence points to a much later date of origin. Thus, the book's two Persian words, pardes ("grove," 2.5) and pitgam ("sentence," 8.11) indicate that in its present form it does not date from before the postexilic period (latter 6th century BCE on) and the emergence of the Achaemenid Persian empire that ruled Judah and most of the ancient Near East. This date comports with the variety of late grammatical features of Koheleth's Hebrew. At the other chronological end, Koheleth cannot be later than the first half of the 2nd century BCE, the date of a fragment of Koheleth found among the Dead Sea Scrolls and of the apocryphal work, the Wisdom of Solomon—and, perhaps, also of Sirach—which implicitly refers to Koheleth. Within these chronological limits, scholars continue to debate whether Koheleth belongs in the Achaemenid Persian period (late 6th to end of 4th centuries BCE) or to the following early Hellenistic period, perhaps during the 3rd century BCE. In either instance, the several positive references to political hierarchy, wealth in land, and money (keseḥ) all mark the author of Koheleth as probably of the landed gentry.

Although Koheleth belongs in content and language with Proverbs and Job as a wisdom book, in post-talmudic Jewish tradition, sometime between the 8th and 10th centuries CE, it came to be classified as one of the five megillot (scrolls), alongside Ruth, Esther, Song of Songs, and Lamentations, each of them to be read on a religious festival of the year. Koheleth is read on Sukkot, celebrating the completion originally of the fall harvest and later also of the yearly cycle of reading the Torah. This celebration of work completed, expressed both as joy and as a mood of reflection on memory and time past, resonates with themes in Koheleth, and so may have established the connection between the book and the festival.

Despite the firm place Koheleth has in the biblical canon, rabbinic tradition is ambivalent about the book. The evidence is rather laconic and concerns, in particular, the debates of the 1st century BCE through the early 2nd century CE, dealing also with certain other controversial biblical books like Ezekiel and the Song of Songs. Two features of Koheleth, and in varying fashion of these other books, appear to have provoked discussion: that they exhibit contradictions, in the case of Koheleth, self-contradictions; and that they offer unorthodox views that do not comport with the mainstream of Jewish thinking about God and Torah in the Bible. The result was, as various rabbinic Sages argued—others disagreeing—that Koheleth and these other books did not reflect divine inspiration, or in the ancient terminology, "did not make the hands impure" and deserved to "be removed from use and stored away" (e.g., b. Shab. 30b; m. 'Ed. 5.3; b. Meg. 7a). These rabbinic discussions are all post facto, after Koheleth and the other books had already been included in the biblical canon. While they may contain, therefore, some memory of earlier debates about inclusion in the canon, they more likely reflect an ongoing challenge of how to correlate the ideas and formulations of Koheleth and the other books with the rest of the biblical canon. In this regard, they are matched by the actual efforts of many classical Jewish commentators on Koheleth to make this correlation, by taming various troublesome sections of the book (see, e.g., 3.9–12 n.; 6.1–12 n.; ch 7) and by asserting that the statements in the epilogue, which appear orthodox, represent, indeed, the basic sense of the book. In the latter effort, the commentators may not be far wrong (12.9–14 n.).

[PETER MACHINIST]

1 The words of Koheleth^a son of David, king in Jerusalem.

- 2 Utter futility!—said Koheleth—Utter futility! All is futile!
- 3 What real value is there for a man
In all the gains^b he makes beneath the sun?
- 4 One generation goes, another comes,
But the earth remains the same forever.
- 5 The sun rises, and the sun sets—
And glides^c back to where it rises.
- 6 Southward blowing,
Turning northward,
Ever turning blows the wind;
On its rounds the wind returns.
- 7 All streams flow into the sea,
Yet the sea is never full;
To the place [from] which they flow
The streams flow back again.^d a Probably “the Assembler,” i.e., of hearers or of sayings; cf. 12.9–11.

b So Rashbam. Heb. ‘amal usually has this sense in Ecclesiastes; cf. Ps. 105.44.

c So Targum; cf. Bereshith Rabbah on Gen. 1.17.

d According to popular belief, through tunnels; so Targum and Rashi.

1.1: Introductory caption. As in some other biblical wisdom texts (e.g., Prov. 30.1), this introduction identifies the sage responsible for the reflections and sayings that follow. Koheleth is a sobriquet for this sage, who is described here as if he were Solomon. Koheleth, of feminine grammatical gender, may be used of males (cf. similar words that are so used, e.g., in Ezra 2.55, 57 || Nehemiah 7.57, 59). Koheleth is derived from the root “k-h-l,”

“to assemble”; thus the Gk translation “Ecclesiastes,” “the one of the assembly.” But whether Koheleth may be understood as “the one who has assembled wisdom” (e.g., Rashi), or “assembled conflicting opinions and decided on the correct ones” (Metzudat Zion), or “assembled the people around to speak or preach wisdom to them” (cf. 12.9, as well as the Septuagint, Eccl. Rab., and much modern scholarship)—no one of these or other opinions about the name has established itself decisively.

1.2: The theme. Futility here translates Heb “hevel,” the most frequent technical term in Koheleth (38 occurrences). From its literal meaning, “air, breath,” the word has acquired the sense of something fleeting, without substance (cf. its occurrence as the name “Abel,” Gen. ch 4), or even unreliable. In Koheleth, the literal meaning “air/breath” has not fully disappeared, since “hevel” is often paired with the phrase “pursuit of wind” (e.g., 2.26). The acquired sense, however, is what dominates, and it concerns actions and work that do not last, or appear to lead to no lasting goal, or cannot be explained in any rational, i.e., human, way. Within Jewish commentary, one emphasis applies futility to actions of humans for themselves alone, since actions can last and be worthwhile only if they are involved with Torah and labor for God.

1.3–11: Round and around. This section provides the first illustration of what Koheleth means by “futility.” Vv. 4–8 give several examples of the ceaselessly circular, or oscillating movement that for him governs all activity in the world: the passage of generations, the cycle of the sun, the flow of the water. There is, in short, no linear, goal-oriented activity, and the result is that the world never changes. Vv. 3 and 9–11 draw out the implications of these examples

- 8 All such things are wearisome:
No man can ever state them;
The eye never has enough of seeing,
Nor the ear enough of hearing.
- 9 Only that shall happen
Which has happened,
Only that occur
Which has occurred;
There is nothing new Beneath the sun!

¹⁰Sometimes there is a phenomenon of which they say, "Look, this one is new!"—it occurred long since, in ages that went by before us. ¹¹The earlier ones are not remembered; so too those that will occur later ^awill no more be remembered than ^athose that will occur at the very end.

¹²I, Koheleth, was king in Jerusalem over Israel. ¹³I set my mind to study and to probe with wisdom all that happens under the sun.—An unhappy business, that, which God gave men to be concerned with! ¹⁴I observed all the happenings beneath the sun, and I found that all is futile and pursuit^b of wind:

- ¹⁵ A twisted thing that cannot be made straight,
A lack that cannot be made good.

¹⁶I said to myself: "Here I have grown richer and wiser than any that ruled before me over Jerusalem, and my mind has zealously absorbed wisdom and learning."
¹⁷And so I set my mind to appraise wisdom and to appraise madness and folly. And I learned—that this too was pursuit of wind:

- ¹⁸ For as wisdom grows, vexation grows;
To increase learning is to increase heartache.

2 I said to myself, "Come, I will treat you to merriment. Taste mirth!" That too, I found, was futile.

- ² Of revelry I said, "It's mad!"
Of merriment, "What good is that?"

³I ventured to tempt my flesh with wine, and to grasp folly, while letting my mind direct with wisdom, to the a-a Lit. "will not be remembered like . . ." For 'im meaning "like," cf. 2.16; 7.11; Job 9.26.

b Lit. "tending," from root ra'ah, "to shepherd."

to affirm that nothing new occurs, and so there is nothing one can show for his toil, nothing to learn (to "remember," v. 11) and to build on. 9: Put another way, as the sun cycles, so there is nothing new be- neath the sun. Some classical Jewish commentators argue, following on v. 2, that the problem under discussion here is a wrong-headed focus on daily human or natural activities at the expense of the spiritual. Rashi, in particular, elaborates on this in a midrashic play on the phrase nothing new beneath the sun—a phrase that is unique to Koheleth in the Bible, although with antecedents and parallels both in the ancient Near East (e.g., Mari and Phoenicia) and in the Greek world. In Rashi's interpretation, the phrase contrasts futile daily activity done "in place of the Sun (= Light = Torah)," i.e., in contrast to the spiritual activity of Torah study and living.

1.12–18: Koheleth sets his task. Koheleth introduces himself here in the first person, drawing upon a style used in ancient Near Eastern royal inscriptions. Through the persona of Solomon, he aims to establish his preeminent ability to investigate wisdom, over against folly and madness. Yet, anticipating the fuller discussion that comes later, Koheleth admits that the investigation yields no satisfying outcome, only pain and vexation from the futility of explaining and correcting the crooked. Various traditional commentaries (e.g., Rashi) sought to reconcile this image of Koheleth with the successful Solomon of 1 Kings by positing that Koheleth/Solomon is here looking back from the end of his life, after the excesses of his material and religious policies (cf. 1 Kings ch 11) had gone far to undermine his achievements. Alternatively, the Targum saw this pessimism as a prophecy of Solomon forecasting the collapse of his kingdom by division after his death.

2.1–26: Experiments with wisdom and their results. Having set his task to discover what, if anything, wisdom can yield, Koheleth now turns to find the answer. Vv. 1–2, serving as a bridge to the preceding vv., introduce, with a note of pessimism, the task at hand. They do so by proposing, as a point of argument, that life appears to furnish no enjoyment. Vv. 3–11 and 12–16 describe two experiments Koheleth undertakes to test this proposition. 3–11: The first is in

